- Regulations as to openings of, and admissions to, labour yard at Ecclesall. 41199. And to that extent you prevent him travelling the country and seeking work?—On Mondays we do not open the labour-yard until rather late on, so as to give them a chance of getting work. In Sheffield the work is generally given out on Mondays.
- Revision of indoor cases at Ecclesall and result thereof. 41200. It really does not matter whether a person is living in a common lodging-house or where; provided he makes application and has nothing to do, you give him a chance of the labour yard?—Yes, always.
41201. With regard to the order which is made by the guardians for indoor relief, that is always given for a stipulated period, exactly like an order for outdoor relief, is it?—It is.
41202. And when it expires, is the case brought again before the relief committee by the relieving officer who is responsible for it?—Yes, and he has to work the case over again, and everything else has to be brought up again.
41203. So by that system you get a revision of all your indoor cases along with your outdoor cases periodically?—Yes, always. Lunatics and everyone else are treated in the same way.
41204. It keeps all the cases alive?—Yes; we never let one drop.
41205. That is rather unique, is it not? It is not a common method?—It is not a common thing, but I think it would be better if it were.
41206. Has it been in operation long?—For two years and a half, and we have saved about £2,000 with it.
41207. With regard to your phthisis cases which have Treatment been mentioned by the Chairman, you do, I understand, of phthisis at Ecclesall. report cases that come under your notice to the medical officer of health?—Yes, we do at times. If we cannot remove them, we have to do something of that kind and so we send a notice down to the medical officer of health.
41208. There is a case that I have got the particulars of, which you notified to the medical officer of health. They tried to use what persuasion they could to induce the man to come into your workhouse hospital, but without effect. After that had been done, I suppose he remained in his own home and relief was continued in kind?—Yes, it would be continued in kind. Since that time the medical officer would be giving milk and necessaries; but it is very unsatisfactory to have two children in the bedroom where there is a phthisical case.
41209. Do you think the medical officer of health could have taken any other action in the circumstances?—I do not.
41210. You do not know what power he has, do you?—I do not know what power he has.
41211. What do you do with regard to overcrowding?—Provision I have an arrangement with the relieving officers that if against they find overcrowding or not a proper division of the overcrowding sexes, they send a printed card which they have straight at Ecclesall to the medical officer of health. They have to do that in every case where they find overcrowding or not a proper division of the sexes.
- Particulars as to labour yards at Ecclesall. 41212. (Mr. Booth.) I do not think I quite followed what you said to Mr. Bentham about the men who are in the labour yard. I see in paragraph 32 that the single man has to break, that is to say, I suppose, he is allowed to break?—Yes.
41213. Three tons weekly at 1s. 11d., which comes to 5s. 9d. per week. If he can do that in a shorter time, which I suppose he can, is he detained during the rest of the time?—So much is given out per day by the superintendent of the test yard, and the man can earn up to 5s. 9d.
41214. And he works slow or idles the rest of the time?—Yes.
41215. Is he not allowed out?—We do not pay till five o'clock every night. If the man has a mind to come into the yard at half-past eight in the morning, the yard is open then, and he can go to work. If he prefers to come in at ten he can do it then.
41216. When he has finished the quantity you allow him to do, does he sit and do nothing till pay-time; is that it?—That is the rule.
41217. Can they as a rule deal with the whole eight tons which they are expected to deal with, if they have a wife and four or more children?—Yes, they can do so. I have had men earn 3s. a day in the yard at wood-cutting.
41218. Yet you say that people who are not accustomed to the work cannot earn enough, and a supply of groceries and bread is given?—Yes. Those are the silversmiths and other classes, such as painters, whose hands are so soft that they cannot work an axe or a saw.
41219. So they would not be able to break the larger quantity?—No. That is a very old rule that you are reading from; it is chiefly wood-cutting that we do now, and there is very little stone-breaking done. I think there were only 500 tons of stone broken last year.
41220. Supposing they have earned the amount that is put down here, 5s. 9d. for a single man and 7s. 8d. for a man with a wife, and so on, do they still, if they have not enough, get the extra bread?—Yes; if we find any destitution at all, the relieving officer has orders to relieve any case. Some of them get over that—they generally get over that.
41221. It is done to make it up to what is necessary in order to prevent destitution?—That is so.
41222. (Dr. Downes.) In your report to the guardians dated January 1st, 1907, you say "Expenditure of the Minimum scale of living poor. The living of the poor is about the same as last in Ecclesall. year, namely between 4d. and 5d. per diem. Animal food has been a little cheaper, but soap ½d. per lb. dearer." Are you referring there to the poor who are not in receipt Minimum of relief?—No; but to the poor who are in receipt of scale of living relief. We check the food. in Ecclesall.

41223. Would that 4d. or 5d. a day include all their expenditure?—It includes everything but rent.

41224. How do you check it?—We go about and ask the people to give us a list of the food and that sort of thing. I have had the food myself. I buy the tea and the sugar just to taste it.

41225. Do you verify their statements?—Yes. Mr. Bagenal, I may say, verified this last year. You will find a list of cases in the last return of the Local Government Board. We checked them all again this year.

41226. Does that sum refer to the living of an adult person?—Yes, they are all adults.

41227. Males or females?—There would be some males and some females.

41228. Of what age?—From sixty to seventy.

41229. Would that be an average?—2s. 0½d., I think, was the average in the return given in the Blue-book.

41230. Can you give us the actual items that make up the 4d. and 5d. showing the amount of animal food, bread and so on?—Yes, I will add that to this answer when I get the proof of my evidence. For statement see Appendix No. XI. (C.).

18 Feb. 1907.

Dr. JAMES ALLAN, called; and Examined.

41231. (Chairman.) You are the medical superintendent of the union infirmary at Leeds, I think?—Yes.

41232. How long have you held that post?—Just, over twenty-five years.

41233. I believe you are prepared to put in a paper which I understand is one which you read before the Yorkshire Poor Law Conference in December, 1906, at Leeds?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I believe venereal disease is a considerable factor in the production of pauperism.

2. I think the present arrangements for the treatment of venereal disease are inadequate and I append print of paper read by me recently which may be of interest to the Commission;—

A FACTOR IN THE PRODUCTION OF PAUPERISM.

3. In my annual report on the Leeds Union Infirmary for the year 1886, it is noted that during the year 1886, 119 cases of acute venereal diseases had been admitted, or one-fifteenth of the total number of admissions. The report goes on to say, "There is no public provision other than the workhouse for the treatment of such cases in Leeds. Smallpox excites panic almost in a community, but its ravages are confined to the individuals affected; venereal diseases produce directly and indirectly more paupers sane and insane than is generally known, and being transmitted cause much crippling and mortality in the second generation."

4. My subsequent twenty years' experience amongst the indoor poor leads me to confirm the opinion above expressed as to the importance of these diseases in the causation of pauperism.

As an attempt is now being made by the Royal Commission on Poor Law to determine with accuracy the causes of pauperism, it occurred to me when asked to read a paper before this Poor Law Conference that, as no list of causes would be complete that did not give a somewhat prominent place to venereal disease, a few notes on this subject would be opportune.

5. I do not deal with the ordinary inmates of the workhouse, I have no doubt an examination of them would show much premature debility and incapacity for work to arise from this source; my notes refer to infirmary inmates.

Patients in a Poor Law infirmary on account of these affections are suffering either from the recently acquired diseases or from the more or less remote results of it.

6. There is this peculiarity about the diseases in question, viz., that without careful and prolonged treatment, and not frequently in spite of such treatment, certain serious diseased states of many parts of the body ensue at irregular, often long, intervals after infection.

Very often patients having got over the local and more immediate effects of the complaint, and in ignorance of, or carelessness as to, the grave possibilities of their condition, do not trouble to pursue the treatment for an adequate period.

7. (a) Inmates suffering from the recent diseases.

During the past twenty-five years the number of inmates treated in the Leeds Union Infirmary for early venereal disease has been fairly constant, 120 to 140 cases annually, and an average of 16 to 20 at any one time under treatment.

(b) On admission many of them are in a very bad state, having come into the workhouse as a last resource when their condition compelled them, and having been patched up they do not stay, but discharge themselves long before they have had sufficient treatment.

Such people are a public danger before admission and continue to be so after their discharge.

(c) The State takes upon itself the duty of protecting the public against smallpox, plague, anthrax, etc., but has not made any serious attempt to grapple with this most serious disease.

(d) If the community were fully alive to its responsibility in this matter, some public provision for treatment other than the workhouse should be available.

(e) Here it may be noted that the Inter-Departmental Committee on Physical Degeneration in its report in 1904, recommended the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry into the prevalence and effects of syphilis, having special regard to the possibility of making the disease notifiable, and to the adequacy of hospital accommodation for its treatment.

8. (a) Inmates suffering from the more or less remote effects of the disease.

Many more are pauperised by the later effects of these diseases. They include sufferers from:—

(1) Ulcerated legs.

(2) Various nervous diseases:—

Insanity, epilepsy, locomotor ataxia, and other forms of paralysis. Blindness, deafness.

(3) Diseases of bone.

(4) Heart disease, and diseases of arteries.

(5) Stricture, and consequent kidney disease and hernia.

(b) An analysis of the cases of 550 adult inmates resident at the time of examination, 300 men and 250 women, shows that of the men eighty-five, and of the women sixty-four were patients on account of some sequel of venereal disease.

(c) Cases of this description are often chronic and incurable, and so tend to accumulate in a Poor Law infirmary.

(d) From an examination of the notes of 560 consecutive adult male admissions, it was found that of that number 242 had suffered from these diseases. Married people thus affected are comparatively sterile, or at any rate rear only a small proportion of their offspring to maturity. I have full particulars of the family history of fifty married men, and of fifty married women, in the above series of 550 resident inmates. The fifty men had 193 children, of whom eighty-five lived to maturity, the fifty women had 250 children, but of this number only fifty-three lived to grow up.

(e) It may be noted that of the 300 males examined, sixteen had become diseased while in the army, and appear to have been under treatment for the primary disease for much too short a period.

Venereal Disease as a Cause of Insanity.

9. The Inter-Departmental Committee on Physical Degeneration took evidence of experts on this point.

In reply to a question as to the diseases produced by syphilis, Sir Alfred Cooper said: "I should place insanity as almost one of the first things. It is responsible for a large proportion of the cases of lunacy and idiocy in our asylums." Dr. Mott, Pathologist to the London County Council Asylums, when questioned on the relation of syphilis to insanity, said that it was the cause in between 25 and 40 per cent. of the men admitted; so far as the increase of insanity is due to general paralysis, he attributed it to syphilis. In 80 per cent. of general paralytics a history of syphilis can be got.

In a recent Annual Report of the Lunacy Commissioners, venereal disease is given as the cause of insanity in 4·2 per cent. of the men, and ·9 per cent. of the women. Eight per cent. is the number given in a recent report to the London County Council.

I have no definite figures on this point, but am of opinion, after a considerable experience in lunacy cases, that the percentages given by the Commission in Lunacy are much too low.

41234. (Chairman.) It is an important paper, although it confines itself to one particular ailment. I gather you are clearly of opinion from your long experience that lock diseases are a considerable source of pauperism?—Yes.

41235. That is not merely a theory, but it is confirmed by the analysis of your practical experience as medical superintendent of the union infirmary at Leeds?—Yes.

41236. I understand that in Leeds the workhouse is the only place which treats these cases?—That is so.

41237. What is the effect, do you think, on other patients; do they like associating with persons suffering from this disease, or do you separate your patients?—They are separated.

41238. You have special wards, one for women, and one for men, I suppose?—That is so.

41239. You say one-fifteenth in the year 1886 of the total admissions to the Leeds Union Infirmary were cases connected with this disease?—That is so; and the proportion has been pretty much the same ever since.

41240. Then you go on to point out that this disease is not only serious in itself but that it conduces to serious diseased states in various parts of the body at irregular and often long intervals after infection?—Yes.

41241. I see that you made an analysis of the cases of 550 adult inmates of the infirmary, and the figures you give are very important. You say that eighty-five men and sixty-four women were patients on account of some sequel of venereal disease; I make out that that is about 26 per cent. ?—Yes, about one-fourth.

41242. Should you say that that was an exceptional proportion or should you think that it held good generally?—I should think for urban populations it holds good.

41243. It might be that if the union infirmary was the only place which took these lock cases, there would be a larger proportion of patients on account of some sequel of venereal disease in the union infirmaries than there would be in the ordinary hospitals?—Of course you get a number of incurable cases.

41244. Were these incurable cases?—Many of those were incurable.

41245. Then I will take your next statement, which shows that out of 560 consecutive adult male admissions it was found that 242 had suffered from this disease?—Yes; that is just an observation that I have made.

41246. As affecting the mortality of children, you have another statement which is full of significance. You took the family history of fifty married men, and you found that those fifty men had 193 children of whom only eighty-five lived to maturity?—That is so.

41247. You also took the family history of fifty married women; you found that they had 250 children but that of that number only fifty-three lived to grow up?—Yes.

41248. I suppose, therefore, you would say that this disease is one of the great contributing causes of infantile mortality?—Yes, and that it is of national importance.

41249. That being so, I assume you are clearly of opinion that there ought to be power of detention in these cases?—There ought to be some better means of treatment than there is at present.

41251. What would you advocate? Would you say that anybody who was admitted as a patient in an in-ward of a hospital or infirmary ought not to go out till cured?—You cannot answer that question yes or no. There ought to be a period of treatment in-door followed by another long period of out-door, however it is to be effected. You would never think of detaining a person until you are satisfied that he has received sufficient treatment, because Jonathan Hutchinson says recently in "The Practitioner" that every case of syphilis should be treated at least a year, though for a considerable part of that time the patient may very well go on with his occupation.

41252. Unless you adopted some conditions of that kind, men in employment would not notify their ailment, would they?—No, they would not.

41253. But you would, I assume, in certain cases detain in hospital till cured?—Undoubtedly. It depends on the definition of "cured" which may be "until they are no longer obviously dangerous." Still you would never reckon a case of syphilis cured during any ordinary detention in a union infirmary; and there ought to be some means, whether under the Poor Law or whether under the municipal authority, of following up those cases.

41254. Would you make it compulsory on medical men to notify this disease to a public authority?—That is a subject for inquiry, I think.

41255. There are obvious difficulties about it, of course?—Yes, I think so.

41256. But you are very clearly of opinion that this is not only one of the main contributing causes of pauperism, but that it is impairing the national health?—Undoubtedly.

41257. And affects the national birth rate or rather the vitality of infants?—Yes. There are many families absolutely sterile, and in many of the cases I have gone into, although there have been large families, very few have survived to manhood.

41258. Have you come across cases where the disease has been transmitted to more than one generation?—Yes.

41259. Do you know at all what is the experience of the medical officers to the general hospitals? When this paper was read, was this paper of yours confirmed by their evidence?—I have not seen any criticism of it, but I know that the treatment of venereal disease is very unsatisfactory in general hospitals in the case of out-patients.

41260. Should you say that, as far as you know, the figures you quoted about Leeds in your experience are exceptional? I think you have said that you consider that they were about the average, as far as you know, of an urban town?—I should take it to be so.

41261. Is there anything special about Leeds which makes you think that your figures would be much higher there than they would be in any other town?—I do not know. It was stated in the public Press not long ago that, next to London, Leeds is the most immoral town in the kingdom. I do not know whether there is any foundation for that statement, but at any rate it is regarded by some as an immoral town.

41262. But a large number of these cases have been transmitted in the families, so to say?—Yes, but they are in a different class altogether.

41263. You wish to impress upon us the importance of considering this matter, and of suggesting some rules or regulations in connection with the union infirmaries for more effective measures for the detention of patients and for dealing with this disease?—Yes. I would suggest, in so far as the Poor Law authorities are concerned, that proper accommodation should be provided in the workhouse for these cases. That, I believe, is not generally so.

41264. Should it be separate accommodation?—Yes, Doubts as to that is what I mean. Further, I would suggest that the alleged power of detention should be more explicitly stated. Now, I do not think, as it is laid down in Glen's Poor Law Orders that one could safely act on the power of detention.

41265. I understand that medical officers do exercise a certain pressure?—Yes, that is so, but I think they would be in the wrong if it came into court, and I say they might get into a difficulty with it. Even in dealing with lunatics a medical officer has some trouble sometimes from a legal point of view, and I do not think these are in a different category.

41267. Are you aware that the Law Officers of the Crown expressed an opinion on the point some years ago?—Yes.

41268. And that their opinion was adverse to the application of the Act to cases of venereal disease?—Yes; I have never, as a matter of fact, detained anybody against their will. I have never exercised that alleged authority; I do not think it safe to do so.

41269. (Mr. Booth.) It is only in the primary development that this disease is dangerous to others, I understand?—It is more dangerous in that condition. That is a question that will not admit of a simple answer yes or no. In the early stages no doubt there is very much more danger; still the danger does not diminish for a considerable period. At the same time people can take precautions to avoid being a danger to others.

41270. The detention, then, in the first instance cannot cover the whole period when there is danger of contagion to others?—No.

41271. What exactly do you mean by the expression that it would be necessary to "follow up" those who were allowed out?—To continue the treatment for not less than a year in the case of syphilis.

41272. (Mrs. Webb.) Do you mean domiciliary treatment at the house?—Medical treatment.

41273. At the home?—They would have to report themselves, and be under some sort of supervision.

41274. (Mr. Booth.) Surely all that that method would do would be to see that the disease did not get worse? No following up could prevent the contagion if the man himself was not careful?—It would be a means of diffusing a knowledge of the disease, and that alone would be of some public good, the same as in tuberculosis.

41275. But the time is so long that it would be impossible to ask that they should be detained in the institution until all risk was gone?—Yes, that would not be possible.

41276. (Mrs. Webb.) There is a considerable section of the male population who are now medically examined by insurance companies and sick clubs, and for appointment; does venereal disease come into that examination?—Yes.

41277. Would you say that all that section of the population are examined in such a way that it would be detected?—It ought to be detected, but then knowledge of venereal disease is a thing that is not acquired in a day, and many medical men have never had the opportunities of becoming acquainted with venereal disease. There is no systematic training given to medical students in the disease, and hence many practitioners are absolutely ignorant of it.

41278. So that the doctor of an insurance company would not necessarily find it out?—No.

41279. Do you suppose that they usually find it out?—I should think so.

41281. Would you kindly develop that; what do you mean by it?—Besides the workhouse treatment, which should be properly arranged, I would suggest that under municipal control, either using part of the infectious hospitals or having separate lock hospitals, there should be a system of treatment, and that system of treatment should include out-patient treatment. I think the municipal authority would be the proper authority to follow up the treatment of venereal disease.

41282. How would you get the people into the hospital?—Some are physically obliged to come for treatment.

41283. Where do they go now? Do they go to the general hospitals?—They cannot get treated at a general hospital, but they get treated in a slipshod sort of way at dispensaries.

41284. And by chemists to some extent, I suppose?—Yes, and that is a great evil.

41285. You would establish these hospitals without making the patients paupers?—I would consider it the same class of case as a case of scarlet fever or small pox. You see, charitable funds cannot be used for such a purpose, and people will not subscribe for such a purpose, so the cost must be met out of State funds.

41286. Would you have connected with this municipal hospital a visiting out-patients' department—I mean to say, visiting surgeons and doctors?—My suggestion is that the staff would not see patients except at the hospitals.

41288. Considering there are so many infectious diseases, and so many diseases which deteriorate morals as well as physical health, is it desirable that the State should give medical attendance freely—treating it as an Education Act, in fact?—I do not know; I think the cost of treatment should be recovered wherever possible.

41289. You still think that would be desirable?—I do think so.

41290. Do you think you would get these venereal cases to come for treatment if the cost is to be recovered?—There is no doubt that would be a drawback.

41291. Do you not think that the drawback of people not coming for treatment is greater than the desirability to recover otherwise than from the rates?—That I am not prepared to answer.

41292. But you think it of the utmost importance that those people should come for treatment?—Yes, undoubtedly.

41293. And you think a new departure ought to be made with regard to venereal disease?—I do, and that is felt, I think, by medical men generally. I should like to read a note of what has been said by Mr. Lowndes, of Liverpool, a well-known man who has been connected for forty-five years with the Liverpool Lock Hospital. He says he thinks syphilis is less severe than it was forty-five years ago, but that its great prevalence is still a cause of physical deterioration, and he deplores the fact that the Government has not yet thought fit to order an inquiry into the subject. He is a man of exceptional experience in Liverpool—forty-five years' experience—and that is his feeling, that an inquiry is necessary.

41294. (Chairman.) What is the date of that expression of opinion of his?—It was published in a recent copy of "The Liverpool Medical and Chirurgical Journal"—in fact, this year.

41295. (Mrs. Webb.) Both as regards general disease and also as regards this disease, do you not think that you really bring home to an individual his responsibility by discovering his illness and treating it, more than by letting it go untreated? To make my question clear, it is often said we must not give this free because we shall diminish the sense of responsibility; but suppose that by giving it free we actually make the man aware that he has got a disease which he ought to have cured, whether it is venereal disease or any other, do you not think we increase his obligations to the State, rather than diminish them, and increase his sense of responsibility?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question 41296. (Mr. Bentham.) Would not your recommendations depend upon having compulsory notification of this disease?—Not necessarily, I think.

41297. How would the local authority become aware of the cases? Would you leave it just haphazard as it is to-day?—That is a matter for inquiry, but, as I say, some people are bound to have treatment and cannot get along without it—they have arrived at the stage when they must have treatment.

41298. If lock hospitals are provided by municipalities the application would be made to those hospitals for admission by the people who are suffering?—Yes.

41299. Instead of to the Poor Law?—Yes.

41300. And the cases that you would come across under the Poor Law, which were being treated probably for some other ailment, but which were found to have this disease, you would transfer to the municipal authority for treatment, would you?—Not necessarily.

41301. Would you treat some under the Poor Law then as now?—Yes, I think so.

41302. If you treat them under the Poor Law, you would have both authorities dealing with the same thing; do you think that would be any detriment at all?—I do not think it need necessarily clash.

41303. Who would follow up those cases for home treatment, after the discharge from the Poor Law hospital?—That is, of course, a rather difficult point. I do not think the Poor Law authority has quite the prestige of the municipal authority, and I think it would more properly come within the province of the municipal authority.

41304. The district medical officer could follow up those cases, could he not, and there is no officer under the municipality analogous to the district medical officer of the Poor Law?—That is so.

41305. Would it be advisable for the district medical officer to follow up those cases?—I take it that the cases would be treated as out-patients, and they would attend the hospital as out-patients. I do not think they would want medical officers to visit them.

41306. You would not have an outdoor medical, system then, under the municipality?—I think it would not be necessary.

41307. Would you not refer them to some medical charitable institution to be treated as out-patients?—No. I do not think you quite understood my point. I say the out-patient department would be under the municipality, but they would not require visiting medical officers, because the patients, I contemplate, would attend at the hospital and report themselves there.

41308. That is, they would attend at the lock hospital under the municipality?—Yes.

41309. Within workhouse hospitals do you recommend separate wards for this purpose, where these patients could be kept apart from the other patients?—Decidedly.

41310. What is your reason for that?—It is rather more difficult to say why they should not be separated.

41311. Medical men differ on this point, do they not?—I never heard of there being any doubt on the point of separating recent cases of venereal disease, in fact the other patients would not at all like to be associated with them.

41312. (Dr. Downes.) Have you had to make special provision and accommodation at Leeds for this class of cases?—Yes, we have provision, but it is not sufficient.

41313. Have you extended it at all of late years?—A little.

41315. They wait till they are pauperised, you mean?—Yes, till they are absolutely unfit to work.

41316. In your analysis, did you take into account how many were in a contagious stage of the disease; could you give us the proportion in round numbers?—The analysis of 500 adult inmates refers to people in the ordinary wards who are past the infectious stage.

41317. You say that eighty-five men and sixty-four women were patients on account of some sequel of venereal disease?—Yes.

41318. They would be past the infectious stage?—Yes.

41319. Were there none in the infectious stage?—No; I exclude them. There are always from sixteen to twenty in the acute stage, and I do not include those in that analysis.

41320. Would that be about the proportion of those who would be in the acute stage?—Yes, about twenty.

41321. You say that these cases do not go to the general hospitals now; do you regard that as a serious drawback from the point of view of medical education?—Yes, undoubtedly.

41322. What would you suggest to meet that lacuna in medical education?—I think the establishment of lock hospitals in some shape or other. The objection to having them in connection with the general hospital is that donors do not like their charitable funds used for that purpose, and many would not allow it.

41323. Would you bring medical instruction to the Poor Law infirmaries?—I see no reason why they should not be used for that purpose.

41324. You have had a long experience?—Yes.

41325. And you see no reason why Poor Law infirmaries should not be used for medical instruction?—No.

41327. Just to amplify what was said about the legal powers of detention, I think the original power was under the 30 and 31 Vict., C. 106, Sec. 22; and the wording of that is: "When there shall be in any workhouse a poor person suffering from mental disease, or from bodily disease of an infectious or contagious character, and the medical officer of such workhouse shall upon examination report in writing that such person is not in a proper state to leave the workhouse without danger to himself or others, the guardians may direct the master to detain such person therein," and then it goes on that "if the guardians be not sitting the master of the workhouse may, until the next meeting of the guardians, detain him therein"?—That is permissive; it is "may."

41328. That was passed in 1867, I think?—And it has been acted upon.

41329. That was before any question of the notification of disease came into account, was it not?—Yes.

41330. You yourself, I believe, have acted upon that before notification came into account, have you not?—Yes.

41331. What do you do with cases of delirium tremens?—They are treated as lunatics.

41332. Have you any special power of detention of cases of delirium tremens? I may refer you to the Lunacy Act of 1890?—I think under that Act you can detain them for fourteen days.

41333. I think under the Lunacy Act, 1890, the section I have just read out was repealed, except as regards persons suffering from delirium tremens, or from bodily disease of a contagious or infectious character; is that not so? My point is that that section is repealed partially, but only as regards mental disease, and that there is nothing in it about its being notifiable, and I do not quite follow you in your reference to the disease having to be notifiable?—The duties of the medical officer are laid down in Article 3 of the General Order of 1879, which does not mention venereal disease.

41334. Would an Order of the Local Government Board override a Statute?—I am afraid I could not answer that.

41335. Should you expect it would?—No, perhaps not. But I think medical officers have to be cautious. They must not forget number one, and the responsibility which lies on them. I would not like, unless there was something far more definite, to run the risk of detaining a person suffering from venereal disease.

41337. You think you would have power?—I think so.

41338. Is measles a notifiable disease?—Yes, it comes under the category—it is notifiable in some districts.

41339. Is it notifiable in Leeds?—No.

41340. But yet you think you would be able to use that section in the case of measles?—I think so.

41341. Although it is not notifiable?—Yes.

41343. (Sir Samuel Provis.) That Order which you refer to is merely, is it not, an Order making it the duty of the Poor Law medical officer to give notice to the medical officer of health in certain cases of infectious disease?—Yes. Dr. James Allan.

41344. Therefore that does not affect, does it, the power of the medical officer of a workhouse to retain cases in the workhouse under the section to which Dr. Downes directed your attention?—I think it does. I look upon this Article in the Order of 1879 as defining contagious disease. 18 Feb. 1907.

41345. That was not the intention of it at all; the intention of the Order of 1879, surely, was to give information to the medical officer of health?—And incidentally to define contagious disease. Power to detain cases of infectious or contagious diseases in workhouse.

41346. No—merely to say that it was the duty of the Poor Law medical officer to give information to the medical officer of health for sanitary purposes. The other section had been in force for years before that; is that not so?—Yes, and it has been acted upon, but still it does not appear to be very definite.

The Rev. WILLIAM BLACKSHAW, called; and Examined.

41347. (Chairman.) You have been for some years, I understand, connected with the Croft House Settlement in Sheffield?—Yes, for about four years.

41348. Previous to that had you any knowledge of Sheffield?—I have been a minister in Sheffield for about eight years.

41349. I think you have prepared for us a paper which gives the result of your experience?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

CHIEF CHARITIES IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD.

to House Settlement

1. Benevolent Fund of Croft House Settlement.—No money is given, except under special circumstances, and then only when the history and character of the individual applying for help are well known. Money has, for example, been given to prevent bailiffs from seizing furniture for arrears of rent. In one or two cases when this has been done the whole sum has been repaid.

The method adopted is to make an arrangement with a local provision dealer to honour notes with my own signature.

Application is usually made to me in person at my office. The people who apply are mostly residents temporarily out of work or in short work. There are a number of hawkers in the neighbourhood; bad weather and scarcity of money among their usual customers often brings them to me.

This fund is administered very carefully and only when the people who apply for help are in temporary need.

No preference is shown to the adherents of any Church.

Vincent
and.

2. The Fathers of St. Vincent de Paul, whose presbytery is in the neighbourhood, have a similar fund to my own, which is administered in a similar manner. Tickets for coal and groceries are issued, but only to practising Roman Catholics.

St. Luke's Parish Fund.

3. The Vicar of the Parish of St. Luke's, in which this Settlement is situated, has a benevolent fund. It is administered in a similar manner to my own, and is on a broader basis than the Catholic fund. The vicar will help those he regards as deserving cases, apart altogether from the fact whether they are actual or prospective members of his congregation.

EFFECT ON RECIPIENTS OF CHARITY AND POOR LAW OUT-RELIEF.

Effect of in-
relief.

4. It is difficult to make an exact statement on this point. A good deal depends on the method of charitable relief.

5. If it is careless, emotional, indiscriminate, it is thoroughly demoralising and harmful. People come to think that impudence and persistency in begging ensure a comfortable living without work. For example, a hawker will say he is out of work simply because he has not started work. If he thinks he is likely to be successful he will ask you for help and so save himself the trouble of working for a day. He is his own employer. He begins and ends his day of work when he chooses; that is, when he has enough for lodgings and food and renewal of stock. Charity in this case makes a man lazy. He gets up late, loses energy, and is almost always intemperate. Rev. William Blackshaw.

6. If, on the other hand, charity is administered after careful and thorough examination (which of course takes much time and trouble) and is given always with a view of helping those who receive it to be independent of it, it inspires energy and hope. It must, however, be adequate to necessary needs, i.e., it must be adequate to efficiency. 18 Feb. 1907.

7. Poor Law out-relief has always the advantage of the thorough and accurate investigation of a trained expert, the relieving officer, whose knowledge of the history and needs of individuals and families is usually exhaustive. This officer is rarely deceived. Value of investigation by relieving officer.

8. It is, however, in my judgment, in most cases inadequate. It keeps people in a pitiful and miserable existence. For example, a widow left with a young family cannot get enough out-relief to attend properly to her family. She must leave her children for the whole of three or four days a week during which she goes out washing or charring. She leaves home early and comes back late. The children are neglected and, if they are old enough, run wild. Infants are not properly fed, as she cannot take a baby with her. Neighbours may be kind, but they have their own children to look after. The lot of such children is deplorable, and their chance of becoming decent men and women is remote. I have known cases when children of widows have been simply left in the street until evening, to live as best they can. Inadequate out-relief and its effect on widows and children.

CRITICISM OF POOR LAW METHODS.

9. I have found relieving officers and guardians to be considerate and humane. They do their utmost within the limits defined by law. Humanity of relieving officers and guardians.

10. My criticism will be confined to one point:—

The offer of the "House" when poverty is due to accident, or misfortune, or unemployment following from industrial change or commercial stagnation. This means the break-up of a home, the distribution or sale of furniture, the loss of self-respect and hope. Leaving out of view those who are inefficient or permanently disabled (by infirmity or old age), there are the young and the capable, who are liable to the above chances. By going in the House such become a greater charge to the community, and for a longer period of time than would be the case if they were temporarily helped until they became industrially efficient or until trade became more buoyant. I think the danger of the present method is to turn a temporary misfortune into a permanent one. Objections to indoor relief to able-bodied in certain cases.

11. Extent of co-operation between charity and the Poor Law, and the possibility of its extension.—In my capacity as minister of a church I know of cases in which women (widows mostly) are in receipt of small monthly allowances from a fund raised by collections at sacramental services. The amount they receive is 2s. 6d. per month. Some of these women also receive out-door relief. There are also Mothers' Meetings in connection with the women's Charity in supplement of out-relief.

Rev. William Blackshaw. 18 Feb. 1907.

churches and chapels, and money is occasionally given there to those who receive grants of bread and money from the guardians. At Christmas time special grants are made, nearly always in kind, to the most needy cases.

Need for intercommunication between guardians and charities.

12. There is a need for a method by which the guardians and the benevolent people in the Churches should know what each is giving. At present there is ignorance and uncertainty. I have known cases of women who have been members of several Mothers' Meetings and have derived financial benefit from them. There is at present no means by which the guardians can be made aware of this in their distribution of out-relief.

13. The possibility of extension of co-operation is great, but it depends on thorough knowledge on both sides (Charity and Poor Law relief). Co-operation is made difficult by the fact that so many Churches and charitable institutions act within a given area in entire ignorance of each other's proceedings. The result is that often the least desiring cases get the most help.

Proposed local registers of charities; charity should not bar out-relief, need of more co-operation between charity and Poor Law.

14. The first step towards effective co-operation is a registration of all charitable gifts within a defined area.

Then the fact that a person was receiving charitable help from a Church or a society (providing the nature and extent of it were known) should be no barrier to supplementary help from the Poor Law. This co-operation might enable a widow or an aged couple to continue in their home, and so be only a small charge on the community (as far as out-relief is concerned). Within the Churches—I speak now of the Nonconformist ones—great efforts are made to preserve adherents and members from going into the House. Occasionally they go in when sickness makes adequate nursing imperative. I think this co-operation might be extended and placed upon a more thorough and systematic basis.

Difficulty of substituting charity for out-relief.

15. The possibility of substituting charity for out-relief.—I doubt the possibility of this in the present disorganised state of charity. There is not a sufficient supply of voluntary helpers at present to completely overhaul the congested districts of a great city. Many really deserving people seem to hide themselves to escape notice. They are difficult to find, and when they are found are reluctant to give information about their circumstances.

Development of City Guilds of Help.

16. The movement known as the City Guild of Help in a few of the northern cities aims at organising helpers so that exact knowledge may be obtained of the circumstances of the people, and so that the sources of charity may be available for needy cases that are not yet in receipt of Poor Law relief. This movement is in an experimental stage, but it may be able to show us how far charity may by proper organisation reduce the need of out-relief. If it were possible to divert to some public fund or funds the indiscriminate alms of benevolent people, an immense sum, which is now, I fear, wasted, would be available for wise and adequate charitable relief.

Waste of indiscriminate charity.

ACCOUNT OF OPERATIONS, SUBSCRIPTIONS, BENEFITS, ETC., OF FRIENDLY AND OTHER SELF-HELP SOCIETIES.

Congregational Sick and Funeral Society and its operations.

17. Garden Street Congregational Sick and Funeral Society.—I am only able to speak (from direct personal knowledge) of the operations of a sick and funeral society in connection with this settlement, and which has been in existence for thirty-five years. The settlement is not responsible in any way, neither does it control the management. The society was founded when the settlement was a Congregational Church, and it retains the old name—Garden Street Congregational Sick and Funeral Society. I am the president, but the president, vice-president, treasurer, and secretary are elected by the members at the annual meeting.

18. The Committee of Management consists of ten, including the above officers, and six members taken in rotation from the book of enrolment.

19. Those wishing to join this society must not be under eighteen years of age, nor over thirty-five years, and must reside within six miles of the parish church of Sheffield. They pay an entrance fee of 1s. The contributions are made weekly, from eighteen to thirty years of age, 3d.; from thirty to thirty-five, 3½d. In addition to this every member pays 6d. on the death of a member, on or before the fourth club night following the notice of payment. Congregational Sick and Funeral Society and its operations. This last payment goes to the funeral grant. A member may have two shares in the society, but not more than two. In this case his contributions are double, but not his payment for a funeral.

20. The benefits are as follows:—Should any member have been in the society six months, and fall sick or have an accident, he receives 5s. a week per share for thirteen weeks; if the illness continues he receives 2s. 6d. per week per share for thirteen more weeks.

21. At the death of a member or his wife the sum of £10 is paid, provided the member has been in the society at least six months. Members who have been in the society fifteen years or more are entitled to £15 funeral benefit, the extra £5 being taken from the reserve fund.

22. The reserve fund is constituted by a payment of 1s. a year by all members.

23. The secretary receives a salary of 6d. per annum for each member placed on the books.

24. When all these charges and payments have been met, the balance of the funds of the society is paid as a dividend to all the members annually on the second Tuesday in May.

25. The society may issue loans of £1 and 10s., at the rate of 1s. per £, repayment to be made by instalments of 1s. per week for £1, and 6d. per week for 10s.

26. Members who desire loans are required to give a stamped promissory note for the amount, together with interest, which must be signed by another member as surety.

27. This society has a membership of 768.

POSSIBILITY OF PROVIDING FOR OLD-AGE PENSIONS BY FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

28. I cannot speak with any special knowledge on this point. The superannuation fund of a friendly society is usually a separate fund from its ordinary benefit funds. The extra contributions for an old-age pension would be voluntary. Condition for provision of old age pensions in friendly societies.

29. If membership of a friendly society were compulsory and payment into the superannuation fund of a society also compulsory, then old-age pensions might be provided for in this way. I do not see, however, that it would be possible to confer these powers.

30. It will be mentioned below that some Courts of the Order of Foresters do make contributions to an old-age pension fund obligatory for membership. Compulsory contributions to old age pensions in friendly societies.

EFFECT ON FRIENDLY SOCIETIES OF:—

(a) Free Medical State Relief.

31. It would depend on whether the society provided medical aid as part of its benefit. Some societies do, as, for example, the Oddfellows. There is, however, a growing dislike for this, as people have the impression that the medical aid provided in this way is less satisfactory than when they pay for it directly themselves. Effect of free medical State relief and voluntary hospitals on friendly societies.

32. Free medical State relief would tend to lower the subscription of societies that included medical aid in their benefit.

33. I do not see that it would make any difference in the cases of those societies that provide no medical aid, as, for example, the Independent Order of Free Gardeners.

(b) Voluntary Hospitals.

34. I have little further to add on this point to the above note.

35. If the hospital accommodation were adequate and in and out-patients' tickets and medicines could be obtained without difficulty or delay, some friendly society would probably drop medical aid work, which would reduce the subscriptions of the members.

36. On the other hand, there are many people who dislike hospitals and prefer to be treated at home. Some societies would doubtless meet this demand and continue a medical benefit. In this case I do not see that voluntary hospitals would make much difference.

Provision of old age pensions by existing friendly societies and effect of State old age pensions on friendly societies.

(c) State System of Old-age Pensions.

37. There are nine or ten courts of the Independent Order of Foresters in Sheffield in which the members who have joined after a certain date are obliged to contribute for old-age pensions. This is a condition of membership of the court. There are other courts in which there is no old-age pension or superannuation fund. I think, therefore, that a State system of old-age pensions might discourage some from joining a friendly society at all, or it would compel individual courts who now make an old-age pension obligatory to make it optional.

(d) Freely-given Poor Law Out-relief.

Effect of lax out-relief on friendly societies.

38. The effect of this would probably be to encourage the careless and improvident not to trouble about joining a friendly society.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN FRIENDLY SOCIETIES AND HOSPITALS.

Co-operation between friendly societies and hospitals.

39. Some courts of friendly societies contribute annually to the funds of the local hospitals and receive so many in-patients and so many out-patients' letters. These are given to the members of the court in cases of necessity. This is a great advantage to members, who otherwise might have some difficulty in obtaining "Letters."

This might be extended by further contributions to the funds of hospitals.

EFFECT OF OUTDOOR RELIEF AND FRIENDLY SOCIETIES ACTS, AND EXTENT OF ACTION UNDER THEM.

Meagre use of Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Acts.

40. I have been told by a prominent friendly society official, who has also been a guardian, that in his experience only three cases have come up in which the guardians have been asked to supplement with outdoor relief a friendly society pension.

QUESTION AS TO PROGRESS OF FRIENDLY AND THRIFT SOCIETIES.

Progress of friendly societies.

41. I have made some careful inquiries on this point and I find that the older friendly societies are not as popular as they were ten years ago; but that the sick and divide societies are growing in popularity. The reason of this is fairly obvious. The members receive back again as a dividend annually the balance, after sick pay and management expenses have been deducted. This means, in cases where there is no reserve fund, that the new financial year is commenced with only a few shillings in hand. A sudden run on the funds of such a society in the first quarter of a financial year might be very embarrassing to the management.

PENSION SCHEMES OF PRIVATE FIRMS.

Old age pension schemes of private firms.

42. Note.—Some of the big firms, e.g., Messrs. Walker & Hall's and J. G. Graves, have old-age pension schemes for their employees. I could obtain details of these schemes if required. The principle is, I believe, that so much per cent. is deducted from wages and so much per cent. added by the firm.

I add this as a note, but I have no exact information.

Comparative merits of out-relief and charity.

41350. (Chairman.) I suppose you would say that if charity is badly administered it has as detrimental an effect upon the recipients as outdoor relief?—Yes, I should.

41351. Therefore Poor Law out-relief has the advantage over the distribution of charity that it is associated with a competent officer whose business it is to make inquiries?—Yes.

Inadequate out-relief and its evils.

41352. You say that in your judgment the out-relief given is often inadequate?—Yes, it is.

41353. Would you go so far as to say that that is so in most cases?—Yes, I am afraid my experience rather confirms that, but my experience is not a very large one.

41354. With the Sheffield Board of Guardians, I believe that the prevailing practice is to give rather a higher relief than is given in the neighbouring unions?—I am not aware of the comparison between them, and I am not aware that it is higher in Sheffield than in other places. I am looking at it more from the point of view of the people themselves.

41355. In your statement you point out the evils of the inadequacy, particularly when it is associated with a widow who has a young family?—Yes, I have had several cases of that in my own experience, and I thought I could speak upon that more definitely.

41356. Your idea, I suppose, would be that a young widow should get relief which should be sufficient to dispense with her getting work, and should enable her to look after her children?—Yes.

41357. Have you had any experience as to what the effect of married women working in the factories is on the family?—Yes, I have had a little.

41358. What would you say of it; should you say it was bad?—It is bad, especially just before and after confinement. I have known cases where a woman has tried to work within three weeks of her confinement, and has dropped pretty nearly dead, and died shortly afterwards.

41359. Would you say that it has resulted generally in ignorance of domestic knowledge and housekeeping on the part of the women?—It leads to an anxiety to start work as soon as possible immediately after the confinement.

41360. It has been alleged rather that factory life has this effect, that they do not understand housekeeping?—That is so, but the particular case I have in my mind is that of a woman who started work too soon.

41361. As regards co-operation between charity and the Poor Law, you think there is room for a good deal more effective co-operation than at present exists?—Yes, I do.

41362. If co-operation is to be effective, you point out as a necessary preliminary that there must be a knowledge of, or registration of, the charities within the area?—Yes.

41363. I suppose you find great reluctance, on the part of a good many charities to conform to that?—Yes, I do, though the clergyman in my immediate neighbourhood seems very anxious to co-operate with me in that matter, and I think generally speaking the clergy are rather anxious to do so.

41364. What is the history of the settlement to which you are attached?—It arose from an old Congregational Church that had been at work in this particular locality for about 100 years. The ordinary sort of people who go to a Congregational Church had left that neighbourhood, and the neighbourhood had become what we commonly know as a slum, and no one would support this church. It was left stranded, so to speak, and another church, of which I happened to be the minister, took over the property and adapted it for social work in the immediate neighbourhood.

41365. Then you have no endowment?—None whatever.

41366. Do you take in people?—No, not in the sense of housing them.

41367. It is really a centre, I suppose?—Yes, it is a centre like Oxford House and Mansfield House in London.

41368. You have a number of classes at work?—Yes, educational classes, clubs and all sorts of things.

41369. I suppose you work very much amongst the class just above the Poor Law?—Yes, amongst the people just above and who are slipping into it, or who are just on the verge of it, and those that are practically within the grip of it.

41370. I suppose some of the people you come in contact with in your work are in receipt of out-relief?—Yes.

41371. It has been suggested to us by various witnesses that there should always be a committee representing charities and work such as you are doing, associated with every out-relief committee, the idea being that charity should deal with the cases before they come on to the Poor Law, if possible. Do you think that is a practicable scheme; for instance, in Sheffield do you think you would be able to construct an effective organisation of that kind?—I think it would be practicable. If the clergy and ministers and those who represent charitable relief were to co-operate with the relieving officer in a given district, and were not to give anything away without registering it in a common book, so to speak, I think it would be of immense advantage.

Rev. William Blackshaw. 41372. It has been pointed out to us that the weak part of the present Poor Law system is that it does not help people as they are falling, and that they have to be practically destitute before it can help; do you think that an organisation of this kind would be useful in dealing with that class of case?—Yes, it would be useful in preventing them from slipping down below a certain level.

18 Feb. 1907. Proposed local charity committees and registers of charitable gifts, and difficulties in connection therewith.

41373. It is a question rather of funds, is it not?—Yes.

41374. If you want an effective organisation of that sort you must be in receipt of certain funds, not, I suppose, exactly of an assured income, but you must be able to get from time to time money when you specially want it?—Yes.

41375. What is your view about that? Do you think the money would be forthcoming?—I think so, if we could only persuade people not to give their shillings and half-crowns indiscriminately. In the churches and chapels there are funds always available.

41376. What do you think would be the effect of having a committee like this which would be really an auxiliary or an advanced guard, so to speak, of the Poor Law? Do you think it would prevent people subscribing to those charities, because a man might say, "I pay my poor rates"?—I think they would be disposed to subscribe if they thought it would save people from being pauperised or from becoming paupers.

41377. In Sheffield there are a great many humane and charitable agencies at work, are there not?—Yes, I should say there are.

41378. And a great many people who are ready to give up their time to such work?—I hope so. We have a City Guild of Help, of which perhaps you may have heard; and at present we have only got 300 or 400 out of the necessary 1,300 helpers.

41379. I suppose you are mixed up with that?—Yes, I have been mixed up with it. I have retired now the thing is floated; but I had a good deal to do with the organisation of it.

41380. Should you say that sickness is frequently the cause of pauperism?—I should say so, but I do not know whether I have quite enough knowledge on that point to speak definitely.

41381. Would you say that there is any reluctance now amongst the poor to go to the medical officers of the Poor Law for assistance because these officers are connected with the Poor Law?—Not because they are connected with the Poor Law. Some people have got an impression that they are treated in rather an off-hand sort of way, but I think that is quite a mistake; they think they do not get the proper attention, because he happens to be a Poor Law doctor, and is not paid by them. I do not think this is a fair criticism, and I think they are generally treated very well.

41382. You are not sure, are you, whether the friendly societies are at all affected by the policy of the board of guardians?—No, except in very few cases—I have only known one case. I am afraid I have no definite knowledge of any value.

41383. What should you say about the agitation for old age pensions? Do you think that has at all a detrimental effect on thrift, by discouraging people to provide for themselves?—I do not think so; but it is rather difficult to speak exactly on a point of this kind.

41384. As far as you know there are no societies which provide old age pensions on any considerable scale in Sheffield, are there?—No. The Foresters, I believe, do it; and so do some of the other friendly societies. It is a small pension, and I am not quite sure what the amount is.

41385. Apparently from your statement the number of those who attain these pensions is very small?—It is comparatively small.

41386. Then you have a system of old age pensions in Sheffield in connection with some of the big firms?—Yes.

41387. I suppose in those cases, if a man leaves his employ he loses his chance of a pension?—I believe so, but I am not quite sure what the arrangement is.

41388. Does he get a refund?—I think he gets a refund of a proportion of the amount that he has paid, but I have not any definite knowledge. I think these firms rather keep it to themselves.

41389. What should you say was the feeling amongst the class you work amongst? There is not much desire, is there, to insure so as to receive an annuity in old age?—No, I am afraid not; I do not think they see quite far enough ahead for that.

41390. We are told that to insure for a payment at a certain age of a certain sum is much more popular than to provide for an annuity?—I have not met with this.

41391. Your evidence really amounts to this, that you think the Poor Law is deficient in preventing people from becoming paupers, and that this fault may be remedied by the association of organised charity with the Poor Law?—Yes.

41392. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any experience of the results of Poor Law education on the children who have been brought up in Poor Law schools?—No, I have not. I have visited the Sheffield Homes and seen the children there; but I have no further knowledge.

41393. You have no experience of how they turn out?—No, I have not.

41394. Do you find that gambling is a great source of pauperism?—Yes, I do.

41395. Can you give any reason for its growth?—No, with the exception of the monotony of people's work, and the desire for some relaxation in the evenings. Then the very hard conditions of labour with the Sheffield grinders, who sit from eight or nine hours over a wheel, tend to wild excitement at night, of any kind.

41396. Is that still a very hazardous employment?—A good many people of my acquaintance within the last four years have died from the grinders' complaint, through inhaling little bits of the wheel and little bits of steel.

41397. Is it not guarded against?—Not to my knowledge.

41398. Do you think a knowledge of that has an effect upon people's lives?—I think so, from the short experience I have had. It makes them want to drink hard.

41399. (Chairman.) And does it make them reckless?—I am told that inhaling all these small particles produces a frightful craving for drink.

41400. They are bits of stone, are they not?—Yes. It tears their lungs to pieces, and if they are at all given to drinking it finishes them off very quickly.

41401. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you think if the material conditions of life could be improved, that it would have a considerable effect upon the pauperism of Sheffield?—I think it would.

41402. What direction would you wish that to take?—Shorter hours for one thing, if possible, and a higher standard of education, giving them tastes to spend their time on something higher. They do not know how to amuse themselves if they get a day's holiday. I think the rational amusements that are now provided in the settlements, for instance, billiards, and opportunities of meeting people of a higher type and of fraternising and having friendly intercourse with them, all tend to raise them. I have seen a lot of men become steady under those influences.

41403. Do you think the housing question is an important one?—I do.

41404. Do you find the Sheffield by-laws put into operation with regard to housing?—Not entirely, I should say.

41405. Have you ever had much experience yourself? Have you reported cases?—No, I have not reported cases.

41406. Do you know how far inspection is carried out?—No, I cannot say that I have not observed it.

41407. In the course of your work do you come across cases of overcrowding?—Yes, I do.

41408. Have you come across any cases of consumptive people living with their families?—Yes, and cases of families increasing. They may have been inspected at one particular time, but then perhaps four years afterwards the condition of overcrowding comes in, even in the flats under the Corporation. People live for a few years in two rooms; they were all right when they started and there was no overcrowding; but as time goes on, they get into the condition of overcrowding, and it is very difficult for the Corporation, or any other landlords, to keep them moving.

41409. Do you find any change coming over the home life of the people? Do you think the home life is as strong as it was?—I am afraid not.

41410. What would you say is the cause of that?—For one thing the fact that people perhaps have had two rooms to live in, and the man and the elder children, as soon as they can get out, cannot possibly stop in. There is washing and scrubbing and the younger children to be bathed, and there is food about; perhaps there is a bed in the living room. I have in my mind now quite a number of tenements of this kind. There is no comfort in the place at all, and if on a winter's night they sit by the fire they are pretty soon told to go outside. The chances are they have nowhere to go when they do get outside, unless there are clubs provided for them; these are being provided now by the people in the churches.

41411. Do you think the responsibility of children with regard to their parents, from the Poor Law point of view, has been weakened by it?—Yes, I should say so.

41412. And that there is a weaker sense of the duty of supporting them?—I think there is very little feeling of that among the children—very little indeed.

41413. Take it the other way; what would you say as to the duties of the parents with regard to their children?—I should say there is very little feeling of that. I am afraid that is getting weak too. It is an extremely difficult problem.

41414. Do you think parents are more willing now than they previously were to be separated from their children, and to allow them to be sent to a workhouse school; do you think there is a decay on that side?—Do you mean a decay of their natural affection for their children?

41415. Yes?—I think it is a little difficult to answer that positively, but I am inclined to say that they would not care very much, judging from the way I have heard them speak of the death of children as though it was rather a bit of good luck.

41416. It has been put to us that if the State education of children were improved or extended much further, parents would be greatly tempted to put their children entirely on to the State; do you think that is a real danger?—Yes, I should say so.

41417. Natural affection would not counteract that?—No, I am afraid not. You see, sometimes they have so many children. A man working for me had twenty-four children and seventeen of them were living, and he told me that they never came to see him unless they wanted something.

41418. Are early marriages prevalent in Sheffield?—Yes. They are encouraged by the hire system of furnishing; you can get a houseful of furniture for a sovereign and so many other payments.

41419. Among the class of people that you work amongst is there any provision for single men or single women; in other words, is it possible for them to remain single, so to speak?—Yes.

41420. In what way?—A young man would have to share a room with perhaps two or three younger brothers, and he would be expected to pay a good proportion of his wages to his mother. In some cases the father gets a little slack under those circumstances, and the elder boy begins to think that the father is depending upon him. That rather encourages him to get married too soon. But it is the hire system of furnishing which I think is a very terrible danger. I have known a case of a young fellow furnishing under those circumstances and paying a sovereign for the first week's or the first month's payment, and not having another sixpence to pay for the stamp for the contract—it requires an extra sixpence for the stamp. He has not had that sixpence, and yet he has married and pawned his credit for the rest of his life.

41421. Have you any number of single people living in lodgings outside their families?—Not any great number, but I have some.

41422. Have you noticed among the people you work among a growing tendency of the men to live on their wives' earnings?—I should not say there is a growing tendency towards that, but I have come across it. Rev. William Blackshaw
18 Feb. 1907.

41423. What would be the occupation of the wives in those cases?—Charing, scrubbing and hawking. Hawking is very common, and selling "pot mould." I do not know what that is exactly. I believe it is buying old clothes and selling them again. There is a lot of that done in my neighbourhood; they hire a barrow for so much a day and then buy and sell clothes. Husbands supported by their wives' earnings.

41424. Do the women do that?—The women push the barrow about. Perhaps they will bring home a lot of old egg boxes which they cut up for firewood. They will pick up a living in that way.

41425. Those are people who have husbands who are perhaps not too zealous for work?—Yes, men who get up at 12 o'clock.

41426. (Miss Hill.) You seem to feel the great need of some sort of co-operation between the various charities and the poor law?—Yes, I do. Attempts at co-operation between charity and the Poor Law in Sheffield, the City Guild of Help, etc.

41427. What efforts have been made in Sheffield to organise charity?—Only the movement called the City Guild of Help, so far.

41428. Have you not had a Charity Organisation Society?—Unfortunately not. The Sheffield people have rather a horror of that expression, a "Charity Organisation Society." We have had to be very careful to avoid using it. I am sorry personally, because I had some experience of the value of the society in London.

41429. With regard to the City Guild of Help, is any effort being made to get, at any rate as leaders, people with some experience in wise charity?—Yes, they are trying to get those who have had some experience, but there are not very many who have had experience I am afraid in Sheffield—not of the kind you refer to.

41430. It will be a very serious thing if a large number of people are enrolled, and are more or less hampered in their movements through the want of any system of teaching them, will it not?—That point has come up several times, and it has been suggested that people should not be allowed to volunteer for it, but should be selected by those who have had some experience, and the helpers should be examined first, so to speak, as to their fitness.

41431. Then you have a group or a committee who have had some experience who are taking the lead in it?—Yes.

41432. Are you organising any kind of lectures for them?—Not at present. I left the executive when the thing was floated about a month ago, and it may have done that since I left. I was obliged to leave after the thing was started.

41433. You realised that that would be an important point?—It is extremely important indeed.

41434. Especially, I should think, to have a good number of people with experience who would teach the visitors on each particular case, that is to say, they should be so numerous that they would be able to study the individual case?—I think that would be extremely important.

41435. But you will not now be able to help in that, shall you?—Yes, I shall be an individual helper. Clergymen and ministers are not heads of divisions and captains, they are simply in the ranks. I shall be in the ranks as a helper.

41436. The Poor Law has never adopted the plan recommended by the late Lord Goschen, when he was at the head of the Local Government Board, of publishing any lists, has it?—Not in Sheffield, to my knowledge. Overlapping between Poor Law and charities.

41437. There is no record among the charities, I suppose, of what they do?—No, I am afraid not.

41438. And there is no organised system among the charities for giving pensions?—I am afraid there is very little organisation of any kind in Sheffield. We are all over-lapping frightfully, and none of us knows what the others are doing.

41439. The pension schemes you have mentioned are those given by private firms?—Yes.

Over-crowding a cause of decrease of home life.

Weakening of filial responsibility.

Weakening of parental responsibility and its results.

Early marriages and their causes.

Rev. William Blackshaw. 41440. Have you known individual clergy or ministers help forward a system of pensions ?—I am afraid not.

18 Feb. 1907. 41441. There is a good deal to be done then ?—I am afraid so.

Objections to indoor relief to able-bodied in certain cases. 41442. (Mr. Bentham.) In your criticism of Poor Law methods, you deplore that the house is offered so often. I suppose you would say that people who are not living under proper conditions should not be granted outdoor relief ?—Under proper health conditions ?

41443. Health and moral conditions ?—Certainly, if they are not living under proper moral conditions.

41444. You would not grant outdoor relief in those cases ?—No, I think not.

41445. And under proper health conditions ?—That is rather difficult to answer.

41446. Do you find the people who are living respectable lives are really offered the test of the workhouse in Sheffield ?—I have come across cases of that kind where I felt that a little temporary help might have tided them over a serious crisis. These are not people who were in any sense bad or immoral.

41447. The system of relief in Sheffield is an outdoor relief system, is it not ?—Yes. They are liberal there.

41448. Did you ascertain precisely in those cases you have in your mind why the house order had been given rather than outdoor relief ? Did you follow them up, and ascertain from the relieving officer whether there was a reason that you did not know of ?—I have not done that in all cases. May I just say that the method I usually adopt is to find out from a man's rent record what sort of a man he is ? I have generally found that it is rather a good test to ascertain how he has paid his rent over a given number of years.

41449. Does it not rather depend on how he has spent his money ?—That is a form of spending his money, is it not.

41450. That is only one of them ?—It is a very important one, if he gets 23s. a week and his rent is 5s.

41451. At Sheffield they have a method of classification, even of their cases of out-door relief, in order to make sure in a certain sense that the people who are living respectable lives get adequate outdoor relief. Have you come across any case of that kind which is specially favoured by the Sheffield Boards ?—I have come across a very liberal case where they have allowed a grant to an illegitimate child, for instance, of a couple of shillings a week, which is very liberal.

41452. Out-door relief to an illegitimate child ?—The mother was a widow who had four children, three legitimate and one illegitimate, and they allowed her 8s. a week.

41453. (Mr. Gardiner.) Was the youngest or the first illegitimate ?—The first.

41454. (Mr. Bentham.) That was 8s. a week for five persons, was it ?—Yes.

41455. Do you consider that liberal ?—I consider it liberal, but it is inadequate, if that is not a contradiction in terms, because I understood from the relieving officer at the time, that the illegitimate child had no claim upon them, and they might have made it only 6s., but they made it 8s. I thought that was liberal, but it was not adequate, because the woman could not look after the four children properly on that.

41456. According to what you say, you think that the relief generally given to Poor Law cases is inadequate ?—That has been my experience. I have only a limited experience and it is not worth very much, I am afraid.

41457. You suggest in Paragraph 14 that out-door relief might be given to supplement the relief which is given by the churches and other charitable societies. Do you find that the guardians when they know that a small amount is being given from the poor box of a church will refuse out-door relief in consequence, even though the amount granted by the church is not sufficient to maintain existence ?—If the guardians knew that we were doing a little they would not knock off the outdoor relief.

41458. You rather suggest that they do not give it by saying "Then the fact that a person was receiving charitable help from a church or a society (providing the nature and extent of it were known) should be no barrier to supplementary help from the Poor Law." I understand from that that it is held as a barrier ?—I do not think so always, but I should like it to be a recognised fact.

41459. I do not know what the practice is in Sheffield—I suppose you know that better than we do ?—I should like that it should be no barrier.

41460. That would depend entirely on the amount that is given, would it not ?—Yes.

41461. Do you come much in contact with the relieving officers ?—Often. I go down to see them and meet them.

41462. In what capacity do you meet them ?—In trying to find out what is their impression of people who have come to me for private help, and to know what they are doing. I try to find out what they are doing before I do anything.

41463. Then you really co-operate with the relieving officers ?—As far as I possibly can I do, and I see them as often as I can.

41464. Have you found them helpful to you ?—I have found them very helpful to me, and always humane and considerate.

41465. Have you any reason to come in contact with the district medical officers under the Poor Law ?—Yes, in my ministerial capacity I have met cases that they visit.

41466. Have you ever had need to refer any of your cases to the medical officer or the relieving officer in the first instance for medical relief ?—Yes, I have.

41467. Have you always found that medical relief has been given when it has been required ?—Yes, in my experience I think so.

41468. You have no complaint to make in that respect ?—I think not. I only heard a complaint once, and when I investigated it I found that the medical officer was quite in the right, and that there was no cause whatever for it.

41469. (Mr. Booth.) In regard to what you said about overcrowding, I was not quite sure whether you were referring to individual homes which became overcrowded owing to the increased number of children in the house, or whether you were referring generally to an increased overcrowding in Sheffield as a city ?—It was the increase in the home that I referred to.

41470. Your experience probably would be hardly long enough to say there is more overcrowding in Sheffield, but you can say that in each home there is a risk of that as they get on in life ?—Yes.

41471. With regard to old-age pensions which you deal with in Paragraph 37, and the discouragement that may come to joining a friendly society, does it not partly depend upon the age at which the pensions would begin ?—Yes, I think so.

41472. I think you said afterwards that there has been a larger demand for some terminable sum which came at a certain age ?—I think there is.

41473. So that if they knew that some provision by the State would come when they were seventy, they would still have the object to save through their friendly societies for the preceding years ?—There would be that motive, certainly, for them to save for an annuity at sixty to carry them on through the intervening years till seventy.

41474. But if the annuity did not come in till they were seventy that would leave a very substantial portion of their lives when they would need to secure some provision, and they might secure it through a friendly society ?—Yes.

41475. (Chairman.) Have you any model dwelling-houses in Sheffield ?—Yes, the corporation have erected flats, and they permit me to live in one of them.

41476. Is there any rule as regards the number of children a tenant may have ?—Yes, there is.

41477. What is the rule ?—I think I am right in saying that they must not have more than two children.

41478. If a man has more than two children is he turned out ?—That is the difficulty. I do not think they do turn them out. They must only have two when they go into the flat, but in the course of time there are more, and that is where the difficulty comes in.

41479. (Miss Hill). Are all the tenements of the same size?—No, they let as one room, two rooms, and three rooms. The difficulty is that as the people go on living in these tenements, the condition of overcrowding comes along, and there does not seem to be any check upon that.

41480. Do they not move from the one room to two rooms and then to three rooms?—No, they do not, I am afraid.

41481. (Chairman.) Then there is a rule, but it is not enforced?—They are very careful to inquire how many children the people have when they take the tenement, but as to what their method is afterwards I am afraid I am rather in the dark, or whether they have any method of getting into the building and finding out how many children there are. I have not known them do that. Rev. William Blackshaw.

41482. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is there any clause in your agreement with the corporation giving right of entry?—I am afraid I am not quite sure on that point, although I signed an agreement. I was the first tenant four years ago. Model 18 Feb. 1907.

41483. In any case, supposing that they had reason to believe that there was overcrowding, they would have the right of entry, would they not?—I think so. Model 18 Feb. 1907.

41484. There is no doubt about that; they have the right, have they not?—I think so.

41485. They could get an order of the justices to enforce it?—There would be no doubt about that.

Dr. JAMES SPOTTISWOODE CAMERON, called; and Examined.

41487. (Chairman.) How long have you been Medical Officer of Leeds?—Seventeen years; at the end of 1889 I went there. I had been in Huddersfield before that, as medical officer, for about thirteen years, and I had been honorary physician to the Huddersfield infirmary for about thirteen years before I came to Leeds. I was during most of that time also medical officer of health. I had previously held for a short time a Poor Law appointment under the guardians in Huddersfield; I had held a large number of hospital appointments and had been in Bradford dispensary; I had hospital appointments in Edinburgh, including one at the children's hospital, so I had a good many opportunities of seeing work amongst the poor of Edinburgh, Bradford, and Huddersfield, and since that time in Leeds.

41488. Apparently you combined two functions, you were health officer and at the same time physician to a large hospital?—Yes, that was in Huddersfield. I was in private practice, consulting practice, at that time.

41489. We will take the statement you have prepared as your evidence-in-chief if you will hand it in, and supplement it by some questions?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

A.—The Sanitary Authority.

1. The sanitary authority is the City Council, working usually by committees. The Sanitary Committee has charge of hospitals, and the Housing Committee of insanitary dwellings.

2. City Hospital.—The City Hospital now consists of two groups of buildings on two adjacent estates in the parish of Seacroft, immediately outside the city boundary. On the one estate, which may be called for convenience the "Manston Hall Estate," consisting of about 100 acres, we have now accommodation to the extent of 240 ordinary and 40 isolation beds for cases of scarlet fever; of eighty ordinary and twenty isolation beds, set aside chiefly for diphtheria; of eighty-eight beds in four pavilions and six isolation beds for the continued fevers. The total accommodation for fever patients on this estate is 472 beds. Dr. James Spottiswoode Cameron. 19 Feb. 1907.

3. On the same estate, but entirely separate, we have, for isolation of persons from infected houses in the city, sixteen cottages, caretaker's house, and laundry. Leeds City Hospital and its accommodation, &c. Provision for isolation of infected persons at Leeds.

4. Separated by the highroad and a quarter of a mile from any of the pavilions already spoken of is a smallpox hospital, newly erected, containing ninety beds in pavilions, and ten isolation beds. On this estate, "Killingbeck," there are also certain galvanised iron pavilions, containing eighty-four beds, which were erected during the progress of a recent outbreak of smallpox, as the new wards, although planned and sanctioned, had, owing to a difficulty with a tenant, not been commenced in time to cope with that outbreak. There is a temporary administrative accommodation for these extra beds in the old mansion belonging to the estate. For smallpox we have therefore 184 beds on an estate of 144 acres.

5. These two Seacroft hospitals, at Manston Hall and Killingbeck respectively, are intended entirely for the isolation and treatment of infectious disease; and patients whose circumstances require such isolation are admitted from the city without any charge, whether they belong to the families of ratepayers or of paupers.

6. Tuberculosis.—The Corporation also subscribe, under the powers of Section 131 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to the hospitals provided by the Leeds and District Tuberculosis Association. The hospitals of this association are mentioned under "C."

7. Milk Depot.—The Sanitary Committee advised the starting of a depôt for the supply of pure milk for children born in a particular district of the town. It was ruled, however, by the Lord Mayor, on advice of the Town Clerk, that we had no power to spend money for the purpose. The work which had been initiated by the Corporation was carried on for a year by a voluntary society with good results.

8. Assistance to Persons segregated on Account of Infectious Disease.—Although the Corporation have never compensated persons for loss of work by reason of their having been themselves ill of an infectious disease, they have frequently paid part wages of those who, though not themselves apparently ill, have at request remained away from work on account of having been exposed to contagious disease. This has been done chiefly in outbreaks of typhus and smallpox. The practice has been to pay half the wages and to maintain the contacts in the cottages already spoken of, or in additional ones provided for the same purpose. These persons so provided for are of course under medical observation and receive medical assistance should they take ill.

9. Police.—The police have four surgeons in different parts of the town. Their principal function is attending members of the staff. They are not necessarily called in for cases of accident. When accidents occur it is more usual to send for the infirmary ambulance, which is housed at the central fire station. The police surgeons are sent for to persons in the lock-up at the Town Hall, when necessary.

B.—The Poor Law.

10. Portions of four different unions lie within the city. The area of these unions is altogether 36,268 acres, of which 21,596 lie in Leeds. The population at the Census of 1901 of these unions was 450,823, of whom 428,968 lived in Leeds. It will be thus seen that the largest and the densest population is within the city. Each union is divided into townships, and the townships are generally sub-divided into medical relief districts. The Union of Leeds had a population at the Census of 254,536, and of that population all but 3,210 belong to the city. The Leeds Union is, therefore, the predominant partner, and the city parishes in that union predominate within it. The Township of Leeds lies wholly within the city and has an area of 2,737 acres and a population at the Census of 177,920. The increase of population within this area since the previous Census amounted only to 397. The population of the whole city increased 61,463, showing that it is in the outer townships rather than in the centre of the city that the increase has lately taken place. It is rather the middle class, and the well-to-do working class, that have gone into the outer districts, and the poorest class of all have been to a less extent displaced. Poverty is, therefore, proportionately greater in the central parts of the town. Each of the four unions has its own workhouse and infirmary. The Hunslet workhouse lies beyond the city boundary.

11. The Leeds Guardians have adopted for many years the excellent practice of having a dispensary at their offices in South Parade, at which the members of their staff in charge of these central parts attend on every morning of the week and see casual cases. Except under these circumstances, a patient requiring medical attention not already on the books of the guardians can only obtain relief from their district medical officers by obtaining first the certificate from a relieving officer.

C.—Voluntary Effort.

12. Infirmary.—There is a general infirmary of 436 beds with a large out-patient department. It deals with between 6,000 and 7,000 in-patients and between 39,000 and 40,000 out-patients every year. Unless in exceptional cases out-patients are only seen at the institution. There are special departments, including a maternity department, the patients in the latter case being visited at home.

13. Hospital for Women and Children.—This hospital has fifty-five beds, including five for maternity cases; and in-patients between 500 and 600; out-patients between 5,000 and 6,000. Like the infirmary, the out-patients are almost entirely seen at the institution.

14. Tuberculosis Association.—The hospitals referred to in paragraph 6 are two, one at Gateforth, about seventeen miles from the city, off the road to Selby, and the other, Armley House, within the city. The former stands on an estate belonging to the corporation and is rented by the association. It was a mansion house and has been adapted by the enlargement of windows, re-arrangement of staircases, the erection outside of shelters, &c., for the reception of thirty-four patients; twenty men and fourteen women. There is a resident medical officer and the patients are seen by the physicians to the association. This hospital is intended chiefly for the more hopeful of the cases, and an attempt has been made recently to find a little work for the convalescents in gardening.

Armley House is also an old mansion standing in large grounds. A member of the Tuberculosis Committee guaranteed the rent for three years. A few alterations have been made in the house and recently a Döcker hospital for eight patients has been erected in the grounds. One or two shelters have also been built, chiefly as annexes to the house itself. The hospital is capable of receiving forty-four patients: twenty-eight men, fourteen women, and two children, including eight male patients in the Döcker hospital, who are generally those intermediate between the more severe cases, for which Armley House is intended and the more hopeful cases that are treated at Gateforth.

15. Leeds Public Dispensary.—This institution has two branches. The original dispensary, now a new building, is situated in North Street in the Leeds township. About 30,000 patients attend. A branch dispensary on the south side of the river deals with about 10,000 to 12,000 patients. Both institutions are open for urgent cases and certain "home patients" are visited at their own houses within a prescribed boundary. The visits paid to the home patients of the central institution amounted to between 15,000 and 16,000 in 1905. The resident medical officers are generally young men who receive a small salary and live in the institution. They have a right to call in, as consultants, members of the honorary staff in cases of difficulty. Their work is much appreciated by the poor in the districts where they visit. No recommendation is required, but notice of requirement to visit must be sent early in the morning. Unfortunately a good many cases are taken to the out-patient department that ought in the first instance to be seen at home. This is mentioned again under Question 4.

16. Maternity Hospital.—There has also been recently opened a maternity hospital with sixteen beds. It is not very well situated for the purpose.

17. Religious Charities: Jewish Hospital.—The Jews in Leeds have recently taken a house, which they have opened as a hospital with nine beds.

Little Sisters of the Poor.—The Catholics have 170 beds, chiefly for aged and infirm persons, under the care of the "Little Sisters of the Poor."

18. Medical Clubs.—There are a large number of friendly societies in Leeds, and many of them have medical clubs. Amongst the societies the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows figures largely. They have about twenty-five branches in Leeds. Certain of these branches form a medical aid association and have two establishments, one in North Street, near the dispensary, the other in Tong Road, New Wortley. Those lodges which subscribe to this association pay 3s. 6d. a year for adult members, 2s. for juveniles, and sometimes 4s. for the entire family. There is a house and dispensary and a resident medical man at each place. He gets £230, house, coal, and gas, and is expected to visit urgent cases at any hour, but ordinary cases only if the message comes at a reasonable time. A certain amount of friction naturally arises, and several of the lodges prefer to pay their own doctor. St.

George's Lodge, for instance, pay their doctor 3s. for adult members, 2s. for juveniles, 10s. 6d. for confinements, or a family fee, exclusive of confinements, of 10s. 6d. per annum.

19. District Nursing Association.—There is a district nursing association, with a branch on the south side of the river. The nurses attend non-infectious cases visiting from house to house, tidying up, and making the patients comfortable. They are trained nurses.

20. General Statement.—The classes seeking the aid of the infirmary in- and out-patient department are the working-class generally. The dispensary is patronised largely by those on the verge of poverty, but not generally in actual receipt of relief.

Extent of Co-operation between Various Agencies.

21. There is necessarily a good deal of overlapping. Speaking from personal experience as a man who has been house-surgeon, dispensary officer, Poor Law medical officer, and honorary physician, I should describe what generally happens as something of this kind. A member of a well-to-do working-class family is attacked with consumption, is seen by their own doctor, or by their club doctor for a certain length of time. The disease continues, resources diminish. The aid of the dispensary is sought as long as the parents and relatives can support the patient. When their resources fail the Poor Law is reluctantly invoked. In a few cases a certain amount of assistance is given as out-door relief, and the district medical officer attends. In the long run the patient has to go to the Union hospital as a pauper. Fortunately, now in Leeds some of the earlier of these cases are treated by the Tuberculosis Association and in some cases so far recover as to be able to take light work. The difficulty, however, is how to procure that light work, and too often the patient, who has apparently recovered, goes altogether to the bad as soon as he goes home.

22. Even in acute cases there is a certain amount, not so much of overlapping as of supersession of these agencies. Poor persons send for the dispensary doctor, who attends. The expenses of the illness require further assistance; the district medical officer comes in. He naturally prefers to get the patient into hospital and sends him to the workhouse.

23. In many cases, of course, not only the out-patients of the infirmary, but the home patients of the dispensary are transferred directly to the infirmary, or to the Women and Children's Hospital.

The possibility of handing over to One Authority the whole duty of Medical Assistance to the Poor.

24. I see great difficulties about this, but I do think some co-ordinating influence is required and that there should be a power somewhere of granting medical relief to anyone needing it, altogether irrespective of "circumstances," which should be enquired into after, and not before, the relief is given.

The Health of the Poor as affected by present System of Medical Assistance.

25. I speak in the highest terms of the kindness and consideration shown by both the Poor Law officers and the infirmary and dispensary staff, and wish it to be quite understood that anything that follows does not reflect in any way upon the ability or humanity of these gentlemen. It is the system, not the individuals, that I criticise. I wish, however, to be perfectly frank at once and say that the very poor are sometimes very badly looked after in Leeds when they are ill. My information is derived from several different sources as follows:—

Source (a). The Notification of Infectious Disease and the Revisiting of Infected Houses.—Information as to cases K, O, Q, S, and T was derived from this source.

Source (b). Examination of Lodging-houses.—Common lodging-houses are under the supervision of the police, but as a working arrangement it has been found convenient that additional visits should be made by one of my inspectors to prevent the concealment of cases of infectious disease. Case A came to our knowledge in this way, and Case B in the examination of houses-let-in-lodgings, which is part of our work. Case P also came to our knowledge through this work.

Source (c). The Investigation of the Causes of Infantile Mortality.—This has been specially carried out for five years, in the district of the town where the infantile mortality is highest, by the women inspectors, and a large number of cases have come into their note-books where there has apparently been difficulty in getting prompt medical attention for the infants. Cases E and F come under this heading.

Source (d). Visitation of Young Children.—Since the beginning of 1905, enquiry has been made into the conditions surrounding every new-born child in a particular district of the town. During part of 1905 and the greater part of 1906 great assistance in this work was obtained from the Pure Milk Association, and the condition of a great many children was followed up for some months. (See Paragraph 7.) Cases G, H and Series I are thus derived.

Source (e). Superintendence of Midwives.—This work is also chiefly in the hands of the women inspectors. Every midwife is bound to communicate with us in any case of illness of the mother or child, and to send for medical help. Investigating the cases where medical help has been sent for, as well as cases where the child has died, it is found that there is often a great deal of difficulty in getting early advice for the baby. Case D (infra) illustrates this.

There is also some difficulty in getting advice for the woman herself. The midwife is bound to send for medical aid in unnatural labour, but there is no provision in the Act for paying the medical man sent for. Cases L, M, N.

Source (f). Other Channels, including Letters and Complaints.—To this class belong cases C, R, U and W.

26. The information derived from these six sources illustrates:—

(a) Unnecessary delay in getting medical help, as in cases A, D, E, F, G, and the series under I.

(b) The difficulty in getting medical help owing to:—

(1) Apparent ignorance as to how to set about it, as in Case K.

(2) Reluctance to be "workhoused," as in Cases B, C and U.

(3) The block owing to the framing of the Midwives Act, as in Cases L and M.

(4) Over-pressure at hospital and distance. H and perhaps Series I.

(c) Cases in which assistance was necessary, but no very definite leading forthcoming as to whence it should be obtained, and where the sanitary authority perhaps illegally stepped into the breach, as in Cases Q, P, and S.

(d) Miscellaneous cases, such as R, N, T and W.

27. Delay in getting Medical Help.—Case A.—Patient at a common lodging-house. Man known to our inspectors as living there for some two years. Deputy-keeper sent a messenger, December 24th, 1906, for the Poor Law doctor. Messenger called about seven o'clock at our assistant inspector's house to ask for the doctor's address. Inspector went down to lodging-house about half-past ten to find out what had happened. Was told that the doctor had not seen the patient, refused to come without relieving officer's order. No offer made to pay. Inspector called again next day, 25th; patient had not yet been seen. Enquired as to nature of symptoms, saw the keeper of the lodging-house, who promised to get the man off to the union at once.

It was afterwards ascertained that the patient had complained of pains in the head and chest on the morning of the 19th. Stayed in bed late and the deputy wanted him to go and see the relieving officer, but he declined to do so until Monday, the 24th, when he went out ostensibly for that purpose. Reported that he came back to lodging-house and stated that he had seen relieving officer and could not be admitted to workhouse until Wednesday morning, the 26th. Enquired of relieving officer, who stated that he had not seen the man, and the man afterwards admitted that he had not been to see the relieving officer. The deputy then on Monday night sent the letter to the district officer without order from relieving officer, and without any offer to pay his fee. On Wednesday morning the deputy went with the patient to the guardians' office, saw the relieving officer and the district medical officer,

Dr. James Spottiswoode Cameron.

19 Feb. 1907. 28. Reluctance to enter Workhouse—Want of Medical Attention.—Case B.—Inspector visiting furnished rooms, October 22nd, 1906, found man, woman, and two children in a very dirty house. Woman ill in bed, unattended. He said, "I think you would be better in the workhouse." Acquainted keeper of house with its dirty condition and served notice next day (October 23rd) for lime-washing and cleansing. November 5th remarked, "You have not gone up, then?" Said she would "perhaps soon be all right." November 12th, found improved condition of house, but the woman too ill to complete the cleansing. On November 24th inspector said, "I think you are a foolish woman. If you had gone to the workhouse before, you might have been better now." On the 28th, house again in dirty condition, woman helpless in bed, said to have ruptured a blood vessel the previous day. Keeper gave tenants week's notice. Wednesday, December 12th, 1906, same people found in another furnished house in a neighbouring street. Woman ill in bed, unable to attend to house duties. Again advised her to go to Union Hospital, which she was now willing to do. Called on the keeper of the second house, advised him to send to relieving officer. Relieving officer and afterwards district officer visited and patient was sent into Union Hospital, December 12th. Treatment should have commenced at least seven weeks earlier.

29. Want of Food and Attention. Refusal to enter Workhouse—Case C.—Vicar of town parish wrote to me. A lady inspector visited December 21st, 1906. Found house occupied by woman of seventy and her son, æt. 23, describing himself as a general labourer. Another son, æt. 24, had served in South Africa, drew a pension, had been removed to Menston Asylum and his pension taken by the authorities. Old woman and son, æt. 23, no apparent means of livelihood. Former apparently weak-minded, said to have had two strokes and a bad leg. Son feeble-minded, unable to attend to his own needs. House indescribably filthy, accumulation of dirty linen, unemptied chamber vessels, etc. Inspector informed by neighbour that the old lady refused to go to the workhouse, that she was living on food sent in by neighbours. It was ascertained that there was also a daughter who was supposed to clean the house occasionally, stated to be of disreputable habits, said to live in Hill's Yard (two miles away). On the 31st lady inspector tried to persuade old lady to go into workhouse. She declined, but was willing to go into Little Sisters' Home. Canon Croskell promised us the next vacancy.

Absence of medical relief causes child's death.

30. Newly born Child, Difficulty in obtaining Medical Help—Case D.—Registered midwife attended, advised parents that child was premature and doctor should be sent for. Parents objected that they had not 3s. 6d. for the fee. Midwife was preparing to take child to the doctor, intending herself to pay his consultation fee, 1s. Called away to another case. In her absence child was wrapped in a shawl, taken to a neighbour's house, shilling borrowed, and child carried to surgery of Dr. W., and there found dead. Thought child's life might have been saved if the parents had had the necessary 3s. 6d. (July 11th, 1906.)

In regard to the deaths of infants, the prevalent habit of wrapping the baby in a shawl and carrying it off to a doctor, when in articulo mortis, probably accounts for a considerable portion of our infantile mortality.

Death due to lack of earlier medical assistance.

31. Case E.—Want of Earlier Medical Attendance.—Infant six months, died May 7th, 1906, after a week's illness. Death certified, "bronchitis, convulsions." Ascertained that patient was taken to dispensary three days before death, suffering from "cold after measles." Dr. O'D. called in day on which child died. (Infant Mortality Book, p. 271.)

32. Case F.—Child of seven weeks, died June 5th, 1906, certified "marasmus, convulsions." Had diarrhoea, child taken to dispensary two days before death "because it choked." Taken again to dispensary and died while waiting. Ought to have been attended at home. (Infant Mortality Book, p. 277.)

33. Case G.—Child, seven months (born January 14th, 1906), had diarrhoea in August, 1906. Seen at milk dépôt,

Mother had to go to work, could not afford time to take child to dispensary, and but for intervention of Health Department child would probably have had no medical attendance. (Birth Register Book, p. 298.)

34. Delay at Out-Patient Department—Case H.—Child born September 6th, 1905, taken ill on May 21st, taken to infirmary on account of violent vomiting, great delay in seeing doctor. On one occasion in June mother went at 1 p.m. and waited until 5 p.m. It was 5.30 before she reached home. End of July, took my card to Dr. Telling at Women and Children's Hospital; waited two hours without seeing a doctor.

Delay at voluntary hospital out-patient department

35. Cases I., etc.—Special arrangements were made in connection with the milk dépôt by which Dr. Mary Phillips saw patients sent there by medical officer of health, with a minimum of delay in the following cases, chiefly cases of diarrhoea:—286 B., 372 B., 282 E., 303 B., "child from Ellerly Lane," 298 B., 368 E., 210 E., 147 D., "child from Devon Street," 406 C., 217 A., 397 E., 345 C., 194 A.; and "child from Vinery Place."

Medical relief by voluntary medical officer of health.

36. Notification of Infectious Disease and Re-visiting of Houses.—Case K.—A patient was reported from a street in Holbeck as a case of typhoid, and the man was immediately removed to hospital. A few days later, November 30th, 1906, ward-inspector called to inquire about the cleansing of the house after its disinfection; could not get in; told by next-door neighbour that woman was very ill, no one to attend to her, and nothing to eat. Learnt afterwards that this was the case, only a somewhat old woman in the house, very deaf, and a child a few months old. He ascertained that the old woman did a little charring, earning about 3s. a week. A cripple, aged fifteen, earned 3s. 6d. for boot repairing; the rent was 3s. 6d., the earnings about 6s. 6d. He reported the case and I sent a divisional inspector to see the Poor Law medical officer, who went with him at once without relieving officer's order. He sent some medicine and some milk, and called next day with the relieving officer. In this case the man had been out of work for some three or four months. The doctor was called in privately and sent him into hospital, but no application had been made for medical relief or sustenance for the rest of the family and it was the accident of our visit to ascertain if any other case had developed that led to the application for relief, which would probably not have been made as long as the neighbours chose to supply food. Relieving officer looked after the people well when his attention was drawn to the case.

Cases of destitution escaping observation of Poor Law authorities

37. Hæmorrhage. Difficulty of procuring Help for Mother—Case L.—Midwife 17040 reported August 29th, 1905, case of antepartum hæmorrhage. Had tried to get two separate doctors, in both cases failed. Advised to send for a third. Proper form filled up at office. Form under heading "Time of sending message" returned endorsed "6.30 p.m., but would not come." Midwife delivered woman herself. Child dead (m. i. 35).

Difficulty obtaining medical assistance midwifery cases.

38. Miscarriage. Difficulty of procuring Help for Mother—Case M.—Midwife 19914 reported October 20th, 1905, had been called to a miscarriage. Informed the people that it was a doctor's case, and she was not allowed to attend alone. They said, "Had sent for two different doctors and each refused to attend unless they received their fee first." Midwife then went and found miscarriage had taken place (m. i. 67).

39. Filthy Surroundings. No Power of Removal—Case N.—Midwife 17027 reported case to which she had been called December 30th, 1906. Mother and child had been lying without attention for some time. House and people very dirty. Necessary to change her clothes on leaving.

Need of power to move certain cases to workhouse infirmary.

On January 5th, 1907, received notice of sending for medical help from same midwife to this case. District nurse also called in, reported woman and child in filthy condition. Inspector verified above. Called on the doctor, suggested removal to Poor Law infirmary. Doctor willing, patient unwilling, and not a pauper.

*The Witness subsequently added the following:—*Further power is necessary to compulsorily remove persons not suffering from any of the notifiable diseases, who by neglect have become a nuisance and dangerous to neighbours. (Cases N and W illustrate this.) Section 46 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is intended to deal with this class of case, but it can only be set in motion by the local authority, who meet once a month, and then a notice, with the inevitable loss of time, must be sent after their meeting. It is true that the local authority may, if they see fit, cause the cleansing of the house and recover the expense, but again this must be after the default of the householder, after the service of the notice ordered at their previous meeting, and even then the power of removing the person causing the nuisance, which is certain to recur, is wanting. It has frequently happened to me, both in Huddersfield and Leeds, that much valuable time has been lost in securing the removal of aged and infirm persons incapable of keeping themselves clean, but not able to pay for attendance and unwilling voluntarily to make use of the workhouse. To prosecute these people in the police court, for not doing what they are unable to do, is futile.

40. Breadwinners ill. Family destitute—Case O.—Family of eight in a cottage in Camp Field (Z. 7011 ; 9 and 0); (Annual, 1894, p. 62); father, age forty-three, and son, age sixteen, both workers, sent into hospital for small-pox, February 11th, 1905. Rest of family: mother, thirty-one; children, aged ten, eight, five, three, and seven-twelfths; removed to isolation cottages, (Manston), maintained there fortnight. Returned home after quarantine. Six persons, no income. Allowance made for destruction of paper and food in house, etc., 4s. 4d., February 28th. Special allowance February 28th, 10s.; March 6th, 10s.; and 18th, 10s. Allowance of 4s. 4d. was perfectly legal, the allowance of 30s. possibly not. Ought to have been made by the guardians. People in temporary want through sickness of bread-winners, unwilling to be sent into workhouse, anxious to keep house together, hesitated to apply to relieving officer.

41. Measles in lodging-house. Partial Relief—Case P.—Child, age four, reported suffering from measles in Brussels Hall Women's lodging-house. Measles not taken into hospital at that time. Mother and child removed to isolation cottage (Somerset Street), a district officer continued attendance. Relieving officer gave order for food for child, but declined to give any for maintenance of mother. Sanitary authority paid cost of her food from June 1st to 16th, 1906, £1 9s. 1d., and found her lodgings during the whole time.

Why the relieving officer should pay for the maintenance for food for the child who was ill, and refuse it for the mother who was nursing her, passes my comprehension. Morally these cases ought to have had relief from the Poor Law. To have sent the case of measles into the workhouse would have been fraught with disaster. Had the case occurred in a private house, the measles patient would have been nursed at home.

42. Miscarriage in Small-pox Contact—Case Q.—Husband, aged forty, a labourer (Z. 6050-1), removed on account of small-pox from a furnished room, March 29th, 1903. Wife delivered of a premature, still-born child in the same room on the same day. Was attended by the district medical officer, who, as public vaccinator, at our request re-vaccinated the woman herself, and the woman living in an adjoining room in the same house. The husband of the latter woman refused re-vaccination. He was removed to isolation cottage (Somerset Street) on 30th. Person, clothes disinfected March 30th. Lying-in woman nursed by re-vaccinated woman in next room for fortnight at our expense. Maintained for a week longer. Cost to Sanitary Committee, £4 8s. 5d. She was then found work in cleaning small-pox houses after disinfection, for which she was paid till husband discharged.

Case properly a Poor Law one. (1) Too ill to be removed to workhouse; (2) until incubation period had elapsed, dangerous, as she might have developed small-pox there. Poor Law people ought to have paid for her maintenance and nursing, but did not.

43. Overcrowding and Illness. Reluctance to be "Workhoused"—Case R.—Complaint (6887) of overcrowding from relieving officer, New Wortley, received January 17th, 1907. House had been visited on November 24th, 1906, on report of case of phthisis. Inspector served notice for overcrowding. Private doctor in attendance. Had written to relieving officer January 15th, suggesting removal of patient, head of family, aged forty-five, to workhouse hospital. Relieving officer found the case advanced, but the patient refused the services of the district officer and also refused to be removed to the workhouse. Relieving officer sent us particulars of family. On January 18th it was found that there were thirteen inmates: two under five; three between five and fifteen; eight over fifteen; the house, a back-to-back one, consisting of three rooms, a kitchen, a bedroom, and an attic. Inspector persuaded the occupier, Mrs. G., herself suffering from phthisis, to go to the workhouse hospital, and the relieving officer promised to have her removed. This was done the following day, the 19th. Further notice for overcrowding. Patient's reluctance seemed to be to go to the Poor Law hospital and leave young children. Arrangement made for disinfection of the whole house. One worker, son, aged twenty-seven, paid 12s. a week for board. Apparently all the money coming in for general household expenses. Inclusive rent, 4s. 6d. Arrears, 20s. Re-arrangement of family.

44. Children almost destitute of Clothing. Extremely filthy—Case S.—Woman, thirty-five, reported small-pox (Z. 7056-7) March 27th, 1905, sent to hospital. Four children removed same day to shelter (Somerset Street). Almost destitute of clothing and extremely filthy. Father said to be working at Bristol. Children fed and clothed by us, retained in shelter until mother recovered (May 11th). Possibly really a case for the guardians.

45. Filthy Household—Case T.—Woman, thirty-three, sent to hospital June 2nd, 1905, certified typhoid (Z. 7140-0). Patient covered from head to foot with flea bites. House and rest of family (five) in very dirty condition. Removed to shelter (Somerset Street).

46. Confinement. Difficulty of getting Outdoor Help.—Case U.—Medical man, member of Leeds City Council, called in to attend woman in confinement, March 5th, 1906. Family increased, by addition of twins, to six, besides parents. Father, a bricklayer's labourer, willing to work, but trade bad. Out of work 15 weeks, but known to this medical man for last 12 years as a respectable working man. Father sent to relieving officer, who said he could do nothing for them, unless they entered the workhouse. This was impossible with the mother recently confined. The medical man not only had to forego his fee, but help to keep the family. (Communicated V.C. of S. Committee).

47. Want of Attendance. Reluctance to enter Workhouse.—Case W.*—Old woman, very dirty condition, refused to go to the workhouse. Said would "stay in house till she died," and if turned out would "die on the doorstep." Frequent visits; matters increasingly bad. All refuse in bucket, scarcely ever emptied; bitter complaints from neighbours; woman inspector made almost ill by conditions found. After long time this aged person, unattended and incapable of attending to herself, was persuaded to go into the workhouse. She was not, however, incapable of using rather strong language about the lady inspector.

41490. (Chairman.) In Leeds the sanitary authority has charge of the hospitals; I assume these are all infectious hospitals?—Yes.

41491. Do they deal with cases other than infectious cases?—We subscribe, as I have mentioned, to the Tuberculosis Association, who have hospitals also. I mention the two hospitals in paragraph 14.

41492. The sanitary committee advised the starting of a depôt for the supply of milk. Is that now carried on by and a voluntary organisation?—It was for a year. The voluntary association stopped at the end of last September. We were hoping that if we carried it on for a year Mr. Burns' proposed Bill would have come in and we should have been able to go on with it through the corporation.

41493. What is the position of the depôt now?—It has ceased to be.

41494. Did it, in your judgment, achieve good results?—It lessened the death rate amongst infants about 25 per cent. amongst those who were taking the milk during the period it was carried on as compared with children of the same ages living in the same district of the town who did not have that milk. It was an experiment largely which I was anxious to see carried out for a year in order that our statistics might be of some little value.

* This case was added by witness subsequent to his examination.

Dr. James
Spottiswoode

41495. Since this work has ceased has the infantile death rate gone up?—I could not say that, for this reason: that the infantile death rate is a thing which varies from time to time and from place to place. In order to make the statistics of any value I persuaded that committee to go on for a whole year so that we could have a complete return for the seasons. We stopped in September; since that time we have had winter, but the infantile death rate, as you are aware, is larger in the autumn quarter. We completed a whole cycle, so we are able to compare it with previous years and with the mortality amongst children that were not taking our milk in the same part of the town.

41496. It seems to me that if you credit the depôt with reducing the infantile death rate by 25 per cent., surely some detrimental effect must have been caused by the cessation of this work, and the death rate ought to have risen?—Probably, it has; I have not got it out yet as to that district, but there is one great difficulty in dealing with things like that, which is that the number of children we had to deal with was comparatively small.

41497. (Mrs. Webb.) How many?—I cannot tell you offhand; but I could give you that information.

41498. A mere fraction?—Yes; we had a population of 38,000 in the district we tried, and it is a mere fraction of their babies we dealt with.

41499. Was it a question of a hundred?—More than that; 200 or 300 we had.

Municipal
and voluntary milk depôt at Leeds and results
thereof.

41500. 200 or 300 in 38,000 is of no account statistically?—That 200 or 300 were babies of a certain age. It is a very complex question; I am going to work it out more in detail, and if this Commission is still sitting when I have completed it, I shall be glad to let you have a copy of my report.

41501. (Chairman.) What was the idea of this depôt; as instituted it was of such small dimensions that it only dealt with a fraction of the children; was the idea that it could be developed?—Yes.

41502. You thought if the result was satisfactory there would be developments?—I hoped so, and I hope so still, but at present we have no power to do it; it was a question of finding money from outside in order to carry on that work.

41503. Was the milk given gratuitously?—No, it was charged for at the full market price; as a rule we charged 2d. for a pint bottle, but in a few cases where the full earnings were under £1 a week we sold it for 1½d., and sometimes, but very rarely, we gave it free.

41504. Was there a large demand for it?—Yes, and we had to stop it, to the great regret of the people who applied for it.

41505. It was no cost to the ratepayers?—No.

41506. (Mrs. Webb.) It would have been if it had been put on the rates?—Yes, it cost the committee £500 to carry it on for a year.

41510. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Did you have your own cows?—No, they were cows selected by our veterinary surgeon and seen by him once a week through the greater part of the time, and once a fortnight for the other part, so that the cows were free from tuberculosis, and the milk was cooled and bottled in premises of our own, close to the farm, and frequently examined bacteriologically.

41511. (Chairman.) Was there much opposition to this depôt on the part of the ordinary vendors of milk?—There was a little at first; the opposition was entirely from the vendors of milk and the cow-keepers. The work would have been done by the corporation without question, but the opposition was from the trade; it was put to the town clerk, "Was it legal or illegal?" and he said it was illegal.

41512. Was the opposition diminishing when you closed the depôt?—The opposition would have been over-ruled. If the principle had been legal the opposition would have been over-ruled entirely by the council at the time.

41513. Has the feeling of hostility ceased?—The feeling of hostility has almost gone; there may be a few who are still hostile, of course. We were quite friendly with all the milk dealers at the time, they saw we were not opposing them, because we were charging as much as they were charging.

41515. Passing to the next paragraph, the corporation, I understand, through the sanitary authority, compensate persons for loss of work while they are ill of an infectious disease?—Yes, that we have done for a great many years, I believe quite illegally, but the last time we went to Parliament we got it made legal. Assistance
authority persons segregated

41516. In a private Bill?—Yes.

41517. I suppose this compensation is prompted by two ideas: first, to induce the persons to more readily notify; and, I suppose, secondly, having notified, to prevent their going on the poor rate in consequence of the notification?—It is partly that; I do not take the question of readiness to notify as very much influencing the corporation; notification is, of course, compulsory, and like all compulsory notifications, in order to be of any use it has to be followed up by a sort of detective system of our own; and, generally speaking, the notification has not come from the householder but from the doctor, or from some inspector who has found it out. Then the difficulty is that if you remove the patient to the hospital and leave the people to go backwards and forwards to their work any of those who have already contracted the disease but not yet developed it, may do so at their work; the consequence is, we have wanted to keep them away from their work for the full fortnight's isolation, and we have compensated them for that.

41518. Will you explain? Supposing you found a case of small-pox in a family; I will assume that the parent is infected and is removed to one of the hospitals, how would you proceed as regards the rest of the family?—Supposing it was a working-class man, we should take the whole of the family to one of our isolation places, we should disinfect their clothes and persons; and if we thought from the length of time the disease had been running that probably some of them might be developing the disease, we should prefer to keep them all in our cottages for a full fortnight until we were quite sure that everything was safe. If amongst those people three or four had been working, we should not only keep them, but give them some compensation for the loss of money they would have sustained by being kept away from their work.

41520. What number?—I cannot tell you what number, but it was quite the usual thing to have a whole working, class family isolated for a few days or for the whole fortnight and we greased the wheels considerably by this, although we had not legal power at that time to take them.

41521. Was the cost of this kind of segregation appreciable?—Yes, it was very considerable, and very willingly paid by the corporation. The number of cases (I got it out the first time that the thing occurred) that occurred when the people were segregated was so large, and the number of individual outbreaks thereby saved was so large that there was not a question about the advantage of it with the corporation.

41522. Assuming there were several wage-earners in the family, would they all get half their customary wage?—Yes.

41523. This worked without any friction?—Yes. I think the fact that we were giving wages made it much more easy to get the isolation; it relieved, to a very large extent, any sort of hardship; you might have been able legally to shut up a man, but in addition to that if we could say: "We pay you what you lose, or part of it," it made matters much easier.

41524. With regard to the persons who are treated in the hospital, is the treatment free?—If you mean the City Hospital for Infectious Diseases, that is entirely free.

41525. No matter what the position in life may be?—Yes.

41526. (Mrs Webb.) May I ask whether you ever tried to recover the cost in the early days?—I do not know; not during the seventeen years I have been there. I may say there was in Huddersfield an attempt at one time to recover the cost, or to make the people pay. I was always personally strongly against it; my reason was that if people were segregated for the benefit of the community, the community ought to pay for it. It was tried for a short time, and given up at last. It was at length put in this position, which was very satisfactory for me, that when the medical officer of health thought the patient could not be properly isolated at home there was no charge; if the patient could be properly isolated at home there was no probability of his going to the hospital.

41527. Can you tell why it was given up?—I do not know that it was ever adopted at Leeds. It was not during my time at all.

41528. You are definitely against it?—I am definitely against charging for that which is a great benefit to the community.

41529. (Chairman.) Passing on to the tuberculosis cases, how are they treated? If a person is removed to the hospital I presume that the corporation do not in any way compensate him by paying him half his wages?—No, that is entirely outside, we simply subscribe to the hospitals; although there is, of course, a great deal to be said about the infection of tuberculosis, we have not yet attempted to deal with it as we should deal with small-pox.

41530. Is it compulsorily notifiable?—No, it is notifiable, but not compulsorily.

41531. What is your opinion about the best method of dealing with tuberculosis? Would you be disposed to go so far as to put it on the same footing as an infectious disease, that is to say, compensate the persons who are detained, and give them a portion of what they would have earned?—May I explain? We do not compensate a person who is isolated on account of small-pox at all.

41532. It is the family?—Yes.

41533. You pay the family half the wages that the head of the family would have obtained?—No, if the head of the family is himself the patient we support the family during the fortnight, or whatever it is, and, of course, if necessary, afterwards; if the man is not fit to do work and there is no other wage-earning member of the family, which is not very common, the guardians would, perhaps, be called upon; but you will find amongst my cases, cases where we did support the family, where we gave money absolutely illegally.

41534. That is rather what I wanted to come to; it seems that you are doing in connection with infectious diseases something rather akin to what the Poor Law guardians do, you are contributing towards the maintenance of people?—Yes; but with this tremendous difference, that we are doing it in order to protect the community from infection, the Poor Law guardians are doing it in order that the persons may not suffer. Supposing, for instance, that in the case you instance, the case of a member of the family who is taken away and the rest of the family are isolated, the Poor Law guardians would say: "Well, let them work;" we say: "No, do not let them work, because they are carrying infection elsewhere;" when that danger is past, then we say: "Let them work."

41536. What would you be disposed to do, assuming a person came with phthisis in the earlier stages and he had to be treated? Would you go so far as to assist his family in the same way that persons suffering from infectious diseases are assisted?—The family would not be likely to convey the disease to other people, the raison d'être of our assisting the family is to keep persons who may have contracted the disease from going and developing the disease at their work-places.

41537. The family might become infected?—The family might become infected, but it would not be an acute infection communicable in the same way as small-pox is.

41538. It has been argued by some that as phthisis so affects the health of the community, phthisis cases ought to be so treated?—I should put phthisis as a notifiable disease without any of the "ifs" and "buts" which were put by the Local Government Board into the Sheffield Act.

41539. Then comes the difficulty that the cases are very long cases?—Yes, they are long cases.

41540. The man who is suffering from that ailment knows that, and it is a deterrent to him coming forward, has that been your experience?—I think that would be so; but my experience varies in different ways. It has come in different ways; I have had people come to me personally as a physician to know whether they had consumption or not. I do not think those people would communicate with the authorities unless the authorities were inclined to help them in some way; if it was a question of penalising him by putting him into a hospital and not letting him work, I do not think we should hear of any case voluntarily.

41541. That is rather what I was trying to arrive at. If you want to largely reduce the number of phthisical cases you must make it easy for the persons suffering from it?—Yes, I quite agree with you; but you are putting it as analogous to our dealing with small-pox cases. I point out the difference, that the one is a much more actively contagious disease than the other.

41542. Is phthisis very prevalent in Leeds?—No, our death-rate is about 1.20 per thousand of the population. Phthisis death-rate in Leeds.

41543. I think it has been told us that about one-third of the deaths of adults between fifteen and thirty-five are from phthisis?—I could not say that off-hand, but, of course, it is the most fatal of all diseases. It is diminishing in Leeds in proportion. I may add, also, that while I attach a great deal of importance to segregation of phthisis, I attach a great deal more importance to getting rid of slums, and to providing proper means for feeding people.

41544. (Mr. Gardiner.) You include in that overcrowding?—Yes, putting people under healthy conditions.

41545. (Chairman.) Let us come to the medical assistance given to the poor under our Poor Law system. You speak in high terms of the consideration shown by the Poor Law officers and so on, but you are criticising the system; should you say that the fact that this class of medical relief is associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent?—I think so.

41546. That is the result of your general experience, both as a practising physician and as a Poor Law medical officer?—Yes, people would rather come, when I was in Huddersfield as a practising physician, to see me at the infirmary than go to the Poor Law doctor.

41547. Was the infirmary free?—Yes; there was a system of recommendations, but practically anybody could get a recommendation, it made no difference.

41548. Should you say that was really a serious element of deterrent effect?—I think it was a serious element with regard to the prompt treatment of cases. A man with pneumonia, for instance, would not send at once for the Poor Law doctor because he would expect to be sent into the workhouse hospital, the Bastille as they call it, and he would send for the dispensary doctor with very much greater readiness; if he were taken into the infirmary

Deterrence of medical relief

Dr. James Spottiswoode Cameron. he would not object to it; I mean to the voluntary infirmary. He would object to being sent into the work-house infirmary, but would not object to being sent into the voluntary infirmary as a rule.

19 Feb. 1907.

41549. That is at Leeds?—Yes.

41550. It would not be because he thought that the treatment in one was superior to the other, but because the one was associated with the Poor Law?—I think principally that, but I think, at the same time, he would think the treatment at the voluntary infirmary was probably superior.

41551. There is a large free dispensary at Leeds?—There is.

Provident medical clubs and effect thereon of free dispensaries.

41552. There are a certain number of medical clubs in Leeds, are there not?—Yes, I have only mentioned one particular one, but it is a very common thing to have medical clubs. Nearly all the aid societies, the friendly societies, have subscriptions towards medical clubs; in many of the medical clubs there is a contract with a medical man to attend the members of the family that are ill; they pay a small sum and get the attention.

41553. Should you say that the free medical infirmary has rather arrested the growth of medical clubs and provident medical associations?—I do not think it has, because the ordinary working man earning good wages who would go to the dispensary would only go in respect of some special thing, such as eyesight, or something like that, he would not go for an ordinary disease, but send for his club doctor, but there is a very large substratum below the well-to-do working man, people who are working people, but are sometimes at work and sometimes out of work, they would go to the dispensary and they would not usually be the provident people who would already be members of the medical clubs.

41554. They would be the intermediate class between the well-to-do artisan and those who come upon the Poor Law?—Yes.

41555. The medical officers of dispensaries could give orders on hospitals, could they not?—Yes, the case would have to be treated on its own merits, of course.

Inaccessibility of medical relief and proposed remedy therefor.

41556. Your opinion is valuable because you have had experience as a medical officer; should you say that delay often occurs from the necessity of getting an order from the relieving officer for medical help?—Very frequently; I have given you some special cases about that in my statement.

41557. What suggestion would you make to get over this delay and the deterrent effect?—I should like to see something arranged of this nature, that if a patient was ill he could send for a doctor, and that the doctor would be paid for coming to see him, and that the payment should, if it was thought desirable, be recoverable from the family through, say, the guardians, or whoever is in authority; but I think the first thing is that the patient should be seen, and that there should be as little delay as possible, and the secondary consideration should be who is to pay for it. I think the doctor ought not to pay for it; I think it ought to be done by the community in some way.

*The Witness subsequently added the following:—*A poor person taken suddenly ill should have a right to send for any doctor, and that the medical man sent for should have a right to claim a fee from the authority—whether the Poor Law authority or sanitary authority does not affect the principle. A fee ought in my opinion to be paid, even if the medical man called in in an emergency without the relieving officer's certificate be himself the district medical officer, although as he already has a retaining fee, the amount might be simply the difference between an ordinary visit and an emergency visit. Should the patient require assistance in addition to medical advice, this could be given through the relieving officer, who would report the case in the usual way to his board. If the patient were to remain a permanent pauper, attendance upon the case should be continued by the district officer, or the patient should be transferred to the work-house infirmary. If the patient was merely temporarily ill it would be better to allow the medical man first called in to continue his attendance at the cost of the rates. Medical attendance paid for in this way might be made recoverable from the patient or householder sending, if it were thought necessary.

41558. It has been suggested to us in various quarters that the provident medical institutions should be largely developed; that through them the working classes should be encouraged to get medical relief, and that where a person did not belong to such an institution and was unable to pay the cost of the medical relief, it should be defrayed by some public authority, say the Poor Law; that is rather your idea?—That is my idea, but what I mean is that the person should not have to go to find the relieving officer first and then take his order to the doctor.

41559. If that idea is at all to be given effect to, the free dispensaries rather upset it, do they not?—I should like the increase of free dispensaries; instead of having one central one with a branch on the south of Leeds, I should like to have half a dozen in Leeds.

Need of free dispensaries and question their effect on provident medical institutions.

*The Witness subsequently added the following:—*Under Section 131 of the Public Health Act, 1875, any local authority may provide hospitals or temporary places for the reception of the sick, may build such hospitals or place of reception, contract for the use of them, or pay the managers of any hospital a sum agreed upon. The most urgent need in Leeds is dispensary accommodation and this does not seem to be covered by the section. The want of some accessible place where medical advice could be obtained for young children, was much felt in Leeds last autumn during the diarrhoea season. The distance to the dispensary and to the women and children's hospital from the district in which our milk dep't was situated and the length of time that the mother had to wait before receiving attention was so great that many refrained from taking their infants to either institution, until harm had resulted. (Cases E, F, G, H, and I.) An extension of Section 131 to include "dispensary and outdoor visiting," would enable the corporation to supplement and extend the good work done by the charitable institutions in the districts most needing it.

41560. You do not think it would interfere with the medical provident institutions?—I do not think it would to any large extent.

41561. What inducement would a man have to belong to one of those and pay his 2d. a week, or whatever it might be, if he could get medical relief free?—Only the sort of feeling that he wanted to pay as he went along.

41562. It has been suggested in certain quarters that the medical assistance should be handed over to the health authority; their duties are to a certain extent similar; do you wish to have some co-ordinating influence; you see some difficulty about that, I suppose?—If one were reconstructing the whole thing, one would not have a board of guardians at all; one would simply have a sanitary authority.

Argument for and against authority for medical assistance to the public.

41563. So far as medical relief is concerned?—So far as everything is concerned. If one were reconsidering the whole thing, one would not have two bodies, one dealing with certain areas partly corporation and partly not corporation, one dealing with sanitary matters and the other with the relieving officers; one would have the same authority for both, naturally, if one were to start afresh.

41564. (Mrs. Webb.) You would have different committees of the same authority?—Different committees, the same as with the education authority. It is another thing to say one would alter the present state of things except by improving it. That is a sort of academic opinion that if one were starting again one would have one authority, for the whole of the area, attending on the sick and sanitary condition of the town.

41565. Supposing that you were told that the board of guardians was going to be swept away, what would you suggest?—I should be inclined to thank my stars.

41566. You would suggest that the thing should be handed over to different committees of one council?—Yes, I think so, but that of course involves very much alteration of areas, and things of that sort; I am not making that suggestion on my own part at all.

41567. (Chairman.) I suppose you would admit that whilst it would be possible to have started with one authority at the first, to transfer the duties that the Poor Law guardians now perform to the town council might put on them a very heavy burden?—Very heavy.

Arguments or and against one authority for medical assistance to the poor.

41568. And duties for which, for some years to come they would have hardly sufficient knowledge?—It would probably eventuate very much in this, as it has done with the education authority. I am speaking now of course about a county borough. It would happen that very much the same people would take on the work as a committee of the county council, that now take it on as Poor Law guardians, and they would retain their old officers in the first instance, and modify their methods by degrees.

41569. Short of transferring en bloc the work of the guardians to the town councillors, would it be possible, in your opinion, to transfer certain of the duties they now undertake, for instance, vaccination?—Yes, quite possible.

Proposed
transfer of vaccination
and registration of births and deaths to

41570. And the registration of births and deaths?—That would involve of course re-distribution of areas. I mention elsewhere, I think, how the areas intersect with four boards of guardians in Leeds. If we take the whole four they cover more than the area of the city; every one of our four unions has parishes outside the city that it has to deal with; those people must be provided for either by extending the boundaries of the city to the extent of the four unions or in some way you must arrange that there is nobody left unregistered.

41571. Putting the question of area on one side, the nature of the duties of registration, I suppose, would fall in with the work of the sanitary authority?—Yes, I think registration ought to be under medical superintendence, especially the registration of deaths.

41573. The only thing they do practically is to appoint the registrar?—They appoint the registrar.

41574. As a local authority they do nothing?—I do not know what control they have over the registrar, I suppose they could turn him off.

41575. Not without the consent of the Registrar General?—In Huddersfield the registrar was the clerk to the guardians.

41576. The superintendent registrar?—I do not know what it is now, it was so when I was there; in Leeds it is different.

41577. It is almost always so?—It is in a small district.

41578. (Chairman.) Now vaccination?—I am not at all anxious to have vaccination under my control; perhaps that is cowardice.

41580. It has been suggested that the relief of the poor should be put under, or associated with, the health authority, and that an attempt should be made to get the voluntary hospitals to co-operate with Poor Law dispensaries so as to have a more or less uniform scale and system of medical relief throughout an area; should you say that such a system is practicable?—I think it is practicable, but I have not seen the practicable scheme yet. I think that may be done. There is one point which I think has to be kept in view, and that is that voluntary associations like the infirmaries and the public dispensaries, tap the charitable public in a certain way, and as soon as you put the main part of that upon a board like the guardians, the charitable people say: "Well, why should I subscribe to an infirmary when I am paying rates for it?"

41581. I think the idea was that the autonomy of the hospitals would be left untouched, but they would probably have to agree to some general conditions, and I think the suggestion further was that in certain cases if necessary they should be subsidised by the local authority?—I think that would act in the same way; this experiment about tuberculosis is in point. My fellow members on that committee are inclined to say: "We have a difficulty about getting subscriptions," and that people say: "It is a very good thing, the town council subscribes £2,000, and you must get them to subscribe more if you want more."

41582. You think the mere fact of the subvention being made makes a difference?—Yes, I think the two things should be separately autonomous.

41583. (Mrs. Webb.) You would prefer to have a tuberculosis sanatorium of your own?—A tuberculosis sanatorium belonging to the corporation—I must not say that because I believe I am the fons et origo of the combination in this particular instance.

Dr. James
Spottiswoode

41584. In a new state if you were starting afresh?—Effect on I am very anxious that the well-to-do people should charity of contribute out of their abundance to the relief of their State or rate poorer neighbours, not be compelled as ratepayers to aid.

41585. You want the State to do something, so you want a combination of the two?—I should like if possible something like this; to have the power of doing what we actually did when we were running that milk depot for the time being, to establish a small dispensary where it is needed: I arranged that some of the rooms belonging to the milk depot should be utilised for a few weeks during the diarrhoea season, and that we should get the people to come there; they could not go to the infirmary or the dispensary; it was too far off, and they could not leave their children. I should like the town to be able to supply the deficiencies from time to time, but I do not want to take away from the people who are doing a thoroughly good work the spontaneity of their work; I do not want to interfere too much with what they are doing.

41586. You want a scaffolding of municipal activity and you want a filling in of voluntary effort.

41587. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Is it not the other way on, that the scaffolding should be the voluntary effort and the filling in done by the municipality?—I think the two can be kept quite separate in the meantime.

41588. (Chairman.) Your practical suggestion would be with regard to medical relief, help first and inquire afterwards?—Yes, help first and inquire afterwards.

Need and difficulties of prompt
relief.

41589. That is inverting the whole principle of the Poor Law, which is to enquire first and see whether the case is one which justifies public help?—I am speaking now as a physician.

41590. I was only suggesting to you the difficulty of adopting that principle and tacking it on to the Poor Law system?—I quite see it.

41591. It is the reverse really?—It is making them do what they did not before.

41592. It is reversing the whole principle?—It is one of those things that I want to alter.

41593. Do you think you would confine it to medical relief?—In the first instance; I do not know that I could confine it afterwards, but I think the gravamen is on the medical side.

41594. Would you go so far as to say this, that the defects of the present system are such that you think reform is imperatively required?—It depends on the intensity of the word imperative very much. I think there is great room for improvement in that particular. I have already told you my general opinion, that the whole system is theoretically wrong, but practically a great deal of thoroughly good work is being done by Poor Law doctors and relieving officers, and they are not such dreadful tyrants as they were in Mr. Dickens' time, but I do see that there are a great many cases in which there is a tardiness about getting relief owing to the unreasonableness of the methods; I do think the only reason why a man with pneumonia should be treated is because he has got pneumonia; there should not be an inquiry whether he was a wicked man when he was young; he should not be prevented from being treated because he did not do as he ought to do.

41595. Have you had anything to do with the inspection of children in the schools?—No, not the physical inspection.

41596. The eyesight or anything of that sort?—No, I have not had to do that; it has not been done in Leeds.

41597. It has been done in some towns?—Yes, but not in Leeds.

41598. (Mrs. Webb.) You have an inspector who goes into the schools for infectious diseases, have you not?—schools by We visit every school where an infectious disease is reported and follow up in many cases absentees. For authority.

Dr. James Spottiswoode Cameron. instance, if a child has developed measles in school we find out who the other children are who were absent, whether they have measles at home and so on.

19 Feb. 1907. 41599. (Chairman.) You do not think you are likely to undertake the duty of examining school children because there comes in a difficulty I believe as to who is to treat them?—Yes.

Medical examination of school children by sanitary authority at Huddersfield.

41600. You have not come across that in your experience?—We have not come across that, but I have really thought that the method with regard to infectious diseases, which I worked out from what I think was a suggestion of the Mayor of Huddersfield a great many years ago, would have been a successful means of dealing with it. With regard to notifiable diseases, such as scarlet fever, the idea was that the teacher had a child attending the class who possibly had scarlet fever, I had already given out circulars to teachers telling them what to look for, but the difficulty was that they were not medical men, and I got the Corporation in Huddersfield at that time to agree to pay for the medical examination of any child the teacher thought ought to be examined, and we had a form of certificate drawn up, and the teacher could simply hand one of these to the child and say, "Take that home and tell your mother you must see a doctor." Then they sent for their own doctor and the corporation paid for the doctor's opinion. I am inclined to think in some respects that principle is a correct one; that you should not too much confine the examination of children to a particular set of men, because you at once arouse the hostility of certain members of the profession, they say, "These are patients of mine, and you send a special staff of men along to see my patients, and I do not like it;" there is the same difficulty in vaccination.

Difficulty of medical attendance on school children, and need of State intervention.

41601. I assume that the great majority of these children or their families would have had no medical attendant?—Most families of the well-to-do artisan class have a medical attendant; he may be a club doctor or a private doctor, but he is the person they would send for if they were ill; they have not a medical attendant for this particular case, but the man who is in the habit of being sent for would resent the half-crown for the examination going to anybody else excepting himself.

41602. I believe that in London and elsewhere there is the difficulty (I dare say you have heard of it) that the children have been sent wholesale to be examined at the hospitals and the hospital authorities declined to examine them?—Are you speaking now of such things as eyesight?

41603. Yes?—I think it is very difficult problem; naturally eyesight is rather a speciality, and the ordinary family physician is not competent to say whether or not the child should wear astigmatic glasses; he is competent to say, "You ought to go and get your eyesight examined thoroughly," but he is not always competent to prescribe glasses.

41604. It might arise that the father of the child would be unable to pay the fee for the specialist who would have to examine the eyes?—Yes, I think that is one of those cases where the State might come in quite well, but that might be largely done of course by making an arrangement with such institutions as the dispensaries.

41605. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you extend that to teeth?—I would extend it to teeth eventually.

41606. Would you have a corporation dentist?—I do not know that I should have a corporation dentist, but I should like the corporation in some way to subsidise the dispensary with regard to dentistry.

41607. (Chairman.) Your idea would be rather the other way, to have a fee which you would pay any medical practitioner who was qualified to operate and did operate?—I think in regard to specialities like dentistry, and the care of the eyesight, you almost want to specialise the man, but with regard to ordinary complaints I would rather the medical man was paid by the State or whoever it is for the ordinary care of the sick.

Need of proper medical inspection and examination of school children.

41608. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is not what you are saying rather in favour of having a special man as medical officer of the education authority to see the children?—Yes, to see them, that would be an advantage. If the thing were to turn out as I hope it will in Leeds, if I were made myself as medical officer of health the medical officer of the education department, I should then ask them to give me an assistant who would deal with the special things I pointed out to him from time to time.

41609. (Chairman.) Who would be able to treat these special cases?—I do not know about treatment; examination and treatment are very different things; it is rather a large thing, but I should not like to dogmatise about it.

41610. The treatment is the difficulty?—It is.

41611. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The education authority would not undertake the treatment; they would only undertake the examination?—I do not think it would be quite right they should undertake the treatment of, say, well-to-do people.

41612. (Mrs. Webb.) You would have them undertake the treatment which the people would not otherwise get?—I would have them undertake the recommendation of the need of treatment certainly.

41613. You would make them responsible for seeing the person was treated?—The child is there by compulsion, and when it is there it ought to be examined, and if the child requires spectacles then its parents should be advised that it ought to get spectacles. If they cannot get it then they come to the same position as anybody else who requires treatment and cannot be treated.

41614. But if the parent refuses?—I do not think they will ever refuse; they might refuse to pay, that is all they would refuse.

41615. If they refused to pay what is going to happen?—Then my general principle that the patient must be the first consideration would come in.

41616. Anyhow, you would make the public authority responsible to see that the child was treated whoever paid for it; that would be the first thing?—Yes, if you understand by public authority the general thing that there should be somebody; I do not say who. I do not want to commit myself with regard to that; if the Poor Law people are to continue to control the sick they must be the responsible people.

41617. Public authority as compared with private authority?—Yes.

41618. (Mr. Nunn.) In the first instance, is it not the duty of the managers of the school, imposed upon them by the authority that appoints them, to look after the health of the child?—Yes, but with regard to malformations of the children, such as astigmatism, that is another matter.

41619. But it would be their duty, would it not, to ascertain from what sources assistance could be obtained for the children, either charitable or otherwise.

41620. (Mrs. Webb.) They have no power to pay for inspection?—Inspection when the Education Bill comes up again will, I suppose, be compulsory.

41621. (Mr. Nunn.) Have you in Leeds what we have in London, a medical inspector coming round who says certain children require certain treatment for their eyes, and the teacher informs the parents, through the children, what it is; it is placed on a card, and it frequently happens that either the parents will not supply it or do not see the necessity of it, or simply neglect it; is it not then the duty of the managers who have to look after the health of the children to see that some provision is made, either voluntary or legal provision?—I think it is certainly the duty, but I do not quite know how it is to be done at present; it is a very difficult point.

41622. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) You would place on the public authority the responsibility of seeing it done?—Yes. Question recovery of the cost of medical relief from patient.

41623. Would you give no power to recover it from recalcitrant parents?—May I repeat what I said with regard to the case of the man with pneumonia. I said if a case of pneumonia occurs the first thing should be that the doctor sent for by the patient is to attend, and that his fee should be paid directly by some public authority, either the union or the corporation, and that they should have the power of recovery, if necessary and if practicable, but in regard to the other matters these are much more slow things; you have to distinguish the chronic from the acute; in the case of what you may call a malformation of the eye, it is quite desirable it should be treated, but there is not quite the same hurry; I think you might have some more elaborate means arranged; there is not quite the same necessity that the people should go straight off to the doctor and be treated as in the case of pneumonia.

of recovery of the cost of medical

41624. Is not that more likely to make the parent more careless on the subject?—Decidedly I think you should have the power of recovery if the parent does not do it; it should be treated as any other nuisance is treated. If a person responsible for a nuisance does not remedy it, then the authority may step in and charge him with the cost. I think there should be some power of that sort.

41625. (Mr. Booth.) It would give him no option of saying, if he could afford to pay, that he held the opinion that the doctor's advice was wrong?—He could consult his own doctor.

41626. You would set one doctor against the other; is the consideration merely a question of his financial ability to pay?—I am very unwilling to set one doctor against the other, and I am very unwilling that the authority should take the whole responsibility of doctoring. I think the doctor of the patient ought to be consulted in all these matters. I think in cases of astigmatism, for instance, that the people should be advised to take their child to the doctor, who would say that he was suffering from astigmatism, but he would say: "I think you had better consult So-and-so"; I should let him have an option of going into the matter.

41627. You would not leave any authority with the parent to say: I will not have my child wear spectacles?—You are removing all the disabilities about vaccination by degrees, I do not know that you can go beyond the bedrock: if a man says, "I won't," he won't.

41628. (Mr. Gardiner.) It might be cruelty to children not to insist on your children wearing spectacles?—That would be a splendid case for the lawyers to argue if it were taken into court.

Cases of illegal delay or inaccessibility of

41629. (Chairman.) You have given cases in your statement about the unnecessary delay; a good many of them speak for themselves, but I think in certain cases, although I do not want to examine you upon them, it seems almost as much the fault of the people as the system?—I think you will find in most cases where it is the fault of the people it is because sending for the doctor means making themselves paupers.

41630. Quite so; it is an instance of the deterrent effect of the system?—Yes, I have not labelled them so always. No. 28 is reluctance to enter workhouse and so on. These were cases that we looked up, they are most of them recent cases. One could by consulting the books have increased them in number, but they are illustrative rather than exhaustive.

41631. May I ask, do you still practise?—I am not in private practice; I have not been in private practice since I left Huddersfield in 1889.

Arguments for, and difficulties of,
the authority for medical

41632. (Mr. Booth.) I notice you treat as almost axiomatic that in starting de novo one authority would be better than two in dealing with these questions. You almost considered that does not need discussion?—I thought so certainly.

41633. So that the only reasons in your mind against its adoption are the difficulties connected with existing areas and arrangements?—Yes, the areas are atrocious, but there is also this thing, that you have a certain set of men who are already in certain ways doing certain work, on the whole very well, are you going to put it into other hands?

41634. But at the present moment the objects aimed at by the Poor Law and its methods are almost contradictory, divergent altogether from the objects and methods used by the local board, the authority of health, are they not; that is to say, the public health authority persuades and even insists upon the acceptance of its services, and therefore is interested in their extension?—Yes.

41635. Whereas, the opposite element is the object and method of the Poor Law, their whole aim is to restrict?—Yes, we are compelled by Act of Parliament to search for nuisances, the Poor Law man, the relieving officer, only goes where he is asked to go.

Need for searching out
distress.

41636. Would you contemplate revolutionising that entirely, and making it a duty of the Poor Law officer to search out, and offer, and insist upon acceptance of his services?—I am not sure that I should wish his present services to be accepted, which consist principally in sending persons into the workhouse; but I do think there should be some searching out for people who need assistance, who are the very people who will not personally apply. The people who will apply to the relieving officer are not always the people who are most needing it.

*Dr. James
Cameron.*

41637. It is only if you adopt your view that the whole object and aim and methods of the Poor Law are to be altered, that it can be treated as axiomatic that one authority would be better than two. If the objects and aims remain divergent, nominally to put them under one authority, the divergence would remain, and it would not obviate the divergence?—May I point out to you that the gentlemen who manage our Poor Law are called the "Guardians of the Poor," and the theory of the Poor Law Acts is that they are to care for the poor. Then it is said as a matter of practice that there are a large number of cases of undeserving people, if you like to call them so; who apply, and you have to weed them out, and your "Relieving Officer" instead of being simply a relieving officer is a sort of detective who keeps out the improper cases; that is how the thing is worked; that was not the original theory of the Poor Law as I understand it.

41638. It has come about in practice in dealing with the cases that restriction of some sort or other should come in?—It is not the principle of the Poor Law.

41639. Would you expect that a new authority would not find the same difficulty?—There always will be the difficulty that you have a large number of people who want to get everything they can out of you, and you have to have a detective department, but may I just illustrate it. When I had the Poor Law appointment in Huddersfield for a short time, I remember a woman with neurasthenia coming to see me, she was an inmate of a model lodging house. I was inclined to be rather sympathetic with her, at the same time I did not regard her condition as a very serious one. I got a very nice note from the relieving officer a short time afterwards; "A——— K——— is a humbug." That is just the difference between the medical side of it and the relieving officer's side. This man was a thoroughly good "relieving officer" and he kept down the rates splendidly, but he started with the general proposition that everybody he had to deal with was probably a humbug, and those who were not humbugs were to be allowed to come in, but he was not unkind, he was a little bit hard; and that would apply to another case I am thinking of. This particular man was afterwards the inquiry officer to our Charity Organisation Society, the same thing came up there; he was an able man, looked at from that point of view. That is not necessarily the man I think for the guardianship of the poor and the relief of the poor. It is rather a thing that has come up in order to keep the rates down, and there might be with the sanitary authority itself a tendency to keep the rates down after a time, if you burden them very much.

instincts of Poor Law officers and results

41640. There are some humbugs?—Yes, there are some humbugs.

41641. Supposing you had one authority with two branches, which there would have to be, would not the duties of the one branch be entirely divergent from and opposite to the duties of the other branch? Would you get any unity at all by combining things which are essentially divergent?—I do not admit the divergence; they are complementary, not divergent.

41642. (Mr. Russell-Wakefield.) With regard to the assistance of persons segregated on account of infectious diseases, have you ever had a case where those you have paid part wages to and kept away from work have lost their work altogether?—There have been cases, but they are very rare, because, generally speaking, we are in communication with the employers of the work people and get their places kept for them.

Assistance
by sanitary authority of
segregated

41643. You have some cases where they would not do that, I suppose?—I do not remember any case at the present time.

41644. You do not know whether you accept any responsibility with regard to the loss of the place altogether?—No, we do not; but I do not think those cases are at all common, there is always a certain amount of change taking place. For instance, a man is working in a gang at an iron foundry; when his work is done if he loses his work he, perhaps, does not get put on again, but a fortnight afterwards, perhaps, he gets put on to another gang. I think in those cases where such a thing was complained of it was explicable on those lines.

Dr. James
Spottiswoode
Cameron.

19 Feb. 1907.

Question of amalgamating Poor Law unions in Leeds.

41645. You feel strongly on the subject of the four different unions within the single city of Leeds. Do you feel that it would be a desirable thing to have only the one union in the same district that you have the one municipal authority for?—I think it would be better; but in that case you would have to extend the municipal boundaries to the edges of the present unions, or you would have to deal with the smaller and less populous townships in other ways, they are at present under other authorities.

41646. That only means looking after a population of about 20,000 more people, does it not?—There is no difficulty about the corporation taking it all in.

41647. Would the localities themselves take any objection to their being absorbed?—We proposed to extend our boundaries over the area of the Hunslet authority, and we were strongly opposed by the Hunslet authority.

41648. If any attempt were made to make one authority for Leeds with regard to Poor Law administration, do you anticipate there would be great objection taken to that?—I do not think there would be any great objection about combining the four unions into one, I think the objection would be to the extension of the town.

41649. (Sir Samuel Provis.) This was proposed a few years ago and there was the very strongest opposition?—I did not know that.

41650. An enquiry was held with a view to combining the four unions, so far as the parishes in the Borough were concerned, somewhere about 1890, and the opposition was so strong that it had to be dropped?—I did not quite know that it took that form, I was in Leeds in 1890, there was a re-distribution of boundaries in Hunslet and Holbeck, a little time after the Census.

41651. There was a proposed union alteration?—I think so. I may say I should not attach much importance to the official opposition.

41652. This was the opposition of the ratepayers?—I do not think the public would very much object to the combination of the four unions into one if they were already in the borough, but the difficulty would be that you would be introducing outside districts, and some of them object to paying the borough rates.

41653. The point was this: they did not like losing the outside parishes which must have been taken off if you made the union co-terminous with the borough?—That is my point.

41654. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Supposing you extend the borough to include these outside places, which have a population of something like 20,000 or 30,000, do you think the same objection would be taken that Sir Samuel Provis has spoken about to one union for the whole district?—I do not think so; I think if you bring the whole of the areas of the four unions into the city first and then get rid of the objection to making these outside people pay city rates, the other objections would be trifling. Of course, I do not speak with any authority on that matter.

41655. With regard to the dispensary at the offices in the South Parade which the Leeds Guardians have, is that exactly on the same lines as the out-patient department in the ordinary hospital?—Very nearly, I think.

41656. There is practically no difference?—Very little difference.

41657. (Mrs. Webb.) They visit in the homes at the Leeds Dispensary?—Yes, the dispensary officers visit at the homes, but then, of course, the district medical officers also visit at the homes.

41658. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Supposing I choose to apply to one or other of the out-patient departments, they are practically run on the same lines?—Except that there is no relieving officer at the dispensary and your means are not investigated into; and the inquiry whether you are a good man or a bad man does not come up.

41659. It says here, "At which the members of their staff in charge of these central parts attend on every morning of the week and see casual cases"?—Yes.

41660. Supposing I arrive at that particular dispensary, am I attended to at once without inquiry?—I am not quite sure whether you go to the doctor first or the relieving officer, but you would see them both.

41661. They are both there on the premises?—Yes.

41662. I am talking about the union dispensary. What I want to know is whether, if I go there as an out-patient, I first of all see the relieving officer before I get my medical attention; perhaps you do not quite know that?—I think you see both, but I do not know which you see first; I think if you are very ill it is likely they will send you in to the doctor first.

41665. What percentage of persons who ought to receive some kind of visitation for phthisis do you think you do not touch at present?—I should think the probability is about 25 per cent. I think it is possible that many of the cases that I enumerate have been reported twice; it is very difficult to be quite sure about that; I think we do not get the very early cases, and we do not get the private cases in the well-to-do houses so much, there is a hesitation about reporting them.

41666. Do you get most of them from the Tuberculosis Society in Leeds?—I do not think we get most of them from the Tuberculosis Society; most of them come from the dispensaries and the private practitioners, and especially the district medical officers; but I do not think we get the whole of the cases in private families unless they are advanced cases where the medical man in attendance thinks some disinfection necessary, then we get them notified as cases to disinfect. Of course we know the cause of death, and we visit every case where there has been a death and get as much disinfection done as possible.

41667. There is no voluntary visitation in Leeds?—No.

41668. Even the Tuberculosis Society does not keep in touch with its cases?—No, the Tuberculosis Society is like others; they take the cases which come to them or are recommended to them, there is no searching for cases.

41669. When they have once been in hospital are they not kept in touch with in their homes by visitors?—I do not think they are.

41670. Do not even your visitors do that?—No, we have not time, for one thing.

41671. What is the extent of the work that is done upon a case of phthisis which is notified?—We examine the house thoroughly, and we recommend the people to have occasional disinfection done. Of course the case is reported to me in a general way and entered in our book; we are inclined, if we think something can be done, to recommend them to the Tuberculosis Society, but we also advise them about the use of pasteboard sputum boxes and things of that sort, and about the necessity of not sleeping too many in a room, giving the patient who has phthisis a separate bed if possible, if not a separate room; if the house is overcrowded advise them to get out of it. It is only a thing we are attempting at present, we have not done what we have in small-pox or scarlet-fever cases.

41672. You pay one visit in each case?—About one visit.

41674. What would it cost, because we have had evidence on that point? How many of those admirable ladies that you employ would you require to have a health visiting of all the poor class property? Take, roughly speaking, the class of property to which the school attendance officer goes?—It would be a pure guess. I have got seven ladies at present as inspectors; if you were to multiply them by five, I should be able then to deal, perhaps, with one little district of the town systematically and house to house. We are examining for sanitary purposes every house in the borough house to house, but it has taken years to accomplish it; we have not quite accomplished it yet in the borough in the seventeen years I have been there; to do the other would take practically as long.

41675. Have you ever calculated it out?—No, I have not calculated it out at all.

41676. Dr. Meredith Young suggested that he could do it for a ½d. rate, or something under 1d., he said?—That means about £6,000 or £7,000 in Leeds. You would have a great difficulty in adding a ½d. rate for sanitary purposes at present.

41678. You think if it could be done at what we should consider a reasonable cost, or what would be considered by some people a reasonable cost, it would be desirable?—I think it would be serviceable, decidedly, but the question comes whether that is not a thing that should be done to some extent by voluntary effort, organised, perhaps, by the Charity Organisation Society.

41680. But still, you want this inspection, do you not?—I want this inspection. One of the great difficulties in the case, if you go in for voluntary inspection, is that you get a tremendous number of cases that you cannot deal with reported to you. On the other hand, if you go in entirely for paid inspection, you are apt to turn your visitor into, shall I say, a "Relieving Officer?"

41681. But supposing they were not permitted to give relief?—I mean relieving officer in the sense of the person who discovers improper cases; I am using it in the detective sense.

41682. But surely it depends entirely, and this rather bears on Mr. Booth's question, on whether the service that you are pressing or withholding is a service which it is desirable in the interests of the community, should be pressed on the people or only given in the last necessity. Hygienic advice and careful diagnosis of disease with a view to prevention you want to press on everybody?—Yes.

41683. You do not necessarily want to press bread on everybody?—But I want to know everybody who has not got bread, as much the one as the other.

41684. Whereas it is desirable that everybody should be medically attended?—I think perhaps we are rather looking at it from different points of view. It is desirable that everybody ill should be medically attended, and it is desirable that everybody should be instructed to some extent in ordinary hygiene, but I think we have to hope for that largely from the education department in the future, that no child will be brought up who does not know a little bit of the elements of hygiene.

41685. Have you not found your infantile inspector women rather useful?—Very useful, but they are for a limited area and for a limited purpose.

41686. They do teach the mothers better hygiene?—Yes.

41688. You think at any rate hygienic advice given free to everybody would increase responsibility and obligation?—It would depend a good deal upon how it was given. With regard to these ladies who go and visit the houses where children have been born they have to be very careful about how they go on; they make friends with the women, and then the women consult them about things, they talk it over, and I think the value of their services has been very great.

41689. They increase the feeling of obligation on the part of the parents?—Yes, they get the mothers to feel their responsibility about the infants, they do not diminish it at all.

41690. We had it given in evidence by a medical man of Leeds that there was a good deal of pauperism brought about by syphilis; he suggested that the treatment of syphilis should be transferred to the municipal authority. What do you think about that?—I have not considered that at all really. I do not want a notification of syphilis. I think that the things that we want to have notified are the things which are immediately contagious, not that I say syphilis is not contagious, but what we should have notified would be secondary and tertiary syphilis, and not primary syphilis.

41691. You do not agree with him in thinking that it is a very grave cause of pauperism?—Yes, I think it is a very important cause of pauperism.

41692. And some active preventive measures should be undertaken?—I have not thought about that view of it at all.

41693. You have not thought about it?—No, I have thought about the subject of syphilis, but syphilis is not a disease which is confined to the poorer classes at all.

41694. With regard to midwives, is it true that there is likely to be a scarcity of midwives because the old gang is going out and the certified woman has not come in?—I think there will probably be a supply adequate to the demand in time. At present there will be a little bit of difficulty because some of the old gang have not been registered and are still going on practising without being registered. The sooner the old gang goes out the happier I shall be.

41695. Do you advocate the payment by the corporation of the medical attendants in cases where they are called in?—I do not know that the corporation in the present state of things is the proper authority to do it, but I do advocate that the medical man sent for to a woman who is flooding should be paid by an authority, and that authority should have the power to take proceedings if necessary to recover the cost; whether that authority should be the corporation or the Poor Law guardians I have not formed any opinion.

41696. It has been suggested to us that it is not safe to do as Liverpool did, permit the patient or the midwife to call any doctor in that they selected, because it would lead to a certain amount of collusion between the baser kind of midwife and the baser kind of doctor; what do you think?—I think there is a danger of that; I have known cases where a midwife has been sending for an unregistered practitioner. The great difficulty at present is that we cannot get the medical man to go because he is not to be paid. I am not inclined to attach much importance to the difficulty you name, because I think we could control that; if there were collusion we should very soon find it out.

41697. You want to have a medical man supplied somehow or other?—I want to have the medical man supplied, but I am not inclined to say he should always be the Poor Law medical officer; I think the Poor Law medical officer is the natural man, and I have tried to arrange with the clerk of the Leeds Board of Guardians to see that they shall get paid, and Mr. Ford is anxious they should get paid if they go to these cases.

41700. You are not afraid that by saying "by all means the milk" first of all you are very materially diminishing the chance of the gradual education of poor people to see to their own affairs more or less?—I think I am perhaps misunderstood. I understood that I first of all agreed to the latter part, that gradual education was the most important and most hopeful thing. As I said about consumption it is the general rather than the special improvement we want, but with regard to the particular district in which this milk depot was founded, it was to deal with one particular district in which there was the highest mortality among infants. We examined the milk supplied in that district at the shops, and it was not such as one would like infants to have; the only milk that these people could get was this bad milk, weak milk and foul milk; it was not intended it should cost the ratepayers anything in the long run, but in the meantime it was necessary to supply the milk. I hoped the corporation would have gone on and supplied the milk in that district; I was not proposing they should do it under cost price, I mean they should not undersell the ordinary milk man.

41701. In order to make it self-supporting you would have gone on to take farms, cattle and so on into the hands of the municipality, would you not?—Yes.

41702. You do not think that the better line of advance would have been more inspection of the milk, and a higher standard with regard to it?—These things should we also have done; I think we are about as well inspected as any town; we have a veterinary surgeon who examines all the cows in all the dairies in Leeds. I have no power to go outside Leeds, unless I have reason to suppose there is disease resulting.

41703. You did not find that inspection sufficient to raise the quality of your milk to what you desired?—No, I found that in certain districts of the town the milk was very bad, I mean as milk. The inspection of the cattle is an inspection largely on account of tubercle. I think I may say we have very few, if any, cattle in Leeds suffering from tubercle of the udder, because we are examining them so frequently that it does not pay to have them, but the milk may be bad although it is not tuberculous, and we cannot have such an army of men as would be necessary to sample every specimen of milk sold. The ordinary sampling of milk until recently with us has been as to the chemical quality of the milk, how much cream and so on; the milk in this district is very deficient in cream, but we found if we examined it bacteriologically, that although it was deficient in cream, it was thoroughly efficient in the quantity of germs. What we particularly want is to educate the milkmen and to show how milk can be produced comparatively pure; there is plenty of good milk in Leeds, but in this district there was none, or hardly any.

41704. Would your action, if it were taken by the corporation, tend to bring other traders into the district or to keep them out?—It would tend to bring them into line with our ideas.

41705. Better than any system of examination?—I should combine the two, examination would go on as at present, but what we want to do is to show milkmen that milk can be kept quite clean.

41706. You do not think there is any danger of undermining the self-supporting character and the care and energy of the people by means of such experiments?—I do not think so.

Advantages and disadvantages of one authority for medical assistance of

41707. With regard to one authority for dealing with the Poor Law as well as with other municipal work, do you think the same kind of men or women would be elected to deal with the drains and the roads and the assessment as you would chose to deal with the relief of the poor. Do you think there would be the same kind of persons elected?—No, I think probably one would function the particular men elected. I should like the relieving officer to know a little more about drains, it would be useful; at the same time his function would be rather to enquire into the circumstances of the people and their needs; but they are very much the same class of people, our inspectors get made into relieving officers and collectors, and all sorts of things.

41708. I was not thinking so much of the officers as of the bodies charged with the responsibility; whether you would elect the same men for councillors, or for guardians?—They are very much the same. The councillor is recruited from the ex-guardian to a very large extent. If a person wants to get into public life in Leeds he can generally get on to the board of guardians most easily. He remains a member of the board of guardians for a year or two, and then he tries for a position in the town council; the fact that he has to contest practically the same district enables him to get in more easily. A large number of our town councillors are ex-guardians; they are that type, the same class very much.

41709. You think the qualifications are much the same?—Very much the same, a good business capacity is what we want for both.

41710. Has it occurred to you, if a large number of duties were entrusted to one body which therefore has to act by committees, that body itself will become unmanageably large for the purpose of business?—Not if they thoroughly trust their committees. I think the great fault of our present municipal system is that we have too large committees, and they do not trust them completely. I would like to see the Government method of having a president, a secretary, and two members who do not generally attend, to form the committee, and let them be responsible to the whole House. In Leeds we have been diminishing the number of members on committees and making them more responsible; everything has to come up for confirmation before the council.

41711. If you add the whole of the duties of the guardians on to the corporation you would have to have a large body, I suppose?—Yes.

41712. Do you see any objection to that?—None.

41713. You do not object to very large bodies?—No.

41714. (Chairman.) You say the milk which was sold by the ordinary vendor was bad. Was that on account of its being watered; you say it was of an inferior quality?—I think it was of inferior quality, probably watered. I am not provided with analyses to show that, but the difference between their milk and the milk we provided was so obvious that people drew attention to it, and wanted to know where we got it from. The badness I was thinking of was the bacterial richness.

41715. (Mr. Phelps.) You have had some experience of medical clubs?—Not personally, I never had one in practice. Medical clubs and objections thereto.

41716. Do you know how far in Leeds they cover the ground, what sort of proportion of the poor belong to them?—I cannot give you anything exact with regard to that.

41717. Do you know how far the medical profession is satisfied with them?—I think they would be better satisfied if the fees were larger. Really my only objection to medical clubs is that the medical profession is ground down to very small fees, and that the work in consequence is to some extent, as all contract work is apt to be, a little carelessly done. I do not want to reflect upon the medical profession, but if a man is paid 2s. 6d. or 3s. 6d. for attending a man all the year round, and that man should send for the doctor late in the afternoon after he has had a busy day he would be very apt to put off going till the next day.

41718. Have you any experience of the provident dispensary system?—No.

41719. Does that obtain in Leeds do you know?—Except I think in the way I have mentioned in my Statement, that there are medical men employed by certain of these clubs who give their whole time to the work, who live on the premises, and see patients on the premises.

41720. The provident dispensaries are rather different from that?—Yes.

41721. Supposing that the system you advocate was found to be at any rate impracticable at the moment, do you see your way to any discrimination between kinds of illness which might be treated publicly or left to the man to deal with himself. Could you draw a distinction between institutional sickness or institutional relief and other relief?—I am not sure that I gather exactly the meaning of your question.

41722. As the Poor Law is worked at present medical relief may either be in an infirmary or hospital or at the patient's own home?—Yes.

41723. Do you think you could draw a distinction between those two?—I think in several cases you would have the distinction; whether the patient is to be treated in hospital or at home would have to be left to his own doctor, who might be the Poor Law doctor. The Poor Law doctor being like the club doctor, a man who is paid by contract, naturally is inclined to send the patient into hospital rather than treat him at home if the case is likely to be a long one, and it is better for the patient that he should be treated in the Poor Law infirmary than at home in most cases.

Possibility making institution medical relief, leaving non-institutional medical relief to charity or provident effort.

possibility of 41724. The majority of cases prefer to be treated in their own homes?—I think they would prefer it in many cases.

41725. Do you think you could draw a distinction in order to provide for treatment at home but if the illness was sufficiently severe for the case to go into an institution?—Is the relieving officer or the medical officer to provide for the distinction?

41726. The medical officer?—The medical officer sees the patient, and he is to decide whether the patient is to be treated at home?

41727. A medical officer does that?—Shall we say the district medical officer for the time being?

41728. Yes?—He is sent to see a case and he has to decide whether the patient is to be treated in the Poor Law infirmary or to be treated at home; is that your question?

41729. In an institution or at home?—Yes, I think he is the man to decide that distinctly.

41731. Do you not think you might draw a distinction as to severity; that some things the man ought to provide for himself, he ought to belong to a dispensary or club; but other things are so severe that they ought to be provided for by the infirmary?—I do not think you could. It is almost impossible to say with regard to a certain case in the first instance. There are a great many cases of pneumonia. A man is knocked down and whether he is provided or not he ought to be treated; if it is going to be a long case I think it is better he should be treated in an infirmary. There is one case I remember when I was Poor Law medical officer, it was a case of a compound fracture, and the man was unwilling either to go into the Poor Law hospital or even into the general infirmary; I was younger in those days than I am now, and was willing to treat him at home for the sake of treating a compound fracture. The relieving officer said; "you are not bound to, we have offered him the infirmary or the Poor Law;" the man was unwilling to be treated anywhere than at home; it was a great mistake; the difficulty was that although the medical part of the treatment was all right, "although I say it that should not," the man was not receiving the support and nourishment which he needed; treatment at home is very difficult unless you find the additional requisites.

41732. What you say with regard to medical attendance raises a very important question; I quite see medical attendance very often implies nourishment?—It does.

41733. What would be your rule or suggestion with regard to that?—I do not think it would be desirable to treat a case at home unless you could get the nourishment necessary and the nursing.

41734. Supposing a man sent for a doctor, and the public doctor goes, is that doctor to have the power to order nourishment, and is that to be supplied at the public cost?—He has it under the present state of the Poor Law.

41735. Taking your ideal state of things; in the present state of things the question of granting nourishment is limited to destitution, but in your case it is given as medicine?—Yes.

41736. Are you prepared to advocate it should all be given at public cost?—If it is needed, yes; it ought to be given in the relief.

41737. And the medical man would decide?—I should not allow the outside medical men to decide that; if I may draw the distinction that if a man is taken ill suddenly and sends for his own doctor, or his usual doctor, that usual doctor should attend and be paid for by some one where the case is to be treated at home; naturally the people who would have to pay for the relief would have something to say whether it should be treated in the hospital or not.

41738. Whether it should be treated in the hospital or not, I want to know how are you going to settle that the nourishment which is an integral part of the treatment should be provided for under your scheme?—That would have to come through the relieving officer.

41739. You would have to have some organisation?—Yes.

41740. (Mr. Gardiner.) Why should not his own medical attendant order the food that is necessary, that would be supplied by the guardians; the guardians would declare the man on relief and recover from the patient if the patient was able to pay?—I think that is practicable.

41741. If you can get the guardians to discharge that kind of work?—Yes.

41742. (Chairman.) If a man is not to be disqualified by getting medical relief, would you put the sustenance that was ordered under the head of medical relief?—I think at present it is regarded as that. There used to be a distinction in olden times between bread and other things. I once ordered bread, and I was told by a relieving officer I need not order bread, he could order bread, but I thought the patient should have bread.

41744. Or any medical man?—I think there would be difficulty about that certainly; but I think that my meaning was that the first and immediate call should be attended to immediately, and that the necessary relief should be given immediately. Of course sustenance or anything of that sort, when required, or a basin of beef tea, I think the man sent for first should be able to order.

41745. (Mrs. Webb.) Would it not be possible to make this distinction, suppose you transferred the whole medical attendance with the hospitals to the sanitary authority, and then permitted the medical men engaged by the sanitary authority to say to the Poor Law authority: "This case can be treated in the home; if you refuse maintenance I must take it into my institution, because it is generally desirable that the case should be taken into the institution where it will be maintained," obviously you might make it a little bit deterrent giving maintenance in the homes and giving the alternative of either getting poor relief as a destitute person or being taken by the sanitary authority into an institution where they would get maintenance as a matter of course?—Would the institution be the same institution that at present is called the Bastile?

41746. No, the isolation hospital sort of institution?—That is a new infirmary intermediate between the workhouse infirmary and the general voluntary infirmary.

41748. Yes, the sanitary authority would have the whole medical treatment of the poor, indoor and outdoor; if you wanted to treat a case in the home and it was destitute it would have to go to the Poor Law authority and ask for maintenance, and if the Poor Law authority refused that, except in the case of sudden urgent necessity, then the sanitary authority would take it into the hospital?—I do not think that would be a desirable way of working; I think we should have constant conflict between the authorities; at present we work amicably.

41749. But you do not do the work?—We leave that part of the work out.

41750. You do not do what you want to do, which is to give thorough medical assistance to the poor. You have no thorough medical assistance for the poor?—No, we have not; we have the difficulty that the person is faced with the relieving officer who says: "It is quite true you are very ill, you must go into the workhouse."

Deterrence
relief.

41751. There is a definite evil you want to get rid of?—Yes, and the objection about workhouses is exactly that it is the workhouse at all, the workhouse hospitals are capital hospitals; the difficulty is that the man will not go there because it is a degradation; he puts off going there until the evil has become so much more serious that it is probably fatal.

41752. He would not put it off if it were a municipal hospital like an isolation hospital?—If it were the ordinary infirmary he would not put it off if he had an opportunity of going to the present infirmary.

41753. If it was a municipal hospital like an isolation hospital?—I do not know about that; at present the people look at it from this point of view: We are rate-payers, we are paying for this hospital, and our children must be treated in it.

41754. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any plan for bringing all the hospitals into line in that way. Do you think they could be arranged under a central authority in the town?—I think it could be done, but I have not attempted to do so; it is a very big scheme.

41755. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Is the Poor Law infirmary at Leeds separate from the workhouse?—It is in the same grounds, the same curtilage.

Huddersfield
social and industrial conditions.

41761. (Chairman.) You have been good enough to prepare for us a paper, I believe, which we may take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The Huddersfield Union contains thirty-four townships, or seventeen agricultural districts and seventeen manufacturing districts. Since the year 1871 there has been an increase of population of 32,000 in the above manufacturing districts and a decrease of population of 6,000 in the aforesaid agricultural districts.

2. With the exception of a few short periods of depression, there has been a steady increase of production in the textile industries, such as spinning, weaving, dyeing, finishing, and machine making, and it is my firm opinion that if agricultural pursuits could be fostered and encouraged there would be no one out of employ except the idle and the vagabond.

Expenditure on drink and amusement
pauperism.

3. Though the large majority of the working classes of this union are fairly steady and thrifty, I am sorry to find so many young men who spend too much of their earnings on strong and drugged ales, and on amusements; such as these ultimately come (with their wives and families) upon the Poor Law with an impaired and broken constitution.

Destitution
as a condition of relief and cases illustrating its hardship.

4. To me the Poor Law and its administration is very peculiar and many a time very unjust; it is written that unless a person be thoroughly destitute he or she cannot be relieved.

5. Take the case of a widow with five children; the oldest is twelve years, the youngest one and a half years of age. Her last shilling may be spent, but because she has a comfortable home she is told by the guardians and relieving officer to seek some employment or sell some of her furniture; she afterwards goes out charring and washing, and keeps the oldest child from school to nurse the baby. She cannot earn sufficient to make ends meet; the children go short of the necessities of life: she is driven to the street and to acts of indiscretion.

6. Take the case of a friendly society member and his family. He was stricken down with pneumonia, which left him with consumption. Out of 30s. per week he had made a comfortable home and had saved a few pounds; after he and the family had exhausted their savings and gone through his sick allowance of 10s. per week he applied for Poor Law relief; the guardians granted him, his wife, and family of four children the magnificent sum of 8s. per week. The members of this lodge promoted a concert for his benefit, which realized £11, and which was promoted in order to clear off what sums were owing to the grocer, and the butcher, etc. As soon as the lodge handed him the amount the relieving officer and 41756. Is it not regarded as a separate institution by the poor?—No, it is regarded as part of the workhouse in each of the four unions.

41757. Supposing it was a different institution quite on a different site?—You mean like Notting Hill?

41759. Although they are under the Poor Law administration that feeling of unwillingness to go into infirmaries has disappeared largely, has it not?—Yes, I think it has; in London all your fever hospitals are under the Poor Law authority.

41760. Fever and small-pox are both under the same board, but taking the ordinary infirmary, we have had evidence that people who are not ordinary pauper people are quite willing to go into those infirmaries?—It would not be so in Leeds at present. There are plenty of people willing to go in and Leeds is enlarging its wards, and as you saw the other day, building new wings and things of that sort; but a number of the patients that ought to go in are not willing to go in. People will delay the application for relief because it is associated with pauperism.

the guardians stopped his relief and told him they could not give him any more relief until he and his family had lived on the £11.

7. Take another case, that of a deserted wife with six little children, the oldest being too young to work. When her husband ran away she was earning by laundry work at home about 8s. per week, besides keeping her family in order. She applied for some help to the Bradford Board of Guardians, who told her they could not give her outdoor relief, but they would give her a ticket for the workhouse for herself and children. Ultimately this respectable, painstaking, hard-working woman was compelled to accept the workhouse. When my attention was drawn to the case she and the children had been in the workhouse six months, and for two months she was not allowed to see her youngest child. I took the case in hand; I applied to the House Committee to allow her to come out of the workhouse for a few days and leave the children in, in order that she could get a cottage prepared for them, but the guardians refused, and she was compelled to bring out the children. A few of the friendly society members of Huddersfield found them beds for a few nights and in a few days the family were put into a cottage. She again applied for out-relief, which was again refused, but when the guardians were induced to visit the cottage and see the children the No. 2 section of the Huddersfield Union unanimously agreed that it was a deserving case to be relieved. The clerk of the Huddersfield Union said it cost the Bradford Union £2 per week during the time the family were in the workhouse.

8. Before I conclude my remarks on this subject I will quote one peculiar case of administration of Poor Law relief in the workhouse. Three meals per day are served out to the inmates of Crosland Moor workhouse, rice milk being one of the tabulated diets and served twice per week. On cooking this diet a large quantity of fat is mixed into it, and the consequences are that many of the aged inmates, both males and females, cannot eat it because it makes them ill. I have noticed ten of these dinners served out to the poor old folks who preferred to go without dinner sooner than be made ill with the fatty rice milk. The attention of Dr. Fuller (medical inspector) was drawn to this matter and he advised an alternative diet for such persons as could not eat it, but his advice has been set at naught by the master, matron, and superintendent nurse. Before these aged persons can have an alternative diet they must declare themselves sick and go into the hospital.

9. I am opposed to the granting of a ticket for the workhouse to aged persons who can live with some degree of comfort with their relatives and friends, provided they can have sufficient outdoor relief.

10. I contend that when a man has reached the age of sixty-five or seventy years, has been a good and true citizen, paid rates and taxes and all due demands for forty-five or fifty years, he should not be treated as a pauper, and should not have the workhouse pointed out to him as an abode for his or his wife's declining years. He should not be penalised because he has been unfortunate. He may have had hard work and little for it—long hours and long exposure, employment often like the chemical labourer or the steel grinder, very unhealthy, or like the miner and the scavenger, disagreeable and offensive. He may have been exposed to sickness without comforts and to old age without alleviation; doomed sometimes to look on the illness of wife and children and feel that the comforts that might restore them are beyond reach; forced to continue this drudgery and carry the burden in old age with hardly a hope of relief.

11. As the cost of maintenance in the workhouse is about 9s. per head per week, I consider it more economical to grant the deserving destitute old people 5s. per week out-relief.

12. I would let the workhouses be open to none but the weak-minded, imbeciles, epileptics, and the hospitals for the bedridden and diseases which cannot possibly be treated and attended to properly in and amongst a working man's family at home.

13. When outdoor relief is given to the destitute, aged and infirm, let it be sufficient for food, clothing, fire and shelter, and let such out-relief be taken to their homes and given into the hands of the recipients instead of, as at present, compelling the aged men and women who are ill and infirm (and scarcely able to walk), to walk a mile in pain and punishment to the pay stations, or otherwise to pay out of their little relief sums of 1d. and 2d. per week for some one to bring it to them. Why should not the receiving officers or the guardians in each district, like the friendly societies' sick stewards, take it to them, and be more in touch with the varying and altered circumstances from time to time? I have known relief given and sent to a home where the income of the family of four persons was no less than 70s. per week. This case was notified to me by a friendly society's sick steward.

14. As there is waste and uncultivated land in and near every Poor Law Union in the British Isles, it is quite time that farm colonies were commenced in order to compel the idle—the dissolute—the tramp or vagrant to work with the spade. There would be no escape for them; if they ran away from one colony, they would be picked up and taken to the next one. Make them use the spade. At the same time render their environment pleasant and interesting by having instructive and musical evenings. An earnest attempt should be made to blot out the taint of pauperism.

15. If State farm colonies were instituted at once, they would solve the question of the unemployed, and do away with test labour granted by the Poor Law unions. Seeing that there is in the British Isles over 20 millions of acres of waste land which is capable of profitable cultivation, the Land Laws should be assimilated to the National Education Act, which says that an uneducated child is detrimental to the State, and the parents must be compelled to educate the child. Therefore, on the same grounds of equity and reason, the idle, waste, and uncultivated land which is capable of cultivation is detrimental to the State, and the owners should be compelled to cultivate it.

16. During the winter of 1903-4 the guardians granted two men (who each had a wife and children to maintain) test labour at the workhouse; they were outdoor labourers who had no work because of the inclemency of the weather. When they arrived at the workhouse the master put them to remove some heaps of snow from one place to another. They pushed on with their work in order to get away and look for work outside the workhouse, and as soon as their task was finished they asked the master to let them go. "No," said he; "you remove the snow back again until the time is up."

17. Of the classes of persons applying for relief in this union (apart from lunacy cases):—

About one-fifth are widows and children of skilled and unskilled artisans.

About one-fifth are young and middle-aged, married men, with wives and families, who, through accident or disease, are totally unfit to earn a living.

About three-fifths are aged unskilled workmen (and their wives and widows), such as the miners, teamers, agricultural, railway outdoor labourers, chemical, factory, and workshop labourers, weavers, etc., etc.

Mr.
Benjamin

19 Feb. 1907.

18. The wages of skilled and unskilled workmen of forty-five years and upwards now show a gradual decline, the roughest forms of labour being the first to suffer. When a workman with grey hairs falls out of employment it is difficult for him again to obtain a permanent situation. Thrift on a wage of 25s. per week, with a wife and family to keep, does not mean saving at all, but the securing proper maintenance and comforts of the home—a wise expenditure of the income. It is hopeless to expect that the majority of these unskilled workmen, by the time they reach the age of sixty-five to seventy years, can have saved by their own exertions a fund out of which they and their wives can maintain themselves with comfort during their declining remaining years. Higher wages Parliament cannot provide; accidents and sickness it cannot prevent.

wages and difficulties of thrift amongst
labourers.

19. My remarks in paragraphs 17 and 18 show the greatest and most potent cause of pauperism, but I must add that strong ale, such as is made in the vast brewery establishments in Great Britain, is the next great factor of pauperism. Young men will take beer, and the taste for it grows with them. By the time they marry, their constitutions are drugged with alcohol, and by the time they reach the age of fifty years venereal disease and gangrene develop.

20. Fifty years ago, when every cottage had its home-brewed beer, young men were more healthy and less subject to intoxication; to-day the beer from the large breweries is too much drugged, and seeing that young men will have beer, the Government should demand it being made pure with malt hop and cane sugar only.

21. The persons seeking election as guardians have always been middle-aged and old-aged passive members of the political clubs or political organisations, retired middle-class tradesmen, all of whom have had no other credential but plenty of leisure, easily going, and easily led, men who have ever been ready to fall in line with the doings and wishes of leading officials.

guardians.

22. After seven years' experience as a Poor Law guardian I have come to the conclusion that under the surface of our officialdom there runs a supply of choice pickings for men gifted with the power of grabbing them.

Alleged irregularities at Crosland Moor
workhouse.

For instance, when I became a guardian, and was elected a member of the Crosland Moor Workhouse Committee, I found the master doing favours for the clerk and for the guardians in opposition to the Orders of the Local Government Board.

23. I found that by the order of the master, earth, sods, timber, in the shape of railway sleepers, had been removed from the grounds of the workhouse by the inmates and delivered at the residence of the clerk to the guardians and a poultry house erected by the workhouse inmates on the private grounds of the clerk, and the only entry made in the workhouse books being a few 1d. bundles of firewood charged to the said clerk.

24. I also found the master favouring the guardians, by serving them with a sumptuous tea at a cost to the rates of 2s. to 2s. 6d. per head for which the guardians paid 6d. each as an acknowledgment. When I asked the Master what he did with the poultry and the eggs, he told me that they were his allowance to do whatever he thought fit with. I found that he had 300 head of poultry and the only entry in the books was twenty, yet the poultry had consumed, in six months, corn to the amount of £10 12s. 6d.

25. In order to show you the bent of the guardians to the clerk I will give you two questions that came before the board following each other. (a) I moved a proposition to grant the deserving aged men and women recipients of outdoor relief an extra 6d. per week in order to meet the extra price of coal during the colliers' strike, sixty guardians voted against it. (b) Immediately after this the chairman moved that the clerk should have an advance of wages or salary. Over fifty guardians voted to give him an advance of £75 per year. Now as clerk to the guardians he receives about £250 a year: he is also allowed to hold the office of superintendent registrar and while the guardians' assistant clerks do all the registration work he pockets the fees to the extent of

Mr. Benjamin North. £300 a year. I am of opinion that it would be but just that he should pay for the registration work seeing that he takes all the fees.

19 Feb. 1907. 26. The class of persons above described who have invariably filled the position of guardians have allowed the management of Crosland Moor Workhouse to be vested in one family. The master, matron, and superintendent nurse are husband and wife and their daughter.

Relief Committees, &c., in Huddersfield. 27. There are five relief sections in the Huddersfield Union. With the exception of No. 1 and No. 2 Sections I don't think that any of the guardians visit any case of destitution. They are advised by the relieving officer and leave everything with him. The friendly societies representatives in No. 1 and No. 2 Sections make a practice to visit cases themselves and are in a position to detect imposition.

Proposed weekly visiting of cases. 28. I am of opinion that every case of out-relief should be visited once a week either by the relieving officer or the guardians.

Need of abolition of pay stations. 29. I would do away with all the relief pay stations in the union. A short time ago I visited a Kirkburton pay station at the appointed time of the payment of relief. It is a cottage for which the guardians pay rent. The relieving officer generally stays about thirty minutes. There were eighteen cases. I noticed that eight persons were poor, old, and decrepit and were scarcely able to fetch their scanty allowance; four were young persons who came on behalf of others; and (what astonished me) the remaining six sums were put on a tray and given to the woman of the house to be called for during the day. I noticed that the relieving officer passed half of the homes and could thus have left the relief with the poor persons. Since I visited the above pay station the following has occurred: An old man and his wife, each about sixty-five years of age, both ill and both destitute, had an allowance of (4s.) 2s. each out-relief. He had gangrene in both feet and his wife was so ill that she could not get out of bed. They had a niece who always took them their out-relief. It appears that one night the niece found that their condition had become worse. Before she attended to their wants she put the relief in the cupboard and told them where to find it. Next morning the old man was in great trouble; both he and his wife had forgotten about the relief. He went out of his home saying that the guardians had stopped his relief and that he had lived too long. At night he was found drowned. Had the relief been taken to them by the relieving officer this man would not have drowned himself.

Evils of compelling low wage-earners to maintain their parents. 30. The friendly societies are totally opposed to the practice of the guardians of compelling a working man (who has a wife and three or four little children, and whose income is not more than 26s. per week) to pay towards the maintenance of his father or mother who may have become recipients of Poor Law relief. This practice they consider perpetuates pauperism.

Disposal of paupers' money. 31. They also are of opinion that, where a person, male or female, middle-aged or aged, has been unfortunately taken to the asylum or to the workhouse or hospital, and who, by thrift, has saved a few pounds, say from £10 up to £100, which have come into the hands of the treasurer of the Union, £8 or £10 of it should be put aside in order such person may not have a pauper's burial. The friendly societies also think that in such cases 9s. per week for the workhouse and 10s. per week for the asylum is too much to charge to the account of these unfortunate persons.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Existing system of guardians' election suitable. 32. The law as to the election of guardians need not be altered.

Excessive cost of Poor Law administration. 33. The Poor Law as laid down is to all intents and purposes an old age pension, but the administration is at fault. Of the money collected for the benefit of the poor, only one-half goes to them; the other half is swallowed up by officialdom.

Relief to the thrifty should not involve disfranchisement. 34. My experience in Poor Law administration teaches me that there must be a line of demarcation drawn between the thrifty and the unthrifty.

35. Within the Huddersfield Poor Law Union there are about 250 lodges or societies or about 20,000 members of friendly, trade, sick, and brief societies who distribute sick and funeral allowances to the extent of about £17,000 per year. With the exception of widows the number of friendly society members applying for Poor Law relief is very small. I should say that amongst the number of persons who are relieved by this Union, not more than 5 per cent. are friendly society members.

36. The friendly societies feel that it is degrading for their poorer aged members to come under the Poor Law, and that such of their members who are compelled to apply for Poor Law relief should not be disfranchised. These are chiefly men who, through no fault of their own, have not sufficient for themselves and their wives, and who are unable to live on the lodge's superannuation allowance, which is not more than 4s. per week.

37. Many of the friendly society lodges, and also some of the trade societies, have commenced a contributory scheme of old age pensions, but seeing that it is only for those who can afford to pay an extra contribution, and that it is impossible for the large majority to avail themselves of the fund, it is quite time that some method of action was formulated which would give to the poor and unfortunate men and women who had fallen under the pressure of adverse circumstances, something better than the Poor Law and the workhouse to look forward to in their old age.

38. The general outlines of such a scheme might be on the following lines:—

As a non-contributory scheme would be injurious to the thrift or friendly societies of Great Britain, it is imperative that Parliament should consider none but a contributory one. I append details of such a scheme (See Appendix No. XII. (A)).

41762. (Chairman.) I understand you are a Poor Law Guardian of the Huddersfield Union, a member of the Distress Committee, and a member of the Ancient Order of Foresters?—Yes.

41763. How long have you been a Poor Law guardian?—About seven years.

41764. You have a very considerable knowledge of benefit societies, I suppose?—Yes.

41765. In your statement you make various criticisms on the Poor Law. I think your Recommendations, beginning with paragraph 32, cover most of your paper, do they not?—Yes, I think so.

41766. One of the defects, you think, of the Poor Law is that it does not help a person until he becomes destitute?—That is it. There should be assistance given before they become destitute. It would prevent destitution in many cases if they were assisted at the proper time.

41767. Do you think you could put that duty on the Poor Law?—I think so.

41768. It has been suggested to us in various quarters that there should be an organised Committee representing charities and benefit societies associated with the out-relief committee, so as to be able to take up such cases?—That would be following the Elberfeld system.

41769. To a certain extent it would?—That is really what is required in industrial centres.

41770. By the Elberfeld system there is one fund for both—for the relief of the destitute, and also for helping those who are likely to become destitute?—That is true.

41771. Under the suggestion made, there would be a fund from which those would be helped who wanted assistance, but had not come to the condition of paupers, which fund should come from charities, I take it?—From some source of charity organisation. That is just where we are short on the board of guardians. We are not in touch with charity organisation. Many a time there have been cases of destitution where, if there were help given, such as buying baskets or other little things for them, they would have soon seen their way out of the Poor Law, and we should have set them going very probably.

41772. Following that idea up, I gather that you are in favour of an old-age pension being given to persons who have reached a certain period of life?—Yes.

41773. Would you give an old age pension to everybody, or would you make any inquiry?—I should not give it without discrimination.

Friendly Society old age pension apply for Poor Law relief should not be disfranchised. These are chiefly men who, through no fault of their own, have not sufficient for themselves and their wives, and who are unable to live on the lodge's superannuation allowance, which is not more than 4s. per week.

Mr.
Benjamin

41774. I assume that you would not, for instance, give it to those who do not want it?—Certainly not. My scheme is to benefit mostly the thrifty people. My idea is to have a stamp register. It is an easy matter for anyone, even in our own firm, to sign a receipt for his wages by cancelling a stamp. By that you would gather a tax, and it would cost no money to do it. All industrious persons should sign for their wages by writing across a stamp. It could be done in a similar way to this, which is supposed to be my wages for two months of this year. Those are supposed to be stamps. (Handing in specimen sheet.) In that way the old age pensions could start almost immediately.

41775. By the revenue the stamps would bring in? —Yes. You cannot get young men to-day to come into friendly societies; they are drawn to the Hippodrome and pleasure, and that sort of thing, and you cannot get them to enter the societies. We have to feed our friendly societies by our juvenile societies. We enter them into our juvenile societies when they become twelve months old, since the Act of Parliament allowed us to do so. We have large juvenile societies, and when the girls and boys get to sixteen or eighteen years of age, the boys are drafted into the Mother Court or Mother Lodge, and if there is a female society the girls are drafted into the female society.

41776. This specimen sheet that you have handed in is intended to represent a receipt for your weekly wages? —Yes, which could be kept at the factory or the workshop.

41778. If you had some scheme of this kind the man who received a paper like this would carry with him his own character?—Yes, it would be as a character. The stamp register would almost do away with characters, if he was on the stamp register. If he fell out of work, he would notify it to the stamp register office, and they would give him a coupon, and then he could travel with this coupon, and people would see that he was an industrious person. When he was receiving no wages he would not have to contribute.

41779. Who would pay the stamp? Would it be the master or the man?—It would come out of the man's wages. My governor said it was a very good idea. In the large majority of cases he said the firms would find the stamps. But every person should sign for his wages over a stamp, and should pay for the stamp himself in order that he might be in touch with the superannuation which is to come to him when he gets old. I do not believe in a system of old-age pensions which is not contributed to. It would hurt the thrift societies if you did not make it contributory, because a young man would then say: "I am provided for at 60 or 65," and therefore he would neglect to provide for himself. Besides that, there will be a lot of secessions from the thrift societies. In Huddersfield we are pretty well off in that respect. We have about 20,000 to 24,000 members of friendly societies in the Huddersfield Union, and about 300 odd lodges of various societies who are distributing sick and funeral allowance amounting to over £17,000 a year. If these young men whom we are trying to get into our fold were made believe that at sixty or sixty-five they were going to receive an old-age pension, there is no doubt they would neglect to become members of a benefit society.

41780. You attach great importance to any pension scheme being a contributory scheme, is otherwise you think it would kill the thrift societies?—It would penalise thrift to a great extent. It must be contributory.

41781. At present do any of the benefit societies with which you are acquainted provide old-age pensions?—They have to contribute towards it. There is an extra contribution of 2d. or 3d. per month, according to the scale. The Manchester Unity of Oddfellows, and the Ancient Order of Foresters have an old-age pension scheme, but it is only those who are really in better positions who can avail themselves of it. The large majority are teamers and unskilled labourers, such as chemical labourers, street labourers, and factory labourers, who really cannot avail themselves of the superannuation because they cannot afford to pay the extra contribution.

41782. Your idea would be that this would be a contribution towards the cost of old-age pensions, which contribution is to be assisted by the taxation of income?—By the scheme, the tax, whatever it is, would simply be a contributory matter, contributed by the industrious persons both male and female; and in their turn, when they became sixty-five years of age, they would have the superannuation or old-age pension. They would have contributed to it, and they would have a perfect right to it. I would not give it to anyone who in the hey-day of their strength had neglected to use the stamp register; I would let them be subject to the Poor Law administration.

41783. You in Huddersfield have a very considerable number of members who belong to the friendly societies—about 20,000, I think you said?—Yes, or a little over.

41784. I take it that very few of those come to the Poor Law for relief?—Perhaps about 5 per cent. of the number that are relieved.

41785. Are you including medical relief now, or is that independent of medical relief?—No, it includes medical relief, when they come before the guardians. The members of the friendly societies generally come at sixty-five to seventy years of age. This superannuation is a continued sick-pay with the Ancient Order of Foresters, the Manchester Unity, and also the Sons of Temperance and other societies. It is the last term of sick-pay, which is sometimes 2s. 6d. per week or 3s. per week as long as ever they live. We pay them that for continued sick-pay when they get aged, but unfortunately that continued sick-pay up to very recently has been taken into consideration when they come before the guardians. I might point out particularly that it is not long since a measure passed the House of Commons and the House of Lords, which enacted that if any member of a friendly society was receiving sick-pay or other allowance from his lodge, up to 5s. per week, that should not be taken into consideration if he appeared before the Board of Guardians. I will give you a case showing how it acts, and showing that it is a dead letter. In the Huddersfield Union the No. 1 Section have a majority of friendly society representatives. There are about eight or nine friendly society representatives on No. 1 section, and there are about five or six who are not members of the friendly societies. Twelve months ago an old man came before us who was sixty-eight years of age. He had been a ne'er-do-well, he had spent all his money, he had had a poor home because he had spent his money in beer and that sort of thing, and he had always been careless; but we took compassion on the old man, and before we should send him to the workhouse—he was living with a poor daughter—we proposed to give him 5s. a week to keep him out of the workhouse. The daughter said if we were to give her sufficient she would go into a better cottage where the old man could sleep by himself; he had been sleeping on rugs, or sometimes with the children, and we are against that sort of thing. We gave him 5s. a week, and he was a ne'er-do-well, mind you. A fortnight after this a man came to us of seventy years of age, who was a member of a friendly society. He was in similar circumstances; he had only had a poor wage all his life, and he was living with his daughters. The two cases were parallel, with the exception only, that he had been a thrifty man, and he had saved £50 or £60. He had lived on that for three or four years and kept away from the union. By what he had saved, and by the superannuation from the friendly society he had been able to carry along. But he said he had almost lived too long, and he was obliged to come now, although he did not want to come. We proposed that he should have 5s. per week, and the relieving officer jumps up and says: "This man has 3s. 6d. a week from his lodge." We said the law distinctly stated that we should not take that into consideration. Then those who were not members of friendly societies jumped at this. We, the members of friendly societies, proposed that the man should have the same as the other, 5s. a week; and those who were non-friendly society men proposed 3s. 6d. If there had not been a majority of friendly society men on the section, he would only have had 3s. 6d., and therefore thrift would have been penalised. I want to lay stress upon this, that if the friendly societies do not take the matter up, that Act, which has passed the House of Commons and the House of Lords, saying that it shall not be taken into consideration up to 5s. a week, will be a dead letter.

Mr. Benjamin North.
19 Feb. 1907.

Object of friendly societies in obtaining representation on Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

41786. Was that Act optional or not?—It was optional before. The law said they "may not" take into consideration what a man receives from a friendly society up to 5s.; but our Parliamentary representatives determined this should be not "they may not" but, in future, "they shall not." And that Act passed two years ago both the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

41787. It was in consequence, I understand, of an impression that the members of the friendly societies were rather under a disadvantage when they came before the Huddersfield Board of Guardians, that the friendly societies themselves took measures to get properly represented on the board of guardians?—That is true; they had been so badly used. I was, it may be, the first leader of the friendly societies in Huddersfield, and I will tell you what caused me to take it up. I was a sick steward visiting the sick at my lodge, and I was doing this gratuitously. I received nothing from the lodge to do it, but I had spare time on a Saturday and at other times, and I did it gratuitously for the lodge. I went to one old man, a very decent old man. He was not a drinker or anything of the sort, he had been a hard-working man, but he had only had about a guinea a week, and he had brought up three or four children. I went into the house and he said "Mr. North, you have brought me my sick pay; has anybody seen you come in?" I said "No, what for?" "Eh!" he says, "if the relieving officer knows—he lives down there—that you brought me my sick-pay, he will take it off my pay." "Why," said I "that's nonsense." I only gave him half-a-crown, and he had been for somewhere like two years receiving out-door relief. That was the system, that they were giving the half-crown and we were giving another half-crown, and the man was pretty comfortable with his daughter. I know a case at the time where the half-crown was given to an old woman, a widow, from a friendly society, and as soon as ever the relieving officer knew that the half-crown was given to the old woman he took off the other half-crown the guardians were giving her, and said the lodge must keep her. That is why the friendly societies took the matter up.

41788. And then the members of the friendly societies got their representatives on to the board?—Yes.

41789. I understand the object of the friendly societies is to promote thrift?—Yes.

41790. It was rather suggested to us that their action since they have been on the board has operated in the other direction, and that it has tended to discourage thrift by increasing the amount given in out-door relief and the number to whom it was given?—Not at all. We simply go on the question of old age. We believe in thorough discrimination. We do not believe in giving an able-bodied person any relief at all, without he is really approaching destitution or is ill.

41791. Then it was mainly as regards the old people that you took action?—It was mainly as regards the aged people that we went there.

Variations in out-relief at Huddersfield.

41792. And you adhere to your principles of thrift by pointing out that any scheme which is non-contributory would be very damaging to the benefit societies?—That is true. Another point: We were not satisfied with the relieving officers, because they neglected to visit certain cases. There was one case of an old man who had run out of his society and would not go into the workhouse. He was living by himself, and he was only receiving half-a-crown a week from the guardians. I wanted this old man to have 3s. or 4s. a week in order to make him more comfortable. The neighbours had promised to keep the house clean and to do that sort of thing, but half-a-crown a week was too little for the old man. It came to my knowledge that on the other side of the road, within a stone's throw, they were giving relief to a woman of seventy years of age who was doing all the housework—she was baking, and she was washing, and her daughter and her daughter's husband and two children were working at the factory. They were bringing 75s. a week into that cottage, and had been doing all the time this woman had been receiving out-door relief. We distinctly put our foot on that sort of thing. That was a piece of imposition and nothing else; and it is going on, mind you. If only the relieving officer would take the relief, he would know the varied circumstances from time to time. I have advocated this for seven years, and the board of guardians have refused to act upon it.

41793. In this particular case?—In many cases where there is imposition.

41795. Are the cases to which you refer entirely friendly society cases?—Many of them are society cases, but we are so generous that we say that 5s. is little enough for any man, whether he be a friendly society man or not, or for an old woman. Seeing that it takes 9s. 5d. per head per week to keep man, woman and child in the Huddersfield workhouse, we distinctly say that three-fourths of that would keep them comfortable amongst their relatives and friends.

41796. The principle under which you act I understand to be this. You are not in favour of giving relief to able-bodied people, or to young people who have made no effort to help themselves, but when people have come to a certain time of life, you think that if they require relief, the relief given should be adequate, and so far from there being a deduction from that relief because they have got assistance from a benefit society, on the contrary the guardians ought to increase the amount?—That is true. We believe that they ought to live out their old age in comfort amongst their relatives and friends, and not, as before, to be starved into the workhouse as they have been.

41797. Do you especially apply this to the benefit societies?—I especially apply that to the benefit societies. I say again, and reiterate it, that the friendly societies of the country are doing a vast amount of good, and their members ought not, when they come to old age, to be treated as paupers. The large majority of them are unskilled labourers, and it is not to be thought that 2s. 6d. or even up to 4s. a week can keep an old man comfortable. It will not do it. Therefore we conceived a scheme whereby men in the hey-day of their strength could, by receiving their wages all over the country, contribute to a superannuation fund for old-age pensions.

41798. What is the lowest wage now in Huddersfield among persons in regular employ? Would it be about 18s.?—The wages of the unskilled labourers vary. Take the railway labourers; they have 18s. per week, and they have 2d. to pay out for an accident fund.

41800. Do you go lower than 18s. a week in your friendly societies, that is, are there people earning a less wage than 18s. a week who are members of your societies?—There are some who have only bits of jobs, and they do not earn more than 10s. or 12s. a week. I am taking the general bulk of unskilled labourers in Huddersfield, and they generally run from 18s. to 22s. 6d. per week. I am thinking of the out-door workers and the railway servants. The out-door workers are generally handicapped, and in inclement weather they are always put on one side. Take those who are under the corporation. The corporation have always a lot of these poor men who have the poorest wages and do the hardest work, mind you, and they have families to keep. When November comes round, they come to the board of guardians, and I am sorry to find that they are corporation labourers. We have to find them test labour.

41801. You mean that they are labourers who at other periods of the year are in the employment of the corporation?—Yes. They are employed by the corporation from March or April right away up to the end of September and October. Then they stool them, as they call it—"I am stooled" as they say—and they come to the guardians. They have families, but they have a very little wage, so that they are only a week or fortnight off the workhouse. It is rather pitiable to see them.

41802. In the case of people who have intermittent employment they are not capable, I suppose, at times of keeping up their weekly contribution to the societies?—They go on paying by some means. We allow them to be in arrears for three months.

41803. Do you lose many members?—No, not through that, not when they get to 30 or 40 years of age, because they know that they will be benefited. As a man grows older he thinks more of his friendly society. We have instituted a system by which we have a subsidiary fund in connection with the Ancient Order of Foresters, the Manchester Unity, the National Independent Order of Oddfellows and others, and when a man is out of work and cannot pay his contribution, we take it out of that subsidiary fund, and in that way we keep him a member. That has been going on now for ten years all over the country.

membership
field.

41804. When once a man becomes a member of a benefit society and has continued for some few years, I gather the tendency is for him to stop on?—We do not lose any members of our friendly societies, except by death, after forty years of age. If we are losing members it comes generally between eighteen and thirty years of age.

41805. Have you found of recent years that there is rather a falling off in the numbers of members of friendly societies?—Yes, there is a falling off in the numbers in the congested districts and the industrial centres, but I may say that there is rather an increase in the out-districts, at least in the out-districts round about Huddersfield all the friendly societies are on the increase. If it were not for the juvenile societies there would be a decrease in the friendly societies in the boroughs, at any rate there would in Huddersfield.

drift.

41806. It has been told us, or insinuated, that one of the reasons why the numbers of members of friendly societies have not increased as they would have done, is a belief that the Government is going to do that which before these societies only did?—It may be so with some, and there may be some such idea. It will not do with the younger members. I am sorry to find the younger members are all for pleasure and that sort of thing. I move amongst them regularly and daily. They spend up to the last. Young men at about eighteen to twenty-four who will earn from £1 to 25s. a week will give the mother about 12s. a week, and spend all the rest mind you, in going to the Hippodrome, and smoking and going to the billiard table, and that sort of thing. There is too much of that to-day, and we are trying to capture them.

41807. Would you say that this is rather a thriftless generation?—I am afraid so. I have noticed both in Bradford and in Huddersfield that we can always have the Hippodrome and those places crowded.

workmen.

41808. Would you say that we are less thrifty to-day than the young men of your own period were?—Yes. Mind you, they will work, but they like to have their pleasure at night. It has been my experience that the young men in the town—I will take my own trade—will rush off at six o'clock in the evening, rush home and get their tea, and then they turn out like gentlemen with cuffs and collars and a stick, and that sort of thing, on the streets. That is true. You will find them like young gentlemen on the streets, and they are giving their mother about 10s. or 12s. a week out of 24s. They go through all this money. But if you go into the agricultural districts, even if you only go to the outside districts, what do you find the young men doing there? They come out of the factory, or whatever it is, but they don't take the smock off, they go and get a spade and they will have a little cottage garden and they go there, and they keep pigs and all that sort of thing. You will find those young men with smocks on working till ten or twelve o'clock at night. There is the difference, mind you, and the nearer the town you get that sort of thing diminishes.

41809. Of course there is more amusement in the towns?—Yes, there is.

Question of increase of drinking habits.

41810. But the present generation do not drink, perhaps, as much as the previous generation did?—I believe there is less drinking from forty to sixty now than there was but that there is more drinking from eighteen to thirty.

41811. Among both women and men?—I think there is less drinking amongst women than there was, and I think that is the reason of the falling off in the sale of intoxicants.

41812. What about the young men from eighteen to thirty?—They start going to these billiard tables when they are eighteen years of age, and you cannot keep them away from them. It is pitiable, you know, to see that sort of thing.

41813. Therefore, you think it is necessary to instil into them some lessons or ideas of thrift, and you are also afraid that if a scheme of old-age pensions is brought in which is based on non-contribution, it will have a very bad effect upon them?—It will have a very bad effect upon young men. I want to tie them down. I say that the amount of money that does not go into the bank they spend in this pleasure, and that a small amount of 2d. or 3d. a week ought to go to the friendly societies or, at any rate, that they ought to be made to sign over a stamp for their wages.

41814. Should you say that the savings banks and the various other institutions in which working people put their savings are on the increase in Huddersfield?—No, I do not think they are on the increase at present. I think they have got to the climax. They have been very industrious in Huddersfield, and they have saved a lot of money. There have been two or three causes for that. There has, for instance, been the Co-operative Society and the Building Society. Instead of paying rent, they get into the society and they commence building. When they have been married say about ten or twelve years they have bethought them that they would have a house of their own, and they have gone into these societies and put in their savings. I should think there is not a town in Yorkshire which has more working men that have their own houses.

41815. Is there not a penny bank in the town?—Yes, but I do not think there is an increase there; I think that is about the same.

41816. Huddersfield just now is prosperous, is it not?—Yes, except the building trades. The textile industries are pretty busy.

41818. Then you say that on the receipt stamp a 1d. should be added for each additional £50?—Yes.

41819. Who is to pay that?—The man who receives the amount. The small shopkeeper pays a penny for £2, but in our firm we turn a couple of thousand over a week, and just a few pennies will receipt that two thousand. It would be no great hardship for our firm to turn over say £2,000 or £3,000 a week to annex on their receipts a superannuation stamp.

41820. Therefore, you mean that in the case of every receipt given by everybody, there should be this addition?—Yes. I should have a sliding scale of 1d. for £50, say; so if we send a cheque for £100 worth of goods it would be receipted over an extra twopenny superannuation stamp.

41821. Have you worked out at all how much would be got in by that means? Have you had any opportunity of doing that?—I have only done it as a kind of guess work, and I think it would bring in somewhere between £3,000,000 and £4,000,000. The beauty of it would be that every week there would be a complete drip, drip, into the coffers of the Postmaster-General. Besides, that, there would be people, such as myself who would never contemplate receiving an old-age pension but who would contribute to it, and they would, to a great extent, help the poorer brethren. In friendly societies the grand principle is that we are assisting those who are not in a position to help themselves. I have been for forty years in friendly societies, and I have only drawn one 10s. When I was a young man and had children, I only drew one week. I have kept away from the funds all this time, and that has been helping someone else. There are others of my age who have been in the same society the same length of time as I have, and they have drawn over £100. They have been more unfortunate. I consider that I have been more fortunate than these men; I have had good health, but these men have not had good health. That is the principle which permeates the friendly societies of the country, that we assist each other in distress.

41822. Do you think that the money raised in the way you have mentioned on the receipt of wages, together with the stamps, would meet the cost?—To a great extent it would.

41823. But you do not think it would meet it completely perhaps?—It seems a very small matter, and some of the items that I have put down on the paper are only $\frac{1}{2}$ d., whereas they might be 1d. Instead, say, of adding $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to an ordinary receipt stamp, you might add 1d. to the receipt stamp.

41824. You would make it self-supporting in that way?—Certainly.

41825. What exactly do you intend to be the principle of administration? Is it to be according to the necessities of the man, or is it according to his thrift, or what is to be the test?—The test is if he had been a thrifty man, and had become sixty-five years of age and past work.

41826. Suppose he had got three or four dependent upon him, would you give him more than if he had not got any at all?—It is not intended to be an old-age pension to a young man.

41827. I quite understand; but still he might have people dependent upon him; for instance, he might have a wife dependent upon him, and so on; would you give him more than you would a single man?—Certainly I would if he had a wife, because I should also take women into this scheme.

41828. Would you treat them separately?—I would.

41829. Would you require that the wife should be of the age of sixty-five too?—Even if she was a little younger she might not be able to do anything. Women are not as strong as men; their constitutions are not the same, and they become old sooner than men. I mean a woman of sixty cannot do as much work as a man can do at seventy. They are the weaker sex, and that should be taken into consideration by the authorities.

41830. You say that you would give a sum of not less than 5s. per week; how would you determine what the sum should be?—By considering the circumstances of the case.

41831. Do you mean the necessities of the case?—Yes.

41832. Not the amount of the previous thrift?—Certainly not, but the necessities of the case. It should be sufficient to know that the man had been a thrifty man. We should know by his surroundings if he had been thrifty and had lived pretty well, but had fallen. I would treat him according to how he had lived before.

41833. You would have to have some sort of central authority to work your scheme, would you not?—Certainly. There would have to be discrimination. It has been already said in the House of Lords and the House of Commons many times that there should be discrimination, or some division between the thrifty and the unthrifty, and this scheme would just meet the case.

41834. You do not mean to have a local charge for this at all?—No.

41835. You would entirely deal with this by means of contributions of the workmen and by payments out of the Exchequer?—That is true, and it should all come through the Postmaster-General, so that it should not cost anything to collect the funds.

41836. The difficulty would rather be, would it not, in ascertaining what the man had contributed, and so forth?—There may be some little imposition, but all thrifty men would be very pleased indeed to chronicle their earnings.

41837. (Dr. Downes.) You say there should be a register kept of all industrious persons; what would be an industrious person for this purpose?—All young persons, both females and males, when they start work right away up to when they leave work.

41838. Take the case of a casual labourer who is at work one week, and out of work another week, through no fault of his own?—This would simply be a labour bureau. There is no doubt that this scheme would be the means of finding him labour. In Huddersfield we have not a proper labour bureau at all. I believe that by a register of all industrious persons we should get at this, and there is no doubt work would be found for them.

41839. When would he cease to be an industrious person in your sense?—When he becomes sick, and when he becomes too old to work.

41840. Supposing he was a man who did not care to work?—If a man did not care to work, the stamp register would show it. He would be an idle person, and he would not be worthy of anything except the administration of the Poor Law.

41841. The mere fact of his not having earned anything would be the standard?—Certainly.

41842. (Mr. Benthams.) To what do you attribute the great falling off in the membership of friendly societies during recent years?—That has occurred in the congested districts, that is, in the towns. I attribute it to nothing but to the falling off among the young persons.

41843. I think you said that that was due to the pursuit of pleasure principally?—Yes.

41844. Do you believe that laxity of Poor Law administration tends against thrift?—There is no doubt about that.

41845. Do you think that the administration of the Poor Law in your own district of Huddersfield is not lax administration?—It is lax administration in many instances.

41846. Then it tends against thrift?—That is in the other sections, the out-district sections.

41847. Where the friendly societies are not strongly represented?—Where the friendly societies are not in the section there is a laxity, and everything is left to the relieving officer. That is my statement, and I can substantiate it too.

41848. With regard to the relieving officers, you say in paragraph 23 that the relieving officers ought to visit every case once a fortnight; is it possible for your officers to do it with the numbers on the books?—Yes, I think so.

41849. Has it not been strongly urged upon you to appoint another relieving officer and to divide the districts?—Yes.

41850. Do you think that is unnecessary?—I should like to point out that one relieving officer belonging to the friendly societies is quite satisfied, and can distribute the outdoor relief. He wants no extra fee, and he says he is quite satisfied. I may tell you that two years ago I was against the pay stations.

41851. This has nothing to do with pay stations. Do you think that generally your relieving officers are able to visit all the cases, taking them as a whole and not taking one particular section?—Yes, if you take away the lunacy cases. I want you to be careful on this point, because I am quite in favour that there should be one officer to look after the lunacy cases and to take the people to the workhouse. Apart from that they can visit once a fortnight every case of outdoor relief.

41852. Would you have an officer appointed specially for this duty?—For the duties of taking to the workhouse and of looking after the lunacy cases, yes.

41853. What about paying the relief?—I would have the distribution of relief paid fortnightly.

41854. By whom?—By the relieving officer.

41855. At the homes of the people?—Yes. May I say to the Commission that the relieving officers themselves go past the homes of the recipients during a week's time, scores, I may say hundreds, of cases whom they have to pay; they pass their very doors.

41856. You think an extra relieving officer would not be necessary if this work of removing lunatics was placed upon another officer?—Certainly not.

41857. Would there be enough work for that other officer?—There would be quite sufficient, and it would be all the better for the relieving officers, because then they could attend to their duties and they would have more time for discrimination.

sufficiency of

Huddersfield

Question of 41858. How many lunatics have you to move in a week?—I do not think there are more than six in a month.

41859. Then that would not take an officer's whole time?—There is other work for him to do; there is the efficiency of the workhouse work.

41860. That would not relieve the relieving officers of very much of their work. Do you not think that the relieving officers have too many cases on their books to be able to visit them as often as is desirable in the interests of good administration?—I do not think so. There are six days in the week, and if they mapped out their districts for every day that would bring them round.

41861. (Miss Hill.) How many cases have they on their books, do you know?—Some of them have 400; I think 400 to 500 is about the most. But the number is no indication of the work, because children are put down, and there may be six children in the same house.

41862. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you approve of allowing everyone to have a vote who is in receipt of Poor Law relief of any kind?—Certainly not. I think that those who are in the hospitals through no cause of their own should not be disfranchised, and I also say that those who are only temporarily relieved through being out of employ should not have their vote taken away for that.

41863. In the friendly societies circular it is stated that relief should not carry with it disfranchisement?—Up to that point.

41864. It does not discriminate, and it does not say that; it merely states baldly that relief should not carry disfranchisement?—I would certainly give the old thrifty man over seventy years of age a vote.

41865. Then you do not approve of this circular which the friendly societies have sent out?—I do approve of it, but I want to explain it. I would not give the reprobate a vote at all.

41866. It does not say so here?—No, but that follows. I would not give a vote at all to the idle and the dissolute.

41867. Were you present at that meeting held at the Trade Societies' Hall in Northumberland Street in 1901, when Mr. Pontefract carried his resolution?—I do not remember it.

41868. Were you present?—I am not sure, but I do not remember it.

41869. Do you not remember the resolution that was passed?—No. What was it?

41870. "That this meeting is of opinion that there should be a more liberal distribution of outdoor relief, and pledges itself to support the Friendly Societies Federation programme and its candidates." That was rather a bald way of putting it, was it not? That meant that the friendly societies movement was advocating a liberal distribution of outdoor relief, did it not?—To the deserving.

41871. It does not say so?—It is on the friendly societies manifesto. I would like to point you out that at that time the highest relief was only about 3s. a week, and that guardians were taking into consideration the third amount of sick pay and were penalising members of friendly societies to a great extent at that time.

Dr. HAROLD SCURFIELD, called; and Examined.

41884. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You are medical officer of health for Sheffield, I think?—I am.

41885. Have you held that position long?—For three years and two months.

41886. Previously were you medical officer of health anywhere else?—Yes, at Sunderland.

41887. For some time, perhaps?—For about eight years.

41888. You have prepared a statement, I think, which we may treat as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The Sheffield Sanitary Authority, which is the City Council, carries out the following operations of the nature of medical assistance or advice:—

41872. (Mr. Booth.) Is the proportion of members of friendly societies who come for relief large?—They form about 5 per cent. of those who apply for relief, not more. Some of my colleagues say it is less, but I have for two years taken very particular notice, and it is not more than 5 per cent. of those who are receiving outdoor relief.

41874. (Mr. Bentham.) I think you said the No. 1 Section was rather the best administered?—Yes.

41875. Are you aware that the numbers in receipt of relief in that section have almost doubled since 1899?—I know that we have given satisfactory relief, and there has been more satisfaction both to the recipients of outdoor relief and to ourselves. I must tell you that the friendly societies are determined that the old people shall be kept out of the workhouse; and we cannot do that under 5s. a week.

41876. Are they to have that whether they deserve it or not?—No; if they are not deserving we do not support them.

41877. This a very large increase in the time, yet there has been a steadily growing trade we understand in Huddersfield the whole of that time?—Yes.

41878. Should not pauperism decrease with an improving trade?—No. There has been an increase of old age. It has brought down on to us pretty heavily the aged people.

41879. Have they got old rather suddenly?—If you will look at the register you will find that there are a lot more aged people on our list.

41880. Have you attracted the old people to apply for Poor Law relief?—No.

41881. There should be no more old people than the regular increase which there happens to be each year. Have you attracted them to apply for Poor Law relief?—No, we have done no such thing. We have simply had a better administration. In our section we have kept them out of the workhouse. In some cases we have given as much as 6s. a week when they were comfortable at home. In every case they have been thoroughly destitute. I find fault that before that time the people were starved into the house.

41882. The numbers have increased in the house also in the same time, have they not?—I do not think so—at any rate not of the aged.

41883. I am taking the totals of course, and I have not got the ages separated out?—I do not think there has been an increase in the aged. I should not like to retire leaving the idea that we are for increasing the outdoor relief. We are for no such thing. There should be thorough discrimination. That is why we say the relief must be taken to the homes. I myself see so much relief given to daughters and daughters-in-law and young men for the old woman that is bedridden or the old man that is bedridden in the congested districts of Huddersfield. That relief goes out of the pay station straight into the dram shop and I am totally against it, and so are all the friendly societies.

(a) The provision of free hospital treatment for certain infectious diseases, e.g., scarlet fever, diphtheria, typhoid fever, and small-pox.

(b) The free maintenance and vaccination of persons who have been exposed to small-pox infection, until it is deemed safe for them to return to their homes.

(c) The supply of diphtheria anti-toxin gratis to persons who state that they are unable to pay for it.

(d) The provision of advice with regard to neglected and verminous children and for newly born babies, by means of Women Health Visitors.

Proportion of paupers belonging to friendly societies.

Increase of out-relief in Huddersfield and attitude of friendly societies thereto.

Dr. Harold Scurfield.

19 Feb. 1907.

Medical assistance of the poor by Sheffield Sanitary Authority.

Dr. Harold Scurfield.

2. Special Committees of the Sheffield Sanitary Authority have the following questions under consideration at present:—

(a) The provision of free or assisted sanatorium treatment for early cases of consumption.

(b) The provision of a free hospital or home for more advanced cases of consumption.

(c) The supply of specially prepared milk for the food of infants at below the cost price.

3. The Sheffield Sanitary Authority have not yet decided to pay fees to medical men who are sent for in accordance with the regulations made under the Midwives Act.

4. As the Sheffield Poor Law guardians provide medical relief for all destitute persons, vaccinate all persons whether destitute or not, provide lying-in accommodation for a large proportion of the mothers of illegitimate children, and also pay a subscription to the Queen Victoria Jubilee Nurses Association, there is necessarily some overlapping of the duties of the Sanitary Authority and the guardians.

5. As regards co-operation, there is an arrangement by which the guardians supply to the Medical Officer of Health the addresses of newly born infants and of consumptives who leave the workhouses, in order that they may be kept under supervision.

6. In addition to operations with regard to the destitute, the Sheffield guardians, like other guardians, undertake the following:—

(a) The vaccination of the whole community.

(b) The maintenance of the children of parents who are not destitute, but who are, in the opinion of the guardians, unfit to look after their children.

(c) The supervision of "farmed out" children under the Infant Life Protection Act.

(d) The supervision of the arrangements for registration of births, deaths and marriages.

7. I have had no experience of the operations of hospital and medical clubs in Sheffield. I am informed however, that the objectionable system of making the hospital treatment depend upon letters of recommendation by subscribers is in vogue.

8. I have had experience elsewhere of the overlapping of medical clubs, hospitals, and the Poor Law medical service.

For example, it is quite possible that a Poor Law doctor, a club doctor, and the doctor in charge of the Hospital Out-Patient Department may attend the same patient at the same time.

I once heard of a case where the patient had secured in this way three bottles of medicine from three different doctors, and took from one in the morning, from the second in the middle of the day, and from the third in the evening.

9. As regards the possibility of handing over to one authority the whole work and duty of medical assistance to the poor, I am of opinion that it would be better to treat the guardians in the same manner as the late School Boards, and to hand over the whole of their work to the City Council.

Under existing arrangements the sanitary authority is more directly responsible to the ratepayers for its expenditure than the Boards of Guardians.

As regards my own work, I have seen the evidence of this in the fact that better hospital accommodation is frequently provided by the Boards of Guardians than is provided by the sanitary authority. We therefore have the anomaly that the pauper is treated better than the ordinary ratepayer.

10. I think the health of the community suffers under the present system in the following ways:—

(a) Owing to the crowding of out-patients' departments by persons who are not suitable applicants, the patients who are justified in attending such departments do not get as good attention as they would if this hospital abuse were ended, and the consultations less hurried.

(b) Medical men, being human, it is incredible that the treatment meted out to patients who are members of very cheap clubs or go to "sixpenny" doctors should be as good as that given to patients who pay ordinary fees.

(c) Many individuals suffer from not calling in a doctor early enough. This especially applies in the case of children. Reluctance to summon doctor.

For example, a child may have its eyesight ruined at school for the want of proper spectacles, or go deaf or die from brain abscess owing to neglected ear discharge.

11. In Sheffield there is a medical visitor for the schools, and a large proportion of the children who are recommended by him to get medical advice do not obtain such advice, either from the inability or unwillingness of the parents to pay, or inability to get a hospital "recommend," or from their disliking or being unable to get an order for the Poor Law doctor. Medical visitation of schools at Sheffield and inaccessibility of medical relief.

12. When the sanitary authority have provided a sanatorium and hospital accommodation for persons in the first and second stages of consumption, the treatment of consumption will be in a somewhat anomalous state, in that the cases of consumption which are most dangerous to the community, that is, badly housed cases in the third stage, will be provided for by the guardians, as they are at present, and not by the sanitary authority, and this provision will apparently be only available when the patients are destitute. Overlapping between Poor Law and sanitary authorities: to phthisis.

41889. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There are a few points I will ask you upon the statement you have just put in. First of all, you refer to certain medical work which the sanitary authority at Sheffield undertake. Amongst that I see is the free maintenance and vaccination of persons who have been exposed to small-pox infection. Has that been forced upon the borough council by any unwillingness on the part of guardians to undertake vaccination in times of small-pox?—No. It is simply because the cottages where the small-pox contacts are maintained are in the same precincts as one of the fever hospitals, and it is more convenient for the medical superintendent of the hospital to do the vaccination than to call in an outside body. Sheffield sanitary authority and the maintenance and vaccination of persons exposed to smallpox infection.

41890. Therefore it has been where the medical superintendent has known of cases of small-pox that he has undertaken to vaccinate the contacts; is that what has happened practically?—What happens is that all the contacts are removed to these cottages, and then the medical superintendent vaccinates. The cottages are under the same control as one of the fever hospitals.

41891. I think another witness has told us that the cottages are within the precincts of the hospital, and I think you confirm that?—I think it was said that that was the case at Leeds; in Sheffield it is so.

41892. In Paragraph 1 (d) you refer to the advice which is given with regard to neglected and verminous children and for newly born babies, by means of women health visitors; are those officers of the sanitary authority or are they volunteers?—They are officers of the sanitary authority. Sheffield health visitors; their status and functions.

41893. Are they nominally inspectors of nuisances; is that how they are appointed?—They are all appointed inspectors of nuisances. There is one head woman inspector and she has ten working under her.

41894. Then the arrangements with regard to them are probably made under your supervision?—Yes, they all belong to my department.

41895. Is there any statutory provision with regard to the duties of these officers under any local Acts in force in Sheffield?—I think not.

41896. Then it is merely an arrangement with the Corporation subject to your control?—Yes. Latterly the qualifications that have been asked for have been somewhat increased. In the last advertisement it was said that experience in nursing at a children's hospital and sanitary knowledge would be two of the qualifications, and that it would be essential that they should be qualified midwives. The previous advertisement said that those three things would be deemed qualifications, but the last time, in order to prepare for the early notification of births, which we have got included in a Parliamentary Bill, it was deemed advisable to have all these women inspectors qualified midwives. Those who have not a midwifery certificate are allowed to go away to get it, and all the new ones that are appointed must have it.

41897. Is the notification of births included in a Bill you have got this session?—Yes. Proposed notification of births at Sheffield.

41898. Is it similar to the Huddersfield clause of last year?—Yes.

41899. Is any payment to be made under your clause?—I think the payment to be made is 6d.; it was thought that it was not necessary to make it more. The 1s. fees that Huddersfield has agreed to pay would have come to £700 a year and it was thought rather a lot to pay simply for notification. The 6d. would go to the relatives, and would be something that would pay for the trouble of a postcard, or for the tram fare to and fro of a messenger, and that was thought to be all that was necessary.

41900. The object being, I suppose, not to throw an actual expense upon the person giving the notification? I take it that was what the Corporation had in view?—Yes; they did not think it was necessary to make anything more than an acknowledgment.

41902. Do they visit people in their own homes?—Yes, but these nurses can only visit where a doctor attends. That is one of their regulations. Still in certain cases we get their co-operation. They might be cases where they were already in attendance, or cases where a doctor was in attendance and had not thought of suggesting the nurse being called in.

41903. That, of course, would not be a doctor engaged by the corporation?—No.

41904. These nurses would not treat the cases themselves, but they would supply nursing assistance in some cases?—Quite so.

41905. Do the sanitary authority themselves sometimes send these nurses in particular cases to the homes of patients who are being attended by a doctor?—Yes, they notify to them cases which they think are suitable.

41906. What sort of cases would they be; would they be infectious cases?—I think it would be mostly cases where there was a wound to dress or something of that sort, and the people did not understand it properly.

41907. How do the sanitary authority become acquainted with those cases?—In visiting the homes, which they do for a variety of reasons. At present all the births are notified through the district registrars, and that means that we get about 13,000 births notified in the year, and most of the houses where the births occur are visited by the women inspectors. Then in the course of a visit paid for that purpose they make some sort of inspection of the house to see whether the house is kept clean; and they may find children that are neglected, or they may possibly find a child with some kind of wound that requires intelligent dressing, or something like that. Again, many cases reported by the teachers of elementary schools are visited by the women inspectors. These are cases of children who are reported to be neglected, or who are suffering from sore eyes or sore heads. They are visited, as I say, by the women inspectors. That means that a very large number of houses are visited by the women inspectors every year, so that they are likely to come across conditions occasionally which would be benefited by the attendance of a nurse.

attitude of Sheffield
sanitary authority as municipal milk depots,
&c.

41908. I see that the special committee of the sanitary authority have certain matters under consideration at present, amongst other things "The supply of specially prepared milk for the food of infants at below the cost price." Are those last four words "below the cost price," a part of the scheme?—No, but it necessarily follows, I think. No corporation has ever yet established a milk depot that is self-supporting. It was recognised by the Sheffield authorities that if they established a milk depot, it would not be self-supporting, and that was the cause of those words being put in. I can add something to this now. There has recently been a committee sitting on the subject of infantile mortality, and they have come to the conclusion that on the whole they did not consider it was justifiable to have a milk depot at present. I might perhaps read the paragraph in their report that refers to that as it is quite short "The majority of the Committee are not convinced that the advantages to be obtained from infants' milk depots warrant the establishment of such depots in Sheffield; but they are in general agreement that beneficial results will accrue from the supply of dried milk for bottle-fed infants during the season when diarrhoea is prevalent." That is the paragraph in the report of the special committee which has just finished its work in Sheffield.

41909. Therefore probably Sheffield would not propose to have a milk depot?—They do not propose at present to do anything in the matter of the milk depot, but they have some idea of doing something in the nature of the supply of dried milk for bottle-fed infants in the diarrhoea season.

41910. Would that involve some establishment on their own part?—I do not think it would involve any establishment, but it would involve expense. I think the dried milk could be supplied in the same sort of way as disinfectants are supplied at present, from centres. If one centre was not sufficient there might be other centres, such as police stations, and so forth.

41911. (Dr. Downes.) Do you mean that it should be given free?—The report is quite vague on that, and nothing has been arranged.

41912. You give the disinfectants free, I think?—Yes, we do.

Gratuitous distribution of disinfectants by sanitary
authority.

41913. You mentioned disinfectants as an instance of the way in which you might give this dried milk?—What I meant was that the disinfectants are distributed from these police stations.

41914. Not necessarily that you would supply this dried milk free?—No. It was recognised that there might be a loss on it, but I think the general idea was that it should be paid for.

41916. Are those two men specially qualified to do the work?—They have nothing more than the Sanitary Institute qualification. One has been working as a tuberculosis inspector since before I went to Sheffield, so that he has now had a good many years' experience. I think he takes a great interest in the subject. He is able to advise the people in an intelligent sort of way what kind of life they ought to lead.

41917. Then we come to the duties of guardians, which you refer to in Paragraph 6. In (b) you refer to "the maintenance of the children of parents who are not destitute, but who are, in the opinion of the guardians, unfit to look after their children;" do the guardians in Sheffield relieve children whose parents are not destitute in fact?—Yes.

41918. What sort of cases have you got in mind?—The cases of people who are unfit to have children.

41919. Who have been convicted of crime, or something of that kind?—Yes, or of cruelty. Cruelty is a fairly wide term. There are two boards of guardians in the city of Sheffield, the Ecclesall Board of Guardians and the Sheffield Board of Guardians, and both of them have adopted some children under the Act, but not very many. But it is only touching the fringe of the question, as it were. Some of those that have been adopted have been adopted because the parents were not fit to have charge of them.

41920. Would it also be the case that the parents were unable to maintain them?—No. They are sometimes parents who have been prosecuted for cruelty by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. I rather think that you do not get the best co-operation possible between that society and the guardians. If the society get told of a case it is their case as it were, and we do not seem to get such a thing as this—the society undertaking the supervision and the expenses of the prosecution, and the guardians adopting the children. The society cannot adopt the children because they have not got the funds, and the result is that these children are left in the hands of people who are absolutely incapable of providing for them. The children may go into the workhouse for a month or two while the father and the mother are in prison, and when the father and the mother come out of prison, to which they have been sent for the offence of cruelty, the so-called home is re-started, and at the end of a few months the same thing occurs again; and so it goes on. Those children are children that should be adopted; it is the only chance for them. I think really that they must be adopted, but they are not.

overlapping between medical clubs, voluntary hospital and Poor
Law.

41921. Then you point out in paragraph 8 that there is some overlapping of medical clubs, hospitals and the Poor Law medical service; and you give the instance of a patient who had three bottles of medicine from three different authorities, and took from them in turn?—Yes. I think that was more a sort of humorous example. The patient was rather an epicure in medicine.

41922. Of course that was an exceptional case; but practically do you find much difficulty arises from the overlapping?—I do not know that there is much difficulty. It means that the same people have a choice of two or three doctors, according to the source to which they care to apply.

41923. And that there is some economic waste in having a number of people attending to the same sort of business?—Yes. It is quite a common thing for two doctors to go to the same case without knowing it. That commonly happened to me in Birkenhead, where I had charge of the out-visiting department of the hospital. It was quite a common thing for me to go and for the Poor Law doctor to go for a day or two, without either of us knowing that the other was attending the same case. I do not know whose medicine they took or whose advice they took. I think it perhaps happened mostly among the Irish people and because they do not like to hurt your feelings.

transfer the work of the guardians to the sanitary
authority.

41924. You would be in favour of handing over the guardians' work, at all events as regards medical assistance, to the town council?—I think if anything was transferred, it would be better to transfer the whole. I think the ideal to aim at is one local parliament.

Difficulties
as to transferring Poor Law to sanitary
authority.

41925. In Sheffield there are some parishes in the unions, are there not, which are outside the city?—Yes, and there would be some difficulty in that way; but I believe there is not as much difficulty in Sheffield as there would be in other places. However, I am not certain about that.

41926. Of course it would make some alteration in the financial burden?—Yes.

41927. Because the parishes outside now subscribe to the cost of relief in the union?—Yes.

41928. The result would be that the city would have to bear the whole charge?—Yes. At present the sanitary districts are not coterminous with the unions; of course that would require adjustment.

Poor Law
hospitals superior to sanitary

41929. You think that the sanitary authority are more directly responsible to the ratepayers for the expenditure than boards of guardians; had you got only Sheffield in your mind when you wrote that, or were you speaking generally?—I was thinking of Sunderland as well. The hospital belonging to the guardians at Sunderland was more elaborately furnished than the fever hospital built by the sanitary authority.

41930. (Mr. Phelps.) They have a very excellent superintendent, have they not, at the Sunderland workhouse infirmary?—I am not quite sure who is there now. This is the sort of thing I am thinking of. A town council would think twice about having white glazed bricks, but the guardians would not. A town council would get an iron bath enamelled, but the guardians would get a vitreous stoneware bath which would cost three times as much. Those examples will give you the sort of idea I want to convey.

41931. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Which is the larger area at Sunderland—the borough or the union, or are they coterminous?—The union is the larger area.

41932. Would that have something to do with it?—No, I do not think so, because there would be quite a low rateable value for the part outside.

41933. I think as a sort of general principle we may take it that the larger the area the greater the liberality?—I think there is very little difference as regards the rateable values of the union area and of the borough area in Sunderland.

41934. Then you point out in Paragraph 10 certain particulars in which you think the health of the community suffers under the present system. What remedies would you exactly apply to such matters as those you refer to in Paragraphs (a) and (b)? You refer, for instance, to the crowding of the out-patient department of hospitals; have you yourself thought of what should be the remedy for that?—The whole subject is being inquired into at present, I believe. I suppose the hospitals should take steps to inquire into the circumstances of the patients that they relieve.

Crowding
poor from
hospitals and remedies
therefor.

41935. Were you proposing to allocate certain cases to hospitals and certain cases to the local authority, in other words, that there should be some arrangement by which only certain classes of cases should be taken by the voluntary hospitals, and the local authority should look after the others?—No. The idea was more that a number of patients go to the hospitals who could quite well afford to pay a doctor privately, and that if they were kept out of the out-patient department, the out-patient department would be better in every way, it would be less crowded, and the individual patient then would receive more attention.

41936. Your theory would be, then, that it would diminish the number of patients who went to the hospitals, and that these others should pay for themselves?—Yes.

41937. In Paragraph 11 you refer to the medical visitor for the schools. What does he do precisely? Does he merely examine the cases to see whether there are defects in the children which interpose difficulties in the way of instruction?—It is largely that. He is appointed deputy medical officer and medical visitor of the schools, and I am nominally appointed medical officer to the education committee; so that our work is linked, as it were. £100 of his salary is paid by the health committee and £300 by the education committee, so that he is, a servant of both committees, and so am I. Then his duties are practically two. First, he has to lecture to the existing staff of teachers on hygiene, and to lecture to the pupils at the training college for teachers. The second part of his work, which is the main part, is to visit the schools in turns to see the classes at work, to endeavour to pick out the children who seem to require some medical attention, and also to examine the children who are set aside by the teachers. The idea of lectures in hygiene is to get the teachers to be more on the alert for spotting children who are not up to the mark. These children are examined by the medical visitor when he goes round. If they require medical attention a printed form is sent to the parents recommending them to get medical advice. As the result of these printed forms a considerable number go to the hospital. A considerable proportion do not take any notice of the first form; they get a second one, and a certain percentage take notice of the second who do not of the first. At the end, of course, there remain a certain number that have not done anything at all. A very fair proportion have been provided by their parents with spectacles and such like as the result. They do not get the spectacles at the hospital, but they go to the hospital and are examined there. There is no payment made to the hospital for the work, but they are supposed to get a "recommend" to the hospital where they get examined by the ophthalmic surgeon, and glasses are ordered for them. What they get from the hospital is the prescription for the glasses to suit their case; then they have to go to the spectacle-maker and get the glasses. In some cases that is a serious charge. I came across a case the other day which is interesting. It is the case of a family of seven children now, but there were six at the time, and the father and the mother. The father was a carter, I think; he earned 22s. and he gave his wife 20s. She brought up these six children quite satisfactorily; the house was always clean and everything all right. They got one of these notes with respect to the second boy that he required glasses,

Medical
visitation of schools at Sheffield.

and he was sent to the hospital; they found the glasses cost 10s. 6d., but they succeeded in paying for them.

1938. Do they attend to anything except sight; for instance, do they do anything with the children's teeth?—There is no dentist.

1939. Does the medical visitor examine the teeth?—I do not know. There is nothing special, I think, being done with regard to the teeth. The teeth are certainly a difficulty.

1940. It is not so much a question for the local education authority as the sight, because they must be able to see?—The sight and the hearing are the main things from the education point of view; and adenoids also, but of course that comes in with the hearing.

1941. In your last paragraph you refer to what would be likely to happen if the sanitary authority provided a sanatorium and hospital accommodation in consumptive cases; have they decided to do that, or was that still under consideration when you wrote this statement?—They want to do it, and they have been looking at sites, and so on. The last idea was to buy a hydropathic establishment which was more or less on the market. I think that will fall through owing to the objection of some of the neighbouring landowners.

1942. Were they proposing to take only the early cases?—No. What they propose to do is to alter one of the pavilions of the fever hospital which is situated in the town, so as to take cases (as is done at Brighton) for a more or less short period to educate them how to live, how to use pocket spittoons and so on, and also to give the relatives a rest at home. That pavilion will be a reception house where consumptives at almost all stages would be taken. From those would be sifted out the ones that were considered curable and suitable for sanatorium treatment. It was reckoned that most of the advanced cases would really be provided for by the guardians, so that we would have the three things—the guardians' hospital for the advanced cases, the sorting house, as it were, of the sanitary authority, and the sanatorium.

1943. That is not thoroughly settled yet, I gather?—The expense of altering the pavilion has been approved. The thing which has delayed the alterations has been the prevalence of scarlet fever, causing all the hospital accommodation to be wanted up to the present time. I think the work will be proceeded with in the course of a few months; at any rate there is no resolution of the council to cancel it. It has been ordered to be done, and it has simply been waiting for that reason.

1944. (Mrs. Webb.) I gather that the upshot of your evidence is that there is actual suffering, and perhaps an increased death-rate, owing to a lack of systematic medical attendance and of food?—Yes, I think there is undoubtedly some.

1945. Supposing you could have a complete system of medical inspection and medical attendance—we need not now inquire as to who should pay for it—could you appreciably lower the death-rate of Sheffield?—Yes, I do not think there is any doubt of that.

1946. Would you say that infantile mortality could be lowered?—Yes, I think the children frequently die from diarrhoea from not getting medical advice early enough.

1947. Do any children get malformed through the lack of proper medical attendance in confinements?—I should think that they lose their lives more than being malformed.

1948. So that you think there is a definite amount of unnecessary infantile mortality through the lack of medical attendance?—Yes. One of the things that I have come across since the supervision of the midwives has been thrown on the sanitary authority, is the use of drugs by midwives.

1949. That is interesting; I should like to hear about that?—A very large number of midwives use ergot before the child is born. That is looked upon by medical authorities as likely to cause the death of the child. They frequently prescribe whisky and brandy for normal cases, either before or after, and some of them I have found recently have used chloroform. They put the chloroform on a sponge in a bottle; that seems to be the method which has been adopted. Then as regards the babies after they are born, we have found that some of the registered midwives have made a business of selling what is known in Sheffield as "five hap'orths." One of the "hap'orths" is laudanum. It is a mixture to keep the babies quiet, which it occasionally does rather too effectively. The "five hap'orths" are, laudanum, manna, rhubarb, and I forget what the others are, but the dangerous one is laudanum—the tincture of opium.

1950. Supposing we had a complete medical inspection of poor people and medical attendance when the people could not afford to get medical assistance otherwise, do you think that you would thereby decrease the parental responsibility or would you increase it by getting the people to pursue better methods? What do your health visitors do as a matter of fact? Do they increase people's sense of obligation, or do they decrease it?—I certainly cannot see that medical advice is going to lessen parental responsibility. Effect on parental responsibility of system of health visitors.

1951. Supposing you visit every mother and give her advice, and if necessary, medical attendance, do you think thereby you would make her a less deliberate person than she was before?—No, I should not think so.

1952. You do not think you do lessen her sense of obligation?—I do not think the giving of medical advice would be like the giving of money or the giving of food. I do not think one could say that it would lessen the parental responsibility at all. I think it would rather increase it if anything, because there would be no excuse for the children not being kept up to the mark, or not being treated when they were ill, or not being thoroughly looked after.

1953. That would mean more deliberate action on the part of the mother, not less, would it not?—I think that would be the tendency.

1954. Is it possible that by that means we might grow an obligation to be well, or a sense of such obligation?—I have not really thought about that, but I imagine that would come.

1955. Therefore while we should be doing a positive physical good by complete medical inspection and medical attendance, it is by no means certain that we should not be doing a moral good too?—No; I should think it is quite likely.

1956. We are certain we are doing a physical good, because we are reducing the death rate?—Yes

1957. With regard to the medical inspection of school children, I gather you wish that to be under the medical officer of health definitely, do you not?—I am quite satisfied with the arrangement we have in Sheffield. System of medical visitation of Sheffield schools and success thereof.

1958. In which case it is under the medical officer of health, I think?—Only in a half-and-half sort of way, but there is perfectly cordial co-operation. I think the work is so different. I think the medical inspector of the schools must be allowed to do his work in his own way, but I think he wants to cordially co-operate with the medical officer of health.

1959. You are his nominal chief?—Yes, nominally I am his chief.

1960. Do you wish that the cost of patients in the consumptive sanatorium should be recovered from the patients or their relatives?—No, I do not. Question of recovery of cost of patients in phthisis hospitals.

1961. Do you think if it were that that would deter them coming?—I think it would.

1962. So that you would definitely prefer that not to be recovered?—I would prefer that not to be.

1963. What is your experience of the earlier recovery of the cost of treatment in fever hospitals, if you have had any?—At the fever hospital in Sunderland, when I was first appointed, we were supposed to recover the cost when the people could afford to pay. After this had been going on for a little time it was found that none of those who did not pay was prosecuted or put into the county court; so that at the end of a very short time it meant that only the scrupulous people paid, and that the people who were not very scrupulous did not pay, so that it was an unfair tax on the scrupulous people. Therefore I recommended to the health committee that it should be abolished altogether, and they agreed to that. It only brought in a very small sum in the year. Experience of Sunderland as to recovery of cost of patients in fever hospitals.

41964. So that as regards any treatment by the municipality you would suggest that the cost should not be recovered?—As regards the treatment for consumption and the treatment for fevers, at any rate, I would suggest that. In the case of consumption I do not think it is quite fair to "police" consumptives, as it were, without giving them a quid pro quo. We make their lives more or less uncomfortable, I suppose, by having them visited by inspectors, and there may be occasionally the loss of work through the disease being looked upon as infectious and through the publicity of the visit of the inspector. I think they ought to be given something in return, and that I suggest should be free sanatorium treatment.

41965. (Mr. Bentham) You do not recommend that all medical relief which is now given by boards of guardians should be handed over to the health authority, do you?—I do not think it would be well to separate. I think the whole of the work of the guardians might be handed over to the sanitary authorities.

41966. On what grounds—Do you think that it would be better done?—I do not see the necessity for two bodies, and I think there is a certain amount of the work, where it is difficult to define the separate duties. The guardians do not only deal with the destitute now, and the council distribute what is really medical relief, so that there is a certain amount of overlapping at present.

41967. What kind of medical relief does the health authority give?—In the cases of infectious diseases.

41968. Infectious diseases come under rather a different category to an ordinary case of sickness, do they not?—Yes.

41970. In the one case it is in the interest of the community and in the interest of public health that the person is dealt with, and in the other case it is primarily in the interest of the individual himself who is treated?—That was the original idea, but that is not the idea now. Take the case of a scarlet fever hospital. Scarlet fever hospitals have not stopped the spread of scarlet fever. The original idea of scarlet fever hospitals was that they should stop the spread of scarlet fever, but as scarlet fever hospitals are run now, they are a convenience for the ratepayers by providing treatment for people who have scarlet fever.

41971. That would be really an argument in favour of transferring the fever hospital back to the guardians would it not?—If you want to have the guardians. I do not speak in any way against the guardians, but I do not see the object of having two bodies. Then again, the guardians do vaccination, which is obviously work for the sanitary authority. I do not find that the people in a community take much interest in the elections of the guardians as compared with the interest they take in the council elections.

41972. Is it necessary that they should?—It is better that they should.

41973. Why?—If the people in a community are not going to take any interest in electing their representatives, then we ought to do away with local government.

41974. Is it not better that the relief of the poor should play a very unimportant part in the public mind?—There are many important duties which are at present performed by the council, including education, and if the Poor Law duties are added and they are all performed by one body, I do not see how you can say that Poor Law relief will have a predominant interest in the duties of a councillor.

41975. Therefore, it would defeat the object you have in view in making it more important?—I was not suggesting that as my object. My idea is that if you have one local parliament you must necessarily get a better stamp of man in it. I consider that town councils have been improved by the fact that they have had the education work handed over to them.

41976. Do you think the council has improved in personnel?—I think so? I do not know whether the council has been altered very much, but I think individual councillors have been improved by having to deal with education, and having to meet with men interested in education who have been co-opted on the education committee.

41977. You think that has had an educative influence over the councillors?—It has had a good effect, I think.

41978. You said just now that if you had the whole of the medical treatment of the cases in Sheffield under your charge, you could considerably lower the death rate?—No, not under my charge.

41979. Under the health committee—I will put it that way?—No. What I said was that if all cases which require medical assistance could get it directly they require it, there would be a considerable lowering of the death rate. Nothing was said about how they were going to get it.

41980. I thought the question put to you had a direct bearing on the whole of the medical relief being given by the health authority?—No; I do not think so. It may have had a bearing on that, but I think the question rather was that a certain number of people suffer from not getting medical attendance at the time that they require it, and that if you could do away with that by some means—the means was not mentioned—you would get a lowering of the death rate.

41981. People have an aversion to calling in a doctor, I think you said, early enough in many cases, and for that reason they suffer?—I think the aversion is to the expense as far as I know. Some "peculiar" people do not like to have a doctor even when they can pay.

41982. The reason why they do not call in the Poor Law doctor is because of the feeling of resentment they have against Poor Law relief, is it?—I think it is because they have to go to the relieving officer to get an order first.

41983. They do not always go to the free dispensaries for medical relief, I think you say, for some reason or other?—No, I do not think I have said that. We have not got any free dispensaries in Sheffield.

41984. In Paragraph 11 you say, "In Sheffield there is a medical visitor for the schools, and a large proportion of the children who are recommended by him to get medical advice do not obtain such advice, either from the inability or unwillingness of the parents to pay, or inability to get a hospital 'recommend,' or from their disliking or being unable to get an order for the Poor Law doctor." I took that paragraph to refer to both those forms of disinclination?—The unwillingness of parents to pay is one thing, the inability to get a hospital recommendation is another. There is not an unwillingness to get a hospital recommendation, but an inability to get it.

41985. It means that you would make medical relief much freer than it is to-day?—Yes.

41986. You would practically deny it to none, but would give it as a right to those who need medical attention?—Yes.

41987. What effect would that have on the general practitioner?—The effect would be to have a public medical service.

41988. If you had a public medical service, would you have any charge?—No.

41989. If you had no charge, why should anybody pay for a medical practitioner?—They need not, any more than they need pay for sending their children to school at present. The two things would be on the same footing.

41990. You would have it as free as free education?—Yes.

41991. What would become of all the medical practitioners?—They would become part of the public medical service. I do not think they would suffer.

41992. Would there be a limited number, or would you give everyone who was qualified a salary?—But the whole of the teachers in schools are paid. The private teachers are in the same position as the private practitioner would be, surely.

41993. They are matters of very serious importance, when one suggests that the whole of the medical service should be paid, as it were, by the community?—But the whole of the teachers in schools are paid. The private teachers are in the same position as the private practitioner would be, surely.

Proposed
free public
medical

41994. You would make it analogous to free education ther?—Yes. I have my reasons for thinking that. One of the reasons is that at present it is unpopular for people to have children, and when motherhood is becoming unpopular, you have to do something to lessen not the responsibilities of motherhood, but the expense of bringing up children. By the provision of a free medical service, you would get healthier children, and you would also set free, for other purposes, a certain amount of expenditure which would otherwise be spent on doctoring the children.

41995. The doctors would be paid for through the rates; therefore the money would be drawn from the people just the same, and you would free no money?—But you would free the money of a family.

41996. You would ease the family?—It would ease a family where there was a lot of children.

41997. It is not only important that the child should be brought healthily into the world, but that it should be healthily maintained when it has been brought into the world?—Yes.

41998. Would you go so far as to say that children should be maintained also?—No, I would not go so far as to say that.

41999. It would be necessary to their health that they should be properly maintained, would it not?—The same argument applies to free education. Free education has not lessened parental responsibility, and I do not see why free doctoring should.

42000. That is quite sufficient; as long as you put it in the same category, I need not pursue it any further. You have compulsory notification of phthisis in Sheffield. I think?—Yes.

42001. How long have you had it?—For three years and four months, I think—from November 1903.

42002. What is the fee paid for notifying?—Half a crown.

42003. What was expected of this compulsory notification?—At the time when it was applied for, it was intended to have a sanatorium for consumptives. There was correspondence going on with the Local Government Board. The council, I believe, proposed to spend £25,000 in erecting a sanatorium to provide for fifty patients—that is what was shadowed forth—and it was not certain whether they could legally spend the money for that purpose or not. I think by the time the matter was settled a fit of economy came on the council, and they did not go on with the sanatorium, although they had the power to get compulsory notification.

42005. Then the health authority really is not doing all that you would expect a health authority to do in the interests of public health?—No. They would do better with this sanatorium. I am not in the least antagonistic to the guardians, and I think you are quite mistaking me. If you like to say, "Let the guardians deal with the question," I say, "All well and good, but I am in favour of one authority; and if you think it is preferable to call that authority the guardians of the community, well, call them so."

42006. I want to know what is to be gained by one authority, and, so far, I have not been able to find out. Many minds, I do not say particularly yours, say, "Let us have one authority"—which is so easily said—"and these things will be better managed;" but one wants to know exactly in what way they would be better managed, provided there was only one authority. In following up these cases which come under your notice through compulsory notification, the guardians could be of very great assistance to you, could they not?—Yes.

42007. Have they rendered any assistance, or have you asked them to do so?—I think the guardians do their best to persuade people who are badly housed to go into the workhouse hospitals, but then, I think this difficulty comes in the way—that they cannot very well take people unless they are destitute. I believe they manage to get over that difficulty in some cases. Badly housed consumptives in an advanced stage, I believe, are taken into the guardians' hospital.

42008. Where cases of that kind ought to be removed have you made any representations to the guardians?—I have, and I have endeavoured to get them removed.

42009. Would you not have power to interfere in a case where there are eleven persons all together, living and sleeping in one room downstairs, one bedroom and one garret, and a case of consumption (a man) permanently in bed, and children varying from twenty-one down to one year old? Would not that come under your power at the present time of declaring this house a nuisance under the Public Health Act as being dangerous to the health of the inmates of the house?—Do you mean that it might be a case of overcrowding.

42010. Yes?—Of course we could not deal with the house on account of the sick man in it. It would be a question of overcrowding, because we have no powers for the compulsory removal of a consumptive.

42011. What would you do in a case like this, if you found it was overcrowded and dangerous to the health of the other people inside; what is your power?—We have no special power beyond the ordinary power for dealing with overcrowding as a nuisance. It would depend upon the cubic space that each person had. We should endeavour to get the patient to agree to go into the workhouse hospital if he could be taken.

42012. If, in the opinion of the medical officer of health the house is dangerous to the health of the inmates has not the medical officer of health power to do something?—He has power to deal with the nuisance that exists; and the nuisance that exists in the case that you mention would be overcrowding. What he would do in that case would be to serve a notice on the occupier to abate the nuisance caused by the overcrowding, and some of the people would have to leave the house.

42013. If they did not, what is the power of the corporation?—They would take the case into court, and the man who did not diminish the overcrowding would be fined. But overcrowding is a very difficult thing to deal with, because you come across cases where one family out of kindness takes in another who are earning nothing. There are very many cases of overcrowding—and gross overcrowding, too—that are not dealt with for that reason.

42014. (Miss Hull.) It is not a question of whether rent is paid by the people who overcrowd, surely?—What I mean is that a house or three rooms, say, are occupied by one family, and another family, for some reason or other—illness or some other cause—are turned out of their house; then No. 1 family takes in No. 2 family, while No. 2 family are supposed to be on the lookout for a house, and the overcrowding perhaps goes on for a few weeks. That is hardly a case for fining, I think.

42015. It is a question for the sanitary authority to deal with, is it not?—I have been telling you how they deal with it. They serve a notice on the people who are responsible for the overcrowding and tell them that they must stop this overcrowding.

42016. Then you can deal with it?—If nothing is done you take the case into court, and the case is heard by the magistrates. They hear the circumstances, and if the defence is that the one family took in the other family out of charity, what do the magistrates do? They probably dismiss the case on the understanding that the second family are to get a house as soon as ever they can. That is what happens in practice. You think you have powers on paper, but when you come to work it out you find that the use of the powers has to be altered according to the circumstances of the case.

42017. (Mr. Bentham.) You mentioned the fact that the guardians would order glazed bricks and earthenware baths where councillors would probably provide iron baths; are not members of councils sometimes also members of boards of guardians? Take Sheffield, for instance, there is Mr. Wycliffe Wilson, chairman of the Board of Guardians, ex-Lord Mayor of Sheffield and Alderman; what is the difference between him in his capacity as a guardian and in his capacity as a councillor?—I do not know. I understand that the last hospital of the guardians in Sheffield has been greatly criticised by the Local Government Board on account of their alleged extravagance. I have seen the newspaper reports.

Electorate less interested in guardians than in sanitary authority.

42018. That is your ground for making the statement, I suppose?—That is not my only ground. My ground is what I have seen. I make the statement on what I have seen.

42019. In Sheffield?—In Sheffield and in Sunderland. You ask me to explain the reason for this. Well, I do not consider that the ratepayers take the same interest in the doings of the guardian that they do in the doings of the councillor. I think one representative body is about as much as they can take a proper interest in. My experience teaches me that as long as the Local Government Board will pass a thing, the guardians will do it; but in the case of the councillors the councillors consider the ratepayers more.

42020. Do you think they are more amenable to public opinion than the guardians are?—I think the councillors are amenable to public opinion, and that the guardians are amenable to the Local Government Board. That is how I would put the difference.

42021. (Dr. Downes.) They are both directly elected by the ratepayers, are they not?—That is so. The school boards were in the same position as the guardians. There was not the same interest taken in the school board elections as in council elections, unless there was religious bitterness introduced; and then it was not an interest in education, it was simply religious strife.

42022. The interest taken would be an affair of the electorate, would it not?—Yes.

42023. It does not affect the question of the responsibility of the electors?—It may not affect the thing in principle, but if you have got two representative bodies to elect, I think it is difficult to get up a proper interest in both.

42024. I asked the question because you say the sanitary authority are more directly responsible, and I did not quite know what way you meant it?—That is what I meant.

Effect of free medical relief on parental responsibility.

42025. (Miss Hill.) You were asked by Mrs. Webb whether you thought free medical inspection and free medical attendance would or would not diminish the sense of responsibility of parents?—I do not think it would.

42026. At present, surely, some parents at any rate have a sense of responsibility for providing medical attendance for their families, have they not?—Yes.

42027. If you take that distinct responsibility off them, you do not increase their sense of responsibility, do you—but you diminish it?—You diminish their possible expenditure. I would not say they are quite the same thing. If they get free medical attendance they might even be run into extra expense by the recommendations of their medical adviser.

42028. Then it would not save them the expense which I think was one of your points?—It would in some cases. I do not know how it would work in all.

42029. At any rate you would distinctly relieve them of one of the ordinary responsibilities of life?—I think there would be no harm in doing that.

42030. But you distinctly say that it would do that—it would not leave their responsibilities the same?—I would not in any way do away with the responsibility of the parents to bring up their children properly, but I am quite favourable to giving them free doctoring in addition to free education.

42031. I have never heard it argued that free education did not diminish the responsibilities of parents, and I thought it markedly did. It may be a good thing or it may be a bad thing, but it seems to me that it must diminish the responsibility of parents?—I do not exactly know what you mean by the word "responsibility" in that case.

42032. One of the things which it is their duty to provide?—If that is what you mean by responsibility that is not what I mean by responsibility. I mean by responsibility the sense of responsibility for bringing up decent children, and I do not mean merely a list of articles and details which parents have to pay for.

42033. You do not call medical attendance a detail, do you?—That is one of them.

42034. (Dr. Downes.) You say that in Sheffield you supply diphtheria anti-toxin gratis to persons who are unable to pay for it; I suppose you mean to medical men?—Yes.

42035. We must not infer that it is given to any applicant?—No.

42036. On the question which you refer to in Paragraph 10 (a) you said the subject was at present under inquiry; is that a local inquiry in Sheffield?—No, it is not a local inquiry. I think it is being made all over the country through the British Medical Association.

42037. If there were a free medical service, under what organisation would you consider it should be?—If there were a free medical service I imagine that it would be more or less like the Poor Law medical service is at present, only it would be more numerous.

42038. Would it be a national service or a local service?—I really have not thought about that.

42039. How would you deal with the choice of doctor; would you leave that to the patient or would there be a set of fixed men to whom one would have to go?—I really have not thought out the details.

42040. Now as to institutional treatment, would you bring that into this service? Would the cases that have to be treated in hospital be free also?—I think what would happen would be that you would have the rank and file of the medical profession, as it were, officers of the public medical service, and then you would have, perhaps, a grade of men who were specialising, who would be attached to the staff of the various hospitals. I think it would ultimately come about that the hospitals would become either State or municipal institutions if you started this free medical service. I think it would ultimately lead to the hospitals being owned by the State, as in Germany.

42041. Would you have free maintenance in the hospitals?—I am not specially advocating free hospitals, and I am not suggesting them.

42042. I only want to know how far you would carry your free medical service?—Practically I am in favour of giving medical attendance to anybody without pauperisation, that is, free medical service; but I have not gone into the details of it.

42043. What I want to know is what you would do in the case of a man who is in hospital, who would not only require medical care, but who would also require to be maintained whilst in hospital?—Do you mean a workhouse hospital?

42044. I take it that he would be in the State hospital, or whatever hospital there was; how would you deal with him and yet not pauperise him?—The workhouse hospitals, if they were under the one local body, would be in exactly the same position as the fever hospitals, would they not?

42045. Would you maintain him free in the hospital?—The hospitals would all belong to the local authority. You would have the workhouse hospital in the one case and the fever hospital in the other, all belonging to the same authority. I do not see that there is any difference.

42046. The difference perhaps is this, that the man who is being treated in the fever hospital is there for the good of the community and for a comparatively short period, while the man who is being treated in a workhouse hospital is being treated for his own sake and may be there for a long time?—That was the idea originally, but I do not admit that that is the case at the present moment. In the Sheffield fever hospitals we have about 400 beds, 350 being occupied by scarlet fever patients, not for the good of the community but for the good of the families that they come from. We have no evidence that scarlet fever hospitals do anything to stop scarlet fever spreading, but the community has got used to sending its scarlet fever cases into hospital, and consequently scarlet fever hospitals have become recognised social institutions.

Rev. WALTER HENRY VERITY, called; and Examined.

42048. (Chairman.) You have prepared a statement which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence in chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Experience.

1. For nearly six years curate in the two parishes in Huddersfield which contain the larger part of the slums of the town.

For six years a member of the Huddersfield School Board, thus being brought into direct contact with the parents and children in all parts of the borough.

Since 1899 a member of the Committee of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Committee at H.M. prison at Wakefield.

Hon. Secretary of the Huddersfield Police Court Mission since its foundation in 1900, and of the Huddersfield Labour Home since its commencement in 1901.

In the work connected with the above I have come into contact with large numbers of those classes which are candidates for charity and Poor Law relief, and also into touch with the various agencies responsible for administration.

I have set out below the result of my experience, under the following headings, and as far as possible in the order, as it seems to me, of their importance:—

physical unfitness a cause of pauerism, egging, and time.

2. My experience leads me to the conclusion that one of the chief difficulties to be met lies in the physical unfitness of a large proportion of candidates for charity or relief to compete with their stronger fellows. They are soon exhausted even when put to such light labour as cutting firewood, and they are quite incapable of earning a wage upon which they can live. They cannot keep a job for long, and often take to begging, and finally become chargeable to the rates in the workhouse or the taxpayers in the ranks of habitual criminals.

Huddersfield
Labour Home
and its effect on inmates.

3. In the Huddersfield Labour Home we have tried to deal with such men, but one feels that if their physique does not respond to regular lives and generous feeding, they have a very gloomy outlook before them.

inmates of Labour Home able to earn their keep.

4. In many instances we have found that their physical condition has greatly improved during their stay in the home, and they have left to enter upon work which has been found for them with every prospect of being able to support themselves.

5. But during the stay of such men in the home they have never been able to earn their keep for several weeks.

Thus they are a burden upon the subscribers and prevent the home from being anything like self-supporting. For example, during the year ending 30th September, 1906, the wage bill amounted to £437, and the proceeds of labour, deducting the cost of material, amounted to £330. This takes no account of rent, tools, etc.

Rev. Walter
Henry Verity

6. Again, men prefer to come to the labour home under our work-ticket scheme to earn ticket for tea and a night's lodging, rather than go to the tramp ward at the work-house, chiefly because their task is finished in the evening and they are free to go the first thing in the morning from the lodging-house, but also partly because the work is lighter than that given at the union. Some of the men are certainly not physically fit to do any hard work.

Reasons for preference of tramps for labour home.

7. I append a copy of the last Annual Report of the Labour Home and beg to draw attention to pages 6, 7, and 8.*

No Prospects.

8. One of the great drawbacks of the present system of Poor Law relief is that after it is over the applicant is in no better position than he was. He has merely "got the time over." Suppose he is a decent honest chap who has fallen on evil times—and there are such, although the Poor Law treats them exactly as it does the idlest vagabonds in the land. Such an one goes to the tramp ward. He does his task, and gets away, probably too late to go far in search of work that day. He is exactly where he was, less a little amount of his self-respect which he has lost by associating with worse men.

Unhelpful-ness of the Poor Law.

9. It is to the advantage of the community to help such cases in a way which will put them in the way of helping themselves. Hence it is necessary to differentiate between the habitual tramp and the worker temporarily down on his luck. Here it seems to me that there needs to be co-operation between charitable institutions and the Poor Law authorities. If possible, the really deserving case should be placed in the hands of the former, and the latter should take charge of the undeserving, with the avowed object of getting the most possible return out of him.

Need of cooperation between charity and
Poor Law.

10. In this connection I should like to say a word about the discharged prisoner, more especially the one who has only served a short sentence. He is discharged from prison early in the morning and is seen off by the train with a railway ticket to Huddersfield. He has determined whilst in prison to go straight in future. He really means it. But on his arrival at Huddersfield what is his position? No work to go to: no money for his night's lodging: no real friend to whom he can turn. There are plenty of his old pals to stand him a drink, and in despair he goes to the public-house, with the result that all his

Rev. Walter Henry Verity good resolutions are quickly dissipated, and it is not long before he is again in the hands of the police and a charge upon the public. The very same applies in the case of women.

25 Feb. 1907.

11. In the labour home we constantly find a day or two's work for such cases, and tide them over until they can find regular employment.

Quick Relief.

Need for facilities for prompt emergency relief.

12. There are cases constantly arising where something immediate requires to be done. There is no time to make elaborate inquiries. For example, a mother and children starving. The husband has deserted them. The woman requires time to turn round and make the best plan she can for the future. Meanwhile, what about food and rent? The Poor Law offers the House; but this means breaking up the home, which is the very worst thing that can happen for the family and the community. The Charity Organisation can sometimes give a little help, but has too many inquiries to make, which take time. There needs to be some official who can give quick relief in case of necessity. But here comes in the great difficulty of determining whether the case is a genuine one or a fraud. The difficulty can be got over generally in the case of householders, but great discrimination is required where the applicants live in lodging-houses.

Indiscriminate Charity.

The lucrativeness of begging.

13. It is true on the evidence of those who have tried it that begging is a lucrative profession. A man who came to the labour home and started to work, put on his coat in a very few minutes and marched off with the remark, "I can't afford to work, I've a wife and family to keep," confessed to being able easily to earn 8s. a day begging, putting it in this way, "It is a poor day's work when I cannot go through a hundred streets and get a penny in each street." I have known industrious men, after they have once begun to beg, give up all thoughts of ever working again.

The distribution of labour home tickets by householders in Huddersfield.

14. We sell to those householders who will buy them, books of tickets with the request that instead of giving relief at the door to those who come begging, they will present them with a ticket. If the ticket is brought to the labour home the applicant is given work for which the wage is sixpence. The real beggar now generally refuses the ticket. If such a system as this could become general, and work had to be done to secure relief, the lot of the beggar would not be an easy one. At present there is every inducement to people to become beggars.

Insufficient Relief.

Inadequate out-relief.

15. The out-relief granted by the guardians is in most cases quite insufficient. For example, there is a poor woman in this parish who receives 4s. per week; after paying rent, coal, light, she has exactly 3d. to feed and clothe herself upon. Another case I know receives 17s. 6d. per week. She is a widow with five very young children. She is unable without neglecting her children to go out to work. How is she to bring up those children and feed and clothe them as she should upon that amount? The result is that neighbours in their pity help, and by their methods teach, the children begging habits.

Recommendations.

Labour colonies. Need of more adequate relief, &c.

16. (a) Compulsory labour in labour colonies for the idle. This would rid the workhouses of the able-bodied.

(b) Adequate relief for the deserving and the aged, given, if possible, by the guardians through charitable agencies.

The provision of fairly-paid work instead of money relief wherever possible.

(c) Special provision for the assistance of the physically unfit.

Subscriptions by guardians to charities. (d) Generous subsidization of charitable institutions by the guardians, especially those agencies whose work is of a reforming character, such as the providing of work.

Need of propaganda as to evils of indiscriminate charity. (e) The education of the community upon the dangerous results of indiscriminate giving, and the encouragement of the charitable to give through suitable agencies.

Relief in kind. (f) In cases where it seems wise, for outdoor relief to be given in kind and not in money, and the severe punishment of publicans who give drink in exchange for articles so given.

(g) Some arrangements for the avoiding of overlapping Remedies of charitable institutions and their work, and for their overlapping co-operation. For instance, we have an arrangement between whereby we provide work for men sent to the labour charities. home by the Charity Organisation whereby we receive a penny per hour towards the wage. We have also accepted men from the relieving officers and have made application to the guardians for an annual subscription to our funds.

(h) The appointment in each locality of some person whose business it shall be to supply charitable organisations and the guardians with reliable information about the various applicants for charity or relief. Appointment of local investigation officer.

42049. (Chairman.) The matter on which the Commission wish specially to examine you is in connection with your work as Honorary Secretary of the Huddersfield Police Court Mission and of the Huddersfield Labour Home. The latter has been in existence some six years, I understand?—Yes. Origin and scope of Huddersfield Labour Home.

42050. Has it attained any dimensions? What sort of number do you take in? Perhaps you will expand your statement a little by describing the objects of the home?—If I may say a word about the history that will explain it. The Police Court Mission was started in 1901; and we found in connection with that Police Court Mission work it was very difficult when men came out of prison to tide them over the two or three days until they could find work to go to; so the Mayor kindly allowed us the use of a cellar under the Town Hall, and we started those men, who came out from the prison, chopping wood, using simply a hand-saw and choppers. We had, perhaps, twenty-five men in the first six months; it was just a temporary arrangement, but we found it was so useful that we decided to increase it, so we took premises not far away from the Town Hall for a Labour Home where we could take them in to reside, and we also set up a large workshop where we could employ more than the number we took in to reside in the home. In 1902 we had twenty-six different men in the home, we provided work in the shed for 140 in addition to that. In 1903 we had forty-seven men in the home, and 313 were provided with work in the shed; in 1904 we had sixty-four men in the home and 416 provided with work; and last year we had sixty-eight men in the home and 530 provided with work. We have outgrown our premises, and just about Christmas time we opened a subscription list in order to enable us to build new ones, and in the new ones we shall have accommodation for twenty-eight men regularly in the home and the labour shed will accommodate twice the number we have at present. We are increasing it to twice the size.

42051. Are the numbers you gave the total numbers for the whole year, or are they the average?—They go from 1st October in one year to the 30th September in the next year, they are for the twelve months.

42052. There were sixty-eight men, I think you said, in the home during that period; would many of those have been there for a considerable time?—Not longer than three months.

42053. How many can you accommodate?—We can accommodate really twelve at a time, but we have accommodated more than that by overcrowding.

42054. How many can you accommodate working in the shed?—We can accommodate at present about twenty-two working in the shed, but we have constantly hired premises in which to set other men working. We paid during this last year, up to the 30th September, 1906, £437 in wages.

42055. Are discharged prisoners included amongst these numbers?—They are.

42056. Do the other people who have not been in prison, who are simply poor, object to being associated with the discharged prisoners?—We have not found it at all. As a rule they treat them in a very friendly way and are quite willing to help them, if they can help them.

42057. You are struck by the inferior physique of the majority of them?—Yes; out of sixty-eight men we received into the home last year fifty-three were undoubtedly men of inferior physique, and forty of those fifty-three distinctly improved in the first five weeks. Of the 530 we put down 293 as men of inferior physique, inferior physique of labour home.

inferior physique of 42058. By inferior physique you mean not merely that they were run down, but that they were muscularly applicants to so, and were scarcely up to a full day's work?—They about home. were not up to a full day's work.

42059. They never would be?—I should not like to say that. Certain of the men in the home, while they did not even earn their keep for the first three or four weeks, gradually improved; and when they went away towards the end of the three months many of them were distinctly able to hold their own.

After-careers of inmates of 42060. Do you know what happened to them after wards?—Nineteen of the sixty-eight went to situations that we had already found for them; thirteen found work for themselves; two emigrated; five left without giving any reason; five were sent back to their friends; three were transferred to other homes of a more permanent character; and seven were dismissed.

42061. Assuming that those who had got situations are continuing in them, you have tried to set the greater proportion of those sixty-eight men upon their legs again?—Yes.

42062. Have you any record of what happened to the people who were working in the shed?—I am afraid we have no record entering very much into detail, but I might say that a great number of them used the work shed temporarily until they could find work for themselves.

42063. And lived on what they were paid?—They lived on what they were paid; many of them were householders in the town; of course we can follow those up, but those who are not householders it is rather more difficult to follow up.

Class of persons applying 42064. As to the class of people dealt with, had they been in receipt of poor relief?—Very, very few. Some were sent to us by relieving officers instead of receiving relief; but I should say that a very small proportion of them had been in receipt of relief.

42065. Unless they had come to you or some similar home, would they, in your judgment, have drifted on to the Poor Law?—Yes.

he unhelp- 42066. One of your criticisms of the Poor Law is that fulness of the it does not, after it has helped a man, improve his condition; he is in no better condition than he was before?—That is, I think, largely because the relief he gets is not sufficient to make a man of him. It is so small that he is not really getting sufficient food to build him up; he has probably got run down before he goes there.

he lowest 42067. I rather thought that you meant that the Poor Law could not be supposed to be able to assist a man until he got absolutely to the end of his resources; but you were thinking of the amount of relief given, and you think it is inadequate?—I do not think a man will go to the Poor Law until he has got down to the very bottom; certainly a Yorkshire man will not.

eed of 42068. Is the sort of work you have been doing work charitable which you would wish the Poor Law to undertake, or do labour homes you think it should be undertaken by charity?—I think most decidedly it should be undertaken by charity. I think the Poor Law might contribute to it in a way, but I think it wants to be kept entirely distinct from the Poor Law administration.

42069. And that these agencies or organisations who do this work should be in co-operation with the Poor Law?—Yes; I think there is room for co-operation, decidedly, as there is with the charity organisation societies.

emergency 42070. Have you any suggestion to make on the point relief distributed of quick relief; inquiry comes before relief is given. What do you suggest?—I think this is one of the great difficulties. We find that we are enabled in some instances to give the relief that is needed chiefly through the police. The police send cases; and if they send them down to us, on the responsibility of the police sending we do our best to deal with them. Of course, that is only a matter of temporary relief.

42071. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I ask how the police become aware of these cases?—I think the police are generally friends of all people, and people go to the police rather than go to the guardians.

42072. How do they actually come across them? Has anyone connected with the case committed a crime?—No, not at all necessarily. The policeman, I think, is undoubtedly the friend of the distressed. Rev. Walter Henry Verity 25 Feb. 1907

42073. (Chairman.) You dwell upon the evils of indiscriminate charity, and you quote the case of a man who said: "I cannot afford to work, I have a wife and family to keep"?—Yes. The lucrativeness of mendicancy.

42074. He confessed to being able to earn 8s. a day begging. In that case the money that he thus got probably was obtained not from well-to-do people, but in very small sums from operatives?—Yes.

42075. And their natural kindness of heart tends to enable persons who are plausible to live in this way?—Quite so; and then, they usually do it in the day-time, when only the women are at home, and it is very easy by means of a threat, even if the woman does not prove to be tender-hearted.

42076. How would you deal with that? Would you make it illegal for a man to beg?—I believe it is illegal now. Need of enforcing mendicancy laws.

42077. You would enforce the law more rigorously?—I think I should like to see a man who is habitually begging put somewhere where he cannot beg and where he must learn to work.

42078. I suppose the idea that you have is that if institutions such as you suggest were properly organised in connection with the Poor Law, the need for begging, if I may use that expression, would be very, very much diminished?—Certainly, it would not pay.

42079. You want to create a condition of things, to put it in another way, so that begging should not pay?—Yes; I think the people that really are in need usually can find someone to help them; but the people who are really in need are very often the last people to ask for it, and the charity goes to these wasters who are living upon it.

42080. Coming to the relief given by the Poor Law, you are of opinion that the out-relief is very often insufficient?—Yes, I think so, most decidedly. Inadequate out-relief, especially to widows with children.

42081. You think that in the case of a widow the result is detrimental because she has to go out to work instead of looking after her children?—The result is certainly detrimental to the children; she has to neglect them; and I do not think it is a good thing for them to be helped in the way they are helped generally by their neighbours, it rather teaches them to rely upon the assistance of their neighbours.

42082. Your suggestion is that it teaches the children to beg early in life?—Yes.

42083. Taking your recommendations, the first is one that we have had from a good many witnesses, your second is that adequate relief should be given to the deserving and aged, if possible, by the guardians through charitable agencies. Would you just explain that? Do you mean that the guardians should give money, and charitable agencies should see how it is applied, or do you mean that the guardians should refer that class of case to charitable agencies?—I think so. I think that there are a great many deserving people who look upon it as a stigma to receive anything from the guardians; and that if the guardians could subsidise the charitable agencies, and the relief could be distributed through them, it might remove that feeling. Proposal for guardians to subsidise charities for relieving the aged.

42084. "Subsidise" is a vague word; do you mean to say that they should give a certain sum to charities to do certain work, or that they should pay week by week whatever sum is allotted to these individuals and give it to the charity, because there is a difference between the two?—I would rather that, knowing the work the charity was doing, they made a subscription to the funds of it.

42085. A general subscription?—Yes, certainly; so far as our own work is concerned I think that would be preferable.

42086. If that were adopted, it might have a detrimental effect upon the amount of money the charity would be able to collect from the outside public?—If the subscription was limited, I do not think it would, would it? We find no difficulty in getting subscriptions for what a Yorkshire business man calls practical charity. Effect on charitable contributions of subsidy from rates.

Rev. Walter Henry Verity 42087. And "practical charity" means?—Giving relief in such a way that they benefit from it.

25 Feb. 1907. 42088. It does not mean the collection of a sum for a special case?—No, although we do not find any difficulty in that. In the two cases I mentioned just now as having been emigrated, all the money required was found in a very few minutes, in one case from the bench of magistrates who were sitting dealing with the case.

Refusal of guardians to subscribe to labour home. 42089. Do you get any public money now for your homes?—No, none at all. We have applied to the guardians, because we have taken a good many men on the recommendation of the relieving officers, but last week we got a communication to say that the Local Government Board would not give permission for them to make a subscription.

Exchange by publicans of drink for relief in kind and remedies therefor. 42090. You make one other suggestion: that there should be severe punishment to publicans who give drink in exchange for articles of food which have been given by Poor Law guardians for the purposes of relief?—Yes.

42091. Is that getting at all common?—I think it is common and not only common with things given by guardians but common with things given by the Charity Organisation Society, for instance. I have known cases where bedding has been given by the Charity Organisation Society, and within a very short time it has found its way into the public houses. I think, too, my experience shows that people who have gone on a Monday to receive their outdoor relief have, a large number of them, gone straight away to the nearest public house with it.

42092. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you any idea of the actual number at all?—The number going in that way?

42093? Yes?—I have certainly seen as many as a dozen going in a very short time on a Monday morning, or Monday dinner time.

42094. I wondered whether you had ever communicated to the guardians the names of those people?—No, I have never communicated with the guardians.

42095. (Chairman.) Have you been long in Huddersfield?—Since 1894.

Increased difficulty of employment for middle-aged. 42096. Should you say that if a man over forty years of age is discharged from employment now it is more difficult for him to get employment than it was before?—I think so decidedly, and if he is over fifty it is a very difficult thing for him.

42097. Have you noticed a change in that respect of recent years?—Yes, I think so. I think it gets harder probably every year; more active men are required as machinery is speeded up.

42098. Some people say that the Workmen's Compensation Act has had an effect in that direction?—I have heard them say so, but I have no experience as to whether that is true.

42099. You could not say?—I could not say whether that is so.

42100. Your impression, I understand, is strongly that the age has become reduced?—It has. I know several really active men who are out of employment, just doing gardening jobs, and things like that.

Nature of work provided in Huddersfield Labour Home, and effect of such work on labour market. 42101. (Mr. Booth.) In Paragraph 5 you speak of the wage bill and the labour; what labour have the men done in the home?—Chiefly wood-chopping, bill distributing and light work of that kind.

42102. Wood chopping and bill distributing?—Yes, and sandwich-board work.

42103. As to the bill distributing, you get the work from other people who have bills to distribute?—Yes.

42104. And the sandwichmen work you get from advertising contractors, I suppose, who come to you for the men?—Yes. At the bye-election we had in Huddersfield lately we had the bill distributing and the advertising for both sides—not for the Labour Party, but for the other two candidates.

42105. Those who want work of that kind done find it convenient to come to you because you have the control of a number of men?—Yes.

42106. You do not create any industry?—No, I should not like to say we create it, but I do not know how they would get it done otherwise.

42107. In that sense you do create it?—Yes.

42108. You give an opportunity to the advertiser or to the political agent?—Yes.

42109. With regard to the wood-chopping, do you sell the chopped wood in competition with other choppers of wood?—Yes, in competition with private firms, and in competition with the workhouse.

42110. Are there any complaints of under cutting?—No, we are very careful to avoid that; we are very careful not to sell below the price of the private firms' work.

42111. Are the sizes of the bundles the same?—Yes, we think we give better measure; we supply a quarter of a inch longer sticks than those supplied by the workhouse.

42112. You do not sell it cheaper, but give better value?—A little more for the money.

42113. In addition to that there are those who come to you thinking that to buy your wood is an assistance to your charity?—Yes, I think perhaps they come to us so originally, but I do not think they would remain unless they were satisfied. We have lost several customers; we had a batch of wet wood and we lost several customers and they have never come back to us.

42114. You may get his custom by sentiment but retain him by giving good measure?—That is so.

42115. Are there not complaints from other firms that you take away business which they might have?—No, the complaints have never come to us.

42116. The Poor Law guardians are also doing the same thing?—The Poor Law guardians are doing the same work. We are competing, with hand labour, against firms who are using machinery, which makes it rather difficult for us. They have chopping machines but ours is all hand labour.

42117. But, on the other hand, your wages perhaps are lower?—No, we pay practically the standard rate of wages, if not a little more, even to the casual men. We had a very severe test; we put on six fairly likely men to see how much they could get through in an hour, and we averaged their work, and we give them now what we call three measures of wood, and the wage for that is 4½d., and an ordinary man can get through that in about three-quarters of an hour.

42118. Those who are not in your home draw the money and find their lodgings and their living themselves?—No. We give very little money. A casual man who comes in, in two and a half hours can earn his tea and his night's lodging, but we give him his tea there on the premises and book his lodging for him. We do not give him the actual cash.

42119. If you have not room for him, or do not wish to take him in your own home, you would book and pay for his lodging?—Yes, we booked 700 beds during last year at the Corporation model lodging-house, and other lodging-houses. We pay the lodging-house keepers.

42120. You pay the same price as other people pay?—Yes, exactly.

42121. With regard to other meals, do you provide them or give tickets?—We provide the meals.

42122. Then you have a dining room?—Yes, we provide the meals.

42123. So instead of getting wages, they get their value in sleeping accommodation and in food?—Yes.

42124. And the surplus in wages?—Yes. The men who have homes in the town of course are dealt with differently; the men who have homes or who are householders receive the money.

42125. Can they earn enough to keep a wife and family?—No, not with us. We only use it as a temporary means. We try to give them 2s. 6d. a day, which leaves them plenty of time to look for work on their own account, and it just keeps them going.

42126. Does the 2s. 6d. a day and short time, apply only to the residents in Huddersfield?—Yes. Of course the men who are in the home itself, the men we have in the home, will earn, when they have got used to the work from 14s. to 16s. a week, and they pay us 9s. a week for Home.

42127. In your recommendations, where you recommend the provision of fairly paid work instead of money relief wherever possible, is it work of this kind which you think might be provided by the guardians, or anything different?—I think any work that they can provide. I do not limit it to this kind of work.

42128. You regard your own work as fairly paid?—Yes. It was very much enquired into by representatives of trade unions at the beginning, but there have never been any complaints made that we were not paying good wages. It has been very much before the public, and very much criticised, but that criticism has never been made against it.

42129. Do most of the men earn enough to pay their own way; do they earn this 14s. or whatever it is?—They do, by the end of the fourth or fifth week, they can earn from 14s. to 16s. At first they earn very little, I have known men not earn 1s. in a whole week.

Class of persons resorting to the labour home.

42130. Would the men who come to your home and come to your work shed be a better class than those whom the guardians would have to deal with?—No, I should say they would be worse class, a great many of them have been in prison; they have all got right down to the very bottom. They are perfectly destitute as a rule when they come to us.

42131. Perhaps I should not have used the word "worse," incapable of earning their living; do you think the guardians could find work, which, after being fairly paid, should also be profitable or remunerative to the guardians?—I do not know, it would be rather difficult for them. We have one man in at present who is a watch and clockmaker by trade, I do not know whether the guardians could put him to work at his own job.

Finance of Huddersfield Labour Home.

42132. Does the 9s. a week that you charge, pay your expenses?—Yes, that pays our expenses so far as the board and lodging is concerned.

42133. Does that pay the rent?—No, it does not pay the rent. This last year we received £291 for board from the men; and the household expenses, that is not counting rates, or rents, or lighting, or heating, but the grocery, butcher and so on, the food expenses, cost £229. If you add coal, rates and so on, of course it does not pay.

42134. The 9s. really is all expended in food, it seems a large sum. I think you said that out of the 14s., 9s. was kept for board and lodging?—Yes.

42135. You did say that the board was put in, but the lodgings were not put in your account; rates and coal, and all those things, you say were not covered?—No.

42136. Therefore I cannot see that lodging was paid for?—The receipts for board amounted to £291, and what we call the house expenses amounted to £228; then in addition to that of course you have the rent and so on, and the difference between those two will not cover the rent and the rates.

42137. So it is not self-supporting?—No.

Distribution of labour home tickets by householders.

42138. With regard to the tickets which are given to those who come begging, which are mentioned in Paragraph 14, are not those tickets saleable?—You mean one man sell them to another?

42139. Yes, or for drink?—Of course they might do that, it is quite possible they might, the man's name is written on the ticket, but when the man presents it we have no proof that he is the man.

42140. In effect they are refused?—In effect they are refused by those who are unwilling to work. I should say judging from the sale of books of tickets, and the number of tickets presented, only about one in twenty will be presented.

42141. That is to say, they take them and do not use them?—Yes.

Huddersfield health visitors and their reception by the poor.

42142. (Mrs. Webb.) Have you any experience of the system of health visiting established by Mr. Broadbent in Huddersfield?—Yes, my sister is one of his visitors.

42143. What do you think of it?—It is all right in some districts of the town, but in those districts where it is most needed it is most looked down upon.

429—IV.

42144. In what way?—The visitors are well received in rather the better class working class districts, but in the poorer districts it is a little bit resented; but so much depends upon the visitor.

Rev. Walter Henry Verity
25 Feb. 1907.

42145. They are all voluntary visitors, are they not?—There are two lady doctors who are superintendents of it.

42146. Are their visits resented?—No, I do not think they are when the people understand who they are, and what they have come for, but they were distinctly resented at first.

Huddersfield health visitors and their reception by the poor.

42147. But now they are not?—Not so much now.

42148. Is there any tendency to make use of them now, do you know?—There is a tendency to ask for their advice.

42149. They are becoming more popular?—Yes.

42150. On the whole you think it is a good system?—On the whole a very good system, but I think a very good deal depends upon the lady visitor.

Need of training for health visitors.

42151. Do you think the lady visitors ought to be trained?—It would be better I should think if they were.

42152. At present they are quite untrained?—They are quite untrained at present, although many of them have been for years district visitors, and accustomed to visiting amongst the people.

42153. With regard to finding out cases of destitution that you suggested just now are not found out, do you not think this system of health visiting might be a useful adjunct?—It would have to be very much extended; they only visit cases where there are new-born babies.

Results of health visitors in Huddersfield

42154. So I understand?—And then keep in touch with those families.

42155. It is not systematic over the whole place?—No.

42156. On the whole do you think it has increased the desire of the mothers to look after their children?—I think so decidedly. In my parish of Longwood, which was the ward in which the scheme originated, while the mothers at first jeered at it, and said they did not want bribing to take care of their children, they are very proud now of the fact that they possess the card, and the children have done very well.

Effect of health visitors on parental responsibility and on infant death rate.

42157. Do you think it has increased the desire of the mothers to look after them?—Yes, and they are proud of the children.

42158. It has increased their feeling of responsibility towards the children?—Yes, I think it has been a very good thing.

42159. It has lowered the death-rate in that particular district very considerably?—It has. Out of 116 children, 106 are now living, and some of them are getting on for two years old.

42160. So that this system of health inspection, besides lowering the death-rate considerably, has actually increased the feeling of responsibility amongst the parents?—Decidedly, I think.

42161. You do not think the provision of the medical women has decreased the responsibilities of the parent, do you?—No, I do not think it has decreased it. I do not think the parents always take the advice, in fact I know they do not.

42162. In so far as they do, it has increased the feeling of responsibility?—Yes, I think they are very anxious to do all that they can, and they are quite willing to receive the lady visitors and the lady doctors, although being Yorkshire women many of them say, "Well, they have not had children of their own, and I have had so many."

42163. On the whole they are getting to like them?—Yes, I think so, they look for their coming.

42164. (Mr. Bentham.) In Paragraph B you refer to one great drawback to the present system of Poor Law relief, and that is that the applicant is in no better position afterwards. Had you in your mind there only outdoor relief?—No, I had in my mind both outdoor and indoor relief.

The unhelpfulness of the Poor Law.

Rev. Walter Henry Verity 42165. Physically many people are improved when they have been inside the workhouse or the workhouse hospital, for a period, are they not?—I do not really know. I would not like to say they are very much improved.

The unhelpfulness of the Poor Law. 42166. Sick people who are capable of improvement are physically better when they leave the workhouse hospital than when they enter it, are they not?—I am afraid in our district the sick people all go to the general infirmary. The workhouse hospital has chiefly chronic cases and old people.

42167. There is a separate workhouse hospital apart from the infirm and chronic workhouse, is there not, with separate wards for phthisis patients; there is really a separate building for phthisis patients is there not?—I should not like to say, although I rather think there is.

42168. Then you have not much knowledge of what the Poor Law is doing in this respect?—Not so far as hospital accommodation is concerned.

42169. You do not know the accommodation in the workhouse hospital, the number of admissions, or anything of that sort?—No.

42170. Then you really meant this to apply to all, both indoor and out. You say: "Suppose he is a decent honest chap who has fallen on evil times, who applies, the Poor Law treats him exactly like the idlest vagabond." You would prefer that they should hand those cases over to a charitable agency, and subsidise the agency dealing with those decent cases?—Yes, that is my idea, and that is why we have offered to take up the relieving officers' cases that they think are suitable.

42171. In writing this paragraph you had not in mind any change in the Poor Law which would enable pre-erential treatment being given to decent people, but, rather, they should be handed over to a charitable agency to be dealt with?—Yes, I think charitable agencies can inspire more hope in them, than the Poor Law can.

42172. Then even the Poor Law can be made to?—As I understand the Poor Law at present.

42173. In Paragraph 15 you refer to the case of a widow who is in receipt of 17s. 6d. a week, and she has five children, that means six persons in all?—Yes.

Inadequate out-relief to widows.

42174. You think this amount is too small to maintain the family on?—Yes, I think so.

42175. What do you think would be an adequate amount?—To enable her to stay at home and keep the home right and look after these children I think she ought to have at least 21s. a week. In our district, of course, rents are very high.

42176. What would be the wages of an unskilled labourer in your district?—A man?

42177. Yes?—I think they would vary from 18s. to perhaps 23s.

42178. It would not be considered a large family with four young children, so there would be a man and woman and four children, to be maintained on the 18s. to 23s. per week?—Yes, but there are very few families now with four children. The size of the families is distinctly smaller than it was. This is an exception, I should say.

42179. Would you give an amount of relief which would be larger than what a family of the same size is expected in the district to subsist on?—I would give relief that the family could subsist on.

42180. Irrespective of what the ordinary independent labourer who has to maintain a family might be receiving?—Yes. I think a great many of the ordinary labourers are doing their best certainly to maintain their families on a totally inadequate amount.

42181. You think they are underpaid?—Yes, decidedly; chiefly because rents are very high.

Proposal for guardians to subscribe to labour homes.

42182. In Paragraph 16, under (d), you refer to subsidisation of charitable institutions. Have you thought out any scheme of closer co-operation between the Boards of Guardians and charitable societies?—Not any very detailed scheme. The Charity Organisation sends to us at the Labour Home any men they think we can help and they pay us a penny an hour towards their wages, and we thought if the guardians could do something in that line, base a subscription on the number of men and the number of hours given, that it certainly would be a help, and would keep a good many men from finally becoming chargeable to the guardians.

Proposal for guardians to subscribe to labour homes.

42183. If the guardians are to refer cases to you would you be satisfied with the penny per hour for those persons referred by the guardians to you to be dealt with and would you provide all the remainder?—We should like more, but I do not think we would refuse them.

42184. You think that might even cost less to the guardians than the present system of relief?—I should think so.

42185. Do you work in close connection with the guardians?—No; at the Labour Home we are in constant touch with them. Our Labour Home and the guardians' offices are next door but one to each other; there is constant communication passing between us; but, beyond that, I have no experience really of the work of the guardians.

Co-operation between guardians and labour homes.

42186. Would you relieve a case that had been refused out-door relief by the guardians?—We should relieve it if, after our own enquiries, we thought we could put the man on his feet again, or enable him to make a fresh start.

Attitude of labour home to case refused out-relief.

42187. That is, if there was any hope of the man you would relieve him?—Yes.

42188. Supposing it is a case which the guardians think is not a suitable case for out-door relief? I understand they have outdoor labour test work?—Yes.

42189. If they feel that the man ought to go into the workhouse, and will not put him on out-door test work, would you relieve him?—We might if he was a single man and we thought he was anything like a hopeful case, we would take him into the Home and try him, but we should not keep him if he did not prove satisfactory.

42190. Have you any experience as to whether any of these men who have been at your Labour Home return to you?—Yes; we have had one or two cases who have come back after a certain period.

Recurrent applicants to labour home.

42191. Only a few cases?—Only a few. We have men come back to report themselves and show themselves.

42192. On the whole you think that it really starts them in life again?—Yes, a very large proportion of them.

Success of labour home.

42193. Should you relieve them if they came in successive years?—As a general rule I should say we should not if they come back to us, but in several cases we have taken them back again. We have to judge the cases individually.

Attitude of labour home to recurrent applicants.

42194. (Mr. Phelps.) I see in Paragraph 8 you say that "the Poor Law does not distinguish sufficiently between people." Do you not find in the case of vagrants it is almost impossible to distinguish?—I should think it is. It is very difficult to distinguish; but the vagrant goes on from one workhouse to another and he practically lives upon begging, and makes his home in the workhouses as he passes along. My idea is that that sort of thing wants stopping and he wants to be put somewhere where he is bound to work for his living.

The honest searcher for work and need for discriminating in his favour.

42195. What kind of man had you in your mind, what is called the honest vagrant?—I do not think I should call an honest man a vagrant.

42196. The honest wayfarer?—A man on tramp really looking for work.

42197. Have you much experience of that class?—Yes, we have a great many who come to the Labour Home.

42198. Have you investigated their cases thoroughly?—Yes, so far as it is possible to investigate them; we very often have given them work there and provided them with lodgings until we could make enquiries and see whether the place to which they said they were going for work was open for them, and so on. We have helped them in that way.

42199. Do you require a guarantee that work has been offered them at the place they are going to?—Yes, we do. The police find it out by telephoning for us.

42200. Do you find many of those cases in the course of a year?—Not a very large number, but certainly a proportion.

Need for urther ilities for
elief.

42201. With regard to quick relief, I see you say there is a difficulty both in the case of the Poor Law and of organised charity. Is it not the case with you that the relieving officer relieves always in emergency cases at once?—I do not think that all the cases get to the relieving officers; I think the relieving officer is the very last resource, and as a rule it is neighbours who go to the relieving officer rather than the people themselves.

42202. He would relieve at once?—Yes, I presume he would.

42203. He would not wait for a meeting of the Board?—No; he would probably give an order for groceries, or something like that, to go on with.

42204. It would be in kind?—Yes.

42205. You do not think that is enough in the way of quick relief?—I do not think so, quite.

42206. What had you in your mind to be substitute for that?—I had in my mind rather an extension of the Charity Organisation work. The Charity Organisation work, so far as my experience of it goes, is that it makes too many enquiries and takes too long before the relief actually gets to the person.

42207. It does not give interim relief pending enquiries?—No, not sufficiently; but I think the great difficulty is to get at these cases quickly enough. There are many cases that come under my notice where the people have been suffering for several days before the case has come to the notice either of the guardians or of the Charity Organisation Society, because the people did not want to go to them.

42208. Do you not think otherwise the provision of relief without enquiry would lead to an immense deal of improvidence?—Yes; there lies the difficulty; as I say here, in the case of householders the difficulty is not so great, but in the case of any but householders it is a very difficult question.

42209. You are thinking of the people in lodging-houses?—Yes. That is why I think that what is required is work which is paid for. If you can immediately give a man work to do it is sufficient test to shew that he is really anxious to earn something.

42210. At the end of Paragraph 15, the case Mr. Bentham asked you some questions about, you say: "The result is that neighbours in their pity help, and by their methods teach the children begging habits." Do I understand you to think that help of that kind is mischievous?—No, but I think that where it is continuous it is. If I might illustrate it from this family that I mentioned in my statement, in that case I know that the neighbours have been very good, and if they have had anything left over from dinner, and that sort of thing they have sent it to this family; and that the children feeling hungry, have gone in to the neighbours and got into the way of asking for it.

42211. How would you propose to remedy that? Neighbourly feeling is a thing to encourage, rather, but how do you propose to stop the bad results of it?—By increasing the relief, by making it unnecessary to start it.

42212. You do not think the habitual recourse to the relieving officer, and coming into constant contact with the Poor Law has the same demoralising effect?—I do not think it has a good effect.

42213. I do not quite see where the difference would come in, how one would be better than the other?—If the relief is sufficient to enable the family to be well fed and well clothed there would not be the necessity for the neighbours constantly coming to their assistance.

42214. On the other hand, they are always relying on the neighbours; that is, the ratepayers here?—They do not look upon the ratepayers as their neighbours.

Proposed appointment of local investigation officer for charity and
elief.

42215. The last recommendation you make is: "The appointment in each locality of some person whose business it shall be to supply charitable organisations and the guardians with reliable information." Do you think that more is wanted in that way than actually exists. The relieving officer acts in that capacity for the guardians, does he not?—Yes. I think he does act much as the agent for the Charity Organisation Society acts, but I am not satisfied with the source of their information, they go to small shopkeepers living in the neighbourhood, and it is very easy if there is some money owing to the small shop keepers not to get an exactly, I will not say truthful account, but at any rate not an unprejudiced account. Rev. Walter Henry Verity

25 Feb. 1907.

42216. You do not think as a rule they are well informed?—No, I do not think they are informed of the whole truth. I do not think either the small shop keepers or the relieving officers or the agent for the Charity Organisation Society believe in repentance, and if a man has once made a slip it is always raked up against him.

42217. That is rather a different point; the question is whether the evidence that he had made the slip was sufficient or not?—I do not think it ought to matter whether he has made a slip or not, if he is in need at that moment.

42218. This question is about whether the evidence is trustworthy, that is your point in that recommendation?—Yes.

42219. You think if you had an official person making those inquiries for everybody, he would have more chance of getting trustworthy information?—I think he could get more trustworthy information than is got at present. I can give you an instance in which I tried to get information, it was made some years back when I was curate in the centre of Huddersfield, I sent some names to the Charity Organisation Society, and in each case I got back an unfavourable report. From the experience I had of those people, I should say that two out of three cases were not as black as the report made them out to be; they were hard-working people, and although they might have made slips in days gone by, I think they were past.

42220. That I can quite understand, but surely it is an impossible position for a person to be sent out to obtain personal information with regard to character in a large town—I think you can get at it if you make inquiries in a sufficiently large sphere.

42221. I am not so much criticising the question whether you can get trustworthy information but really whether it would be an advisable thing to have a person who did nothing except learn about the doings of poor people?—Would it not be possible for instance through the police to get a great deal of information, more reliable information, they know more about the habits of people than people imagine they do.

42222. (Dr. Downes.) Have you considered the desirability of transferring the control of the vagrant wards to the police?—No, I cannot say I have ever given any very great consideration to it. I have heard it discussed both by the police and by members of the board of guardians, and so far as I am able to form an opinion upon it, I should say it would be a good thing.

42223. That is speaking from your own experience of the vagrant class?—From my own experience of the vagrant class, and the men we come into contact with.

42224. And also your knowledge of the police?—Yes, I may say we are very fortunate in Huddersfield in having a very good chief constable, and a very kind-hearted police force. I do not know that it would be the same everywhere, but certainly with us I think it would be a good thing.

42225. (Mr. Lock.) I suppose you would say that the Poor Law must have its own method of inquiry, would you not?—Certainly.

42226. You could not splice the police inquiry to the Poor Law inquiry. You could not let half the information come from the police, or would you propose that part came from the relieving officers, in the matter of inquiry, and would you use the police for making the normal inquiries?—You mean instead of the present inquiries?

42227. Yes, or as well as?—I should combine the two. I think what we want is as much information as possible.

42228. Therefore you would make it, so to speak, obligatory on the Poor Law to ask the police?—Yes.

42229. And obligatory on the Poor Law to ask the Charity Organisation Society?—I do not know whether I would go as far as that.

Proposal for guardians to co-operate with police in inquiry into cases.

Rev. Walter Henry Verity 42230. Supposing a case came up which is known to the Charity Organisation Society, how would you know it was known, unless inquiry was made there?—There wants to be co-operation between the two certainly.

42231. If that is so, what applies to those two or three sources would apply to other sources of relief in the place?—Yes.

Need of one local board for organisation of relief and charity. 42232. Does it not come to this, that there should be some kind of general board or organisation or agency for the whole of the town?—Yes.

42233. Associated together?—Quite so, not only for inquiries but for other purposes as well.

42234. I was thinking of inquiries first, as raising the issue?—Quite so.

42235. Until you have got that, can you in any way stop the overlapping that is going on?—No, until you have got that I do not think you can.

Question of desirability of subscription by guardians to charity. 42236. You have made some suggestions here as to boards of guardians subsidising charities. Do you not think that is open to some objection from the point of view of bringing which I may call the Poor Law element into voluntary work?—I think if it were done by means of a subscription it would not necessarily bring that Poor Law element in. I should not want that Poor Law element to be brought into voluntary work; that is why I should prefer a subscription to a payment.

42237. Would you propose that other charities, for instance hospitals and so on, should be on the same basis?—I think so. The Huddersfield Board of Guardians give £100 a year to the Huddersfield Infirmary as a subscription.

42238. Do you think that is a good method?—I think so.

42239. Do they use the hospital much themselves?—They do use the hospital, they send cases to it. At the last meeting of the board of guardians the Local Government Board enquired for a report as to the number of cases that they had sent and so on, I suppose to justify the subscription.

42240. Would not the hospital have been able to get on without the subscription?—Well, hospitals usually like as much as they can get. I think it would get on, certainly, but I think if the guardians have a case that is suitable, as they have subscribed, it gives them a kind of claim to have that case dealt with.

42241. You look upon it purely as a means for the better performance of the guardians' work?—Yes.

After-careers of inmates of labour home. 42242. With regard to the sixty-eight cases in your home as to which you made enquiries as to what happened to them, how long was it after they had left you that you made your enquiries?—Those are what you might call the leaving enquiries; we do not know for instance, and I do not know to-day, how many of those men have kept the employment to which they went.

42243. When did you make that enquiry or investigation, of which you gave the figures?—That was made as the men left the home.

42244. When?—Some of course, the earliest, would leave in October, 1905.

42245. Practically it is only the note made when the man leaves you?—That is the note made as the man leaves.

42246. You cannot say whether the man sticks to his place when he gets it?—No, I know several individual cases where they have, and some where they have not.

42247. With regard to the making of these enquiries, do you think that the staff is large enough to do the work quickly, we will say first of all of the Charity Organisation Society. Is that the difficulty?—I think that would be one of the difficulties.

42248. To what extent are volunteers associated with the Charity Organisation Society in its work, do you know?—As far as I know in Huddersfield, beyond the members of the committee there is very little assistance given voluntarily.

42249. Therefore, practically what takes place in many other cases, where there are many people working in the office and making enquiries, does not take place there?—No, there is only one man in the office, and he is the agent who makes all the enquiries, collects all the subscriptions, and so on.

42250. Do you know at all how long the Poor Law takes to make those enquiries?—I could not say.

42251. You have never been a guardian?—No.

42252. As to the police, have you used them in any other ways in the town, I mean to say in the distress committee, making the enquiries there?—I believe the chief constable was a member of the distress committee.

42253. You do not know whether the enquiries of the distress committee were made by the police?—No, the distress committee employed a special agent, but it was not successful, it never came to anything, so many men came, so many enquiries were made, and so many men were decided on as being satisfactory and deserving of help, and we offered help, but a very small number took the work up.

42254. How was it those men refused the work there, would they come to you for work?—No; we could have told them exactly the history of those men, if they had come to us.

42255. They were cases already known to you?—Yes, our police court missionary was a member of that committee, and was able to tell them a good deal of the history and circumstances of most of the local men who came before the committee.

42256. If there were a distress committee in the future, practically the closer it was attached to existing organisations the better?—Yes.

42257. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In those cases in which you said that the paupers after receiving their relief in kind sold it to the publicans, what was it, bread?—Yes.

42258. Anything else?—I could hardly specify, because I do not quite know what they do receive from the guardians.

42259. Did it include clothing?—I do not know whether they supply clothing, but certainly blankets were things I had special notice of, that found their way there.

Mr. GEORGE ABBOTT, called; and Examined.

Mr. George Abbott. 42260. (Chairman.) I understand that you have for a good many years been secretary of the Sheffield and Hallamshire District Branch of the Ancient Order of Foresters Friendly Society?—Yes, thirty-eight years.

42261. How many courts are there in the branch?—Thirty-three.

42262. You have prepared for us, I believe, a Statement which we can accept as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Provision of Medical Assistance by Friendly Societies.

1. The provision of medical assistance by friendly societies is accomplished in Sheffield:—

(a) By making the members, yearly subscriptions sufficiently large to allow a sum of money (usually about 3s. yearly) being paid by the friendly society to a local medical practitioner for attendance upon the individual member during the year.

(b) Or where the medical benefit is an optional one, by allowing members to pay a similar amount to his friendly society for this particular benefit if he desires.

2. There are two methods by which the friendly society undertakes to secure the medical benefit for the member.

(a) By contracting with a medical practitioner already pursuing a private practice to attend upon the members subscribing to the medical benefit fund upon payment of an agreed sum per member yearly, generally about 3s. per member.

Methods of medical provision of medical assistance through friendly societies in Sheffield.

Contract with private practitioner

Speaking generally, this method provides medical aid only for the male member and does not include any provision for attendance upon the wife or children of the member. Under this method the medical man generally expects to be called upon to render medical aid to the wife and family, upon the terms of ordinary medical practice.

(b) By a number of friendly societies combining together and so forming a "medical association." In this method the committee of the medical association engages duly qualified medical men to attend solely upon the members of the association without any private practice whatever.

3. The association provides the necessary premises, purchases the drugs and ingredients direct, and pays to the medical officer a fixed yearly sum as salary, the association being answerable for all costs of the organization, and the medical men having their full salary for purely personal and domestic use.

4. Under this system a member of the friendly society may by the payment of a small additional subscription have the attendance of the medical officer upon his wife and family. The advantages of the medical association are many. Amongst those which accrue to the member may be mentioned the fact that he is able to have the assistance of the medical officer for himself, wife, or children at the earliest needed opportunity, without fear of getting into debt.

5. The cost of the medical attendance to the member by co-operation and organisation being reduced to the minimum allows the member a larger margin for the provision of other domestic items.

6. Then the knowledge that he is paying the full cost of the medical attendance, and is not beholding to the overpayments of other people on the one hand, or the begging of favours from subscribers to so called public hospitals on the other hand, is calculated to improve the character of the individual, and to increase his feeling of self-reliance.

7. The advantages to the medical officer include the provision of a certain income paid with regularity, and his exemption from the worry of bad debts and the demands of the drug merchant.

8. Some thirty years ago a medical association was formed in Sheffield. For many years it had a successful career in the centre of the city. Various reasons operated to cause its winding up.

9. Recently another medical association has been formed upon a wider basis. This association has now three branch surgeries in operation, and it is hoped by increasing membership to open several others in due course.

10. I am distinctly in favour of these medical associations as being calculated by the encouragement of thrift and forethought to improve the character of the people, and thereby the character of the nation.

11. Free medical attendance by so-called public hospitals or through the medium of State provision is, in my opinion, calculated to weaken character and render the people less self-reliant.

Growth and Progress of Friendly Societies in Sheffield.

12. During the past ten years doubtless the membership of friendly societies has on the whole increased. Not, however, in the same ratio as formerly.

13. There are probably various reasons to account for this, amongst which I venture to suggest the growth of the opinion that the functions of the State should be so enlarged as to meet all the requirements of the individual.

14. Friendly societies are intended to encourage individuals by thrift and forethought to provide against times of distress, occasioned by the inability of the individual to pursue the practice which supplies his daily wants. The advocacy of "State Socialism," a condition under which the individual would be provided for against want in any form, has, in my opinion, done much to weaken the desire of individuals to provide by present day sacrifice for future wants. Hence the popularity amongst certain classes of the "Slate" or "Sharing-out" club.

15. The main departures in Sheffield from the original type of friendly society providing benefits during sickness, and at death, has been :—

(1) The provision of a lump sum of money— in lieu of weekly allowances—as accident compensation, and

(2) The provision of weekly allowances in old age as distinct from sickness allowances.

16. The first named "Accident Compensation Grants" intended to provide a sum of money to the member incapacitated from following his usual occupation through an accident or total blindness, first inaugurated by the Order of Druids, has been followed by most other friendly societies of the affiliated type operating in Sheffield. These grants range from £40 to £100, according to the society of which the individual is a member. In the Sheffield and Hallamshire district of the Ancient Order of Foresters, of which I am the district secretary, the accident compensation grant is £75.

During the last ten years this particular society has considered fifteen claims, and has made twelve grants.

17. Another modern development of friendly societies in Sheffield has been that of enabling members to purchase their own houses, by the payment of monthly sums, very little, if any, in excess of the usual charges for rent, the friendly society advancing the necessary purchase money, and having a mortgage security therefor over the house.

18. Another development has been made by the Sheffield and Hallamshire district of the Ancient Order of Foresters by way of endowment assurance policies. The endowment maturing at sixty years of age, or payable on earlier death.

19. This same society has also adopted a savings bank department, whereby members may make deposits and obtain interest thereon at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. yearly.

Old Age Pension Fund.

20. The leading men in the Sheffield and Hallamshire Friendly District of the Ancient Order of Foresters, noting the pressure upon the sickness fund at different ages, and the increasing number of claimants in what was considered "old age," determined in the year 1893 upon the establishment of an "Old Age Pension Fund."

21. The provisions of this fund was to apply to future entrants only, who were to subscribe a distinct and definite sum yearly for the provision of "Old Age Pensions."

22. For obvious reasons the contribution to this "Old Age Pension Fund" was included in the total sum charged the new member fortnightly.

23. The contribution is based upon a 4 per cent. interest assumption and is certified by an actuary, approved by the Lords of the Treasury. The pension payable is 5s. weekly upon reaching sixty-five years of age. Members under this scheme are assured for sickness allowances up to sixty-five years of age and a sum of money payable at death. Upon arriving at sixty-five years of age contributions cease and the "Old Age Pension," the minimum sum of which is 5s. weekly, commences and continues throughout life.

24. This new scheme of "Old Age Allowances" was not accepted unanimously, but by a majority of delegates, and was, and still continues, an optional benefit, under the district constitution.

25. The district is now composed of thirty-three courts. Five of these have been opened during the last thirteen years, and all members admitted thereto are required to contribute for the old age pension.

26. In addition there are eleven previously established branches which have adopted the scheme and which require all entrants to subscribe for "Old Age Pensions."

27. The success of this "new departure" during the past ten years is well illustrated in the following figures.

28. The total membership of the district on January 1st, 1897, was 3,546. Of these there were 200 who were subscribing for old age pensions, leaving a net 3,346, who were subscribing for sick and funeral benefits only.

25 Feb. 1907. 30. On January 1st, 1897, the number of members subscribing for sick and pension allowances was 200. On December 31st, 1906, the number of members so subscribing for sick and pension allowances was 680, an increase during the ten years of 480 members.

Friendly society old age pension scheme for women. 31. One of these branches is confined to women, all of whom are assured for sickness allowances up to sixty-five years of age, and after that age an "Old Age Pension" of 5s. per week throughout life. In this branch there are now fifty-two members, all of whom are assured for sickness allowances up to sixty-five years of age, and an old age pension allowance of 5s. weekly afterwards throughout life.

Out-Door Relief (Friendly Societies) Act.

Operation of Out-Door Relief (Friendly Societies) Act. 32. This Act intended to obtain for those unfortunate members of friendly societies, whose long continued illness had compelled them to seek Poor Law relief, some recognition of the statement that

33. "Thrift is a virtue which wins reward" has probably been the means of helping the wives and children of the long suffering members whose income from the friendly society has been reduced to not more than 5s. per week. I am not acquainted with any particular case of this description. The members of friendly societies and their families are, so far as I have had experience, very much averse to "Poor Law relief."

34. So far as I am personally aware, the "out-door relief" Act has been of more service to aged members than to middle aged members.

35. I have known three cases where aged members of friendly societies whose income was less than 5s. weekly applied under the Act.

Two of these were relieved. One was first refused, but after some time was relieved.

36. The Act does not make it compulsory for the guardians of the poor to grant relief to a friendly society member whose income is not more than 5s. weekly, but where relief is granted then this sum is not to be taken into account.

Friendly society medical attendance by contract with private practitioner and results thereof.

42263. (Chairman.) In Paragraphs 1 and 2, you describe the two methods by which medical assistance can be obtained by members of friendly societies. The first (a) is by contracting with a medical practitioner, by which a member subscribing to the medical benefit fund upon payment of a sum agreed (generally about 3s. per member) obtains the service of a local medical practitioner; and secondly (b) by friendly societies forming themselves into a medical association, and by this method duly qualified men are engaged to attend solely upon the members. Which is the more common practice (a) or (b)?—(a).

42264. That is, so many people subscribe weekly and a medical man undertakes to attend to certain families; is that it?—Generally only to the man, the head of the house.

42265. The medical practitioner attends to certain men whose payment he receives; is that so?—Yes, that is so.

42266. And he attends to that man for that payment irrespective of the number of visits he may have to pay?—Yes.

42267. Is that the general system in Sheffield?—Yes, it is.

42268. Has that system worked pretty well? Has the medical attendance been adequate, do you think?—No, I do not think it has.

42269. In what sense has it not worked well? Are the doctors underpaid?—The doctors say they are underpaid.

42270. And the patients whom they attend are not altogether satisfied?—That is so.

42271. Has that dissatisfaction increased or diminished of recent years?—I believe it has increased.

42272. Do you think the system in itself is a good system?—I think it is better than relief at the public hospitals, but I do not think it is as good as (b).

42273. Under (b), medical men are paid a certain sum, and they give their whole time?—That is so.

42274. Under that system, is more satisfaction expressed by the patients than under the other?—Yes. Medical attendance by association of friendly societies employing whole-time medical officer and results thereof.

42275. Is it because the medical man is of higher standing under the (b) system, or is it because he gives more time?—It arises from the fact that he has no counter patients, that is, no private patients which cause him to pay more attention to the higher fee than to the lower one.

42276. What sort of pay does a doctor get who undertakes that work?—I believe that the three medical men who are now engaged in Sheffield under system (b) are paid £300 each per year, with a house free, the drugs being bought by the association.

42277. Is there any difficulty in getting the doctor to undertake this work at that pay?—There is not now.

42278. (Dr. Downes.) Has there been a difficulty in getting doctors?—Yes, in years gone by. This is the second medical association in Sheffield, and during the twenty-one years of the operation of the first association there were difficulties in getting medical men, because the local medical men would not associate with them. Attitude of medical profession towards friendly societies.

42279. On what ground?—On the ground that it was unprofessional and that it was cutting out an established practitioner.

42280. Has that opposition died out?—I believe it exists to a much smaller extent to-day, though the same opposition has been threatened during the last year.

42281. From what quarter has it been threatened?—From the medical men.

42282. Has that died out also, or is it still in operation?—I think it still lingers.

42283. (Chairman.) Through this medical man, I assume that members of these associations would be able to get indoor treatment at the hospitals if he gives them a letter?—I do not think the association itself provides letters, or, as we term them in Sheffield, "recommendations" for the hospitals. Operations of medical association of friendly societies.

42284. If the medical man wrote a letter in the case of any one of his patients who was seriously ill, would not the hospital take that patient in?—I have no knowledge of that.

42285. I gather that in Sheffield it is the practice of certain large firms to make their employees pay a certain sum towards medical attendance?—Yes, 1d. per week. Medical clubs for employees.

42286. Does that affect your friendly societies at all?—No, I think not. effect on friendly societies.

42287. Are there men belonging to the friendly societies who pay this 1d. a week besides?—Yes. It is a matter of compulsion.

42288. Assuming that a man who belonged to a friendly society had to undergo an operation, what would happen; how would he meet that expense?—If it was a serious operation no doubt he would be ordered to the hospital. There are some operations which are performed at the member's own house, where the accommodation will permit of it; but a serious case would be ordered into the hospital. Provision for operations of friendly societies.

42289. The house surgeon would take him in, I suppose?—Yes.

42290. In any case, do members of the friendly societies, if there is a serious case, ever go into the wards of the Poor Law hospitals?—I have no knowledge of that, but I think not.

42291. In your experience would you say that a very considerable proportion of the wage-earning class dislike of medical applying for medical relief which is in any way connected with the Poor Law?—Yes. Deterrence of medical relief.

42292. Would you say that that was a deterrent to their getting the relief which they sometimes want?—I think the charges in the friendly societies are so moderate that there is no necessity for a man to seek medical relief at the hands of the Poor Law. Cheapness of friendly society medical benefit obviates need to resort to Poor Law.

42293. How low down do your members go as regards wages?—We have no wage limit whatever.

42294. As a matter of practice how far down do they go?—There are men in the friendly societies who earn less than £1 per week. Wages of members of Sheffield friendly societies.

Medical attendance by association of friendly societies employing whole-time medical officer and results thereof.

42295. That, I suppose, is low in Sheffield, is it not?—Yes, I should think it is.

42296. Are there many unskilled labouring men there?—Yes, there are many unskilled labourers.

Prevalence of Socialism prejudicial to friendly societies. 42297. Friendly societies have not increased of recent years as they did in the past, have they?—That is so.

42298. I think you attribute that amongst other causes to the advocacy of State socialism; apparently you think that has had some effect?—That is my firm conviction.

Popularity of slate clubs. 42299. The slate or sharing-out clubs have got somewhat increased popularity, as they divide always at the end of the year, I suppose?—Yes.

42300. The idea of having to provide for the future being removed, these societies which divide their profits, or their supposed profits, periodically have become more popular?—Yes.

Friendly society compensation grants for accidents and their operation. 42301. There have been certain changes or departures which have taken place in Sheffield, I gather, and you now provide for a lump sum in lieu of the weekly allowances as accident compensation?—Yes.

42302. Is that more popular than the weekly sum?—The lump sum only takes effect when the member has so far recovered from his accident as to be able to work. He takes the weekly sum so long as he is unable to work. But when the medical attendant says, "This man is now able to resume some occupation," then comes the application for the grant.

42303. Do you mean the lump sum by that?—Yes.

42304. How does it work? A man meets, say, with an accident; he has a weekly allowance, I will assume, for four weeks; he recovers at the end of the four weeks; would he then get a lump sum of money?—No. He would have to wait until a particular fixed meeting came round, when the question would be considered, and the grant made or refused as the case might be.

42305. What is the idea of giving the lump sum; is it to help him to get work?—It is to help him to get a living instead of being a permanent incubus on the society.

42306. The accident compensation would otherwise be a permanent weekly charge; is that it?—Yes. Some men, although they have recovered from their accident, would be unable to work at their own trade; and so the accident grant is made to enable such men to set up in some other way and to maintain themselves.

42307. Assuming that there was no lump sum, is the accident compensation grant given for a long period, say for years?—The practice is to pay a given sum, called full pay, weekly for a given number of weeks; then afterwards a reduced pay for a number of weeks, then again a still further reduced pay. Though these further reduced pays are supposed to be only in cases of sickness and disease, there are cases where they have been paid to members suffering from an accident.

42308. Do those reduced weekly payments cease after a certain period?—No; in many cases they run throughout life.

42309. Is this lump sum, then, in place of the so-to-say possible life allowance?—No. The man has received his full-pay allowance and the doctor says, "I can treat this case no further;" and then the man makes an application for the grant. If he obtains it he sets up usually in some small business way for himself. After he has had this grant if he falls sick from any disease or complaint whatever, he makes a claim upon the sickness fund again, and has the sickness pay, although he has had the accident grant.

42310. (Mr. Booth.) But he would have to maintain his contributions, would he not?—Yes.

42311. (Chairman.) Has that put a heavier charge upon the funds?—There is no doubt about that at all.

42312. Have the contributions been increased in consequence?—Only in an indirect manner. To meet the accident compensation grants a direct levy is made upon the members of the society for the sum. The ordinary subscriptions of the members have not been increased to meet those grants.

42313. The idea, I suppose, is that the lump sum would enable the man to set up in some other branch of work than that in which he was before?—Yes, that is the object. Mr. George Abbott. 25 Feb. 1907.

42314. Then a second departure that you have made in Sheffield is the provision of weekly allowances in old age as distinct from sickness allowances; are there many of these old age allowances being actually paid now?—No, there are not many in Sheffield. Some of the local societies have paid them for a number of years; but in what we call the Orders, that is in the affiliated societies, it is a new movement and has not yet come into operation, except in one particular instance. Friendly society old age allowances, and subscriptions therefor.

42315. Unless the man began very early in life the contribution would be a very heavy one weekly, I suppose?—Yes, he would have to pay more for his pension.

42316. I suppose that is one reason why it has not yet come into operation, because the older men cannot afford the subscription?—I do not think that is the reason. I think the reason is the lack of advocacy by the leaders.

42317. I suppose these weekly allowances begin about sixty-five, do they not?—Yes, at sixty-five.

42318. Take a man of forty, what sort of weekly payment would he have to make to get a weekly allowance in old age?—The system is to charge a subscription for sickness benefit up to sixty-five, and a subscription in addition to that for pension benefit and a subscription for funeral benefit. Speaking entirely from memory, for I have no book of the rules with me to refer to, to secure 10s. per week in sickness for twenty-six weeks, with proportionate reductions after that time up to sixty-five, and then commencing with a pension and no subscription whatever to be paid after sixty-five, a man at thirty-nine years of age, I believe, would have to pay 2s. 1d. per fortnight.

42319. Would the sick allowance cease at sixty-five? Yes, and so would his subscriptions.

42320. What sort of allowance would that subscription give him—5s.?—Yes. We have cases where men have insured for 10s. per week in pension.

42321. Actuarially does that contribution cover the cost of the pension as far as you know?—We have it certified by an actuary approved by the Lords of the Treasury, and he says it is ample at 4 per cent.

42322. Then I see by Paragraph 16 that you have accident compensation grants?—Yes, those are what we have been recently talking about.

42323. You have developed another branch of work, namely, that of enabling your members to purchase of houses their houses, the friendly society advancing the necessary through friendly purchase money?—Yes. friendly society.

42324. Has that been availed of much?—Not so much as the sanguine people thought it would be, but it has been fairly well availed of.

42325. And as far as you know the payments made are sufficient?—Yes.

42326. Your society, I take it, has not incurred losses in consequence?—We have made no losses whatever.

42327. Another development is the endowment Friendly assurance policy, and I see by Paragraph 18 that this society endowment matures at sixty years of age. Do you find endowment that this form of endowment is more popular than an old-age pension?—I think it is calculated to become more popular. At present it is a newer departure, so that it has not had the time to take hold of the people, but I believe it will ultimately be more popular than it is at present. insurance policies.

42328. What is the idea that makes it more popular? Is it that the man likes to have a lump sum so as to be able to start himself in business or to help his children?—It is because he would like to have the money himself, I believe. I think that is the foundation of it. If he dies before this age his widow will get it, but if he lives to this age there will be no children dependent upon him and he would like to have back the money he has paid.

Mr. George
Abbott.

Friendly society endowment insurance

42329. In the one case he fingers the money, or his widow does, and in the other case if he dies young with the prospect of a pension that is lost to the family ?—That is so.

42330. Is that feeling pretty prevalent, do you think, amongst people who think about providing for themselves in old age ?—As far as I have been able to observe I think it is. They frequently ask what is to become of their pension subscriptions if they die. We have to reply, if you die without sickness what is to become of your subscriptions then ; and we have to reply, if you want your subscriptions returned in case of early death you must pay more money for it.

42331. And of course in this case the amount paid would vary according to the amount of the endowment ?—Yes, and according to the age too.

42332. Have you any limit to the endowment ?—We start at £50 and they may advance in multiples of £10 up to £200, which is the extent that the Act allows us to go.

42333. I am rather ignorant in these matters, but the pay for medical attendance has nothing to do with sick allowance, has it ?—So far as the subscription is concerned it has not ; but the societies as a general rule include their contribution for sickness, for death, for medical attendance and for management in one fortnightly sum, there being certain portions, however, set apart for each benefit.

42334. That is to say a man out of his sick allowance would pay for medical attendance, would he ?—No. Generally speaking, 3d. per month of his gross contribution is deducted for medical purposes, and whether he is sick or not that money is expended. If he falls sick he then gets his full weekly allowance, and the attendance of the medical man in addition.

42335. Having paid for that by his 3d. per month ?—Yes.

42336. Does he pay the 3d. during the time he is ill ?—Yes, his subscriptions for all benefits are paid whilst he is ill.

42337. How does he pay them ?—Generally, in Sheffield fortnightly.

42338. If he is ill he cannot pay and then he has got to borrow has he not ?—There is a general practice, if a man's subscriptions are getting into arrears, say for two months or so, to stop his fortnightly contribution out of his week's sick pay. In some cases all his arrears are stopped, but that is not the general practice.

42339. Do you lose many members from their not being able to continue their contributions whilst they are sick ?—No.

42340. I suppose you are easy on them and give them time ?—The men understand that they have to pay their contribution, and they are paid either by the man or by his family.

42341. (Mr. Gardiner.) Does not his court make grants sometimes ?—In a case of extreme distress that is so.

42342. (Chairman.) In the paragraphs beginning with Paragraph 20 you deal with the old-age pension fund ; is that something separate from what we have been discussing ?—No.

42343. These paragraphs are an amplification really of what you have been telling us then ?—Yes, that is so.

42344. You give us some figures to show that this departure as regards old-age pensions is popular, and I see that taking the two years, 1897 and 1906, the number of workers subscribing for sick and pension allowances rose from 200 to 680 ?—Yes.

42345. What sort of number of members has your society in Sheffield ?—My particular society last December had 3,346.

42346. I see you have now brought in women, and that they can contribute towards a pension too ?—Yes.

42347. Has it answered to bring the women in ?—That does not progress so much as we expected, but they do not lose many members.

42348. I suppose you have discussed with other representatives of the friendly societies in Sheffield the question of old-age pensions ?—Not specifically for the purpose of giving evidence before this Commission, but I have in years gone by 42349. And you have your own ideas on the subject ?—Yes.

42350. Supposing the State were to provide old-age pensions, what would be the effect on societies like yours ?—I believe that it would cause the yearly dividing societies to increase their membership, and the permanent societies to decrease theirs. Personally I do not look at old-age pensions in that particular light. If I were convinced that old-age pensions were the proper thing, their effect on the societies would be quite a secondary consideration.

42351. Supposing that old-age pensions were to come into existence, could you alter the practice of your society so that it could adapt itself to the new state of things ?—No. So far as I am personally concerned I should still advocate the societies providing a pension in order to render the income of the individual more adequate than a State pension would ever be.

42352. Would it be possible for societies like yours to devote their energies to making provision against unemployment, and so on, up to sixty-five when the pension would come in ?—Personally I am of opinion that that is the work of the trade unions as distinct from the friendly societies. There are some branches of these Orders which have out-of-work funds, and charge their members a given rate of contribution per month from which the subscriptions of the members who are out of work are paid. That is not very prevalent in Sheffield, but in Scotland it is a very prevalent practice. When the man is out of work he goes to his lodge and he says, I cannot pay my subscriptions because I am out of work ; they then vote a sum of money from this particular fund to pay his contributions for a given length of time.

42353. There is very little insurance against unemployment in England, I think ; do you know ?—There is very little as far as I know outside the trade unions.

42354. Does employment fluctuate very much in Sheffield ?—Yes.

42355. Even amongst the skilled workers ?—Yes. The introduction of improvements in machinery after a while throws out a number of men, and then an increase of trade brings some of them back again.

42356. And Government orders, I suppose, would have an effect in Sheffield ?—Yes.

42357. Do you think it would be possible to set up some system of insuring against unemployment ?—I think so. As to how it would be effected I am not prepared to say, but I think it would be possible.

42358. Is it felt at all to be a want now ?—I am not a trade unionist, so that I could not say. In the friendly societies the men frequently say, "I have had no work and I cannot pay." It is customary in and around Sheffield to make a particular grant for the member from what we term the benevolent fund. We clear him off, and expect him when he gets into work to resume his subscriptions at the earliest date.

42359. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I did not understand exactly how you provide the funds for the accident friendly compensation grants. Have you a permanent fund for that purpose, or do you make a levy upon the members ?—We make a levy upon all the members of the society.

42360. When an actual case occurs ?—When the grant is made. My own society last October granted two sums of money amounting to £150. The total was then levied upon the branches, who would secure from their individual members a given sum of money with which to meet the grants.

42361. You might have some difficulty, might you not, in carrying out that plan if you had a great number of applications at the same time ?—Yes. It would fall heavily upon the members then ; but, generally speaking, the members accept these levies very readily.

42362. They are compulsory levies, I suppose ?—Yes, but the men do not grumble so much about them.

42363. I understand that it is a legal obligation upon them ?—Yes ; it is provided in their rules that they shall do so. But there are other times when we have to levy for management costs, which we can recover under the rules, but the men grumble about it. They do not often grumble about these accident levies.

42364. (Chairman.) In your experience has there ever been a bad accident where a certain number of the members of a friendly society have got damaged?—I believe in a neighbouring society which operates in Sheffield that has been the case, but in my own society we have never had more than one accident at a time which has operated on us.

42365. Was the levy paid without difficulty in that case?—Yes.

42366. It is a sort of point of honour, is it, to pay the levy?—Yes. The rules require it to be paid, and we could recover it under any circumstances, but the men as a rule pay these levies cheerfully.

42367. Could you give us a copy of your rules?—I will send you a copy with pleasure. (Subsequently sent. See App. No. XIII. (A).)

question of members.

42368. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You tell us in paragraph 4 that under the system there mentioned there may be a payment of a small additional subscription, and then the attendance of the medical officer can be obtained for the wife and family. Is that only under system (b) or does that apply to system (a) also?—I am not aware myself of any application of that principle under (a). I have known it in the past, but the medical men then said the claims upon them for wives and children were so heavy and they gave it up.

42369. Therefore where (a) prevails the head of the family has to provide medical attendance for his wife and children from some other source?—Yes, generally from the same medical officer to whom he pays his private charges.

42370. And the payment probably is not very great?—In some cases, yes. I have known some cases which have been serious troubles for the workman.

42371. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Did I understand you correctly to say that in cases of sickness sometimes where the members are not able to pay their levies that is done for them by the other members, particularly, in Scotland?—I think that was a misunderstanding. In the case of sickness their contributions are charged just as though the men were in health, and, speaking generally, there is no trouble whatever in getting that money, but sometimes a man is out of work, and then he says "I cannot pay my money," and then we make him a grant from the benevolent fund for that purpose. In some other cases where the sickness is of long duration, and it is reported that the wife and family are very badly off indeed, the man having no other income but his pay from his particular club, grants are made for the wife.

42372. Is that in accordance with your rules?—Yes. They are benevolent grants.

42373. Are they made by way of loan?—No. In our neighbourhood they are pure gifts.

effect of
medical relief on friendly
societies.

42374. (Mr. Loch.) Supposing there was a system of free medical relief introduced as the ordinary method of assistance in connection with the Poor Law, would that very much affect the friendly societies, especially in connection with men earning the lower wage?—No, I do not think it would.

42375. What would your reason be—that they would prefer to keep the status of friendly society men?—They would like to have the weekly income from the society, which would be 10s., or 12s., or 14s., per week, and they would therefore subscribe for that.

42376. Do you think it would have any effect upon the men outside the society in making them rather go to the Poor Law if they wanted medical relief than join a society?—I think if it is made easier than at present to get medical relief from the State more people will avail themselves of it.

42377. With regard to the hospitals I do not know how they are at Sheffield. Do you find that men who are in receipt of relief from the friendly societies go to the hospitals independently of you?—Not unless for accidents; but many of them seek relief at the hospitals for their families.

42378. So that they do not provide in that case for the whole family?—No.

prospects of friendly
societies.

42379. Do you look forward to the great mass of the population coming into friendly societies by degrees, if they are left alone?—I think that as men and women develop, and as they have still to be wage earners, they will see the necessity of insuring against all the contingencies that beset them.

Mr. George

25 Feb. 1907.

42380. On the whole, from your experience of life, do you think the advance has been in that direction?—Yes, I do think so. The drop which has taken place of recent years is to be attributed, I think, first to what we call the dividing societies, and then to the greater number of organisations that provide sick allowances.

Bright prospects of friendly
societies.

42381. Do you think that this progress would take place irrespective of anything like a house-to-house canvas such as the Prudential have, or anything of that kind?—I think it would take place more rapidly by that method of a house-to-house canvas, but it would cost so much more money to do it.

42382. Take the unskilled labourers with small earnings such as you have mentioned; do you find that they are joining your societies in large numbers?—Not in my own particular society, but in kindred societies the unskilled man earning 18s. a week is a very important factor.

Unskilled

42383. Do you know men earning that amount of wage?—Yes.

42384. Are they getting on well or ill? Have they enough to eat and all that?—I do not think they have enough to eat.

Question of wages insufficient for subsistence.

42385. That is to say, with that rate they are just on the verge of subsistence earning?—I think it is too little to expect any family to be reared on. I think it might be made more, and that there might be a little more economy at home.

42386. Is rent high in Sheffield?—Yes.

42387. Do you find that what you referred to as the want of economy, or the possible want of economy, is a great factor?—That is my personal conviction.

42388. If that could be settled much else would follow perhaps?—Yes. If men would imbibe less and smoke less I think they could have more food.

42389. (Dr. Downes.) It is not so much the want of money, then, as the want of economy in the use of it?—That is so.

42390. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the Out-door Relief (Friendly Societies) Bill, are these cases which you refer to practically all the cases which are receiving pensions, to your knowledge?—There may be others that I do not know of. Those are all I know of.

Operation of 42391. Is it your impression that the Act is at all generally used?—No, I do not think it is generally used at all.

42392. Is there anything that you can suggest which would strengthen the friendly societies movement if we took the hopeful view which you do about it, namely, that it will increase and prosper? Is it to be left, so to speak, to the men to work out their own salvation?—I think so.

42393. Do you find that the charities of Sheffield, if there be charities there, in any way affect this question?—Not to my knowledge.

Friendly
society members not
charities.

42394. The men who join the friendly societies practically stand aloof from the whole of the charities, I presume?—Yes. We have not many charities in Sheffield for middle age. We have a few charities, but they are very few, and the charities that we have in Sheffield chiefly apply to old age, being in the shape of almshouses and out-allowances.

42395. (Chairman.) You have lived for many years in Sheffield, have you not?—Yes, for fifty-six years.

42396. Do you think that men of a certain age find it more difficult to get employment now than they did?—I do not move amongst the works, but from what I hear, I believe it is more difficult. I have no personal knowledge of it, and that is only what I hear in conversation.

42397. But there is that impression?—Yes. It is stated very frequently by men who have better opportunities of knowing than I have.

42398. What do they attribute it to?—The chief factor is now said to be the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. George
Abbott.

Friendly

and benefits,
&c.

42399. (Mr. Chandler.) With respect to your old age pension fund which you state was established in 1893, I understand from your Statement that it was optional on the part of the members whether they took up those advantages?—Yes

42400. Does it still continue optional with them?—We have some branches which make it compulsory, and when a man wants to join he has to pay so much and that includes his pension contribution.

42401. In some branches you say it is compulsory on the part of the members to pay towards this fund?—Yes.

42402. What is the highest rate of the allowance for sick pay per week?—The standard begins with 10s. and then we go to 15s. and 20s. according to the subscription which the member pays. When a man joins originally he must pay for 10s., and if he wishes to increase it he may increase it to 15s. or 20s. with proportionate reductions.

42403. For how many weeks does that continue?—Twenty-six weeks.

42404. And after that, what happens?—If he has twenty-six weeks' continuous illness, then the 10s. is reduced to 7s. 6d.; that continues for another twenty-six weeks, and then it is reduced to 5s. which continues throughout his life if he be sick. Of course if he stays off for a given period of time, he comes into his full pay again.

42405. What I wanted to know is how you dealt with the permanent sick. If he belongs to your old age pension fund as well, would he get 10s. a week, that is, would the 5s. sick pay still continue in addition to the pension?—No. The sick pay would cease at sixty-five and then he would get the 5s. per week whether he were sick or not.

42406. Seeing that it is optional, what will happen to the member who does not pay towards the old age pension?—He would be on his sick fund up to death.

42407. And receiving 5s. a week?—Yes. Where there are no pensions, the sick pay runs throughout life. So does the contribution of the member run throughout his life. That point is one of the objections to our pension scheme; and many of the members will say, "Well, but if I fall sick at sixty-six years of age and I am on the sick fund, I shall get 10s. a week, but if I am on the pension fund you will only give me 5s."—forgetting that the pension is continuous, and the sick pay is dependent upon a condition.

42408. (Mr. Booth.) And subject to a contribution?—Yes.

42409. (Chairman.) What is the condition?—Sickness duly certified.

42410. (Mr. Chandler.) So that it is really an old-age pension for the permanent sick man?—Yes; there is no doubt about that.

42411. (Chairman.) Have you had any trouble with that condition?—Yes.

42412. Have you had a lot of trouble, would you say?—Yes. I know, for instance, men in my own society who could work at something; they have had strength enough about them to do some work, but the doctor will not specify what they are suffering from—he only says, "Sick, and under my care"—and so those men get the sick pay.

42413. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) You have one branch for women, I see?—Yes.

42414. But you have not very many women in it?—No, we have not.

42415. To what do you attribute the difficulty in getting women to join?—I suppose it arises from the fact that there has not been the same attempt to educate the women that there has been to educate the men. I suppose that is the only explanation.

42416. What class of women would these be?—Would they be women working in industries?—Women working in our warehouses, school teachers, hospital nurses, dressmakers and so forth.

42417. Would they be married women?—Married women are allowed to join. We have some who are married women and some that were married when they joined. Several of the women who are advanced fairly in age—getting close to forty—have joined for the pension.

42418. Do you have any difficulty with the rates of contributions for married women; are they higher than the rates for single women?—No, they are not higher; but I think experience shows that they are nearer the margin, that is to say that the rates of contribution ought to be higher for the claims that the women make upon them. Our experience is that the women make more claims than the men do.

42419. What is the case with the single women; are there more claims from them than from men?—They are the worst class we have to deal with.

42420. Why? Is it difficult to tell whether they are ill or not?—No, but they have a notion that though they are ill they may do their mother's house-work and they may scrub the floors and wash the clothes, which, of course is prohibited.

42421. How can you stop that?—Only by teaching the women a sense of honour.

42422. What happens to a married woman who gets on the funds, but insists on cleaning her house?—If we found that to be the case we should have to tell her that was wrong, and she would have to pay a fine for having done it. This particular branch of women manage for themselves entirely and no men interfere with them, but we learn, for all that, what their experience is.

42423. Is there a lower rate of contribution and pay than for the men?—Yes.

42424. What is the highest pay in the case of the women?—We only pay 8s. a week in sickness to a woman, whereas we pay 10s. to a man.

42425. Can they pay for a higher scale?—No, not in the women's branch.

42426. Do you get domestic servants at all in this branch?—We have a few and we have had more. The greatest loss that this branch has experienced in the, lapsing of members has been through hospital nurses, some of whom were attacked by infectious diseases and were treated in their hospitals where their wages went on, and yet they wanted the sick-pay which they got. That we believe, caused more of them to apply than if they had not been getting their allowance from the hospital.

42427. And yet you say they lapsed afterwards?—Yes, because we had to insist upon some stringent regulations regarding them.

42428. How did this branch start; did the men start it?—Yes; I started it myself.

42429. Have you much hope of its spreading amongst women?—I think it will grow. We are not people of rapid growth in Sheffield; we go slow.

42430. How long has this branch been running?—Twelve years.

42431. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the sharing-out societies, they have done injury, have they not, to the Foresters?—I believe they have attracted men who otherwise would have joined the permanent societies. Evil of "dividing" societies.

42432. Are you making any efforts by means of any propagandism to get people to see the superiority of your societies?—We issue a number of leaflets and write to the newspapers.

42433. Is it not the case that a great many people who would not be expected to support an unsound society do support it—parsons, for example?—Parsons are the greatest sinners, if you will pardon my saying so. Clergymen supporters of unsound friendly societies.

42434. In this particular?—Yes.

42435. Have you taken steps to bring the parsons to a better mind?—We have a number of branches which for very many years met at church schools; and the Archdeacon of Sheffield, Mr. Blakeney, was a contributing member of one of our branches for a number of years. We had a very successful branch at his school. We had several others too, and we have endeavoured to show the parsons the error of their ways.

Friendly societies for women and difficulties

42436. But without much success, do you say?—We went to one—Mr. Ommaney—and he would have nothing to do with it unless there was a uniform contribution, so that the old men might get in.

42437. (Dr. Downes). You have mentioned two methods of securing medical benefit, the first being (a) by contracting with a medical practitioner. Have you had any experience of a variation of that where the contract is with a number of medical practitioners and the member chooses his medical man from among them?—That prevails in Leicester, but not in Sheffield.

42438. Do you know how it answers?—It has worked in this way in Leicester, the societies form together a medical association similar to (b) with this exception, that instead of their getting their own resident medical man they contract with a number of medical men in the neighbourhood to attend to their sick members, examine them and prescribe for them, and then the association (b) dispenses the medicine.

42439. Would the wives and families come into that arrangement?—On the payment of extra subscriptions, yes.

42440. Would you consider it an advantage that the wives and families should come in?—Certainly.

42441. That, I take it, would be one of the advantages of (b), would it not, that the wives and families can come in?—Yes.

42442. Is another advantage under (b) that you would have your own medical man, and that the certificates of fitness for work would be more uniform, that is to say, supposing a member is ill and you wish to have a report on his condition, would you have an advantage where the medical man is under (b) as compared with the position under (a)?—I think so. Some twenty years ago I made an analysis of these societies myself, and compared a branch with 200 members which was under medical treatment by a private practitioner, and another branch with 200 members which was under medical treatment by an association—that is (b). Given the same average ages we found there was less sickness in (b) than there was in (a). That was demonstrated beyond dispute in a very large number of cases.

42444. With regard to hospital treatment, have your members any difficulty in obtaining indoor hospital treatment when they require it?—They have the difficulty of going to ask for a "recommend." I have frequent applications made to myself for "recommends" for indoor treatment. I subscribe in another way to the charities, and I would not have a ticket on any account, because I think there is just as much pauperisation there as there is in the Poor Law.

42445. I am speaking of cases which really need surgical treatment in a hospital?—If it were an accident, or an operation had to be performed, the patient would still have to get an indoor ticket.

42446. Should you desire to see some co-ordination by which a member could be passed on to the hospital by the certificate of your medical officer, in cases of that sort, without a recommendation?—If that co-ordination only applies to the indoor treatment of accidents and operations I might.

42447. If such treatment is absolutely necessary?—Yes; but if it provided for outdoor treatment, or the ordinary medical treatment, I should be averse to it.

42448. What has been the effect of the Workmen's Compensation Acts upon your society?—They are generally said to have done us a great deal of harm.

42449. How would they apply to the accident compensation grants? Would they relieve you there in any way?—No. The men get the grant as well from their employer and through their insurance society and from our society the same. This peculiar difficulty has arisen—that where the accident under the old Act required the man to be off work some weeks, the society had to find the relief for that period before he could make the claim. In a number of minor accidents the man could have been working at the end of a fortnight, perhaps at the end of a week, but in order to qualify for the grant from his employers he stayed upon our funds for the time necessary to put in his claim.

42450. (Mr. Bentham). With regard to Paragraph 12 you give us the impression that friendly societies have increased upon the whole during the last ten years; does that apply to the one Order of Foresters?—No, it applies to the societies in Sheffield generally.

42451. But you are speaking of Sheffield only?—That is so.

42452. It is the fact that the Foresters have lost ground during the last ten years, is it not?—Yes, slightly.

42453. It is on record that during the year's 1904 and 1905 they lost nearly 10,000 members, I think?—Not in Sheffield.

42454. No; I mean generally?—Yes, that is on record.

42455. Still, would you say they are holding their own in Sheffield?—No. We are losing slightly; we lost sixty members last year in Sheffield.

42456. Do you account for that by bad trade and by these slate clubs?—I think the dividing societies—the slate clubs as you term them—have more to do with it than bad trade. No doubt in the unskilled world where the man finds himself out of work in many cases he lapses.

42457. Do you see any hope of change in the public sentiment towards friendly societies?—I think there will have to be a change in the friendly societies themselves to meet the public development.

42458. What change, and in what direction?—I think the societies will have to offer the greatest number of separate benefits conceivable, in order to give a greater number of people a variety of options.

42459. That would mean an increased contribution, would it not?—No.

42460. Not necessarily, of course?—If the man wanted to take up an additional benefit then it would mean an increased contribution.

42461. But you would give him a greater choice than he has now?—Yes. Through my own motion last year we have made it possible for a man to join the society only for the sickness benefit—not for the funeral benefit, or the endowment or the pension, but just for the sickness pay; on the other hand he can join just for the pension benefit, and nothing else.

42462. Do you think the feeling amongst the working-classes generally is as strongly in favour of benefit societies of this kind as it used to be?—No, I do not.

42463. There is a general weakening in that respect, is there?—I think so.

42464. To what do you attribute that?—As I say, I believe myself that it is owing largely, if not entirely, in a very large proportion to the advocacy of State Socialism, under which there is to be no want and no distress.

42465. Which means that the public generally would provide for all the exigencies of life?—Yes.

42466. You think that feeling being in the air is against benefit societies?—That is my personal conviction after very careful consideration.

42467. In your hope that friendly societies will still again flourish, do you think that sentiment in favour of Socialism will die out?—I do think so. I do not think it is the first appearance of it you know. It is certainly the strongest appearance that I have seen, but it is not the first.

42468. Do you think it is just a passing phase of public feeling?—That is my personal impression.

42469. Do you think that Poor Law relief, as it has been administered recently, has had any effect upon the friendly societies movement?—That is to say, the easier that it has been made to get Poor Law relief, has that effected friendly societies?

42470. I do not say it has been made easier; I want to know if you have felt that it has?—I do not think it has had any effect myself.

How much is practically deducted from that to maintain his contributions?—That is a matter that would have to be thought out very carefully indeed.

42499. I am afraid I have still not made myself understood. He has to continue maintaining himself as a member of the society by paying his contributions, has he not?—Yes.

42500. That, in effect, is a reduction of the amount he receives?—Yes, it is.

42501. He is left with the difference to live upon?—That is so.

42502. What I want to know is what has he to live upon?—He receives 5s. and he pays the society so much—how much?—Generally speaking, if the man has joined under twenty-five, it would be 6d. per week, but if he joined at thirty-nine it would be a much heavier figure. If a man joins under twenty-five the probabilities are that out of his 5s. a week sick pay which he gets after sixty-five, 6d. a week would be enough.

42503. And it might be anything up to 1s. or any thing of that sort?—Yes, anything up to a shilling, depending entirely upon the man's age on joining.

42504. With regard to the extension of the operations of friendly societies, I gather that on the whole you approve of extending the sphere of their work and of giving optional benefits?—Yes, I do.

25 Feb. 1907.

42505. The benefits mentioned in Paragraphs 16, 17, 18 and 19 are all benefits of which you approve, I take it?—Yes, except that I cannot say that I approve of the lump sum for the accident. I think that as the State has made this a charge upon the employer the employer should bear the whole cost of it. I did favour the movement at first, but developments have come about, and I think that the man ought to be satisfied with the grant that he gets from his employer, and that the other members who run less risks than he ought not to be charged to meet the inadequacy of the grant from the employer.

Nature of future developments for friendly societies.
Compensation for accidents through friendly societies.

42506. Was that movement begun before the Workmen's Compensation Act?—Yes. One particular society, the Order of Druids, whose chief office is at Manchester, have had this accident compensation in force for twenty-five years to my own knowledge, but in smaller sums.

42507. But you would prefer to withdraw that and to develop more in these other directions?—Yes.

Dr. ARTHUR HAWKYARD; called, and Examined.

42508. (Chairman.) You are a Member of the Hunslet Board of Guardians and a Justice of the Peace for the City of Leeds?—I am.

42509. You have prepared a statement, which we will take as your evidence-in-chief if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The sanitary authority of Leeds does not medically assist the poor, except in the way of occasionally finding nurses, drugs, etc., for them, when suffering from infectious illness. This power might be usefully extended to supplying underfed and ill-fed babies with good milk.

2. The present plan of medically assisting the poor under the Poor Law is not an efficient system. The average Poor Law medical officer (outdoor) does not give the satisfaction he ought to his patients. Consequently, the private practitioner is often called upon to attend parish patients.

3. The remedy for this state of affairs would be to appoint all practitioners in a district Poor Law medical offices who would be willing to act.

4. A great many of the ailing old poor suffer greatly from want of nursing, etc. They cannot keep themselves clean, or their houses clean, and if they live in a house with bedroom upstairs, they never use the bedroom. To remedy this, Poor Law nurses (outdoor) should have the supervision of the aged infirm, see their bed clothes and linen are kept clean, and their houses are kept clean. To do the necessary washing and cleaning, those able-bodied women receiving outdoor relief should be at the call of the nurse for a certain number of hours each week.

5. In every union there should be single-room dwellings erected for the infirm old couples. These should be built in the various districts, and be under the supervision of the Poor Law nurse. All old couples in receipt of outdoor relief should have one of the houses found, rent free. At present the greater part of the outdoor relief, paid in the Hunslet Union, goes in rent.

6. At an investigation, made some time ago, it was found that after paying the rent only 7½d. was left for food and clothing in each case.

7. In this district, owing to the very low rate of wages paid to labourers, a great amount of work has to be done by the private medical men for nothing. The standard rate of wage was, until recently, 18s. per week. Deducting holidays, etc., the average for the year would be about 15s.

8. It is obvious a man cannot live and support a wife and four or five children decently on this. Someone has to make up the difference between what the man earns and what it costs him to live.

9. A big burden is placed on a medical man's shoulders in helping these people. In my own particular case, I have to work every year three and four months for nothing, and it costs me in cash £250 each year to earn the fees I never receive.

10. The bulk of this work is done for the class of low wage-earners. The small grocer and small property owner also suffer. Many hundreds of people are constantly moving about from district to district in order to evade their creditors.

11. In South Leeds, from the making up of the register until the general election in January, there were nearly 4,000 removals, and I believe a great many of these removals were made to avoid creditors.

12. Most working men are in clubs, but the women and children are not.

13. The hospitals are not made much use of by this class (comparatively) except in case of accident, and they cannot apply to the Poor Law authorities.

14. The remedy would be the establishment of so-called dispensaries, where for the payment of a weekly sum medical aid could be secured.

15. The guardians might be called on to contribute, but there should be a strict wage limit.

16. I do not think there is much evidence of overlapping by the above agencies for medically assisting the poor.

17. Voluntary efforts practically do not exist in this district. A public dispensary has been recently established.

18. It is quite possible by establishing provident Dispensaries in the several districts of towns to work Poor Law medical relief and medical relief for the badly paid labourers together.

All the medical men in the district willing to be attached to the dispensary, should be on the staff, and paid according to the amount of work done, the guardians, of course, contributing their share.

19. I think there is no doubt that, in many instances, poor people suffer because they do not want to have parish medical attendance on the one hand or to contract debts with medical men, because they cannot pay, on the other. Nursing, and especially suitable food, are often wanting.

20. Greater facilities should be offered for the poor securing admittance to the Poor Law infirmaries. I refer to the difficulties put in the way by boards of guardians when the family is not quite destitute.

21. Poor Law infirmaries, where no resident medical man is appointed, might, with great advantage, have the services of highly trained or consulting visiting medical and surgical officers, so that greater use could be made of these institutions. At present, owing to the inadequate number of beds in the general infirmaries for the number of the population seeking admission, there is great need of more hospital accommodation, and Poor Law infirmaries might be usefully developed.

42510. (Chairman.) You have never been associated officially as a medical officer under the Poor Law, have you?—I was Assistant Resident Medical Officer at Leeds for four years, but that is twenty odd years ago.

42511. Have you been long a member of the Hunslet Board of Guardians?—Since 1894 or 1895. I was elected after the new Act of 1894.

42512. You are not satisfied with the present system of Poor Law medical out-relief, and you think the remedy or an improvement would be to appoint all practitioners in a district Poor Law medical officers, if they were willing to act?—I do.

42513. They would receive a payment for each visit?—Yes, exactly, that would be so. I think the fees might be based perhaps on, I will not say what is allowed now, Proposed because after all I think Poor Law medical officers do not ordination think enough money for what they have to do, but still I provide. I think a basis might be arranged with regard to fees. I dispensaries and out medical relief do not think it would be impossible to associate the outdoor medical relief of the poor with a system of provident dispensaries in the various districts of the union for those who are on the verge of poverty. It would not be impossible to do that.

42514. It was suggested to us that to get over this difficulty of fees and the payment of medical officers it might be possible to work through the provident medical institutions, to put, as it were, a direct pressure on persons to belong to them, and that those who did not belong to them, or were unable to belong to them, should have their fees paid by the Poor Law?—I do not think you could go on paying the fees for ever for those improvident people. I should make some distinction between those who have made provision and those who have not, if it were possible.

42515. Then comes in the gratuitous relief given by the hospitals?—Hospitals in Leeds do not visit patients; they see patients who go to them, but they do not come out into the districts to see patients in their own homes, and although we have in Leeds a dispensary which does that, it does not touch the district in which I live; we are too far from the centre.

42516. Your comments apply to the insufficiency of the domiciliary visits of the Poor Law medical officer?—Dissatisfac I do not think that is satisfactory, because I hear many tion with district medical officers and propo complaints from the outdoor poor; I do not say they power to paupers to choose the own distri are serious complaints, but still they are complaints which they think very real, and they often complain about them, and I think if they had some little discretion as to who should be their medical attendant a lot of medical officer. those complaints would cease.

42517. You contemplate their getting relief free under your proposal?—The guardians would have to pay for the outdoor poor in any case I take it, even if you associated them with those in work who are attached to a provident dispensary.

42518. Is the fact that medical relief is associated Deterrence with the Poor Law in your judgment at all a deterrent of medical to people seeking relief?—I think it is, and the result relief. is this, that the local practitioners have to do an immense amount of work for which they never get any pay.

42519. That is poor people go to them who are, so to say, choked off from going to the Poor Law and are unable to pay the medical man who attends them?—That is so, they are choked off by the relieving officer and by the guardians in many cases, and I am afraid the manner of some of the medical officers chokes them off as well.

42521. That the relieving officer considers it his duty to inquire before relief is given?—That is so. Last week I got up in the night to go to a poor person; I found when I got there they had made an application to the parish medical officer, he would not go because there was no order. I had to get up in the night and do the work, and the next day they got an order, and he was attended to. There is a case which happened in my district last week of a widow; she has two daughters, one twenty-four and the other nineteen, they bring in 10s. a week and 4s. respectively. The total income of the house is 14s.; 4s. rent is paid. She has one son, who has a wife and three children; he is getting £1 a week. The husband before he died never had more than £1 a week; his yearly average was 14s., yet she was refused outdoor medical relief. That is a sample of many cases which I come across in Hunslet.

42522. Was the son living with her?—He would have enough to do with only £1 a week and three children and a wife. He could not do much to help his mother.

42523. (Mr. Bentham.) Which union was that in?—Hunslet.

42524. (Chairman.) He was not living with his mother?—No, he is married and has a family of his own.

Proposed universal system of provident dispensaries with payment by guardians of contributions of indigent.

42525. A suggestion has been made to us that the medical relief should be altogether dissociated from the Poor Law. Have you ever thought of any scheme of that kind?—Yes. Supposing you had a system of provident dispensaries for those who are on the verge of poverty, labourers, those getting about 17s. or 18s. a week, there is no difficulty to my mind in putting the parish poor on to dispensary lists and the guardians paying for the attendance, paying their proportionate charges.

Difficulties in dissociating medical relief from the Poor Law.

42526. It would then still be associated with the Poor Law. The proposal was to take the medical relief away from the guardians?—I am afraid there are difficulties about that. I do not see how it is to be done quite, because after all somebody must pay for this work, and I suppose the guardians must, and if they do you are associated with the Poor Law at once, but if the work was done by provident dispensaries instead of parish medical officers the Poor Law part of the scheme would not be so apparent.

Proposed universal system of provident dispensaries with payment by guardians of contributions of indigent.

42527. Would the provident dispensary have the power of recovery from persons who did not belong to the dispensary who came for relief, or would it be limited simply to persons who could not pay?—You would have to limit it I suppose by a wage limit. Surely you would not allow everybody to belong to a provident dispensary.

42528. There would be a class of person who did not belong to it who were not paupers and who were not destitute?—You would always find those people.

42529. How would you deal with those, they are a considerable class?—That is a difficulty, but still it is quite obvious you could not go to free medical relief. I think these people should pay something, although it might be very small. You might after all, I think conveniently abolish Poor Law medical officers and hand these people over to the medical officer of the district.

42530. You must of course have medical officers with regard to your infirmaries?—I am speaking of outside relief, not infirmaries at all.

Alleged crowding out of the poor from voluntary hospitals.

42531. Have you heard the complaint made that persons who now avail themselves of the hospital facilities are of a class for whom the hospitals were not originally intended, and consequently the poor are pushed out and forced to go to Poor Law infirmaries more than they ought to?—No doubt hospitals are abused and used by persons who could afford to pay a practitioner. I do not think they push out others; after all the hospitals deal with the mass of work which comes to them in some way or other. There is no doubt that the general hospitals do attend to people who ought to be going elsewhere, but that tends more to bring discredit upon the hospital system than anything else. I do not think the poor suffer any inconvenience from that at Leeds.

42532. Except that the others take their place?—Well, the hospitals would not have so much to do.

Inadequate hospital accommodation at Leeds and methods of admission to the hospital.

42533. That is assuming they can treat the poor as they ought to be treated, and in addition take in these people who can afford to pay; unless the accommodation is increased somebody must be displaced?—Quite so; in the general hospital at Leeds now, I daresay to-day there are probably 500 people waiting to go inside as in-patients, they cannot get in because the beds are occupied, the place is not large enough, but still these people are not taking their turns. If you want to get a patient into the hospital at Leeds, the best thing to do is to call in one of the staff as a consultant, pay him his fee and he will give you an order to go inside, and that is what is done if you have an urgent case and want to get it into the hospital at once.

42534. Under your scheme with these provident dispensaries, I assume that an order or a letter from one of the doctors attached to the dispensary would gain admission to the hospital for a patient seriously ill?—It should do.

The position of the Poor Law infirmaries under proposed provident dispensary system.

42535. Short of transferring medical relief to an authority other than the Poor Law, you have no other suggestion to make than that of the provident dispensary?—Not for the outdoor poor.

42536. Would you leave the infirmary as it is now attached to the Poor Law?—Quite so, I suppose you would have to. People do not go to the Poor Law infirmary very willingly often, but still many people who would go there are choked off by the guardians.

Dr. Arthur Hawkyard.

26 Feb. 1907.

42537. You think there is a reluctance to go?—There is a reluctance to go on the part of some people, but others who ought to go into the workhouse infirmary the guardians will not admit.

Deterrence of medical relief.

42538. To what is the reluctance to go into the infirmary due, is it on account of the person becoming a pauper?—Yes.

42539. It is not on account of the treatment?—No, the treatment is of the best. It is prejudice and sentiment. I take it, largely which influences these people.

42540. A suggestion has been made that all hospitals and all infirmaries should if possible be brought into co-operation and put under the municipal authority. Have you ever thought of any proposal of that kind?—Yes, I have thought about the matter, but I do not think it is very possible. I think municipal bodies have quite enough to do now without having any more work attached to their office, and although municipalities now deal with all kinds of infectious illness, and consumption in some places, I think generally the illnesses would be far better dealt with by a charitable body than by the corporation. If you had the thing municipally managed, every ratepayer would claim the right of going into the hospital when he was poorly. He would think he had a right to go there; he paid rates towards the maintenance of the place and should go there.

Objections to transfer of voluntary hospitals to sanitary authorities.

42541. That is the argument of the poor ratepayers now with regard to the Poor Law, that they have a right to help because they pay rates?—True; but if they have sufficient funds of their own they should not be put on the funds of the general public.

42542. Would not the same apply to the hospitals if transferred to the municipal authority?—Yes, but you would attract a different class of people. People who now can afford to pay for medical attendance, and could afford, probably, to go into private hospitals, would claim to go into the municipal hospital, if you had the hospitals municipally subsidised and municipally managed; I think that would be the effect, at all events.

42543. Is the sanitary authority in Hunslet increasing its operations at all?—The sanitary authority in Hunslet is the same as for the city of Leeds. Hunslet is part of the city of Leeds. Dr. Cameron, who was here last week, deals with Hunslet just as he does with the township of Leeds.

Increase in activity of sanitary authority.

42544. Should you say now they are more actively pushing themselves in various directions?—Yes.

42545. Do you think there is any overlapping in that way?—I do not think so in the sanitary committee, the only things it attempts to deal with are infectious illnesses, and the corporation make a grant towards the treatment of tuberculosis; we have a sanatorium at Leeds.

No overlapping between Poor Law and sanitary authority.

42546. (Mrs. Webb.) It deals with infantile mortality, does it not, through its inspectors?—Yes; we have lady inspectors who are a very great help indeed, and they have been a very great help to the Pure Milk Committee with regard to the infantile milk supply. There is no doubt in the last ten years in Leeds the sanitary authority has done a good deal to extend its operations.

Extension of operations of sanitary authority, health visitors, etc.

42547. (Chairman.) It treats all infectious cases free?—Absolutely free. I was on the sanitary committee for ten years in Leeds, and I was chairman part of the time.

42548. How long ago was that?—I came out a year ago.

42549. Do you think it is practicable to combine the two different sets of work under one authority, that is medical relief and sanitary work?—Do you mean to put the Poor Law under them?

Impossibility of transferring medical relief to the sanitary authority.

42550. You do not think it is possible to dissociate medical relief from the Poor Law and put it under, or associate it with, the health authority?—No, I hardly think so. I think the health authority has quite sufficient to do without having much more tacked on to it, and there I think they are developing on right lines, they are educating the public into a better frame of mind with regard to sanitation; there is a vast difference now to what there was twenty years ago, for instance, with regard to the attitude of the public regarding fever hospitals; now they clamour to go in, twenty years ago they refused to go in.

42551. That is perhaps due to the excellent work of the sanitary authority during the last ten years?—No, I think the public are getting more enlightened and find these places are not prisons, that they are treated well there, and they desire to go in.

42552. Your own personal experience you say is that it costs you in cash about £250 in each year to earn fees you never receive?—That is so.

42553. That is to say, you are actually out of pocket by attending those cases?—Yes; my point is this: We have many hundreds of men in Hunslet who do not average more than 15s. a week all the year round. I put them at about 4,000; these men are labourers in ironworks, they cannot live on their money, it is not sufficient, and the medical man in the district, the small property owner and the small grocer have to make up the difference between what the man gets and what it costs him to live; and although, perhaps, my proportion is bigger than most men's because I do a lot of work, still every man has to contribute some share towards the maintenance of these people. I put it down very largely to the fact that they have not got sufficient wages to live on. You have a large body of men who are always on the verge of poverty in Hunslet—many hundreds.

42554. I can understand how medical men contribute, but surely a tradesman could not, he would be out of pocket?—He does, he has to. Men go into small grocers' shops in Hunslet by the score every year, and after two or three years their savings are lost and they come out. If you make enquiries you will find it has been by giving credit to their customers that their little capital has gone, then some other victim comes along takes the shop, and the whole process goes on again.

42555. You mean the small shopkeepers go bankrupt?—Yes.

42556. (Mrs. Webb.) Through bad debts?—Yes.

42557. (Mr. Loch.) They do not go bankrupt, I suppose, they cease trading?—Yes, they do not go to the Court, but cease trading. The same thing applies to small property owners.

42558. (Mr. Booth.) There are always small people hopeful of making a business pay although their predecessors have not done so?—Yes; they seem to think they have the qualifications their predecessor lacked.

42559. Are there any exceptions, people who make fortunes?—I do not know of one. My experience is that all the small grocers' shops, what with the competition from co-operative stores, and the bad debts they make, shut up in a very short time. One or two I know seem to make a living, but what their actual financial conditions are I do not know. That applies to property as well. I know a man who bought a row of houses for £1,200 within the last eight years, and he was glad to sell them for £800 simply because what with the missing rent and the rates he had to pay he told me he was £1 a week out of pocket by holding this property, and there are many instances like that.

42560. In Paragraph 3, with regard to the appointment of all practitioners who would be willing to act for Poor Law medical work, would that be done entirely at the choice of the patients?—Yes.

42561. A relieving officer who found a sick person who needed that kind of relief would ask him which of a certain list of doctors he would prefer?—Yes.

42562. With regard to Paragraph 4, the suggestion that there should be Poor Law nursing, that would be a form of Poor Law out-relief, would it not?—Yes, they would simply attend to the aged and infirm poor. I do not mean all those needing medical attendance.

42563. They would be under the eye of the relieving officer, they would be paupers?—Yes, the nurses would simply be for the paupers.

42564. So that there would be an outdoor nursing relief, in fact, which would be pauperisation?—It would, but of course what I intend to convey by that is this, that now we have nearly 400 people over sixty having outdoor relief in Hunslet. They come each week, they get their money, and there is not the slightest notice taken as to how they spend that money. The relieving officers have not time to look after them; I hear all kinds of stories about the money being spent in beer and things like that. My idea of the nurses is this: that they should call at least once a week on every old person having outdoor relief to see how they are getting on, and how they are spending their money, and constantly supervise them, in addition to doing ordinary nursing work amongst those who need it.

42565. The nursing would be ordered if it was needed?—The nurse would visit all the old people having outdoor relief, she would have them under her charge and visit them regularly, say once a week or once a fortnight to see how they are getting on, because these people, as far as my experience goes, suffer very much from want of supervision; they get very dirty; their houses get very dirty; there is no one to look after them; and the nurse would see that they were kept clean. In order to do that I should let her have the use of all the able-bodied women who are getting outdoor relief; she should call upon those women to give one or two days' charing at the houses of the old people in return for the money they get. I think it is a feasible plan. I am quite sure these old people if they were kept cleaner in their persons, cleaner in their bedding and cleaner in their houses would be far more comfortable than they are at the present time.

42566. In Paragraph 5 you speak of the amount of out-relief that goes in rent, and suggest that houses should be supplied rent free; the cost of supplying those houses would, if course, be a rent of its kind, which would be paid by the guardians?—Yes; I should deduct it from the relief. At the present time in Hunslet the old people of sixty-five, when they have paid their rent, have 6d. left; those from sixty-five to seventy have 1½d. left; those from seventy to eighty have 3½d. left; and those over eighty have 1s. 1½d. left after paying their rent. My idea is this, that the bulk of the relief goes in rent at the present time, it goes to their landlords; these people are then dependent on their friends, or any gifts, or other income, for their living; if you had to find them houses, I should suggest single-room dwellings built by the guardians and maintained by the guardians, I think they could be put up probably for £60 each, exclusive of the land. I would give all these old people a house, and pay them 3s. or 4s. a week to live on; and then, instead of the whole of the relief going in rent, the poor would get some real benefit; they would have their money to spend on food and clothing.

42568. With regard to Paragraph 18, in order to deal with much of this work through provident dispensaries, a complete system of dispensaries would be necessary, would it not?—It would.

42569. At present it is very far from complete?—It is very incomplete; at the present time there are no dispensaries in the district where I live.

42570. Such as they are, they are provided by charitable effort or by associated effort?—Charitable effort largely. In Leeds there is no dispensary relying on associated effort, there is only one dispensary, and that is supported by charity.

42571. How do you propose to make the system complete, by putting them under the Poor Law?—No, I should make the basis of the committee medical men in the district or in the town, I should attach to that committee other interests, such as those who are attended, the patients should have a certain representation on the committee, and probably the guardians and the municipal authority, but still the commanding authority of the committee I should make would be medical men.

42572. How is it to be financed?—By the members finding the funds, they should pay for what they got.

42573. On a self-supporting basis?—Yes, I think a scheme like that could be worked out.

42574. But the existing dispensaries are really based upon a subscription list; although the people join and pay something, yet they do not pay the entire cost of the dispensary, it is partly supported I think in most cases by subscriptions?—That is so.

42575. You think they could be started by associations of medical men without any financial assistance?—I think so; there would of course have to be a wage limit; I should not admit anybody to the benefits of the dispensary but those low wage men I have mentioned, say those getting an average of 15s. a week all the year round.

42576. You could not compel them to join?—You could not, the difficulty of the position is those who would not join and who would eventually become paupers. That is a difficulty with all these schemes, that you find some people who have not the sense to join these benefit societies; you cannot help it, it is human nature.

Proposal that guardians should pay provident dispensary fees of the indigent.

42577. And for those who finally are obliged to be relieved the guardians would pay, I gather?—Yes, that would be so.

42578. In Paragraph 20 you suggest there should be greater facilities offered as to admission to the Poor Law infirmaries, and mention the difficulties put in the way of people getting admitted by boards of guardians when the family is not quite destitute. On what basis would admission come? What do you mean exactly by "not quite destitute"?—A case is constantly occurring where a person has got advanced heart disease or some other complaint, I do not care what it is, who cannot get proper nursing at home; if we had Poor Law nurses they might, but it is quite obvious that the best thing would be to get them into the infirmary; they would not be taken into a general infirmary, they are incurable cases, and the consequence is the only place for them is the Poor Law infirmary; yet if there is any income coming into the house the guardians will not take them in. That is the practice in Hunslet. I will give you a case which happened last week. A man named R —, suffering from advanced heart disease, he has not worked for eight years, and he made an application to go into the Hunslet workhouse infirmary and was refused on the ground there was sufficient income coming into the house to find him medical attendance. He is the woman's second husband, and the woman had by her first husband one son and two daughters. The son is a labourer and he gives the mother 10s. a week. As a labourer he earns 13s. one week and 16s. the next in a paper factory; he is twenty-two years of age. That is sweating. One daughter earns 8s. 6d. and the other daughter earns 7s. The mother goes out knocking up in the morning and she earns 6s. The total income is £1 11s. 6d. coming into the house, but there are four of them to keep besides the step-father. He applied to go into the workhouse infirmary and was refused. I contend that is a proper case for the workhouse infirmary, and no objection should have been raised by the guardians to his admission as there is no legal obligation resting on the step-children to support the step-father.

Destitution as the condition of relief.

42579. You wish to alter the rule as to destitution?—Exactly.

Refusal by guardians of indoor medical relief.

42580. You would still leave it in the judgment of the guardians to carry out the regulations of the law?—True; still, although the guardians have discretion now, and could have admitted that man, they did not. I think that was a proper case for treatment in the workhouse infirmary, and he ought not to be left outside if he desired to go in; he cannot afford to pay a medical man.

42581. (Mr. Benthams.) Did the district medical officer give a report on that case to the guardians?—No, he was never approached. The woman went to the guardians' out-relief section and was refused the relief.

429—IV.

42582. And refused the medical officer's order?—She was refused the medical officer's order. First of all he wanted an order for the infirmary, but that was refused, and an outdoor medical officer's order was refused as well.

Dr. Arthur Hawkyard.

26 Feb. 1907.

Refusal by guardians of indoor medical relief.

42583. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Was there no medical officer's report at all?—None whatever.

42584. Not as to the heart disease?—I do not think so; I take it there was some medical report following the usual routine; the medical officer would perhaps have seen the patient once and certified.

42585. (Mr. Benthams.) In that case there must have been an order by the relieving officer for the medical officer to visit. That is what I want to ascertain, whether the medical officer had really ever been called in?—I could not say, I do not know.

42586. (Mrs. Webb.) The guardians refused it because there was sufficient income coming in, so that the medical officer would not be called in?—That was the statement of the woman afterwards. I had attended this man for many years, and I advised her to go to the guardians, and she came back with this statement, which I take it was perfectly true.

42587. (Mr. Loch.) You do not know what the normal procedure of the guardians in such a case is; was it not alleged at the outset that there was this heart trouble?—The woman would tell them so, I take it the guardians would make inquiries. The relieving officer would visit, for instance, and he would get to know what the condition of affairs was; there might have been no medical certificate.

42588. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Were you attending the case before?—I was.

42589. You did not send anything, I suppose, with the application to say this was a case of heart disease?—No, I simply told her to apply.

42590. (Mr. Benthams.) Would you say it would be a case which would be better treated in the workhouse infirmary than at home?—Most decidedly; the woman cannot nurse the man, she has to go out very early in the morning knocking up, and that means, I suppose, that the whole household is disturbed at perhaps four o'clock in the morning in order that she may get up.

42591. It is very likely that had the district medical officer been called in at all he would have said exactly the same as you said?—Just so.

42592. You do not know whether that occurred?—I do not know.

42593. (Mr. Loch.) Is it usual for them to make inquiries of the medical man who has been in attendance, making that part of their normal investigation?—Very, very rarely; occasionally it happens, but very rarely.

42594. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Do you suggest that if the guardians had been told this was a case that ought to be treated inside, they would have declined to give that relief?—I think so. The statement was that it was declined on the plea that there was an income coming into the house sufficient to pay a medical man.

42595. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would they refuse an order for the workhouse on the same ground?—Quite so; they do so, it is the practice.

42596. The man could have got into the infirmary through the workhouse?—He might have gone to the door and stopped there until they took him in, of course.

42597. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to the Need of nurses which you suggest for the out-relief cases, you want nurses for out them especially in cases of people who do not keep their relief cases, cottages and houses in a clean state, they being unable, possibly on account of infirmity, to do it?—Yes.

42598. Is it not the duty of the sanitary authority Functions of sanitary authority as to to see that the houses are in a proper state?—There are degrees of cleanliness, and the sanitary authority act on the complaints of neighbours, but when I refer to uncleanliness I refer to uncleanliness of the person and liness, etc. bed linen, not of the house altogether.

42599. Would not a little extension of the power of the sanitary authority suffice to answer what you rather hope for there?—I do not think it would because it would not find a means of keeping the house clean, whereas without any additional expense so far as I can see, if the able-bodied women receiving the out-door relief were compelled to give their services one or two days a week for what relief they get, and if they had to obey the call of the nurses and to go to certain houses to clear up it would be done without additional cost to the ratepayers. The sanitary authority has no such machinery.

Dr. Arthur Hawkyard.

Deterrence of indoor medical relief.

42600. You would have to have the fresh nurses, they would have to exist?—They would have to exist, but now the guardians subscribe towards the maintenance of a district nurse, it would simply be an extension of their work.

42601. A considerable extension?—It would be an extension of their work, a large extension.

42602. You speak of the reluctance to go to the Poor Law Infirmary. Is that not the case the first time, but not the second?—I quite agree, it is a matter of sentiment.

42603. It is partly sentiment. Do you think in any way it is that they do not realise before they go in the first time how good the care in the infirmary is?—Yes, they name the workhouse the Bastille, and they have some distorted idea of what the Bastille really was, and they think it is a prison. When they go in once and the ice is once broken they are not unwilling to take a second plunge, that is my experience of them.

42604. With regard to the municipal management of the hospitals, you object, I think, on the ground that a person who had paid rates would consider he had a right consequently to go in?—Yes, he would.

42605. Do you ever find now that people claim with regard to the ordinary hospitals a kind of right to go in?—They do.

42606. Without paying anything?—Yes, they do, but I think that is very largely encouraged by the employers; an employer of labour gives, say, twenty guineas a year to the hospital fund and he thinks he has first call on beds to the extent perhaps of £500, not £20.

42607. I was suggesting it would probably be a higher principle if one paid something towards that to which they thought they had a right, than if they paid nothing and thought they had a right?—You could not refuse where they pay something, whereas you could refuse if they pay nothing. You have a reason for refusing now, but if they pay something you would not.

42609. Do you think that the subscriptions would flow in if the hospital exercised too great a survey as to the kind of case they would or would not take in?—I do not know; in Leeds the workmen themselves contribute a very large sum per year to the maintenance of the hospital, they do a great deal in that way. I do not think the subscriptions would be affected from the wealthy charitable if a little more discrimination were exercised by the infirmary authorities.

42610. (Mr. Nunn.) You make a suggestion in your first paragraph that the municipality should feed ill-fed and under-fed children with good milk?—That is so.

42611. Would you have all babies fed in that way?—Not those whose parents could afford to pay, but, as everyone knows, a vast number of the children in a place like Leeds never get milk at all.

42612. How would you propose to ascertain who could afford, and who could not afford, to pay for good milk?—There has been no difficulty in Leeds; the lady sanitary inspectors are quite able to do it, and find time to do it.

42613. They make an economic investigation into each case?—They do, and of those people who cannot afford to pay some have had milk free (I am speaking of the Pure Milk Committee's effort a couple of years ago in Leeds, which is now defunct), others paid a proportion of the cost, and others paid the commercial value of the milk.

42614. Do you think these ladies who act as health visitors under Dr. Cameron act the part of relieving officers and investigate the income and expenditure of the cases they visit and verify the figures that are submitted to them?—They have done when the Pure Milk Committee was doing its work.

42615. Are they doing it now?—The Pure Milk Committee has gone out of existence in Leeds, and from that point of view the work of these ladies has ceased.

42616. Would you have these ladies, who are specially trained to supply advice and assistance to certain classes of cases, take up the work of relieving officers or inquiry agents, ascertain the facts of the case as they are submitted and then verify them; make an investigation into the economic circumstances?—If you propose to supply milk free of charge or at reduced prices I would.

42617. You would place that duty of the relieving officer on these rather highly qualified health visitors?—If you call it the duty of the relieving officer I should. I would not supply milk from the rates without making some investigation into the means of the recipients.

42618. Would that not be rather detrimental to the job for which they are specially qualified, namely giving advice to mothers on certain health matters, if they had to undertake these economic inquiries?—I do not think so; a few inquiries would soon elicit the amount of income coming into the house; it would not be much of a tax on their time.

42619. Have you consulted Dr. Cameron or any of his staff upon such a proposal, to see how they would accept it?—When I was a member of the Corporation it was done, so far as I know, by the lady health visitors; they made inquiries about the amount of money coming into the house before the milk was given under cost price.

42620. I think that system failed, did it not?—When the proposals were first made in Leeds for the corporation to run a milk depôt, they were opposed by the milk industry in Leeds, and the milk industry had sufficient influence in the council chamber to get the thing declared ultra vires, so that it had to be dropped by the corporation, but a voluntary committee then took up the work, and carried it on for twelve months, but the work of education, the work of inquiry, and the work of distribution, was done by the lady health visitors.

42621. That is a thing of the past; I understand that it broke down and is over?—Yes.

42622. (Mrs. Webb.) It did not break down because the sanitary inspectors broke down, it broke down because the funds were lacking?—Yes, want of means. We could not get money to carry it on. It cost us £5 a week to carry it on; that was the difference between what the milk cost us and the price we sold it at. We lost £5 a week, and when our money came to an end and we could not get more, we had to shut the place up.

42623. (Mr. Nunn.) You were trying there different things; you were making an economical inquiry; you were giving advice to mothers and actually supplying the milk which the dairymen of the town thought they were able to supply?—That is true; you see, it was an experiment.

42624. Had not it the elements of a break down in it when you attempted to do three such diverse things as that?—No, I do not think so. I think the scheme was a well conceived one, it worked extremely well, and if we had only had sufficient money or the rates to go on I think we would have done a lot of good.

42625. It was an expensive scheme, you admit?—It was expensive because we had not a proper establishment or a proper plant. I dare say we could have made it a commercial success if the corporation had been allowed to keep a farm of its own.

42626. May I ask what the objections of the dairymen to it were?—It interfered with their trade.

Proposal that sanitary authority should supply milk for infants, and functions of lady visitors thereunto.

Supply of milk for infants by voluntary committee at Leeds and failure of the scheme.

Dr. Arthur Hawkward.
26 Feb. 1907.

42627. Would it not have been better for the sanitary authority to have insisted upon a high standard of milk supply than merely have endeavoured to supply it themselves?—The standard is all right probably; it is not that, it is the dirt the milk contains we object to; it is fairly good in most instances, but it is exceedingly dirty; you cannot get a farmer to be clean, or very few.

42628. The dirt that is contained in it is surely involved in the standard?—You see there is milk produced in Leeds and milk brought in from outside; the corporation applied to Parliament for powers of supervision over cowsheds outside the city boundaries, but was refused; consequently there is very little supervision. The milk we get in from outside Leeds is indescribably filthy; I have no hesitation in saying so; no care is taken in regard to it, the cows are dirty, the men are dirty, the sheds are dirty, and what the Pure Milk Committee tried to do was to get a pure milk.

42629. But Leeds did not respond to that appeal?—It did not, I am sorry to say.

42630. Do you propose, according to Paragraph 3, that the district Poor Law medical officers should be drawn from any practitioners in the city?—In the district, not outside the township boundaries, so to speak, you would be compelled to have some boundary.

42631. Do you think the poor would be likely to select the best practitioners, or those who were most likely to give the kind of treatment that they expected and desired?—They would simply have conferred upon them the discretion which an ordinary person now has, that is, to go to any practitioner they prefer.

42632. The ordinary person pays for it out of his own pocket?—Yes.

42633. And those pay for it out of the rates. Does not the medical relief to a very large extent lead to the granting of medical nourishment?—I do not think so. There may be a pint of milk ordered each day, or half a pint of beef tea, or something like that, but there is no abundant supply of medical comforts from the point of view of food.

42634. You do not know what proportion of cases visited by the district medical officers get medical nourishment ordered by them?—I could not say, but on the sheets which are sent in every month by the district medical officer occasionally you see a pint of milk ordered per day, but it does not apply to every case, it applies to very few as far as my experience goes, but I have not got the figures out.

42635. Under the system therefore by which the district medical officers of health are appointed by the board of guardians specifically you do not think there is much nourishment granted in connection with medical relief?—That is so.

42637. Do you make your third suggestion as a means of getting patients more nourishment when they are ill?—No, as a means of getting rid of all these complaints one is constantly having about the district medical officer. I do not say they are serious, they may be simply a little want or kindness or a little brusqueness.

42638. I think you made a definite complaint just now that the poor who were under the care of the district medical officer did not get enough food, not sufficient nourishment?—I do not think they get as much as is needed.

42639. You suggest as a remedy that the poor should select their own medical officer?—Exactly, it would help to get rid of that difficulty.

42640. You think the poor selecting their own district medical officer would result in the granting of more outdoor relief?—It would probably result in the granting of more relief in the shape of food.

42641. That is what I wanted to ascertain?—It might result in that.

42642. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you tell me how you expect to start these provident dispensaries, because I understand you cannot start them now? What additional motive are you going to give under your scheme for the starting of these provident dispensaries?—You could not make it compulsory, but if it could be done under the guidance of the Local Government Board I think it would soon be shewn to be desirable in every district, and the medical men would get rid of the intolerable burden which is now placed upon them.

42643. Is there any other way of doing it than by subsidising it by the rates? Why has it not been done already? Why should you assume you would get it done if you are not going to give any additional inducements?—Between the medical men there is a want of combination, they do not trust each other, but I think that if some scheme, a national scheme, was put before the medical men in this country they would fall in with it and try to establish these dispensaries.

42644. Who is to put it before them and what further inducement are they to get? I can understand if you were going to give a grant in aid of it, you might get it done?—If you were to appoint every medical man in the district a medical officer—

42645. If who appointed?—If the Local Government Board allowed it to be done; it is only a question of time that you will get a better system established on the lines I have indicated, that is a sort of provident dispensary which would take in all the outdoor poor, if you like, the paupers, and also take in those low wage earners who are always on the verge of poverty, 42646. Who is to pay for it. Who is to build the building?—There is no building needed; it is not a hospital.

42647. The Leeds Dispensary has a very fine building?—The new one has.

42648. You would want some capital expenditure would you not?—You would have to trust to the public authority I suppose to do that.

42649. I only want to get whether you are to have the rate aid or not?—My feeling is this, that you would want rate aid.

42650. You would have to have rate aid?—To a certain extent you would.

42651. You cannot get the thing done without rate aid?—No.

42652. With regard to the people subscribing to it I gather you do not wish to make medical orders given by the Poor Law deterrent in any way?—I do not.

42653. You want them to be not deterrent?—I want suitable cases to have what is their right.

42654. Why should any man subscribe to a provident dispensary if he is to be able to get the same treatment at that provident dispensary free?—I do not say he should subscribe; I want to take them out of the region of the charitable society, and make them, as far as they can be, self-supporting; if there is any deficiency I take it it should come from the rates.

42655. Who is to support them, the people who are treated?—Yes.

42656. If anybody can get without deterrent conditions an order to be treated free at these dispensaries, why should anyone subscribe to them. Why should anyone join them?—If you have a wage limit, there are many homes in Hunslet who do not average 15s. each week, it is for those people I should establish these places, and then I do not see any difficulty in tacking on to the lists the outdoor poor who are paid for by the guardians, 42657. Why should these 15s. a week people pay any thing to the provident dispensary if they know when they are ill they can get a medical order to go there?—They cannot get a medical order,

Proposed universal scheme of provident dispensaries and means of starting it.

Effect of free medical relief on provident dispensaries.

Dr. Arthur Hawkyard.

28 Feb. 1907.

Proposed universal scheme of provident dispensaries and means of starting it.

Low wages in Hunslet and proposed minimum wage.

Health visitors and their effect on parental responsibility.

42658. You are wishing to make medical relief less deterrent?—True, but I am not altering the conditions, certainly not; if these people are wage earners, when they are wage earners they should pay to the funds of the provident dispensary.

42659. But you want a person with 30s. coming into the home to be taken into the infirmary?—But he has no legal claim on the children, he was a step-father and had no claim on the son and two daughters of the wife.

42660. As I understand it you would have one section of the public who had, say, 15s. to £1 a week getting subsidised medical relief, they would not pay the whole of it; they would be getting medical relief which was partly given by the rates?—That is so.

42661. Then you would have a section below that getting free medical relief?—Yes. If these men got living wages there would be no need for provident dispensaries, but you see now all the iron firms in Hunslet pay such wretched wages to their labourers the men cannot live.

42662. Would you advocate a legal minimum wage?—I would; to my mind there is a point below which no man should be allowed to sink.

42663. That would really diminish pauperism?—I think it would.

42664. You approve of this scheme, that Dr. Cameron started, of sanitary inspectors going to the homes and giving advice?—Yes.

42665. You do not think that getting this advice free diminishes the sense of responsibility of the mother?—No, I do not think it does; she benefits by it very largely.

42666. Do you think it increases her responsibility?—Yes, I think it increases her self-respect and makes her try to do better.

42667. This is hygienic advice?—Yes.

42668. Why should you not extend that to the whole of the population?—It is only the poorer districts which need it, I think.

42669. But it does not decrease the sense of their responsibility. If a person comes to your house and offers you good advice with regards to your habits in life, you think it does not diminish your sense of responsibility. I may say I approve of it?—The probability is the sanitary inspector comes to a woman who has not two ideas in her head about how to train a baby or feed it, or do anything else. She gives advice and the woman rather looks forward to her visits, she begins to know things and regard herself in a better light, things which were dark before are now light; she makes more of a mother, if I may say so; she feels that she has not looked at things from quite the proper point of view, and she is morally and socially raised in her own estimation.

42670. Why should you limit that to the care of infants? Why should you not extend it to the general habits of life and give the inhabitants of poor classes of property this hygienic advice, like you give education, free?—I have not the slightest objection to it.

42671. You have not?—Not the slightest.

42672. Do you think that would probably solve the whole question of medical attendance, supposing you had a staff of qualified ladies who went from house to house in poor classes of property to give advice, and if more were needed, call in a medical practitioner. Would not that solve the whole question?—But who would pay the medical practitioner?

42673. Why should not he be a salaried officer of the Municipality who would pay for him out of the rates?—There would be this disadvantage—that one medical man would have all the work to do, and the other medical men would be walking about doing nothing.

42674. You would have more medical attendants provided if everybody got sufficient so that they would all become salaried men?—Patients will follow their own choice; they will not go to any medical man; they will have the man of their choice.

42675. Then they can pay for him. They do that with the schools now; they either send their children to the municipal school and get it free, or send the child to a private school. Why should not you do the same thing with regard to medical attendance?—There is a good deal of difficulty in that. If a school is built for 500 scholars, you can only take 500 scholars in, but if you allowed free medical relief you would find this, that people, exercising their choice, would say, I want so and so, and the consequence would be that one man would be over-worked and other men, who perhaps have some mental obliquity, would be left in the cold and would not get a tithe of the work the popular man would have to do.

42676. Supposing you provided a medical man like you provide a schoolmaster and allow men to apply for medical assistance to that man, but if they prefer to pay their own bill they could apply to a doctor of their own choice, just as they can get their own particular schoolmaster?—If they pay their own bill, of course.

42677. Why should not you have a qualified municipal doctor in every district and anyone who chose to go to that doctor could go free?—You would get the same prejudice against him as there is against the Poor Law medical officer in the Poor Law service.

42678. There is not any prejudice against the fever hospitals?—That is going inside.

42679. Supposing that he was paid, like the schoolmaster is, out of the rates, and there was no stigma of pauperism and everybody had the right to it, what objection would there be?—You remove from the medical man the reward which his own efforts bring forth. Some medical men now make big incomes for some reason or other, but if you put all men on the same basis and restrict them to a small salary, I do not think they would work; they would not do it.

42680. It would only be the poor people who would apply for the municipal doctor?—I see no difference between that scheme and having a district medical officer under the Poor Law administration.

42681. Except you remove the stigma of pauperism and give free medical relief to everyone who applies for it?—I do not see that at all.

42682. You have not considered it?—I have, and I do not agree a bit.

42683. Still you do wish to make the medical relief much less deterrent?—I do, and if you make every medical man in a district a Poor Law medical officer, or a dispensary medical officer, the people could exercise their own choice, the medical man would get the reward of his own industry and would not feel hurt, and the patients would be satisfied because they would get better attendance; it would benefit all round.

42684. The really crucial part of your scheme is this free choice?—Yes.

42685. You do not think it would lead to collusion between the patient and the lower class of doctor?—That point has been considered. I do not think it would because the punishment if it were found out would be so severe I think no medical man would try it on twice. Socially he would be very badly dealt with if anything of that kind were to happen.

42686. (Mr. Bentham.) Would you abolish altogether relieving officers' orders for medical relief?—I do not see how you could if you had people desiring to have sufficient aid from the guardians.

42687. Supposing they apply only for medical relief, would you favour the system of any poor person going direct to the district medical officer in the first instance?—For the first visit I should.

42688. And limit it to the first visit?—Limit it to the first visit and have investigation made afterwards if any investigation were necessary, but the first visit in the emergency I think ought to be done without any enquiry if it is necessary.

42689. Then of course if the income was proved on enquiry to be sufficient to pay a general practitioner, you would say that those cases should be refused free medical relief?—Quite so.

42690. If all general practitioners were allowed to work under the Poor Law, how would you pay them?—Per case?—Per case. I find that in Hunslet this last few months the fees come out to 8d. in one district and 10d. in another per visit.

Difficulties as regards free medical relief.

Objection to putting district medical officer under sanitary authority

Proposal to allow paupers to choose their own district medical officers.

Proposal to allow district medical officer to give first medical relief without a relieving officer's order.

Payment of district officers.

Difficulties as regards unlimited free medical relief.

42691. Does that include medicine?—No, the guardians find the medicine. I think some basis could be arrived at by way of calculation as to what really would be a suitable fee without increasing the cost very largely. They might be paid so much per head, just as friendly societies pay.

42692. Do you think it is an advisable thing to have vaccination mixed up with the district medical officer's work?—No, I do not.

42693. How would you deal with vaccination?—I should like every medical practitioner to be a public vaccinator, and conform of course to the regulations of the Local Government Board with regard to vaccination.

42694. Would not that mean that all vaccination work would have to be paid for by the public through the rates?—Absolutely, it would mean free vaccination, which is of course in theory what is done now.

42695. It is relieving those who are able to pay and who would and do employ their own medical men to do it, and the medical man would send in his bill for that work to the public authority?—I think you would find this, that those people who can pay would pay even under those conditions, they do not desire to have any relief from the Poor Law even with regard to vaccination.

42696. And even if they did it would not be a serious matter?—No, I think not, especially if the fees are reduced as they are proposed to be.

42697. Do you think that syphilis is a cause of pauperism in Leeds?—To a certain extent, but not very largely.

42698. You do not attach very great importance to it in that city?—No, I do not.

42699. Do you think it should be dealt with under the Poor Law or would you have it transferred to the health authority?—I see no difficulty about attending to it under the Poor Law, but I do not think cases are very numerous. When I was at the workhouse in Leeds we were mostly dealing with primary cases, and twenty or thirty beds were always occupied by people suffering from that complaint. In Hunslet workhouse I very much question whether we have much more than half a dozen cases in the year that are driven into the workhouse on account of that disease.

42700. You do not think the deterrent atmosphere of the Poor Law prevents people applying for treatment who ought to be treated in the public interest?—You see most of the people going into the workhouse for that disease are females; I suppose the complaint is found out and their friends kick them out, so to speak.

42701. And they are bound to go somewhere?—They are bound to go somewhere, and the workhouse is the only place where they can go to.

42702. Do you find that the after-treatment is neglected?—Yes, very largely.

42703. How would you get over that difficulty?—I do not know I am sure. My experience is that hereditary syphilis is very common in young babies. I do not see how in the world you are to get over it, in fact you cannot get people to remain long enough under treatment; there are financial considerations, and they do not understand the gravity of the position.

42704. In the interests of the public generally, do you think that any other steps ought to be taken to ensure that this after-treatment should be continued? Would free medical assistance brought home to the people more freely have that effect?—I daresay a great number seek free medical assistance at the hospitals and dispensaries as out-patients. Of course if you would tackle that disease on the same lines as you tackle other infectious diseases, you would try to stamp it out at the very fountain head. Practically that is my position with regard to the matter, that you must tackle it there.

42705. You would rather favour that line with regard to that particular disease?—I would, I do not see that anyone has a right to go about disseminating a disease of that character.

42706. You complained about wages being so very low in the iron industry that men cannot afford to maintain their families and pay their way, from that I understood you would consider them eligible for free assistance medically, because of their condition, that is their economic condition, although they are in full work their wages are not sufficient to maintain them in efficiency, you would supplement that by relief; put it in the shape of medical relief in the first instance?—Under existing conditions, but my opinion is that if you had a minimum wage, these conditions would very largely disappear, because now it is impossible for a man who is getting only say 16s. a week to live on it, he cannot do it, he never tries after a while.

42707. Are you driven to the position of a minimum wage because you realise if you give more to these people that the wages will go lower still?—You mean if you give more they will go lower?

42708. Yes?—I do not think wages will go lower, they will go higher I think. There is no doubt in time the labouring men will get sufficient combination amongst themselves as to force wages up to a living point.

42709. My point was this, that these men accept these terms now, which are not sufficient to maintain life, because of their number, but if you relieve those people of further expenses which are natural to life now, would not those people work for less?—That was the experience prior to 1834 I am quite aware, and that is a danger, and that is why I think the best thing to do would be to get labourers to combine together to get their wages increased in a normal way. I recognise this, that State aid in any kind is bad for the people receiving it.

42710. And it might have an effect upon wages?—I do not think it would, but still you might have employers offering less money than they are offering now, probably you would have.

42711. You can conceive a point at which you can give a free living to people that will enable them to work for nothing?—I can.

42712. Then the whole industry would be changed from the ordinary employer to the ratepayer?—That is so.

42713. Therefore you agree that the tendency would be in providing these things rather to lower wages than to raise them?—I do not say it would have that effect, but judging from the history of the earlier part of last century it had that effect then, and it might have it now, but I do not say it would. This wage question is a very big problem.

42714. When you were speaking of the responsibility of a person being increased by being provided with certain necessities for family life, did you really mean responsibility in the sense that persons feel it is their duty to do this particular thing?—I think you would rouse up in people now who have got a hopeless prospect in front of them some of their natural instinct to do better.

42715. Do you mean you could raise their sense of duty or increase their general intelligence in such a way that they can see they can do more, which they could not see before?—Yes. That is really the vital position.

42716. That is rather what you meant by responsibility?—Yes.

42717. (Miss Hill.) With regard to these old women who are in receipt of outdoor relief, for whom you think nurses should be provided, some of those I think are living by themselves?—Yes, and there are old couples as well. Out of 363, we had ninety-six people, that is forty-eight couples living together, man and wife.

42718. And there would also be some single people?—That is so, the rest are single.

42719. Is it for the sake of keeping the married couples together that you would provide this additional assistance?—No, it is for the sake of keeping them under better sanitary conditions now they are unable to help themselves, and you keep them longer out of the workhouse, in fact you would keep them out of the workhouse altogether if you could find some better means of their cleanliness being dealt with.

42720. It is rather a heroic remedy, is it not? You say after paying their rent they have only 7½d. left for food, therefore you require more outdoor relief for them. They do not seem to be able to use the house accommodation for which they have made themselves responsible, and you also think you require to be able to nurse them or supervise their sanitary conditions, and also to clean and wash for them?—Yes, but you see the cleaning and washing would be done at no cost, because now you have able-bodied young women, widows with families receiving outdoor relief, and I should ask them to do one or two days charring at these particular houses for their money.

42721. I suppose the outdoor relief those young widows are receiving is calculated either on the supposition that they will be at home attending to their children, or that they will be taking some kind of work to supplement it, is it not; they are not supposed to be sitting at home doing nothing?—They are not supposed to, but I am afraid a great many do it in many cases; that is my experience; I think it would do them a lot of good to do a little work.

42722. And rather than bring these people into a workhouse in which there is proper classification, and there would be nursing, cleaning, and laundry, you would make this further elaborate arrangement out of doors, would you?—I would; I think it would be better; and as long as the old people can be kept outside I would keep them outside.

42723. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you any experience of the working of a provident dispensary?—I have not had any.

Proposal to supersede outdoor medical relief by a system of provident dispensaries.

42724. Do I understand from your evidence that you say that you think that the outdoor medical relief would be practically covered by the provident medical dispensaries?—I think it would.

42725. You think in the future you could have a condition of things in which there was no outdoor medical relief given by the State, but all indoor medical relief was provided?—You mean the outdoor relief would be done by the dispensaries?

42726. Yes?—Yes, it would.

Proposal that guardians should pay provident dispensary fees of indigent.

42727. The people would become independent of outdoor medical relief?—Those people who applied to the guardians would be paid for by the guardians.

42728. Do you anticipate those cases would be numerous?—The people applying to the guardians?

42729. Who have not made their own provision through the provident dispensary?—They would be fairly numerous. Out of 363 old people who applied in Hunslet, 178 had made some provision, 187 had made none whatever—that is more than half.

42730. You would put them in the same position really as those who had made provision?—Not all, perhaps, but some of these people who had not made provision perhaps had not done so owing to lowness of wages; but, after all, you cannot say that every man who belongs to a friendly society is a provident man; my experience is that 20 per cent. of them are improvident, and it is only through the heroic efforts of their wives that they join friendly societies at all.

42731. Do you think that would lead logically to your putting all hospital accommodation on the same footing in a town?—I do not think it would really.

42732. Abolishing the distinction between voluntary hospitals and State hospitals?—I do not think it would; it would be a long time before it did so.

42733. But I am rather speaking now of the ideal; do you think that would be the better system?—If you could have only ideal people born, perhaps it would, but you cannot; and, unfortunately, you have a great many people born who will not work, who are too lazy to do anything, and you have those to contend with; and they would abuse any system.

42734. Do you think there would be much abuse of an indoor medical relief system?—No, I do not think so, not much indoor, there is more likelihood to be an abuse of outdoor.

Question of desirability of free indoor medical relief.

42735. Supposing, for the sake of argument, you could get rid of outdoor relief, do you think the indoor medical relief could be safely granted free, that is with out disfranchisement?—I would not like to say; I see difficulties in the way of doing that.

42736. What are the advantages you would get? What temptation is there to apply for indoor medical relief?—I do not think people do apply for indoor medical relief in workhouse hospitals now until they are compelled, although I do say that it is refused where it ought to be granted.

Question of desirability of free indoor medical relief.

42737. Do you think they would apply more if all the hospitals were treated as corporation or public hospitals?—I think they would.

42738. What would be their motive in doing that?—Perhaps in some cases to relieve themselves from expense; but you see now the general hospital in Leeds is not large enough for the class of people are who not paupers, they could do with a place double the size. If you had all the hospitals under municipal management those people who could not get into the general infirmary would go into the workhouse hospital.

42739. I am assuming the general hospital and the workhouse hospital were put under the corporation, or were all supported by the rates; do you think the temptations which in-door medical relief offers are sufficient to make it necessary to have safeguards with regard to the admission?—Undoubtedly, you would have to have safeguards.

42740. Why?—Because people would try to get in who ought not to go in, whose means are too great.

42741. That is now guarded against by giving power of recovering?—You might guard against it in that way.

42742. Do you think the danger of what is called malingering is considerable in the case of indoor medical relief?—I do. I think that friendly societies are very largely imposed upon by people who sham illness.

42743. Does that apply equally, do you think, to indoor medical relief?—It would be found out quicker.

42744. To relief in an institution?—Not to the same extent probably, but it may apply, and will apply, I think.

42745. Would going into an institution act as a deterrent?—If the hospital were maintained out of the rates there is no doubt every man would think he had a prescriptive right to go in when he was ill, no matter what his condition or complaint would be. That is human nature, and I think that would happen.

42746. They would go in on very slender grounds?—Yes, if they were municipally maintained and every one contributed.

42747. You do not think the matter of going into an institution is a deterrent to poor people?—Not public institutions apart from the Poor Law.

42748. Do you think it would be a good thing if Poor Law medical infirmaries were made medical schools as well as the hospitals?—I think more facilities might be given for the use of Poor Law infirmaries in that direction; I know it is a great advantage to a man to spend a few years at a workhouse infirmary, because he sees cases there which he would not at a general hospital.

Question of use of Poor Law infirmaries as medical schools.

42749. I am speaking particularly of a university, where there is a medical school; do you think it would be a good thing to use the infirmaries for the purpose of instruction?—I think the whole of the clinical material in the town should be at the call of the medical school if possible.

42750. Do you think there would be any objection on the part of the inmates?—I do not. I think they rather like it. There is no doubt that a patient's life in a hospital is rather monotonous; and it affords a welcome relief to the patients to have a class coming round for clinical instruction, they begin to take a bigger interest in their own cases.

Question of objection of patients to medical students.

42751. Do you think it would raise the standard of administration in Poor Law infirmaries?—I think it would.

Question of use of Poor Law infirmaries as medical schools.

42752. On the whole you would be in favour of it?—I should, very much.

42753. (Mr. Lock.) With regard to the relieving officer staff at Hunslet, is it sufficiently large?—It has been increased in the last two months; we had two before, we have now four.

Sufficiency of relieving officers' staff at Hunslet.

42754. Do you think it is now sufficiently large?—For the ordinary duties of a relieving officer I think it is; but I do not think relieving officers are sympathetic enough in some respects in doing their work; I mean, many complaints have been brought to me about the relieving officer choking off applications—many complaints.

Deterrent manners of relieving officers.

42755. Do you think that is due to their not having time, or to a policy that they are expected to act upon?—The relieving officers seem to think they are expected to keep the relief to as low a point as possible. I think they labour under that delusion.

42756. You have referred to the dispensaries. It would not be necessary, would it, to have buildings always at a dispensary?—No, I do not think so, any house could be rented sufficiently large to carry on a dispensary in any district. It would not have to be big, because in a large town you would have many.

42757. In small areas comparatively speaking?—Yes.

42758. If there were free medical relief, do you think the provident dispensary movement and the friendly society movement would be crippled; I am putting that hypothetically?—No; you would deal with a class of people who never go near a friendly society, you see. Although the friendly societies have a very large membership, at the same time there are many thousands of people not members of friendly societies; then there are the children and the wives of these people to consider; they are excluded from most friendly societies, although I know there are female lodges, still they are not very common where I live.

42759. You know at present the attraction of friendly societies is not excessively great?—It is not.

42760. Would not the introduction of an alternative, which would possibly be accepted by the rising generation, still further weaken the movement?—It might have that effect, because, after all, I am quite clear as to this, that 80 per cent. of the friendly society members take not the slightest interest in the society; if you speak to lodge officials you will find that; I was speaking to a man last week and he told me that out of a membership of 280 they rarely got more than six or seven at their meetings; on the other hand, a man told me they get thirty out of about 300, and he thought that was very good. Members of friendly societies as a rule are content to send their wives and children with their subscriptions, and never go near the lodge at all; so I quite see the danger which is pointed out.

42761. Another step would follow, would it not, that more and more medical men, if there were free medical relief would have to be paid by the State?—I am not proposing free relief.

42762. I am putting it hypothetically?—If you had free relief, I think more and more would the position arise that the people would demand medical attendance for nothing.

42763. You mentioned 500 patients as waiting to go to the voluntary infirmary at Leeds?—As in-patients. I understand that is about the number. Dr. Arthur Hawkyard.

42764. I think I understood that a large proportion of those, if it were a paying system, would be able to pay? Is that so?—Some would be able to pay something, and I believe they do. I believe they put something in the box when they leave, perhaps not sufficient, but a lot of them might pay. 26 Feb. 1907.

42765. Generally speaking, would you be in favour of what has been discussed lately, a medical service system?—Free medical service I am against. The ability of voluntary hospital patients to contribute to cost of treatment.

42766. Not a free medical service, but a system by which all persons should be asked to pay according to their means, including treatment at hospitals, and everything, the wage rates being settled by a local committee of the British Medical Association, or some such body?—Yes, I am not opposed to that. Question of public medical service with payment by patients according to ability.

42767. That would coincide with your proposal?—Yes, it would.

42768. The really crucial point in your proposal was that there should be a free choice, you require a free choice in every case?—I should give a free choice. Proposal that paupers should choose their own district medical officers.

42769. Ultimately and beyond that, you are seeking to provide a self-supporting medical system, as far as possible, for the great mass of the population?—Yes, for those who cannot pay now and do not pay.

42770. And the free choice is incidental to that?—Yes.

42771. (Mr. Bentham.) Do the Hunslet Guardians provide medicine for the District Medical Officers?—Yes, in all cases except in the country districts; in the outlying districts the medical man has to find his own drugs, and things of that kind. Provision of drugs by guardians at Hunslet.

42772. In the districts where they are provided by the guardians is it a success?—Yes. There is a settled dispensary, and the medical officer on visiting prescribes in a book provided for the purpose, a little leaflet thing, and that book is taken to the dispensary and the medicine is dispensed.

42773. Has it proved a hardship at all in the sense that they have had to go to the relieving officer first of all for an order, then to the medical officer for a prescription, and then to the dispensary for the medicine?—I have not heard any complaints about it.

42774. You have heard of no complaints?—Not any.

42775. You know the Leeds system?—Yes.

42776. The medicine is provided for all the districts by the guardians, is it not?—In Leeds it is; but they have only one outlying township, that is Roundhay, whereas we have some rather large ones in the Hunslet district.

42777. You have not heard of it there?—No.

42778. Do the medical men like it better?—I have not compared notes with them.

Mr. JAMES BLOSSOM, called; and Examined.

42779. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Ecclesall Bierlow Board of Guardians?—I am.

42780. You are also a Fellow of the Institution of Certified Public Accountants?—I am.

42781. We will take the statement you have prepared as your evidence-in-chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I have been a member of the board of guardians for six years.

2. The Ecclesall Bierlow Union comprises the southern half of the city of Sheffield and four Derbyshire parishes. In the city itself we have the following seven out of the sixteen wards into which it is divided, Ecclesall, Heeley, Sharrow, Broomhall, Hallam, Crookesmoor, and Walkley. In Derbyshire we have the parish of Norton Without, the parish of Dore, the parish of Totley, and the liberty of Beauchief. The union was constructed under an order of the Poor Law Commissioners, dated January 21st, 1837, and the first meeting of the Board of Guardians was held on July 4th, 1837. The union may be described as urban in its northern part and rural in its southern and south-western parts. The northern part has an industrial population, comprising cutlers, grinders, left-cutters, silversmiths and burnishers. The southern consists of farmers, farm labourers, dairymen, gentlemen and their servants. The union may be generally described as being socially in a good condition. There are no large works in it. As compared with the Sheffield Union it is residential rather than industrial. It has a larger number of "little masters" than Sheffield, and the tendency is to turn the houses in the northern part into workshops and to drive the inhabitants into the suburbs. The city wards average 600 out-relief cases as compared with forty in the Derbyshire parishes. It is fair, however, to say that this division into the city wards as urban, and the Derbyshire parishes as rural, is scarcely a fair one, seeing that about 5,000 acres in Upper Hallam is agricultural land. Mr. James Blossom. 26 Feb. 1907.

3. When I attended the North Midland Poor Law Conference, in October last, at Derby, as I gave our names and the name of the union we represented to the registrar, he remarked, "Oh! you're from the model union." I do not know that we can fairly lay claim to that title, but there is no doubt that, generally speaking, the union has been well managed.

4. We have tried to obey the law, and, as far as possible, to refrain from costly experiments. The only points where we differ from other unions are:—(1) in the adoption of the case-paper system, which has been an enormous advantage, and (2) in the treatment of the casual labourer who must be found work.

5. For thirty years we have set these men on wood or stone, and have paid them each night the exact amount of their earnings. This, of course, we know to be illegal, as they should be paid half in money and half in kind. The amounts thus paid do not come out of outdoor relief, which fund, accordingly, benefits at the expense of the wood and stone account. The result of this system has been to keep down the able-bodied inmates in the house. This system was sanctioned by Mr. Davy, the first Local Government Board inspector to have it brought under his notice, and it has been passed by every Local Government Board inspector since, and on no occasion has it been objected to by the Local Government Board. In the event of a man not earning sufficient to maintain himself and family he is relieved with groceries. It may be added that on the wood-chopping there is always a profit, whilst stone-breaking shows a loss. The system has proved a strong deterrent, for before its adoption young men crowded the house. Though isolated in this matter others frequently want to know the details of the system.

6. With regard to the general question as to the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief, our policy has always been to dissuade from coming into the house and to grant adequate outdoor relief in preference to indoor. We have, nevertheless, to order the house in many instances, as no amount of out-relief would meet the case of those coming in—such as those not capable of taking care of themselves, those who live in attics, and those addicted to drink. Some cases are not easy to decide, and in such instances it is undoubtedly a temptation to the relieving officer to give an order for the House and thus get a troublesome case off his list. We have not a definite scale of out-relief, and each case is considered on its merits, but there is a general understanding that outdoor relief for children shall be at the rate of 1s. 6d. per child and a loaf (value 5d.), the widowed mother being supposed to be able to provide for herself and one child. As I have just stated, however, there is no hard and fast line, and the guardians are more inclined to generosity than to severity, with the result that probably the average reaches 1s. 9d. per week. It is, of course, well known that the Departmental Committee on Vagrancy has demonstrated that 1s. 6d. per week will keep a man, but in our Cottage Homes at Fulwood we find that food costs 2s. 6d. per week per child.

7. The arguments in favour of out-relief may be stated as follows:—

(a) The best of the poor have a wholesome detestation of the workhouse. Wonderful changes have been made in administration, but “the dread of the House” still exists, notwithstanding all that has been accomplished in making the wards for the sick, aged and infirm beautiful, warm and comfortable.

(b) To compel a man to go into the workhouse almost inevitably pauperizes him. He has fallen into the slough of despond, and to enter the house is to sink deeper into it. It is far better to give outdoor relief to tide over temporary distress than to familiarise a man and his family with the inside of the workhouse.

(c) The refusal of outdoor relief means the break-up of the home. This is a terrible ordeal for a couple who have lived together happily for years. The family is the basis of our social structure. Everything that tends to undermine this bed-rock principle should be strongly resisted. The break-up of family life is not to be lightly undertaken. Many a man and woman would do almost anything to keep intact the old home.

(d) Widows with children ought certainly to be granted outdoor relief, and not be forced into the workhouse, which results in the whole family becoming paupers and possibly criminals. With the great majority of working men there is but a week between themselves and poverty, and when the breadwinner is taken away the widow is very often left badly off. The small wages, the large families, the constant holidays, the fluctuations of trade (to say nothing of the ever present temptations to wastefulness), and other circumstances have precluded the putting away of anything for the rainy day. During these years the working man has contributed his quota to the rates, and surely it is fair to treat this as his premium for the insurance money which will by and by fall due. Having thus contributed for years to the rates it is only just and right that the widow and family should be helped from the funds the husband has helped to create. It is not right to leave them to the tender mercies of friends and relations. Neither does it answer the purpose for the guardians to take one or two children, as is done in some unions.

8. “Once a pauper, always a pauper,” is the general result of indoor relief, which is thus much more costly and less effective than outdoor relief. Indoor relief stereotyped pauperism.

9. The classes of persons applying for relief may be given as the old and infirm, widows and children, women whose husbands are in asylum or hospital, deserted cases, which go into the house, and bastardy cases. Eighty per cent. of the children born in the workhouse are illegitimate. The great majority of the mothers are domestic servants. In quite a number of cases the girls are of weak intellect. Some of these are very pitiable. In one instance the baby of a girl of this class died and her grief was great, but she consoled herself by saying, “Never mind, I’ll go out and get another.” This girl had no idea of the sin and wickedness and responsibility of such actions, and would fall an easy prey to the first designing man that came her way. Classes of persons applying for relief.

10. The causes of pauperism may be stated as sickness and mental deficiency, old age, drink and thriftlessness, gambling, apathy and indifference, foreign competition, Workmen’s Compensation Act (this is shown in the gradual increase in old men applying for both indoor and outdoor relief. The recent story of the Crewe railway works is being repeated on a smaller scale in many quarters, and “too old at forty” will some day have an element of truth in it), venereal disease, heredity. I am very glad to say that we have not many hereditary paupers, and during the six years I have been a member of the board no child brought up in the workhouse or its homes has returned. Causes of pauperism.

11. On the first Saturday in this year, January 5th, 1907, we had in the establishment 891 persons, distributed as follows:—

164 Imbeciles.
235 Sick.
183 Aged and Infirm.
39 Children (generally too young for the Cottage Homes).
270 in main body of the House.

12. As to the class of persons seeking election as guardians, I think the members of our board may be described as prominent men who have worked in either of the political parties, or in connection with the friendly society movement. There is no doubt that since the £30 property qualification was swept away the tendency has been to place more tradesmen and working men on these boards and less aristocrats. Up to the present no socialist, L.R.C., or I.L.P. candidate has sought a seat on our board, though I am told that at the election in March such candidates will seek the suffrages of the electors. The twenty-six members of our board may be classed as follows:—solicitors, two; barrister, one; accountant, one; auctioneer, one; county court official, one, electro-plate manufacturers, two; cutlery trade, two, directors of limited companies, four, farmers, two; timber merchant, one; retired shopkeepers, three; builder, one; toy merchant, one; publican, one; minister, one; clothier, one; costumier, one; total, twenty-six. Class of persons becoming guardians and effect of Local Government Act, 1894.

13. In the administration of relief in the union we act strictly in accordance with the Poor Law orders. The meetings of the relief committee are held every Wednesday morning, in the Poor Law offices. In some unions the Relief Committee, etc., at Ecclesall Bierlow.

relief committee is held in the district, as the distance to the union would be too great for the recipient to travel. We have, however, pay stations in each locality, so that those in receipt of outdoor relief have in no case far to go for their money and bread.

14. As to any reform in the law or practice suggested to me by my experience, I would mention:—

(a) The power to remove cases of contagious diseases, such as syphilis.

(b) The power to remove into the aged and infirm wards the old people who are not able to live in cleanliness and health outside.

(c) The power to compulsorily remove consumptives. At a recent sitting of a relief committee there were three cases of consumptives who would not come into the hospital. One had five children, another seven, and another five. Living with a consumptive father, sleeping in the same room and possibly in the same bed, these children will sooner or later swell the ranks of the sufferers from the great white plague.

(d) The power to detain women with illegitimate children. These should be removed to a special colony.

(e) A person in receipt of medical relief should not be deprived of a vote. If he went into a public hospital no such disability would follow, and it seems monstrous to me that because he lacks a friend with a recommend such deprivation should be the penalty.

(f) The abolition of children's school cards. Guardians have decided that the indoor children shall not come into contact with adult paupers. Village, cottage, and scattered homes have been built in order that pauperism shall not reach the children formerly in the workhouse, yet the children of the outdoor poor have still to take their school cards to the teacher each week, in order to have their attendances marked, the result being that every child in that school knows whether the parents of his fellow-scholars are receiving relief. We have recently requested the sanction of the Local Government Board to a system whereby the relieving officer will receive the information from the education committee and thus avoid the reproach cast upon the child and its frequent boycott.

With regard to classification, we do not classify according to character and experience, though there is a general attempt at classification.

15. Sir William Chance, who, as you know, is a great authority on the Poor Law, and has written several excellent little books on the subject, such as "The Better Administration of the Poor Law," and "Our Treatment of the Poor," makes the following suggestions, namely:—

(a) To have an adequate staff of relieving officers.

(b) To insist on the fullest information about every case.

(c) Having got a good officer, back him up through thick and thin.

(d) To make the relief adequate to meet the necessities of the case.

(e) To insist on frequent and regular visiting of any case.

(f) To work in close co-operation with charitable agencies.

16. The extent and effect of industrial societies and sick clubs as preventatives of pauperism is undoubtedly very great indeed. The following striking figures appear to me more eloquent than argument.

17. The chief registrar of friendly societies, in his report for 1905, just issued, states that the membership of societies furnishing particulars increased by 644,000 during the year 1904, while the accumulated funds increased by nearly 7,000,000 sterling.

18. In the aggregate, the 50,000 institutions in respect of which the chief registrar's office exercises statutory functions, show a total membership of close upon 30 millions, and accumulated funds amounting to 402½ millions sterling, an increase since 1897 of 6½ millions of members, and of 96 millions of funds, or, making allowance for probable duplication, an average sum of approximately £15 for each person availing himself of the means of encouraging thrift, represented by the institutions in question.

19. One friendly society alone, the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows, has now a capital of £12,953,570 16s. 9d. During the past twenty-six years the funds have increased by £7,340,848 10s. 11d. In the same period the interest has yielded no less than £7,311,109 11s. 8d. What the state of pauperism would be in the country were it not for these thrift societies may from these and similar figures which might readily be piled up be better imagined than described.

20. During my six years' membership of the board very few members of the large permanent affiliated friendly societies, such as the Oddfellows, Foresters and Druids have made application for relief. On the other hand, a considerable number have belonged to slate clubs, shop clubs, and dividing societies, which have broken up and left the member in sickness, old age or distress, without succour or support.

21. Most friendly societies have a rule that members in workhouses or lunatic asylums shall not pay contributions to or receive benefits from their lodge. The rule generally reads as follows: "Should a member who is financial in the lodge, become afflicted with insanity, duly certified, the sick allowance of the lodge shall be paid the same as if the member were bodily afflicted. But if a member is in a workhouse or lunatic asylum at the charge of any parochial board, no sick pay shall be allowed unless he has a wife or children or some other relation dependent upon him for support, when the amount due shall be paid for their relief and maintenance; provided that in all such cases as above the said member shall be kept financial in his lodge."

22. Poor Law guardians cannot, therefore, annex the sick pay of any member.

23. I was elected a member of the Ecclesall Board in March, 1901, together with two other friendly society candidates, Bro. George Abbott of the Foresters, and Bro. James MacLaurin of the Rechabites. The friendly societies of that time believed that in some cases thrift was penalised, and that the amount a friendly society member was receiving from his lodge was taken into consideration in granting out-relief. The Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1894, made it optional with boards of guardians as to whether or not they should take into consideration the income an applicant had from his friendly society. To make deductions from the Poor Law allowances when such person had a few shillings to receive from his club or trades union we believed to be a tax on thrift and foresight which we determined to do our best to remove, and so to give the man who had endeavoured to make some provision out of his hard earned wages the benefit of his past sacrifices.

24. Happily the Act of 1894 was amended about three years ago, making it compulsory upon boards of guardians not to take into consideration the amount up to 5s. a member may be receiving from his friendly society. This Act we have loyally carried out, not even enquiring as to the amount receivable from his friendly society if under 5s.

42782. (Chairman.) I wish to ask you some questions first upon the latter half of your statement. You have a special knowledge, have you not, in connection with friendly societies?—I have.

42783. What is your experience in that respect?—I am by profession a friendly society's accountant.

42784. With regard to the growth of friendly societies, has their development been at all checked in recent years, or rather has their development been less of recent years, as compared with previous years?—Yes, in some of the large societies there has been a decrease of recent years, though this does not obtain in all the societies. For example, the Ancient Order of Foresters, which has nearly a million members, had a decrease of about 4,000 in 1905, and 6,000 the year before. The Manchester Unity, with over 1,000,000 members, had only a small increase, whereas such societies as the Rechabites and the National Deposit had very large increases.

Decrease in growth of larger friendly societies and causes.

Mr. James Blossom.

26 Feb. 1907.

42785. To what causes do you attribute the less rapid increase of the larger societies?—The causes are many. First of all I think the growth of trade unions, and the giving by trade unions of friendly society benefits has something to do with it. Then many of the societies were established seventy or eighty years ago when the science of vital statistics was not understood by the members, consequently they were founded on an insolvent basis. The societies have now found out that they are not able to redeem their promises to the members, the contributions have had to be increased or the benefits reduced, and that has caused a considerable secession of members.

42786. Did the collapse of the Liberator Society at all affect friendly societies as regards the joining of members?—Yes, it might have to some extent.

Effect of State old-age pensions on friendly societies.

42787. It has been suggested to us that the various schemes which have been put forward of State aid and old age pensions have also had a deterrent effect upon persons joining friendly societies?—Yes, I believe that is so.

42788. Would you say that is so?—Yes, I believe that is the effect of them, especially in one direction; some of the societies which are now trying to make provision for superannuation and old-age pensions, the Foresters and the Manchester Unity, found that when there was the idea that pensions were going to be given by the State, the members did not see the necessity of making the provision for it themselves.

Estimate of total membership of friendly societies.

42789. You say in your statement that the total membership of friendly societies is close upon 30,000,000; of course that means that a large number of persons are counted several times over?—Yes, that is an extract from the last paragraph of the chief registrar's report published November 30th last year, and includes all kinds of societies, with which the registrar of friendly societies has to deal, such as building societies, trade unions, co-operative societies and saving banks, as well as ordinary friendly societies.

Number of persons in Sheffield belonging to friendly societies.

42790. Have you thought at all or made any calculation as to what proportion of the population say in Sheffield, do belong to friendly societies?—I am the Secretary of the Sheffield United Friendly Societies Council, and we have affiliated with us twelve of the principal Orders, and the number of members in the City of Sheffield connected with that council is 37,000, so that you may take it 37,000 people in Sheffield, mostly adult males, belong to a well regulated friendly society.

Proportion of population belonging to friendly societies.

42791. Would they all be heads of families, or would there be several members of the same family included in that?—That would include the father, and the sons who were above the age of sixteen or eighteen.

42792. That is only the male adults; in certain cases the family participate in certain of the benefits?—In certain of the societies females are admitted, and juveniles are admitted.

42793. What proportion of the population is affected; would you multiply that by, say, three?—I should say, speaking of the male adult population of Sheffield that nearly all of them belong to some kind of friendly society, but in a large number of cases, certainly half the cases, this is only a slate club or a dividing society, which generally is found wanting in the hour of the man's greatest need; so that you might on that, possibly, say half of the adult males of Sheffield belong to a registered friendly society, and the other half do not.

Effect of Employers' Liability Act on friendly societies.

42794. Just going back to causes which may have proved deterrent to the increase of the members of the friendly societies, it has been said by a good many witnesses that the tendency of modern times has been to reduce the age at which men can get employment?—There is no doubt of that.

42795. Has that affected the friendly societies by rendering such men unable to pay their contribution?—Yes, it has; there is no doubt about it. The Employers' Liability Act has had an important effect upon the friendly societies, particularly in the shape of the increased permanent pay as we call it.

42796. I understand you have some little difficulty in that case; the half pay, or whatever they get from the employer, plus the pay from the friendly society, some-times puts the man in a better position than if he were working?—That is so.

42797. Would not the effect on certain persons of the knowledge that it would be more difficult for them to get employment after a certain time tend to make them join a friendly society?—Most men join friendly societies when they are young, from sixteen to twenty-one years of age; and I am afraid they do not look sufficiently far ahead to the period when they are forty or fifty years of age to mind very much what happens then. Some of us have tried very hard to get members of friendly societies to subscribe for old-age pensions, but it is very difficult to get a man of twenty-one to think of the time when he is sixty-five and make provision for it. I am afraid the same operates with regard to dismissal from employment in old age. I do not think young men who join friendly societies think very much about it at the time.

42798. I assume that those who belong to slate clubs and dividing societies are, as a rule, in a somewhat inferior industrial status to those who belong to the friendly societies?—That is so.

42799. As regards the rules which friendly societies apply to their members who may be in workhouses, I assume workhouses include infirmaries?—Yes.

42800. You would say that very few members of the friendly societies seek relief from the poor rates?—Very few.

42801. Assuming a man was to get into the infirmary his sick pay would be stopped unless he had a wife and children, so that the Poor Law guardians would not touch it?—That is so.

42802. Supposing he has a pension, what would happen then? Would the Poor Law guardians be able to touch it?—No, I do not think so. I do not think the friendly societies would pay anything to the Poor Law guardians at all from their funds.

42803. The sick fund is paid to the wife and children if he has any?—Yes.

42804. It is not paid to him?—That is so.

42805. But the pension would be payable to him?—That is so.

42806. Then the guardians would have a right of charging it?—I have never known a case of that kind. The only case I know is the Caistor guardians case (Caistor Union v. Cleaver), and in that case it was proved that the guardians could have no claim. That was not a pension case, of course.

42807. You state that you were elected a member of the Ecclesall Board with other friendly society candidates, the impression being that the members of the friendly societies hardly received fair play, or at any rate were rather penalised by the policy of the Poor Law guardians?—That is so.

42808. Was that feeling general throughout the North of England or did it only prevail in certain localities?—I think it was general in the North of England. We secured representation on both the Sheffield boards for that very purpose.

42809. Do you know any other place where the same sort of action was taken?—Yes. Similar action has been taken in Leeds, I cannot exactly differentiate which of the boards in Leeds, and in Bradford.

42810. And in Huddersfield?—Yes, and in Belper in Derbyshire, in Chesterfield, and generally throughout the North.

42811. The motive, I understand, which induced the societies to act in this combination was that the action of the Poor Law guardians was discouraging thrift?—That is so.

42812. By giving less relief to a man who was a member of a friendly society than would be given to a man who had laid by nothing?—That is so, exactly.

42813. The amendment of the Act of 1894 of course has altered that state of things?—Yes, it has quite altered it.

42814. Do you think that the action of the Poor Law guardians had (I suppose you assumed it would have) a deterrent effect upon members joining friendly societies ?—Yes, we assumed it had to some extent.

42815. Does this combination still continue amongst friendly societies to get representation on boards of guardians ?—It does not now in Sheffield, but it does in a number of places. In Sheffield we do not feel we have the necessity now. A number of the friendly society men are always candidates, but they are not now officially run by the friendly societies' council.

42816. You have considered, have you not, the possibility of establishing an old age pension fund, and you have a fund in operation ?—Yes, in several societies there are old age pensions in operation. In connection with the Order of Foresters in Sheffield, with its 4,000 members there will be nearly 1,000 paying for old age pensions.

42817. As large a proportion as that ?—Yes.

42818. I suppose you would include amongst these figures those who insure themselves for an endowment ?—Yes, but there are very few do that. I should not think there would be out of that 1,000 twenty with an endowment.

42819. I thought endowment insurance was popular, that they liked the idea of getting money rather than the pension ?—I do not think it is very popular since the Act allowed friendly societies to take the savings of members. That is very popular in some districts. A friendly society, a man's Court, or Lodge, or Tent, can receive a member's savings and put them in the savings bank and accept them at 3 or 3½ per cent. interest, and the man can withdraw when he likes ; that has become popular.

42820. It is a savings bank ?—Yes, through the friendly society.

42821. What is the rate of interest ?—3½ is usually paid to the members.

42822. What would in your judgment be the effect of any state system of pensions upon the friendly societies ?—It was originally thought it would be very detrimental to the progress of the friendly societies, but I think now the national conference of friendly societies has come round to the view that a scheme of national pensions is practically a necessity, and in 1904 they themselves drafted a scheme of national pensions.

42823. Have the friendly societies accepted it as a necessity, believing it will do harm or diminish the number of members or do they think it will not affect their numbers ?—I think the societies have come to the conclusion that the question is so big that it is not now possible for the friendly societies to deal with it themselves without accepting assistance apart from themselves.

42824. If you eliminate the provision of pensions from the friendly societies, would there still be a sufficient inducement for persons to come in and join ?—Yes. I think the ordinary sickness and death and relief benefits would still induce people to join. An ordinary society offers a large number of benefits to a member. There is the sick benefit, and generally a man can have what he pays for. The usual benefit is 10s. per week for six months, but if a man cares to pay for 15s. he can have it, or 20s. Then there is the death benefit, a man can pay for any sum from about £10 to £250, and in the case of the wife any amount from £8 to £48. He can also insure his children ; there are also medical benefits ; there is the out-of-work benefit and travelling relief, there is general relief in the case of distress, and now there is added relief in case of fire, if a workman's tools are burnt or destroyed.

42825. I think it was suggested by some witnesses that the friendly societies might be helped in one sense by old age pensions, as they would limit their contributions really to the age at which the old age pensions became payable ?—That is quite possible, and that would possibly remedy the very serious difficulty from which many friendly societies are suffering, from permanent sick pay, which is really an annuity in the case of a large number of persons. It is called sick pay, but it is really an annuity.

42827. (Mr. Loch.) One question I should like to clear up with regard to the club allowance and the guardians. I think the rule is this, that in cases in which the member of a friendly society comes on the rates his club allowance may be reserved for the maintenance of his wife, or other relatives dependent on him, instead of being paid towards his own maintenance ?—That is so.

42828. (Chairman.) We will go back now to the first part of your statement. In the Ecclesall Union you say there is a large number of little masters ?—Yes.

42829. Do they do fairly well, do you know ?—Yes, but trade is not as good in our union as it is in Sheffield generally. I was making enquiries about that only yesterday, and I found out that in the Britannia metal and the German silver trade these little masters are not doing so well owing to the very high price of copper, and also the high price of tin, antimony, and generally the metals that are used for alloys. I found yesterday that tin was £198 per ton and antimony £115 a ton, so it has affected the trade somewhat.

42830. Do these little masters as a rule blossom out into something better afterwards, or do they go on from generation to generation ?—They go on from generation to generation.

42831. In their special trade ?—Yes, generally the silver or cutlery trade.

42832. One of the specialities, or perhaps the speciality, of your board of guardians is a particular method that you have for paying casual able-bodied labour ?—I do not think that is in operation anywhere else except at Ecclesall.

42833. Do you think that has been a success ?—It has been a success with us.

42834. I think the yard was visited by certain members of this Commission, and I understand the principle is that you pay the man according to his position and the number of dependents upon him ?—That is so.

42835. That is to say that a single man could earn about 5s. 9d. a week ?—That is so.

42836. But a married man with a wife and children could get up to 15s. ?—Yes.

42837. Does this system, do you think, attract people who otherwise would not come to you, or does it deter people who are not in real want ?—I think it deters rather than attracts. We have only a small number, eight, at the present time working under this system. I think there were 151 orders given last year to 101 different people to work in this test yard on this system. The advantage is that the man does not come until say nine o'clock in the morning, and on Mondays till ten or half past, and he can before that seek for employment ; if a man does not get employment before nine o'clock in the morning, he is not likely to get employed for that day ; he can go to the large works and try to get employment, and if he cannot get employment he can come and chop the sticks.

42838. The wood chopping shows a profit ?—Yes, there is a good profit on that.

42839. Do the sellers of wood in the neighbourhood complain at all ?—No, there has never been any complaint ; we do not undersell in any way, we sell just at the ordinary market price.

42840. What is the calculation upon which you pay, do you pay at the rates which are current outside, or do you pay on the assumption you must give the man enough to keep him going ?—The assumption is that the man will get just what will keep him going.

42841. Then it is really lower than what he would get outside if he were in other employment ?—Yes, if he was following his usual trade he would get more, distinctly.

42842. Do you make inquiries about the persons to whom this is given, or do you take anybody on who will submit to the test ?—The questions are asked of these people the same as any other applicant for relief. The men present themselves before the relieving officer, who asks the usual questions of them, and he then gives them an order to work in the test yard, and at the end of the day, at five o'clock, they are paid exactly what they have earned that day.

Mr. James Blossom. 42843. Supposing a single man comes, he cannot earn more than 5s. 9d. but he can earn that in one or two days ?
—Yes, but I have never known it to be done.

26 Feb. 1907. 42844. Is he allowed to go then ?—The man has to appear every day ; he must put in an appearance every day.

Ecclesall system of relieving able-bodied by wages and deterrence thereof. 42845. The married man, on the other hand, has to work the whole week ?—Yes.

42846. But the single man need not ?—The man will soon get his task done ; supposing he is done by two o'clock he will not get his money till five ; he has to stay about the place until five. As a rule it is 4 or 4.30 before a man ceases work.

42847. He gets it every day ?—Yes, exactly what he earns every day, but he can only get it at the end of the day. He is paid at five o'clock exactly what he has earned.

42848. He could not earn his 5s. 9d. in two days ?—No.

42849. In practice you think this has been a deterrent ?—Yes, it undoubtedly has. This was adopted thirty years ago now, before then there were large numbers of young men coming into the place, but there are not now.

42850. There have been doubts as to the legality of this ?—Yes, that is so, but it has been sanctioned by every Local Government Board Inspector and passed by every auditor for the last thirty years, so that we consider that has made it legal.

42851. I do not understand why this has been a deterrent. Can you explain a little more why it has been a deterrent ?—I think one reason is because of the limitation of the amount of money. It is a deterrent to the young man. That is where it acts as a deterrent. A young man does not like to think he has got to be at the workhouse all the working hours of the week and only get 5s. 9d. for it ; if the man were allowed to earn his 5s. 9d. in one day he would be very glad of it, but he cannot, he must come six days of the week to get his 5s. 9d.

42852. Does he feed himself whilst working ?—Yes. He gets no food at all from the workhouse.

42853. If a man comes in and wants work, does he work the first day without eating anything, or having any food supplied to him ?—He will have his dinner hour off, and at the dinner time he will be able to get some food.

42854. But if he has got no money, I suppose he gets credit ?—I suppose he will, at the end of the first day he will get his money.

42855. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you pay daily ?—Yes, at five o'clock every day.

42856. (Chairman.) Do you think keeping the man in after he has done his work is also a deterrent ?—Yes.

42857. The system is generally approved of by the guardians in practice, is it ?—Yes, our guardians strongly approve of the system, it is believed to be a good system.

42858. It is not expensive, apparently ?—No.

Employment—relief by guardians at Ecclesall. 42859. Have you ever thought whether you could extend it so as not to confine it to these particular forms of work ?—A year and a half ago there was a great deal of distress in the city ; we had very large numbers of men apply for work, we found then that we could not operate this system with such large numbers, so we employed them (and at one time we had over seventy per week employed) in laying out the gardens and making the roads and building the walls at our Fulwood Cottage Homes six miles away from the workhouse. We spent £1,200 in wages alone that winter in finding these unemployed work on the ground at Fulwood. We did not want to operate this system to any large extent.

42860. There has been no need this year to extend your operations in the same way ?—None whatever.

42861. When you spent all this money was it under very strict supervision, were there gangers looking after the men ?—Yes, we had one or two gangers.

42862. Was the result satisfactory from a financial point of view ?—No, from a financial point of view it was not satisfactory. We had to find all these men work ; it was an improvement in the estate there, but it was an improvement we should not have carried out just then. We had to find these men work ; some were painters and clerks and people not used to handling a spade or shovel, and they did very little work, although they all got the same pay, namely 4d. per hour.

42863. What is the maximum number of men you have had working under your special system ?—Twenty.

42864. Could you extend it beyond twenty ?—Not very well.

42865. At present you have only eight ?—Yes.

42866. I see that you use this argument yourself ; do you find the argument generally accepted by working of idea men that as they have contributed their quota to the rates it is only fair to treat that as a sort of premium or insurance money ?—That is a very common argument.

42867. It applies to every form of taxation ?—I suppose it would.

42868. Your board only have recourse to indoor relief when they are obliged to ?—Yes. The present board is strongly in favour of outdoor relief, wherever it is possible to give it.

42869. Has the amount risen much under the direction of the present board ?—Yes, I think I can give you the actual figures to show how outdoor relief has risen during the present board's time. The amount per person given in outdoor relief in 1904 was £4 15s.

42870. That is the amount of the individual ?—Yes, each person in receipt of outdoor relief in 1904 averaged £4 15s. ; in 1905 the average had risen to £5 5s. and in 1906 the average had risen to £5 13s. 6d., showing an increase per head of 18s. 6d.

42871. Has the number risen ?—The number in receipt of outdoor relief is on the decrease, the amount actually paid is on the decrease. For example, in 1906 we paid £481 less in out-relief than in 1904, but the amount per person is greater.

42872. Those figures do not convey very much, because it would depend upon the period each person was on relief ; can you give us what the relief was per week ?—That is per annum.

42873. (Mr. Booth.) I imagine the number you give as the number relieved is the average number on two days of the year, the mean number between the 1st January and the 1st July ?—That is so.

42874. (Chairman.) We may take it that though the amount per head of the out-relief has risen, the number of recipients has not ?—That has decreased.

42875. You think that, amongst various other causes that you enumerate, the Workmen's Compensation Act is contributing to pauperism, particularly amongst men of a certain age ?—Yes, I do not think there is much doubt about that.

42876. Have you any figures on that subject ?—I have here the weekly return that we get at the board meetings ; this is the Return, dated February 20th, and it shows that for the corresponding week in 1906 there were 455 men and women over sixty years of age in the workhouse, while in 1907, exactly a year later, there were 480 old men and women in the workhouses over sixty. That is certainly a marked feature in Sheffield, that the number of old people coming into the house and also for out-relief increases year by year, and has increased since the passing of the Act. I have the figures since the passing of the Act. In 1897, which was the year of the passing of the Act, we had on out relief seventy-three old men and 276 old women ; we have now 105 old men and 372 old women.

42877. Sixty years is the age you reckon from ?—Yes.

42878. It is rather at an earlier period than sixty that the Workmen's Compensation Act is supposed to have effect, is it not ?—Yes. It does affect them earlier no doubt.

42879. Should you say that the working age of the average artisan has been diminished by that Act ?—I think so. The employers in Sheffield, especially where there is much machinery, are very chary of employing aged men.

42880. Was that tendency shown at all before the Workmen's Compensation Act ? It may arise from the machinery being faster and more dangerous ?—It has been manifest since the passing of the Act; it may have been in existence before, but it was not noticeable.

42881. So far as you know your system of education has been satisfactory, and the children who have been adopted by your union, as far as you know, have not come back to the Poor Law?—That is so. We have not had one case during my membership.

42882. Are there any children brought up in the workhouse?—No, the only children in the workhouse are what are called the ins-and-outs. We have just a few of those.

42883. As regards the alterations in the law which you propose, I think the first three rather speak for themselves, and we have had a great deal of evidence in support of them. With regard to the power to detain women with illegitimate children, would you apply that only to feeble-minded women, or to women who did not come into that category?—I would apply it to all. The figures in regard to this seem to me to be very sad indeed. I have some figures here. During the past five years there have been 229 births in our institution, and 177, or 77·2 per cent., of these have been illegitimate children, the mothers of whom for the most part were mentally weak and in many cases almost imbecile. When these women leave they generally go direct to their old surroundings and associations, and return after a time either pregnant or as lock cases. I have a statement here of the number of cases that have returned. We have one woman, aged twenty-nine, with four illegitimate children, and she is again pregnant; one woman, aged thirty, with one illegitimate child; one, aged twenty-eight, with three illegitimate children; one, aged twenty, with one, and she is again pregnant; one, aged twenty-five, with two illegitimate children; one, aged thirty, with one; one, aged thirty-one, with three illegitimate children; and one, aged thirty-nine, with three illegitimate children; those are all women at present in the house.

42884. You would not disqualify anybody on account of receiving medical relief?—No.

42886. (Chairman.) Would you wish to abolish children's school cards. There is no particular need for those returns now, is there?—I do not think there is. At the very last meeting of the Sheffield Education Committee last week it was resolved that all school cards (that does not apply to pauper children, but all ordinary school children) should be abolished. That having been done, I think that is a special reason why our cards should be abolished.

42889. Is there anything you would wish to add to your written statement and what you have said orally?—I do not know whether this would interest the Commission in regard to what it costs aged people to live; this I use as an argument for outdoor relief in preference to indoor, that aged people can live, and do live, at a very cheap rate. This statement was taken yesterday from an old man who happened to be up at the workhouse for his pay. W.R., aged sixty-five, wife aged sixty-one, receiving as outdoor relief 6s. per week for the two. He was asked how he spent his 6s., and this is the account the man gave of what he did with his money. He rents two rooms, which is half a house; for that he pays half the rent, namely 2s 4½d. He spends for coal, 1s.; for light, that is, paraffin oil, 3d.; half a stone of flour, 8d.; and the barm to bake it with, 1d.; two ounces of tea, 2d.; sugar, 4d.; a quarter of a pound of margarine 2½d.; one pound of meat bits, 3d.; soap and soda, 1½d.; haddocks or herrings, 3d.; one pound of treacle, 3d.; and one pound of oatmeal, 2d.; that makes 6s. 1½d. Of course that is more than he gets for relief, so he was asked where he got his other money from. He said a lady friend frequently helped him with a 1s., so that man is able to live fairly comfortably on his 6s. with the little help he gets from his friends, and this man and woman would not go into the house on any account.

42890. (Mr. Booth.) That keeps him and his wife?—Yes.

42891. (Chairman.) They must get their clothes given them?—Possibly the friend who gives them the shilling would give them their clothes.

42892. (Mr. Nunn.) With regard to paragraph 5 and the deterrence of your test work, I think you said it had been going on twenty or thirty years?—Twenty or thirty years.

42893. What makes you think that that is the cause of the diminution in the numbers that have applied for indoor relief amongst the able-bodied?—I think it is because of the few young men who apply for work; we have practically no young men apply for work in the test yard now, and I think it is the system that is accountable for it. They do not like to be restricted to earning such a small sum of money per week as 5s. 9½.

42894. That is the argument; that is not derived from actual experience, is it? One wants to know how it is you do not fill your workhouse as you did thirty years ago. There may be other causes besides this test yard, may there not, that have been in operation?—There may have been.

42895. You do not know what is going on in other workhouses in the immediate neighbourhood in the same direction, whether there has been the same diminution without your test work?—Of course, just now there is a diminution; there is no doubt at all that pauperism, certainly in our part of Yorkshire, is very much less to day than it was a year ago.

42896. Able-bodied pauperism?—Yes; that is owing, of course, to the improvement in trade. That is more marked in Sheffield than it is in Ecclesall because the large iron works, the very big works, are very busy just now, and consequently there is plenty of work.

42897. I think one or two of the Commissioners who saw this in operation got the impression that the men were not disfranchised by that sort of relief?—That is so, they are not disfranchised. They are only disfranchised if it happens, which does not often happen, that a man cannot earn sufficient; if a man cannot earn sufficient to support himself and his wife and family, he will be given what is needed by way of a grocery order, and that comes under the head of outdoor relief. This is payment for work done, and does not come into outdoor relief at all; it comes under the wood and stone account.

42898. You have actually reduced your outdoor relief in your union by giving greater adequacy in each case apparently?—I think the reason that has contributed to the reduction is the adoption of the case paper system. That brought a large number of things to light of which we were ignorant before. For example, we found a lot of relatives who could be made to maintain, and then we found quite a number of cases that were transferable to other unions.

42899. Does your case paper system apply to those in receipt of indoor relief as well as outdoor relief?—Everyone.

42900. Do you have quite an automatic call-over of the names in every case?—Yes, every case inside the house and outside the house must come before the guardians at least once in six months, the aged cases and the asylum cases and the sick and infirm come once in every six months, all the other cases once in every three months.

42901. You adopt Sir William Chance's recommendation that boards of guardians should work in close co-operation with charitable agencies, but the voluntary agencies in Sheffield are not particular strong just at present, are they?—No, they are not.

42902. You have no Charity Organisation Society, have you?—No.

42903. You have only the beginning of a guild of help? That is so, it is in course of formation just now.

Mr. James Blossom.
26 Feb. 1907.

Ecclesall system of relief of able-bodied by wages and its deterrence.

Decrease of pauperism in Yorkshire and its causes.

Able-bodied relieved by guardians at Ecclesall not counted as paupers or disfranchised.

Effect of case-papers in diminishing outdoor relief.

Call-over of paupers at Ecclesall.

Paucity of charitable agencies in Sheffield.

Relief of children at Ecclesall and its results.

Need of power to detain unmarried mothers.

Disfranchisement should not follow medical relief.

Proposed abolition of school attendance cards.

Minimum cost of living in Ecclesall.

- Mr. James Blossom.* 42904. You do not appear to be represented on that guild ?—The board is not, officially.
- 26 Feb. 1907. Sheffield Guild of Help, and its possible effect on Poor Law administration. 42905. Have you members on it ?—Yes, in our private capacities ; as soon as it is established all the three guardians of my own ward will be chairmen of districts of the guild of help. I shall myself be chairman of the district in which I live, and so will other guardians, but the board of guardians as a board has not taken any cognisance of it at all.
42906. I suppose the existence of an organised effort in that direction would tend to alter your work as regards out-door relief considerably ?—That is possible ; I cannot say yet though. I shall watch with very great interest indeed the operations of the guild of help and see how it affects us.
42907. Supposing you had the case of a woman come before you at the board who had lost her husband and had a small family of children, would it not be better to place her in the hands of really skilful persons who had a strong voluntary organisation at the back of them than deal with her through the relieving officer ?—I think it would be infinitely better.
42908. In that way you would tend to get much more adequate relief all round with an actual reduction of out-relief which your guardians had to dispense ?—I think that is so.
42909. I imagine that these arguments in favour of outdoor relief are arguments which you yourself support ?—I think they are good arguments.
- Reluctance of workhouse inmates to leave the workhouse.* 42910. But not conclusive altogether, is that the idea ?—Take the second argument where I say that when anybody once gets into the workhouse they have never very much desire to go out again. It is a hard thing to get the majority of working people to come in, but when once they get into the workhouse it is equally hard to get them out again. We had a very striking illustration of this only a few months ago. The master was instructed at the board meeting to interview every inmate in the house—nearly 1,000 people—and ask them if they would take their discharge if the guardians granted them adequate out-door relief, and out of the 1,000 inmates only ten expressed their willingness to take outdoor relief in preference to indoor. Most people dread the workhouse at first, but when they once get in they are content.
42911. Take the case of a sick man who is under the age at which he might join a benefit club, he falls sick and has a wife and children dependent upon him, it does not encourage a benefit society very much, does it, if he receives out-relief, that is to say the most agreeable form of relief, directly he falls sick. Would it not rather tend to discourage him from joining a benefit society ?—The benefit society would not want a man who was liable to illness.
- Number of cases of phthisis admitted to Ecclesall Workhouse.* 42912. A lot of men fall ill who are not radically unsound ?—I am afraid a large number of the men who come into our workhouse are men suffering from phthisis. I got out some particulars yesterday, I thought they might be useful. I find that in the last three years we have had admitted to our workhouse hospital 291 cases of phthisis. Of those cases 103 have died, 132 have left—presumably they were improved in some way, I cannot say what became of them—and fifty-six are still in the workhouse hospital. Fifty of the fifty-six are men and six are women, so that when men come in they are very often suffering from this disease, which is a common one in Sheffield and is largely caused by some of the Sheffield trades.
42913. What proportion is that 291 to your general admissions to your infirmary ?—The total number of beds in the hospital is 270 all told, and fifty-six out of 270 are phthisical cases.
- Provision for phthisis cases at Ecclesall.* 42914. Have you a separate ward for them ?—Yes.
42915. Open air ?—Yes, we have a sanatorium ; we erected that at a cost of about £250 a year or two ago, and we have quite a number of men, about fourteen, taking the open-air treatment.
- After-care of phthisis cases discharged from the workhouse.* 42916. As to these 132 people who leave the workhouse, do they leave it and get outdoor relief ?—No, they simply take their discharge.
42917. Do you think they are cured ?—They are supposed to be cured. The doctor would not allow them to go out if they were not. They are supposed to be cured.
42918. They could take their discharge ?—They cannot take their discharge from the hospital without the medical officer's sanction. If they did the medical officer would warn them that he would not be responsible for any consequences that happened.
42919. There is a very narrow circle of circumstances under which a medical man can detain a man unless he is insane ?—I do not know of cases where they go without the medical officer's certificate.
42920. (Mr. Booth.) Practically they take the medical officer's advice ?—Yes, that is so. Legally, of course, you could not detain a man if he was determined to go, but these men suffering from phthisis are in a poor way as a rule.
42921. (Mr. Nunn.) Have you any co-operation with your medical officer of health with regard to the cases of phthisis which leave your workhouse ?—None whatever. We took his advice with regard to the establishment of this sanatorium ; he came to several of our board meetings and gave us advice as to what we had better do. Notice of the discharge of all phthisis cases is sent (on printed post-cards provided by Dr. Scurfield) to the Medical Officer of Health with the address the patient states he is going to.
42922. You are bound to notify cases of phthisis in Sheffield ?—Yes.
42923. So that they come under the notice of his visitors ?—Yes ; but very little action seems to be taken, though.
42924. (Mr. Gardiner.) Very little of the advice given by the health visitors is taken ?—Cases of phthisis are notifiable, and we notify them if necessary, but I have never known anything follow the notification.
42925. (Mr. Nunn.) You came on to your board in 1901 when the Outdoor Relief Benefit Societies Act, 1894, was in operation ?—That is so.
42926. Do I gather from your statement that you had very few cases indeed to deal with under the Act ?—Very few. I think at the present time we have about three friendly society members receiving outdoor relief.
42927. That Act is practically inoperative in your union ?—Yes, there are very few cases indeed. Of course, when a case does come before us we take good care that a friendly society man gets proper treatment. We do not allow the relieving officer to say : "This man has 4s. coming in from his club." We do not allow him to put that down on the case paper. That is treated as non est.
42928. You do not think the Act has had any influence in tempting friendly society men to apply to the Poor Law ?—I do not.
42929. With regard to other cases besides these phthisis cases, is there any other way in which you think you can administer the Poor Law so as to encourage the benefit societies instead of discouraging them ?—We think it very hard that friendly society members should be deprived of their vote when they come into the workhouse, the few cases that do come in.
42930. Is not that a hardship that you would recognise as an inevitable adjunct to the Poor Law ? You want to keep the members off the Poor Law as much as possible, do you not ?—Yes ; but in the same way that preferential treatment is granted here to a man who has made provision ; we think further that preferential treatment should be given so that the man should not be deprived of his vote if he were unfortunate enough to come on to the Poor Law.
42931. It is not quite on all-fours with that, is it ? The man practically deprives himself of the guidance of his own affairs when he goes to the workhouse ?—Yes ; but he is not master of his circumstances.
42932. He ceases to be the master of his circumstances, and that is the ground for disfranchising him ? A man belonging to a benefit society, reaping the advantages of it, and living in his house outside, is in quite different circumstances ?—Yes.

After-care of phthisis cases discharged from the workhouse.

Small number of friendly society members applying for relief.

Operation of Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Acts.

Proposal that pauper members of friendly societies should not be disfranchised.

42933. May I ask whether you do anything for the training of the relieving officers?—No, nothing at all.

42934. Is nothing done to train them in their duties and the knowledge of the conditions of the poor amongst whom they have to act?—No, I do not know of any training at all for relieving officers.

42935. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Would you tell me a little more about this system of relief to the able-bodied, men? Do they apply to the guardians, and do the guardians order relief in these cases in which you employ them in cutting wood, and so on?—No, a man who requires work applies in the usual way to the relieving officer, the relieving officer gives him an order for the test yard, at the next meeting of the relief committee the case is reported in the usual way along with all other applications for relief, and the order in this case, instead of being an order of so much per week out-relief, or so many loaves, is an order to work in the test yard, and the man goes into the test yard, and there he earns a stipulated amount per day.

42936. He is paid by the relieving officer?—No, by the labour master.

42937. And the labour master keeps a separate account which does not go through the relief books at all?—That is so; it is not outdoor relief in any shape or form.

42938. A single man would be allowed to work such a time as to earn 5s. 9d. in the week?—Yes.

42939. Supposing he was a married man and had one child, would he be allowed to work longer; is there a scale?—Yes, there is a scale of the exact amount. For a single man it is 5s. 9d.; for a married man with wife only, 7s. 8d.; for a married man with wife and one child, 9s. 7d.; for a married man with wife and two children, 11s. 6d.; for a married man with wife and three children, 13s. 5d.; and for a married man with wife and four or more children, 15s. 4d.

42940. Those sums are determined by the amount of time he is allowed to work?—No, by the amount of work he does. He has to do a certain amount of work to earn this money.

42941. He is not paid so much per hour?—No.

42942. He is paid so much per bundle of wood?—Yes; so much per cwt. of wood chopped. I can give you the figures. It is 6s. 8d. per ton for sawing and cutting wood. That wood sells at 1s. 6d. per cwt. loose or in bags, or 30s. per ton.; 1s. 8d. per cwt. in small bundles, 3½ lbs. to the bundle, or £1 13s. 4d. per ton. Large bundles of about 16 lbs., 1s. 9d. per cwt. or 35s. per ton. The men work six and a quarter hours per day, and we sell about £45 worth of wood per month.

42943. The wood is sold afterwards, it is not used in the workhouse?—No, it is sold in the shops about the city.

42944. At the usual market price?—Yes.

42945. Would the wages that you are paying to those men be the ordinary market wages for the work?—No, I hardly think it is the standard, but it is very difficult to tell because most of this wood, I believe, in other parts is chopped by machinery. We have never had any complaints at all by any of the wood dealers about under-cutting.

42946. You know complaints are sometimes made?—Certainly; but we have never had any.

42947. You have done a good deal to improve the accommodation in your workhouse as far as the aged are concerned?—Yes.

42948. You have made arrangements now which make the workhouse something more of a home for the aged?—Yes. We have for the old men a beautiful new block, for just 100 old men.

42949. Have you done anything for the old women too?—Yes, the accommodation has been amplified and made very much better.

42950. About how long has that been?—The old men's block has been open about three years.

42951. Do you think the better accommodation accounts at all for the increase in the number of old men and old women who come into the house?—I hardly think so—because there still exists the repugnance to the workhouse. It is a very difficult matter to get old people to come in.

42952. But still, the number of old people who have come in has increased?—Yes.

42953. Do you think that is partly owing to the better accommodation you have provided for them?—Perhaps that may have something to do with it. Some of their friends may tell them what a nice place it is now, and they may say: "Well, you do not need to be afraid of coming in; you will be kindly treated and have nice quarters in the house." That may operate.

42954. The people would get to know there was better accommodation and better treatment?—Yes, that is so, they would get to know that.

42955. (Mr. Patten MacDougall.) One of the reforms you suggest is the power to compulsorily remove consumptives?—Yes.

42956. Is that not a matter which is more appropriate to public health administration than to the Poor Law?—Yes, I think it is. I think these consumptives ought to be cared for by the municipality.

42957. Do you think all of them, or would you draw a line between those that are still in a curable stage and those that have passed the curable stage and are pauperised necessarily?—I think the municipality ought to deal with all cases of consumption. The cases we get are very largely in an advanced stage; you see that by the number of deaths.

42958. In Sheffield, as you told us, consumption is a notifiable disease?—Yes.

42959. But nothing has been done by the municipality yet to touch consumption, although it is notifiable?—That is so.

42960. The only result of notification is that payments are made, to those who notify, for the notification?—That seems to be about the result, so far; but I think the effect has been to create a movement in favour of the erection of sanatoria by the municipality.

42961. But none has been erected?—Not yet, although there is a committee sitting to consider the matter. I think something will come of it by-and-bye.

42962. If that were so, you think that all consumptives should be treated by the public health authorities—by the municipality—and not by the Poor Law authorities?—Yes, I think so.

42963. Is there in Sheffield a custom on the part of the relief committees to discharge cases from the workhouse where the medical officer certifies them as able-bodied? Do you know about that?—Yes, in the case of a man being certified as able-bodied, he would be told to take his discharge. If the man was reluctant to do so he would be brought before the next meeting of the house committee and his case would be properly gone into; and if we thought it a proper case, he would be ordered to take his discharge.

42964. The case would be properly gone into, that is, the medical officer would certify whether he was able or not to earn his livelihood?—That is so.

42965. Is that all that would be done?—Yes; there would be an inquiry into his circumstances and his ability to earn his livelihood outside.

42966. Then he would be discharged?—Yes.

42967. How many have been discharged when they have been certified to be able-bodied? Have you any statistics?—No.

42968. Could you tell us offhand at all how many cases there are?—Not a large number. I should think that probably we may have, say, two cases at each board meeting, that is two cases each fortnight, of men that we have to order to take their discharge.

42969. That may be fifty cases a year?—Possibly so.

42970. Can you tell us whether these cases return?—In many cases they return.

42971. Not having been able to get work, is that?—Yes.

Mr. James Blossom.

26 Feb. 1907.

Question of making the sanitary authority responsible for phthisis and action of such authority as to phthisis in Sheffield.

Discharge by guardians of able-bodied paupers from the workhouse.

Mr. James Blossom.

26 Feb. 1907.

Training, salary, and examination of relieving officers.

42972. In answer to a question by Mr. Nunn, you said that your relieving officers do not, as far as you are aware, get any training in their work?—That is so.

42973. Would you advocate such training?—Certainly; in general in our case we have been, I think, rather fortunate. Our superintendent of out-relief, Mr. Dearden, who, I believe, has been before this Royal Commission, succeeded his father in the work, and in all probability his son, who is now a case-paper clerk, which is an assistant relieving officer, will succeed him, so there is a sort of hereditary succession in the business.

42974. You have not had experience outside Sheffield?—No.

42975. Do you think it would be, from the point of view of Poor Law administration, a sound thing that there should be a regular service of relieving officers who have had a training and schooling beforehand in the work they have to do?—I think it would be a very good thing indeed, just as nurses have to have three years probation, I think it would be a good thing for a relieving officer to have a probation.

42976. Do you think the salary of a relieving officer at present is such as befits an office of the kind?—They get about £130 a year at Ecclesall, and there is always a tremendous lot of applications for the position when one becomes vacant; and naturally the men who have experience stand the better chance.

42977. Have you any further suggestions to make as to what might be done to improve the present service?—I think it would be a very good thing if relieving officers were to be given a certificate of proficiency.

42978. From whom would they get it?—I suppose they would have to get it from the Poor Law Officers Association. I think they ought to institute examinations for that kind of thing. The Local Government Board would be asked to appoint representatives on Board of Examiners.

42979. (Mr. Nunn.) I suppose they might train for a period under other relieving officers having experience and capacity?—Yes, if all unions adopted the case-paper system like we have it, it would require certain assistant relieving officers, and I think if they served a few years in that capacity they would be then fitted to take the responsible position.

42980. (Mr. Gardiner.) For the purpose of the examination the Local Government Board might be better?—Certainly.

42981. (Mr. Loch.) Have you heard of examinations by the School of Sociology for relieving officers, and others, in order to give them certificates?—No, I do not think I have.

Figures as to increase of pauperism at Sheffield.

42982. It has been begun already. With regard to the pauperism of Sheffield, the figures I see, exclusive of lunatics, on January 1st, 1902, indoors are 706; on the January 1st, 1906, they are 953?—That is so.

42983. And the outdoor figures are 1,007 as against 1,303?—Yes.

42984. So that there has been a steady increase on both heads?—You will observe there has been an increase up to January 1st, 1905, then a decrease.

42985. True, but presumably there must be a certain amount of ups and downs; taking that span of years there is an increase of about 300?—Yes.

42986. There is an increase in the intervening years leading up to that, with that one exception?—Yes, I do not know whether you have seen these charts which were prepared by Mr. Bagenal and our clerk, but they show in a very striking way that right through there has been a steady increase, the only decrease being last year. (Produced.)

42987. Where is the turn of the curve for the rise?—It starts to rise in 1900 and continues rising till 1905.

42988. That is a little earlier than appears in your Report, it starts there in 1902?—Yes.

Increase of Poor Law expenditure at Sheffield.

42989. If you take the expenditure for the years put down here, there is an increase from £11,104 in the maintenance to £13,165?—Yes.

42990. And in the out-relief £4,903 becomes £6,053?—Yes.

42992. Do you think these figures rather bear that out?—Yes, they do, but as far as the average cost per head of indoor relief that is going down.

42993. I will come to that presently. To turn to the question of cost you use the argument that the cost of the indoor relief being so much greater than outdoor relief, outdoor relief is better?—Yes.

42994. It is rather remarkable, is it not, how much the cost of these two go up together? Here you have your cost of indoor relief mounting by £2,061 according to this statement, and you have your outdoor relief mounting by £1,150; in both cases that comes to very nearly 18 per cent.?—Yes, but in one case it is due to the more generous amount given as outdoor relief, and in the other case there is a reduced cost of maintenance.

42995. That is so, but your numbers in receipt of outdoor relief are also increasing?—They were.

42996. Taking these five years, it is too short a period, one would think, to count the last year only, I think your chart bears that out?—Yes, for half a dozen years there was a continuous increase both indoor and outdoor.

42997. If you applied, as is suggested by Sir William Chance, or those who take that argument, a workhouse test more severely, fewer would apply for out door relief, would that not follow?—We do apply the workhouse test in doubtful cases.

42998. Have you any other policy than that?—No, if we think a case is unworthy we simply give an order for the house.

42999. Then the house is really what you may call a test of the unworthy?—Yes.

43000. It is not at all a test of what you might call the middle class, who are not entirely unworthy and are not entirely good, who might be pushed to a little more independence if they had not the option of relief?—I think the policy of relieving officers is to keep down their outdoor lists as much as ever it is possible, and wherever there is a doubtful case at all they urge the guardians to apply the workhouse test, and if the guardians think it is a doubtful case they do.

43001. In the case of widows who are recipients of this out door relief, do you find that they continue for a very long period to have it? Do you find that when the children grow up the widows remain dependent?—No, we do not find that. A large number of these widows are, in my opinion, very independent, and as soon as they can manage without the outdoor relief they are glad to do so. Of course, if we find that a widow has children growing up the moment we think those children are earning sufficient to keep her and themselves we stop the relief.

43002. How do you check that, have you a regular call-over for all widows?—Yes, every widow under sixty must appear before the relief committee once in three months.

43003. You think that is a sufficient check?—Of course, the relieving officer is constantly calling at the house, and he sees these widows every week when they come for their relief.

43004. What would a widow with four children get from you?—There is no hard and fast line, but there is a kind of understanding that a widow should keep herself and one child. I am not going to defend this understanding, because I do not believe in it myself; so, consequently the widow would get for her four children 4s. 6d., which is three 1s. 6d., and three loaves worth 5d. each; 4s. 6d. outdoor relief and three loaves.

43005. That is the total?—Yes, that is the total she gets, which I think you will agree is not sufficient.

43006. Do you find that these widows are earning money to make up the difference?—Yes, they are, they go out washing and take in washing, or go out charring, and make up the difference in that way.

Extent of out-relief to widows.

Call-over of widows in receipt of relief at Ecclesall.

Rate of relief to widows with children at Ecclesall.

43007. Does the relieving officer know what that difference is?—Yes, he tries to ascertain how many days of the week the widow works out.

43008. He puts the case to you as sufficiently relieved because of what is coming from other sources?—Yes. He says, this woman is working say two days a week, for which she gets 4s., and, with the 4s. 6d. you have given and the loaves, the woman will be able to get along.

43009. Do you get relations to help at all in those cases?—If there is anybody who can be made to maintain we do, of course.

43010. Is the charity of Sheffield of a type which would bring her money also?—Yes, in all probability she would get something from the parish organisation.

43011. Is that reported to you?—Yes.

43013. With regard to the cottage homes, all your children are sent there now?—Yes.

43014. What is the capital cost of your cottage homes? What did they run to a bed?—I do not think I can tell you that; I know what the cost of maintenance for the last year was, it was 17s. 6d. per head per week. It is only fair to say that another quarter has passed since then, and the expenditure for the last quarter amounts to 13s. 11d.

43015. Where did the difference come in?—There were a lot of charges in the first year that naturally will not occur again; the laying out of the grounds, for example, will not occur at any future time. That amounted to 2s. 3d. per week per child, and that was all paid out of current revenue.

43016. I notice it is suggested here that your accounts will be credited, or there is an expression of a hope that the council will be credited, with several county council grants for industrial training. How do you get those grants; under what head does the county council pay the cottage schools of the Poor Law guardians that money?—Under the head of technical training; for example, they have started a band for the boys; they say they can get from the county council sufficient to pay the cost of this foster father; but, as a matter of fact, I am not a member of the cottage homes committee.

43017. Is it under the plea of technical education?—They call it industrial training; they say they can get these grants. I know the board made a grant of £25 for the cost of the instruments. They were told, "We shall soon get that back again."

43018. About the old-age pensions; you have been a student of this subject for some time. Do you know whether the friendly societies as a whole, apart from discussing the thing in their general meetings, have taken any combined action at all to make provision for old-age as between society and society?—The friendly societies have what they call the National Conference; it consists at the present moment of representatives of thirty-two societies having 2,894,004 adult members. The Manchester Unity, which, as you know, has over a million members, withdrew from the conference a year or two ago, so they are not counted in these figures. The conference has discussed this question time after time, and as a result of their discussions formulated a scheme of old-age pensions of their own in 1904, but nothing has come of that. They also passed a resolution asking if every society connected with the conference would be willing to pass a law that no new members should be admitted to the society unless they contributed for old-age pensions. That has been before the societies but very few of them have given their assent to the proposition.

43019. That is to say, they have the alternative of joining societies where that would not be a condition?—Yes.

43020. You think that is quite an exception?—Yes.

43021. The scheme that you refer to as put forward by the friendly societies was a scheme of subvention, was it not?—Yes.

43022. That the old-age pensions should be given when they got to the age of sixty-five?—The idea was that at sixty-five all sick pay should cease and old-age pensions be paid, and that the amount so paid should be subsidised by the State.

43023. Is that at all a scheme which is accepted in friendly societies generally?—It has been formally accepted by the conference as their scheme, and therefore I suppose it is officially supposed to represent the feeling of the friendly societies members, but as a matter of fact this matter is never fairly discussed at the annual meetings; the meetings seem to be afraid of it.

43024. You talk of a million members connected with the Manchester Unity and so on; has any suggestion ever been discussed by which all the societies might join together and form, as it were, one large insurance society for this purpose?—I have never heard of that suggestion.

43025. Has it ever been discussed whether the system of collecting by house visiting might be adopted as against the present rather loose system of collecting through members, and so increasing the society in that way?—That has been mentioned. It is in operation in connection with a large number of juvenile societies. I think it is a possible development of friendly society work. I know several very large juvenile societies which are prospering under that system of collection. It seems to me only a question of time before it will be adopted for the adult societies, but it will not be yet.

43027. That is all the societies, excluding the Manchester Unity?—Yes; they also paid out in death claims £423,582; and in relief grants for five years, 1901–5, such societies as made returns paid out £312,760; that is in relief; that is when men who are out of work or for other reasons are not able to pay their contributions. Some of the societies have given returns as far back as thirty years. I find that in thirty years the Foresters have disbursed for these relief grants £757,250. So that a great deal is being done to assist people in distress; but these societies do not reach at present the lowest strata of the working class, that is the difficulty.

43028. Nor can it be said, can it, that the friendly societies have taken any steps to make themselves competent to deal with the old-age pensions as a whole?—No, they have not; the matter has always been shelved by the great bulk of the societies.

43029. At the same time parallel with them has gone forth the agitation for old-age pensions, supported by a different group at the outset, namely, the trade unions and the Labour people?—That is so.

43030. So there have been two channels, one rather opposed to the pensions system and the other very much in favour of it?—That is so. There is no doubt at the outset the friendly societies were much opposed to State pensions, but the great bulk of the friendly society people have now come to look upon them as inevitable and acquiesce in what they cannot prevent.

43031. They have done very little to meet it by re-organisation on their part?—They have tried to get new members, but that has generally been a failure, so they have given up the effort.

43032. Do you think the demand for the pension is a demand bona fide at sixty-five, or would it be more natural, in view of what you said about the Workmen's Compensation Act, earlier than that?—There is no doubt the bulk of the working men think it ought to be earlier than sixty-five.

43033. Sixty?—Yes.

Increased claims on friendly societies for

43034. No question has been raised as to the means of meeting such a demand; they have taken it for granted that the means are forthcoming; is that so?—Yes, they have said it ought to come out of income tax and increased death duties and that kind of thing.

43035. Is the experience of the societies this: that the liability to infirmity which affects the ability to work, and therefore suggests a pension, is greatest from fifty-five upwards?—Yes, every fresh compilation of experience of friendly societies proves two things: first there is a considerable increase in the duration of life, second that there is a more remarkable increase even in the extent and duration of permanent sick pay. Perhaps I had better explain. In an ordinary friendly society a sick man gets his full pay, let us say 10s. per week, for twenty-six weeks. He then receives his reduced pay, which may be 7s. 6d. or 5s., for another twenty-six weeks. Then he is entitled to permanent pay, which may be 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 4s. or 5s. That permanent pay continues until the man is able to resume his occupation. If he is an old man of sixty or sixty-five the chances are he never is able to resume his occupation, and it becomes practically an annuity. Our experience proves there is a great growth in this direction, because the man is living longer, life is being prolonged at that age when he gets relief, and consequently the societies are suffering very much from it.

43036. You would say that this demand is arising at the age of fifty-five for permanent relief?—Yes, from fifty-five.

Tendency to decrease qualifying age for old-age
pensions.

43037. Does it not follow that none of the proposals for old-age pensions that have hitherto been put forward meet the actual need, as a whole at any rate?—Yes, that is so. Supposing the Government brought in an old-age pension scheme at seventy, I am quite sure there would be an outcry to get it sixty-five, and if it got to sixty-five then there would be an outcry to reduce it to sixty, and then to fifty-five. That would be the general progression.

43038. The need once recognised would not be met until the earlier age in life was reached?—That is so; pensions at sixty-five would not meet the whole of the need, that is quite certain.

43039. It is not merely a question of agitation, but a question of logic?—Yes.

Possibility of old-age pensions by
societies.

43040. Have you yourself any suggestions on this subject, has one proposal seemed to you better than another, or any modification that can be introduced?—Of course my solution all along has been that friendly society members should provide this for themselves; they might provide it for themselves if they would agree to the cessation of sick pay at a given age, sixty-five is the age always mentioned, but as you say it will have to be earlier than that. If they would agree to that they could, by paying a small extra contribution in the earlier years, meet it. A young man of eighteen, by paying an extra 1d. a week, could secure 5s. at sixty-five. That is the solution I have always advocated.

43041. There is a strong feeling against this contribution in any form, that this 1d. should be provided?—Yes, there would be a great deal of opposition to it.

43042. It would have no chance, in your opinion?—I do not think so.

43043. Therefore it comes to a question of leaving it to the will of the people entirely with the consequences, or having a State system which requires of them, except so far as they may pay rates and taxes, no kind of payment?—I have arrived at the conclusion that the solution of this will have to be left to the State; the friendly societies cannot operate it.

Increase of old-age pauperism at Ecclesall
and its causes.

43044. (Mr. Chandler.) In regard to the increase of old-age pauperism in your union during the last ten years, has the population remained stationary, or has there been a large increase?—There is a steady increase in population.

43045. Has the increase in old-age pauperism been out of proportion to that, or has it been about the same proportion?—I think it has been a little in excess. I have diagrams here which do not show the increase of old-age pauperism, but the increase in population, and the increase in outdoor and indoor relief.

43046. You would expect an increase of pauperism coincident with the increase of population?—It would not necessarily follow, because ours is a residential district mainly, and the increase has been in the residential part, not in the working class part; the working class part is actually decreasing, because the working class houses are being turned into workshops.

Increase of old-age
pauperism
and its causes.

43047. You said in your opinion the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897 was responsible for this increase in old-age pauperism, and you submitted a statement; is your opinion based solely on the statement of the old people in the workhouse?—No, it is based on what the people tell you themselves, it is the old story they tell you week by week.

Workmen's Compensation Act as cause of pauperism.

43048. Just statements that are casually made by people?—You will ask them where they worked and how long they worked, and they will tell you where they worked for forty years, and if you ask, "Why are you not working there now?" they say, "Oh, I have got too old."

43049. There is a far greater increase of women than men, and the Compensation Act would hardly affect them?—That is so.

43050. You do not attach very much importance to that statement?—Of course some women do work in Sheffield, there is the burnishing, that is work that is done by women in the silver trade.

43051. With regard to friendly societies, in answer to the Chairman I think you mentioned that one of the causes operating against the increase of membership of friendly societies is the fact that many trade unions provide similar benefits. I assume you see no objection to this so long as there is provision for such contingencies made by the men?—No, but the difficulty is here, that the trade unions provide these benefits at less than cost price, that is to say there is not the distinction between the trade funds and the benefit funds that there ought to be, one fund is used to help the other. If these trade unions put these benefit funds on a sound financial basis and charged an adequate contribution to meet the benefits promised, of course there would be no objection, but unfortunately they do not.

Trades
union benefits prejudicial to friendly societies, an reasons
therefor.

43052. But I assume that the trade unions you have in your mind which provide those benefits also provide the funds by means of increased contribution whenever necessity arises, known as levies?—Yes, the levies amount to a large amount.

43053. That means the men themselves have to pay for it, although the union does not separate the trade union objects from the benefit society objects?—I think in some cases they have had difficulties. I think many of the trade unions are in difficulties about this superannuation allowance, and they talk of reducing it. I know in some of them there are motions to either stop or reduce the superannuation benefit.

43054. You mean the liability is increasing so rapidly that it is getting rather more than they can bear?—That is so.

43055. And the men themselves begin to get reluctant to pay the necessary contribution to secure it?—That is so.

43056. I suppose there is no rule in the friendly society to prevent men belonging to a trade union which provides these additional benefits during sickness?—None whatever.

43057. Have you any information as to the proportion who belong to each?—I have not the figures here, but they are all given by the Registrar of Friendly Societies in his Annual Report.

Number of men belonging to friendly societies and trade unions.

43058. In your experience, do you find that a man who belongs to a friendly society would, as a rule, belong to his trade union, if he had one in his trade?—Yes, that is so.

43059. In that sense they are providing slightly extra in the case of sickness?—Yes, the ordinary respectable working man will belong to one friendly society and his trade union.

43060. (Chairman.) Would members of trade unions be included in that 30,000,000 referred to in the Registrar of Friendly Societies' account?—Yes, and the co-operative societies too.

43061. (Mr. Chandler.) Did I understand you to say in reply to the Chairman that you thought the Workmen's Compensation Act had some effect upon the experience of friendly societies with regard to sick pay?—Yes.

43063. Would not the safeguard of medical certificates protect you in that respect?—I am afraid that many medical officers are very lax in this matter of certificates. If a man has an accident, though it is only a slight one, he says he cannot work and the medical officer is bound to give him a certificate. These medical officers are only paid a very small sum, 3s. or 4s. a year per member.

43064. In respect to the feelings of the members of friendly societies generally with regard to State pensions for the aged, is it the fact that friendly societies were agitating, and successfully agitating, for years for the purposes of that Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Act?—Yes.

43065. That really is increasing the sick pay of the men 5s. a week?—The object of that was that the person who was a member of a friendly society should not be placed in a worse position than a man who was not a member of a friendly society. We have very clear cases where, say, two men presented themselves before the relief committee; one man never saved at all, and he got, say, 5s. a week; there was another man who had saved, and got 2s. 6d. from his club. The guardians only gave that man 2s. 6d., and the friendly societies felt it was very wrong in a case like that, and that caused the agitation.

43066. Their object was to get an increase on what it considered the insufficient amount of 5s.?—Just so.

43067. So there must be a very large number of people who are not fit subjects for the receipt of sick benefits who are yet too old to work and have nothing coming in; I mean to say, you only pay in case of absolute sickness?—When they are old you cannot distinguish between sickness and old age. As a matter of fact the friendly societies do not in reality differentiate between the two. If a man is not able to work he gets his sick pay.

43068. Would the friendly societies object to the State subsidising that by a few shillings a week?—No, I think the friendly societies would agree to that and they would welcome it.

43069. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards that labour yard in the workhouse about which Sir Samuel Provis asked you, would you tell me who superintends it?—A sergeant of police, Sergeant Machin.

43070. By whom is he paid?—By the Watch Committee of the city, and they claim his wages back from us.

43071. From the guardians?—Yes.

43072. The guardians pay the Watch Committee, and so it appears in the guardians' accounts?—It does.

43073. Under the head of salary?—Yes.

43074. How much is he paid?—£133 1s. 8d.

43075-6. And the auditors never call attention to that?—No.

43077. (Dr. Downes.) In paragraph 10 you refer to the recent story of the Crewe Railway Works. Can you tell us anything of what that was?—I only know the story as it appeared in the newspapers.

43078. You have no immediate knowledge?—No, except from the newspapers that 100 men were dismissed.

43079. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There were one or two questions about that in the House of Commons?—There were.

43080. (Dr. Downes.) You express the opinion that a Medical person in receipt of medical relief should not be deprived of a vote, and your reason, as given here, is that if he went into a hospital he would not be deprived of his vote. Are you referring to indoor medical relief only?—No, I think it would be fair to refer to both, because it operates in the same way. It is very difficult for a person to get either indoor or outdoor recommends in Sheffield, the hospitals are always crowded and if a person wishes to go into the hospital or get outdoor treatment he has to go casting round for recommends, and they are very difficult things to obtain. When the poor men or women cannot get recommends they constantly come to the relieving officer to get them a medical order, or they come into the infirmary. It is a shame that a man for the simple reason that he has not a friend to get him a recommend should lose his vote.

43081. It is because of the particular kind of hospital treatment, is not that the reason?—Yes.

43083. If free medical relief were given to a man would it not remove from him one of the inducements to join a friendly society?—It should not, because medical benefit is included amongst the benefits of the society.

43084. Your last paragraph deals with the Act of 1894. Has that Act made any difference to the number of members of friendly societies in receipt of relief?—Very little difference. I think during the last three years I have known about half a dozen cases in Ecclesall, and we have three on the books at the present time.

43085. So there has been no serious increase in the numbers?—No, there has not.

43086. (Mr. Booth.) In the matter of work in lieu of relief which you have mentioned mainly in your fifth paragraph is the house offered at all? When that work is offered have those to whom that work is offered the option of coming into the house?—No, a man comes and says he wants work. Very well, says the relieving officer, here is an order for the test yard, go there and chop sticks. If the man does not care to accept that he simply goes away, and we do not hear anything more about him, but as a matter of fact there are very few refusals, scarcely any.

43087. You mention that before this was done there were many active youngish men in the house doing nothing?—That is the statement made to me. I have no recollection of that far-off time, but that is information given me by Mr. Dearden.

43088. The assumption is that they would prefer to be in the house doing nothing to working in the labour yard for 5s. 9d. a week?—Yes.

43089. They have not now the option?—No.

43090. With regard to the work that was done when you had the larger number of people employed at the cottage home, the work of building the walls, etc., that you mentioned, was there the same limit as to the amount received and as to the hours which were given?—Yes, there was a limit; the men were getting 4d. per hour and allowed to work eight hours a day and four hours on Saturday, so a man could earn that amount of money, 2s. 8d. a day.

43091. So it is a good deal more than the 5s. 9s. a week?—That is so, but there were special circumstances with regard to that. There was so much distress in the city at the time, and we could not find these men work in the labour yard; we had not sufficient accommodation.

43092. Was there a distinction drawn between single men and men with families?—No, not at Fulwood.

43093. In Paragraph 20 you speak of a considerable number who have belonged to slate clubs who have come for relief; are there a considerable number who have belonged to friendly societies and no longer belong?—If a man comes for relief he is invariably asked, Do you belong to a friendly society? If he says No, he is asked Have you belonged to one? and if his answer is, Yes, he is asked, What was your society? The man will tell you and it generally turns out to have been one of these dividing societies or slate clubs, and when he is asked, Why are you not a member now? the answer is, Oh, it broke up some years ago; that is the usual story.

43094. The large friendly societies do lose a considerable number of people when work is slack; they cease to pay their contributions?—That is so, but an effort is made by the friendly societies to retain their members as far as possible. I have a statement here by Mr. J. Lister Stead, the Secretary of the Foresters, in which he says that during the past thirty years the friendly societies connected with the national conference have paid about £2,000,000 in relief in addition to the ordinary fixed benefits, and that is mostly paid to men when they are out of work. The lodges do not like men to lapse if they can help it; they generally say, We will pay three months, six months, or even a year's contributions in the hope that you will be able to resume payment after that time.

43095. So they do retain their membership?—Yes, the society does not allow their membership to lapse if they can help it because of the lack of work.

43096. With regard to the effect on friendly societies' work if there were a scheme of pensions at a certain age, I gather that you think there is plenty of scope for their action in the variety of benefits which they undertake?—I think so.

43097. And there not only is that scope, but there are further extensions in that direction possible?—Yes.

43098. We had it from a witness yesterday that you might have optional claims, that you might at a certain age decide whether you would take an endowment or a pension, or whatever it might be, so that according to the circumstances of life of the subscriber he could fix later on what the form of the benefit was to be?—I think there are possibilities of great amplification in the work of friendly societies.

43099. It would be entirely untouched by any scheme of pensions, especially if it came at an old age?—Just so.

43100. To some extent the responsibility that they would be relieved of the rather unknown responsibility of the extent of sick pay at old age is a relief that would be to their benefit?—The societies would be very glad to be relieved of old age sickness.

43101. Because it is an almost unknown burden?—Yes.

43102. And it has not really been paid for?—None of the ordinary contributions paid is for old-age pensions of that kind.

43103. So that a small pension coming in which would relieve them of that would be a substantial benefit to the friendly societies?—From that point of view it would.

43104. And it also would enable them to concentrate their efforts on the other means of thrift?—Yes.

43105. And from that point of view you are not hostile, or do not object to national pensions?—For a long time I very strongly advocated that these things should be done by the societies, but I have come to the conclusion that the societies cannot or will not do it, and that the State, therefore, must step in and do it; and that it will not be an unmixed evil to the societies.

43106. But you are afraid of its being the beginning of extensions which would be harmful?—That is so.

Question of qualifying age for old-age pensions.

43107. Do you think there would be financially any possibility of lowering the age to the years with which at present the friendly societies have to deal, fifty-five, sixty, and so on?—This is a matter entirely for the Chancellor of the Exchequer; I think he would hesitate a very long time before he gave pensions at fifty-five. Question of qualifying

age pensions

43108. Another reason for making a late period, you think, would be that sickness and inability to work and lack of employment, all the three of which are provided for either by friendly societies or trade unions, apply to the years from fifty-five to sixty-five far more than they apply to the years after seventy, for instance. The chance of work is very small at seventy?—Very small indeed. When a man gets to seventy you can assume he will be permanently on the sick fund of his society.

43109. Therefore, sickness as resulting in inability to work is mainly a fear of the earlier years?—Yes, it is. When you get into old age it is almost impossible to differentiate between what are old age claims and what is sick pay.

43110. Does that not, although it is a little difficult to put an exact logical point to it, seem to suggest that the age really of the end of work, sixty-five or seventy, would be the time at which a national pension ought, if done at all, to begin—when work was past and sickness was no longer the cause of financial difficulty?—Yes; but there is no doubt that those who are at present advocating old-age pensions at an early age would not like it at so late an age as seventy. For the reason that you have stated I think that at seventy a man is past work, but at a very much earlier age than that he will find a difficulty in obtaining work. He may be able to do some light employment, but not follow his ordinary trade or calling. He will find it very difficult. It is in those years that the difficulties of the friendly societies come in; those men not being able to find employment come on to the funds.

43111. But the trade unions do attempt to deal to some extent and might do more to deal with that, which is rather their business?—Yes; the trade unions pay pensions much earlier than the friendly societies do. Pensions paid by trade unions.

43112. Certainly, for that reason?—Yes.

43113. But the trade unions can practically discriminate with regard to work; they can more or less see whether those they benefit can or cannot get work?—Yes.

43114. And have an organisation for doing that?—Yes.

43115. The friendly societies have an organisation and check for watching whether a man is malingering or not of friendly, which no national pension could have?—Yes, that is societies so. Of course men are carefully watched. Every sick member is supposed to be visited by two visitors each malingering.
week.

43116. They may not work at all; they are not allowed to work are they?—They are not allowed to work when they are on sick pay.

43117. And they are visited continuously to see that they do not?—Yes.

43118. It is, I think, as a matter of fact, at the age of sixty-five or seventy that the very great occasion for old-age pensions begins and the proportion of people who at the aged are paupers is very much lower than at sixty-five and it goes on increasing?—That is so. In our male infirm ward at the present time there are 101 men, the average age of those men is seventy-five years. High proportion of the aged over sixty-five becoming paupers.

43119. The fact that the proportion increases so very much just at that age, from sixty to sixty-five, would seem to prove that up to that age sufficient independence was possible to the bulk of the population as things are, would it not?—Yes. Then of course there is this other thing; that there is a difficulty with regard to out-door relief under the age of sixty.

43120. Quite so; but the increase comes still more at sixty-five. No doubt the increase may come to a certain extent from the better relief or easier relief they can get at sixty; but the figures show that the increase is much more rapid after sixty-five?—Yes.

43121. Does not that point to the fact that it is at about that age that their industrial resources fail them?—Yes; I suppose when a man gets to sixty-five he is not able to get any work to do at all; it practically amounts to that.

43122. Unless he has a permanent job?—Yes. If a man loses his situation at fifty-five he may be able to subsist for ten years on any little jobs that he can pick up from time to time, but at sixty-five they will fail him too.

43123. And there may have been certain savings made which are gradually exhausted?—Yes.

43124. So that very respectable people who have made savings, do come on to the Poor Law rather late, simply having exhausted the savings they have made?—Yes, that is so. I have known quite a number of cases of that kind where a man has saved £50, or £100 in his lifetime in the savings bank and has eked it out in his old age, and has then come to the Poor Law at last.

Mr. James Blossom.

25 Feb. 1907.

43125. Would not the certainty that there was a small allowance coming in even at as late an age as seventy encourage effort to provide for the intervening years for which he already provides a good deal?—I think a lot of respectable people would say: If I can live till seventy, I can get this pension from the State, so I must try to keep out of the workhouse till that time.

Dr. ROBERT WILLIAM INNES SMITH, called; and Examined.

43126. (Chairman.) You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief if you will kindly hand it in; there are one or two points of rather special importance which we should like to ask you a few questions about, to supplement that statement?—Certainly.

1. I have seven clubs which pay me at the rate of 3s. 6d. and 4s. per member per year. I have no women in clubs. There are a few boys between ten and sixteen, for whom I am paid 2s. per year. I examine prospective members and pass them, but the examination is quite a superficial one. A few general questions about previous medical history, a rough examination of the heart and general survey—a tout ensemble—and the man is passed or rejected. I am not paid for this.

2. Any man can join. There is no wage limit. Nevertheless, I do not think it is common to find people in good circumstances obtaining medical attendance through a club. Many men continue to pay the contributions when they are in good circumstances, simply out of a feeling of helping their less fortunate brothers.

3. I have no power in the carrying on of the clubs. With the exception of one, all come under the Friendly Societies Acts.

4. In times of good trade they make many members, and again in bad times they make few, and many, a great many, drop out because they cannot keep up the payments. Many men of fifty whom I have known are in no proper clubs because of this. When the good trade comes again, they join the sick and dividing clubs held at public-houses, the landlord being the treasurer. These are liable to break up at any moment and there is no real security for the members. They correspond to the "Slate clubs" in other parts of the country.

5. Since the passing of the Compensation Acts for accidents, the clubs must have lost heavily. Many labourers earning 22s. a week, who have sustained accidents, are in a friendly society paying 12s. a week, a sick and dividing club paying 8s. a week, and half their wages, 11s. a week, equals 31s. a week. Hence the worker wants to stay off work as long as possible.

6. I am surgeon for Messrs. Vickers, Maxim, Ltd. (private account), and attend all the accidents that happen at the works. They insure themselves and I see that the men return when they are fit. I am also referee for several accident insurance companies, who cover the Compensation Acts. These companies must lose thousands of pounds through no proper supervision of the injured workmen.

7. As a result of these drains on the friendly societies funds—Class A in the Druids (24s. a week)—has been abolished. The new Act will certainly prove a greater strain on their funds. The Rechabites put a man on half-pay immediately he comes into his compensation benefit. The latter society is consequently "under a cloud" in this district.

8. Again, men over forty-five are never taken on at the largest works in this district.

9. Last year Messrs. Vickers Maxim tried the experiment of examining all the new "starts." In twelve weeks I examined 286 men and rejected fifteen. The rejected included men with one eye, those with bad ruptures, bad ulcerated legs or scars indicating old ulcers, also men physically unfit. Owing to the opposition of the trade unions this rule was suspended, but the firm may re-introduce it. Vickers Maxim carry this rule out at their works at Erith, and have done so for six years.

Dr. R. W.
Innes Smith.

26 Feb. 1907.

10. Many men are idle and on the rates in this district because of their age. Epileptics cannot obtain employment. They start work—have a fit—and are discharged on the spot. I saw one man on three occasions at three different works in this district. He had had a fit on each occasion and was discharged on the spot each time.

ment for aged and epileptics.

11. The age limit for admission into a proper friendly society is forty, occasionally forty-five. After that age if a man has had to drop out of his friendly society he generally joins the sick and dividing club already mentioned.

Age-limit
societies.

12. Among the artisan class who are members of their trade unions, the above remarks do not always apply. They receive "out of work" pay, and they have old age pensions in many of them. But a trade club is an expensive thing, running to as much as 2s. a week in some trade unions. This covers "out of work" pay, sick pay, strike pay, and old age pensions.

Trade union benefits and cost thereof.

13. One of my clubs has a "laying in" benefit of 15s. The Hearts of Oak has, of course, a similar benefit of 30s.

14. As a matter of fact, my club members number about 700 or 800. There are plenty of medical men in Sheffield with 2,000 club members.

43127. (Chairman.) You have seven clubs to which you act as doctor?—Yes.

43128. Did you start those clubs or did they come into existence of their own accord?—Six of them are friendly societies and one of them is in connection with a small works in the district.

Sheffield
medical clubs and their organisation.

43129. I see you get paid at the rate of 3s. 6d. and 4s. a year?—Yes.

43130. You say as a matter of fact your club members number about 700 or 800?—Yes.

43131. That is not very large pay, it is under £150 a year?—Yes.

43132. That is for attending seven clubs?—Yes.

43133. Does that include domiciliary visits?—Yes.

43134. Is there any dispensary or place to which you go, or do they come to you?—They come to me.

43135. Then I suppose if they are seriously ill a letter from you will get them in to the hospital as a rule?—Yes.

43136. Do many of these men subscribe in their works for medical attendance; that is to say, is a penny a week deducted from their wages for it?—In one of my clubs so much a week is deducted from their wages for what they call the Works Sick Club.

43137. Certain large firms deduct a penny a week, do they not?—They deduct a penny a week for the charity hospitals, but they do not deduct any money for private medical attendance.

43138. It is a sort of compulsory levy in support of the hospitals?—The charities.

Compulsory

of hospital

43139. The charity hospitals?—Yes.

43140. I suppose they can get out-attendance there?—Yes; by having this deduction the workmen become entitled to what are called "recommends."

43141. Do many members of your clubs belong to works where they can get recommends?—All of them.

Dr. R. W. Innes Smith. 43142. So, independently of that, they have joined these medical clubs?—Yes.

26 Feb. 1907. 43143. There is no wage limit?—No.

Wages of members of medical clubs. 43144. I assume in some of these clubs the wage received by the individual is low?—Yes; the labourer will earn from £1 a week to anything up to £2 or £3 a week.

43145. But they do include unskilled as well as skilled labour?—Yes.

43146. In good times you say there are a good many members; then, you say, they drop off. None of these clubs resemble slate clubs, do they?—One of them does.

43147. It divides at the end of the year?—It does not divide at the end of the year, but it is not a registered club.

43148. You work a great deal amongst the poor in Sheffield?—Yes.

Deterrence of medical relief. 43149. Is there a reluctance, do you think, on the part of the respectable poor to apply for medical relief because it is in connection with the Poor Law?—Yes, there is.

43150. Should you say that acted generally as a deterrent amongst the respectable working classes?—I think the working classes have an idea that the attention they get from the Poor Law medical officer is not satisfactory.

43151. Is it that, rather than what is called the taint of the Poor Law, that prevents them applying?—I think so.

43152. They have no reluctance to go into the Poor Law Infirmary?—No.

43153. Are there any free dispensaries in Sheffield?—No.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on friendly societies and medical clubs. 43154. Now we come to the operation of the Workmen's Compensation Act. You think that the clubs have lost heavily because in the case of a man who has met with an accident, under the combined receipts which he gets from the society, and, possibly, his club, and the employer, he is as well off, if not better, than when he was working?—Quite so.

43155. Is it a common complaint of the societies that they lose in consequence?—Yes, it is a very common complaint.

43156. There is an instance you have given here, the labourer meets with an accident, he gets 12s. a week from his friendly society sick pay, from the sick and dividing club, 8s.—what is that?—That is a sick club they have amongst themselves.

43157. He gets something from that when he is sick, does he?—Yes.

43158. And he gets half his wages from the employer?—Yes.

43159. Really he gets this good return because he belongs to two clubs, that is really what it is?—Yes.

Cost of contribution to medical clubs. 43160. What is the average contribution a week to your clubs now, is it a penny?—No, it is more than that. I really cannot say what it is, the medical man gets about a penny a week from the club. I do not know exactly what they generally pay to the clubs for sick pay and funeral benefits.

Medical officer of medical clubs and method of his selection. 43161. Are you the only medical attendant to these various clubs?—I am the only medical attendant to these clubs I have mentioned.

43162. How do they select their medical attendant at the clubs? Do they do it each year, or is it more or less permanent?—It is more or less permanent.

43163. I suppose as long as you get on with the club it is permanent?—Yes.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on medical clubs, private firms and insurance companies. 43164. The loss to clubs, owing to the passing of the Compensation Act, in cases of accident is well-known, it is a serious and, I understand, an almost general complaint?—Yes.

43165. You act as surgeon for Messrs. Vickers, Maxim and Company?—Yes.

43166. Your experience is the same from that point of view as that of the friendly societies?—Yes.

43167. What you put here, I suppose, is generally admitted by the insurance companies and the large firms?—Yes.

43168. Are they taking any special measures now against loss; are they increasing the stringency of the medical examination?—You mean the insurance companies?

43169. Yes?—They send a medical officer to inspect the workmen.

43170. Do you work for some of them, too?—Yes.

43171. The result of this has been detrimental to certain of the societies?—Yes.

43172. We have had a good deal of indirect evidence to the effect that the Workmen's Compensation Act has reduced the age at which men, if they lose employment, can regain it. You here make the statement that you believe men over forty-five are never taken on at the largest works in the district?—At several of the large works.

43173. To what do you attribute that? Is that because of the fear of the consequences of the Compensation Act, or do you think it is that the machinery runs quicker and is more difficult to manage, and the people become more prematurely old than they did some time back?—I think it is due to the fact that when a man meets with an accident after forty-five, he is a great deal longer in recovering from the accident than a young man; and then I think he is more predisposed to an accident.

43174. It is not only that the liability is greater, but the consequences are more serious?—Yes.

43175. That is new to us; is that the general experience, do you think, of those who have worked in accord with the Workmen's Compensation Act?—I think so.

43176. The constitution not being so young and elastic, the effects of an accident are not thrown off so rapidly?—Quite so.

43177. You see a great many of these men; would you say that the general complaint or representation is that it is more difficult for men of a certain time of life to get work now than it was?—Yes, it is much more difficult.

43178. Do you think that is entirely due to the Compensation Act, or are there other causes contributing to it?—I think it is largely due to the Compensation Act.

43179. In some of the trades, the textile trade, of which there is very little in Sheffield, we are told the speeding up of machinery makes it more difficult for old people to earn their wage, but you have not heard of that in Sheffield.—No.

43180. The machinery is not of that kind?—No.

43181. You examined Messrs. Vickers new "starts," as you call it, that is, I suppose, the men coming in?—Yes, the new men who were set on.

43182. You examined a considerable number and rejected a certain number, fifteen; then you say the examination was opposed by the trade unions?—That is so.

43184. What was the main object of the examination. Was it to see if the men were physically fit, or if there were indications of old accidents, or was it to discover any traces of incipient disease which would render the master liable if developed?—It was to exclude men who had conditions which might aggravate an accident or prolong his recovery from an accident, and to exclude men who were physically unfit, or men with one eye. There was one case that happened a few months before they introduced this; a man lost an eye at one works and he received £50 compensation for the loss of that eye. He was set on at Messrs. Vickers Maxims, and he lost his second eye, and Messrs. Vickers Maxim had to pay £200 for the second eye, but the other firm only paid £50 for the first.

Action of insurance companies in connection with Workmen's Compensation Act.

Workmen's Compensation Act as a cause of unemployment.

Machinery as a cause of unemployment.

Medical examination of Messrs. Vickers Maxim's employees and result.

43185. The loss of the second eye is more serious than the loss of the first? (Sir Samuel Provis.) The result was they wanted to exclude men with one eye altogether, I suppose?—As a matter of fact they do so now. The foremen have instructions not to set any man on with one eye. I may say that Vickers insure themselves. Large firms like John Brown & Company, Charles Cammell, and Vickers, and those firms employing about 4,000 or 5,000 men, put a sum aside to insure themselves.

43186. (Chairman.) Did any other firm besides Vickers make an examination?—No.

43187. The indirect result of the Compensation Act apparently is to make it more difficult than before for men who have met with accidents or who are at all advanced in life, or who are not sound, to get employment?—Yes.

43188. Merely on account of the liability?—Yes.

43189. An epileptic, you say, cannot obtain employment?—No.

43190. I assume that is because if he were hurt during the time he had a fit the employer would be liable?—He is liable.

43191. You go so far as to say a good many men are unemployed on account of their age?—Yes. After the war Vickers went very slack and they discharged, in about twelve months, I think 1,000 men; a large number of these men were forty, and a large number of them did not get started again.

43192. In the discharge from a firm, would the old men necessarily go first; I assume not?—No.

43193. The tendency of the large firms would be to keep on their old employees?—Yes. As a matter of fact Messrs. Vickers Maxim have a very good system of giving a pension to their old workmen, and they are very good to old soldiers; they get a preference, as a matter of fact.

43194. This examination, I understand, is really in a measure a precaution against the liability under the new Compensation Act?—Yes. The examination is suspended now.

43195. Have you ever thought of any remedy with regard to this. I assume that the compensation is regulated by the amount of wage?—Yes.

43196. Have you ever thought it possible if these old men could be taken on at a lower wage, assuming the trade unions dropped their objection, that that would get over the difficulty?—I think the only way of getting over the difficulty would be to allow employers to contract out with the older men and also those who suffer from any serious disability.

43197. If you begin contracting out, contracting out may become the rule instead of the exception? That is the danger. Has that ever been suggested at all by any of the employers?—Yes, one of the managers at Vickers-Maxim suggested to me once it would be a very good idea if the epileptics could be allowed to contract out; as a matter of fact prior to the 1897 Compensation Act Messrs. Vickers had quite a large number of epileptics working and they had contracted out; under the old Employers Liability Act of 1894 they could contract out of that Act, but when the 1897 Act came into force these men were all discharged.

43198. I suppose these epileptics are good workmen except during the period of a fit?—Quite so: some of them are very good workmen.

43199. I suppose the tendency varies, but regular work would not necessarily increase, it would rather tend to diminish, the frequency of the fits?—I do not think it would have any particular effect.

43200. How old should you say that men come into friendly societies; the oldest age is not after forty, is it?—I think one or two friendly societies take them up to forty-five.

43201. But the payment is very much higher; it depends on what they pay for?—They have to pay higher, but I do not think any of the friendly societies take them after forty-five; at least I do not know of any.

43202. Going into the general subject of medical relief, should you say that the poor of Sheffield were well provided with medical relief?—I do not think I would like to answer that question. Dr. R. W. Innes Smith.

43203. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to these clubs, they evidently are of various characters, but are many of them lodges of the great friendly societies?—Six of them are lodges of the great friendly societies. 26 Feb. 1907.

43204. And only one is of the other character?—Yes. Friendly societies and question of membership in times of distress.

43205. Are you sure that a great many of the members of these lodges drop out in bad times?—Yes, I am certain of it.

43206. We have had it in evidence that it is not so; that they have a special fund to maintain their members by special assistance?—As a matter of fact there is a fund, but I believe the arrangement is that the members shall pay towards this fund, which will pay the premium when out of employment. Friendly society arrangements as regards arrears of contributions.

43207. You mean a special contribution?—Yes, he has a special contribution to pay while he is in work so that if he should be thrown out of work the society shall continue to pay his premiums.

43208. It is only those who have in this way provided for it themselves who get it?—Quite so.

43209. What we have been told is that it is entirely benevolent and it is a help for people who are in difficulties, irrespective of their having specially provided for it?—The chief friendly society in Sheffield is the Druids; the Oddfellows and the Foresters are in a small minority; the Druids have a fund whereby if a man pays so much to this fund if he is thrown out of employment the society will pay his contributions.

43210. Are your sick societies all Druids?—Three of them are Druids, and one Oddfellows (Manchester Unity), one Foresters and one Gardeners. The seventh one is attached to a small works in the district.

43211. Does this dropping out in bad times apply to the Oddfellows (Manchester) Unity and also your Gardeners?—I really do not know. I have about 800 in the clubs, and I should think 600 are Druids. The Oddfellows have practically been as they were when I first got them; they have never increased at all. Friendly societies and question of their loss of membership in times of distress.

43212. In spite of this special provision on the part of the Druids they do lose a good many members?—Undoubtedly.

43213. Is there any provision by which those members can join again without disability?—The men can join again if they are under the age.

43214. They have to pay the extra subscription for their extra age if they join again?—Yes. I have known of cases like this; a man has been in a friendly society and then a time of bad trade comes; he is perhaps forty years of age and out of work perhaps two years, he drops out of his friendly society, then he gets work, and being too old he has to join a sick and dividing slate club.

43215. There is nothing else for him?—No.

43216. The statement that we constantly have that there are hardly any members of friendly societies who apply to the guardians has to be taken in connection with the fact that large numbers of people who have been members of friendly societies have dropped out?—Yes. Number of members of friendly societies applying for relief.

43217. This is evidence different from what we have had before; therefore it is rather important; it amounts to a very small thing if all that can be said is that no one who has succeeded in remaining a member of the friendly societies comes on the Poor Law, if very large numbers have not succeeded in remaining?—Men will join at twenty or twenty-five and then be thrown out of work; in a year or two they will come up and join again. I have found it repeatedly during the last ten years while I have been in Sheffield, where men have joined the same society two or three times; they have come before me to be examined to join the same society, apparently owing to the effects of bad trade.

43218. Joining each time under worse conditions than the time before?—Not necessarily. Friendly society members becoming members of slate clubs.

43219. But finally, being unable, or unwilling, to pay the enlarged subscription they join an ordinary dividing club?—Quite so.

Dr. R. W. Innes Smith. 43220. That is a common experience?—That is my experience.

26 Feb. 1907. 43221. I think you mentioned that there was some dissatisfaction with the medical service under the Poor Law with regard to outdoor relief. Do you think they would be equally dissatisfied with anything that was publicly provided? I suppose your answer is no; is it because it is publicly provided they are dissatisfied with it, irrespective of merit?—There is a popular idea, I think, that the parish doctor does not look after them properly.

43222. Irrespective rather of the true merits of the service that he renders?—Quite so.

Friendly society and other benefits make sickness an advantage. 43223. (Dr. Downes.) With reference to paragraph 5 of your statement, has any check been suggested on men making a good thing of sickness in the way you describe there?—No, I do not think anything has been suggested.

43224. I suppose that the action of the Rechabites was aimed at checking that?—Yes, it was aimed at that.

Deception by workmen as to their age. 43225. Have you found any tendency on the part of men passing middle age to disguise their passing age?—Yes, I think so.

43226. What do they do; it is alleged they use hair dyes, and that sort of thing; I do not know whether you have come across any example of that?—I would not like to answer that particularly, but I think they do.

43227. (Chairman.) Have they as a rule to state their age when they are employed?—Yes, every man states his age.

43228. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do they require any certificate?—No, I am speaking of the large works.

43229. (Chairman.) Should you say that the age given by the older men is as a rule accurate. Have you ever had reason to doubt it?—I think so, sometimes.

Risks of employment of epileptics as workmen. 43230. (Dr. Downes.) With reference to the epileptics who were employed by Messrs. Vickers-Maxim before 1897, was the proportion of accidents amongst that class undoubtedly larger as compared with the others?—When the epileptic has his fit he generally has an accident, he generally falls down and perhaps has a scalp wound, or a comparatively trivial accident.

43231. Did you find any undue excess in the proportion of serious accidents?—I was only employed with Messrs. Vickers from January 1st, 1898, so that I was only six months under the old régime before the Workmen's Compensation Act came into force on July 1st, so I could not really say.

43232. Your experience does not go far enough back to answer the question?—No.

After-careers of lapsed members of friendly societies. 43233. With regard to the men who join and drop out and rejoin, do some of those men obtain Poor Law relief in the interim?—I could not say.

43234. Would that obtaining Poor Law relief disqualify them rejoining?—No.

43235. With regard to the pensions which are granted to old workmen in those firms, is continuous employment necessary for those pensions?—Yes.

43236. (Mr. Chandler.) You state here that Messrs. Vickers, Son & Maxim insure themselves, do they also provide for payment in case of sickness of workpeople?—No.

43237. There is no sick club in connection with the works?—The workmen have one or two little sick clubs in the different shops. There will be a club, say, in the gun shop, and a little club amongst themselves in the armour-plate shop; another in the shell shop; they are connected with the workmen, not with the employers at all.

43238. It is simply with regard to compensation arising from injuries under that Act that the employers insure themselves?—Yes.

43239. In the case you gave us where the man lost one eye, I suppose the other eye was injured, or he would not have got compensation for the loss of that eye? Do you know whether the other eye was injured?—I know he lost one eye at Messrs. Firths. I know I examined him on behalf of the Employers' Federation, and he received £50 for that one eye; two years afterwards he was employed at Messrs Vickers, and at two in the morning I saw him, and he had lost his only eye, and Vickers had to pay £200 for that.

43240. I understand that, but evidently the employers' arrangements for compensating the workmen were more liberal than the Act, because it is a rule that if a man after he recovers from the illness from the loss of his eye is able to resume work with one eye, there is no compensation?—Yes, there is compensation; the man is not so good a man as he was before, and he is entitled to a substantial sum of money because he is not as good a man as he was prior to the accident. If a man loses one eye he is entitled to some sum of money for the loss of that eye apart from his wages; immediately he resumes employment he is entitled to what is called "substantial compensation" for the loss of that eye.

43241. If the employer who takes him on with one eye is prepared to give him the same wages as he was receiving before, will he still get compensation?—Yes, as a matter of fact the custom with Messrs. Vickers is to say to the man, Do you want a sum of money? and the man will say No, I would rather have a job; then they draw up a document of some sort and the man has a job for the remainder of his days at so much a week.

43242. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I think you said in some cases there was a compulsory deduction of a penny a week from the wages?—For the charities.

43243. Amongst what charities is that distributed?—The Royal Infirmary, the Royal Hospital, the Jessop Hospital for Women and the Children's Hospital.

43244. It is all for hospitals?—Just for the Charity hospitals.

43245. It does not go to anything beyond hospitals?—No.

Pensions to employees by private firms.

Arrangements for sick benefit in Messrs. Vickers Maxim's factory.

Private insurance funds of large firms against workmen's accidents.

Compulsory contribution from workmen's wages towards hospitals.

EIGHTY-FOURTH DAY.

 Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. ROBERT WAITE, called ; and Examined.

43246. (Chairman.) You are a guardian of the King's Norton Union ?—I am.

43247. You have been good enough to prepare a written statement containing your views, which, if you will kindly hand it in, we will treat as your evidence in chief, and I should like to supplement that by a few questions ?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I was elected a guardian of the King's Norton Union in March, 1901, and since then have taken an active interest in the work of the King's Norton Union, serving on the following committees and sub-committees thereof :—House and Infirmary, Out-Relief, Vagrancy, General Purposes and Assessment. For more than twenty years prior to 1882 was identified with the teaching profession ; subsequently a journalist. Since 1903 a member of the Worcestershire County Education Authority. Member of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows and of other friendly societies. Joint Honorary Secretary of the National Committee of Organised Labour for Promoting Old-age Pensions on the lines advocated by Dr. Charles Booth, viz., Universal and Non-contributory.

2. The social and industrial conditions prevailing in this area are very diverse. A generation ago it was almost entirely residential. Since then, great nuclei of industrial populations have been created at Selly Oak (in the parish of Northfield), and in the parish of Smethwick. There is also a considerable industrial population in the parish of Edgbaston.

3. Selly Oak has an estimated population of over 20,000, a population gathered by the rapid development of the cycle industry and of other trades where unskilled labour finds greater demand. Wages are consequently low, the population tends to be migratory, and the general level of life is low. Considerable districts have been hurriedly built upon and the speculative builder has made the best use of his opportunity to the public detriment. The probability is that before a generation has passed away the greater part of Selly Oak will have approximated to slum conditions. The same remark applies in a less marked degree to the conditions prevailing in Smethwick. As a rule labour is cheap and unorganised, and in Selly Oak especially there is a lack of civic life and interest.

4. Generally speaking, among the upper stratum of the wage-earning class there is a deadly hostility to the acceptance of Poor Law relief in any form. The more self-respecting the individual the greater the unwillingness. On the other hand among the lower level of wage-earners there is only too great willingness to have resort to the Poor Law upon the least stress or seeming justifification. On the whole it is desirable that where it exists this barrier of unwillingness should not be broken down. Contact with the Poor Law seems to demoralise the recipient and to cause loss of moral fibre. Mr. R. Waite. 11 Mar. 1907.

5. The granting of outdoor relief to partly incapacitated workers tends to the reduction of wages and the perpetuation of the evils it is designed to remedy. In the case of those incapacitated by age or other causes, where the disability does not take an acute form, it is advisable that the "house" alternative should not be too hardly pressed and that regard should be had to the susceptibilities and wishes of the applicant when the conditions of existence can be regarded as favourable. Out-relief in aid of wages : cases suitable for out-relief, etc.

6. In the case of the better class previously spoken of the greatest need arises in times of accident, sickness, and more or less chronic ill-health disability, and it is suggested that access to the infirmary should not be through the gate of the workhouse. Lives are now lost or are continued under impaired conditions by unwillingness to accept the nursing and good feeding which the infirmary now affords to the sick because of its Poor Law taint. This institution differs from the ordinary hospital in that subscribers' notes are not necessary and it is open to chronic and other cases which are refused by the ordinary institutions. The infirmary is very largely a place "where the poor come to die" and where they may end their lives under conditions far more comforting and peaceful than are afforded by their own homes or the homes of their children. Deterrence of medical relief and proposed separation of infirmary from workhouse.

7. As a rule the amount given as outdoor relief allowance is insufficient and should be largely increased. Mr. Chaplin's circular of August 4th, 1900, expresses the correct view. This union professes to give outdoor relief in certain well-selected cases up to the amount of 4s. per week, but these are few compared with the bulk. Inadequacy of out-relief.

8. Seeing that the standard of indoor pauper maintenance costs nearly 5s. per week, and that this is the lowest level consistent with health conditions, it is difficult to see how any smaller sum can be held to be a sufficient discharge of the guardians' obligations to the recipient of outdoor relief.

9. Apart from accident, the ordinary illness of life, and bereavement, the root cause of pauperism and lunacy is drink. During six years' experience I have never been present on any occasion when an application for in or outdoor relief has been heard emanating from any applicant who has been a recognised abstainer from alcoholic drinks. On a recent occasion, when the workhouse inmates were gathered, his statement was made in the presence of four hundred and enquiry was pressed as to whether in any individual case it was an untrue statement. There was no denial or dissent. Cause of pauperism.

Mr. R. Waite. 10. Another case in point from personal experience. An ironworker residing outside the union, whose wages amounted to anything between 40s. and 80s. a week, according to the time worked, was brought home with a broken leg and placed on the only bed in the house. Ten days later the wife was confined in the same room and on the same bed. The man was a heavy drinker.

Omission to join sound friendly society, decrease of apprenticeship, and increase of unskilled labour cause pauperism.

Movements of population in King's Norton.

Status of persons elected as guardians in King's Norton.

Women guardians in King's Norton.

Difficulty as to working class guardians.

Publicans as guardians.

Proposed reforms :—

Classification.

More employment for paupers.

Decreased cost of buildings.

Codification of Local Government Board Orders.

Increased facilities for boarding-out.

Transfer of vaccination to sanitary authorities.

Attitude of working classes towards poor relief.

11. Poverty in old age is also intensified by the omission, to provide the safeguards offered by a friendly society or by joining a society on an unsound basis.

12. Another cause is the dying out of the apprenticeship system and the increased ratio of unskilled to skilled labour. In the tramp wards more than one-half of the admissions are those of labourers or of no trade whatever.

13. The population of the industrial portions of the union is largely increased by influx from rural districts. The birth-rate of the union is stationary with a growing population, i.e., the birth-rate is declining. The consequent increase of population is therefore most largely from the outside.

14. Up to the present in the King's Norton Union those elected to the office of guardian have as a rule been superior in status and intelligence to the ordinary Poor-Law guardian. Ministers, members of professions, and retired tradesmen, together with a proportion still actively engaged in their life-work, constitute the board.

15. The work of the women guardians cannot be too highly recognised or esteemed.

16. The lack is that there is no leaven of the working-class element and it is difficult to see how this can be remedied. The work of the board cannot be done at night and until some provision is made by trade unions, trade councils, co-operative societies, or by similar bodies for reimbursing wage-earners for time lost it is hard to see how this difficulty can be overcome.

17. In some boards of guardians publicans form a very undesirable element by reason of their number and proclivities. Complaints have been made of the customers of such receiving preferential and undeserved treatment.

18. The following reforms are suggested by experience :—

(a) A better system of classification as regards character, habits and physical condition of inmates.

(b) The exacting of more profitable labour from inmates. At present slight cases of hernia, chronic rheumatism, varicose veins, and other infirmities are deemed sufficient to excuse the inmate from the necessity of maintaining himself or of doing any form of arduous work while within the workhouse. On the part of those whose self-respect will not allow them to apply for Poor Law relief such physical imperfections and disabilities are cheerfully accepted as the common lot and form part of the ordinary routine of life.

(c) The cost of buildings should be reduced. To afford shelter to five paupers or five lunatics costs anything from £750 to £2,000, while the working man and his family (say five in all) think themselves fortunate if they are housed at a cost of £200.

(d) Orders of the Local Government Board should be codified. Some boards of guardians work under very adverse conditions in comparison with others. Orders of admission to the house are too easily obtained. It is far more easy to keep a man out in the first instance than to get rid of him when improperly admitted. Instances may be given from the practice of this union.

(e) The conditions under which children may be boarded out should be made more reasonable, especially as regards the amount which may be paid for such boarding-out.

(f) Vaccination should be removed from the purview of the guardians and placed under the control of the Sanitary authority of the locality.

43248. (Chairman.) You draw a contrast between the feelings which exist as regards the upper stratum of the wage earning class and those of a lower level as regards their willingness to obtain relief from the Poor Law?—Yes.

43249. You have described this "deadly hostility" to the acceptance of Poor Law relief; is it based on the love of independence and reluctance to forfeit that independence, or do you think it is caused by the belief that the treatment in the workhouse is uncomfortable?—Decidedly the former.

43250. In your judgment I suppose that stimulates those in that particular class to greater effort to avoid coming upon the Poor Law?—It does. Advantages of deterrence of Poor Law 43251. On the whole you think it is a sound and healthy sentiment?—I think it is, although it works hardships in some cases, but it is a sentiment that I should be very unwilling to destroy.

43252. Coming to Paragraph 6, you there express, I think, disapproval of the association of medical relief with the Poor Law?—Yes, that is my view. Deterrence of medical relief, e.g., as to phthisis.

43253. Do you think that the fact that it is so associated acts as a deterrent to that class of which we were just now speaking, and prevents them coming for relief?—I am afraid it does very seriously. May I illustrate my point?

43254. I wish you would supplement that; we have had evidence rather to the same effect from different witnesses stating that in their judgment the association of medical relief with the Poor Law does act as a deterrent and prevents people from coming for medical relief who need it and otherwise would come?—We have given special attention to the treatment of phthisical patients, and we find that the greatest difficulty is to induce these people to accept the treatment that we are able and willing to give them. In the infirmary itself we have been able to treat with very great advantage persons coming to us in an early stage of consumption, but the unwillingness that I speak of often prevents persons so afflicted from coming in sufficient time to receive the full benefit of the treatment that we would offer in the infirmary and by means of sanatoria, to which we frequently send our patients.

43255. The reluctance of individuals suffering from phthisis to make known their complaint has been suggested to us as largely founded on a fear of losing their employment?—Probably, and yet at the same time may I say that in one or two notable cases that fear of losing employment has not been present, because the man's fellow workmen have sometimes maintained the family while the patient himself has been sent away for the purpose of healing. Difficulties as to notification of phthisis.

43256. To use a vulgar expression, they have sent the hat round?—They have sent the hat round, and they have undertaken the maintenance in some cases for a period of six months, and repeated it for a further period of three months. There is great loyalty amongst the working classes in the case of some of these men who have been banded together in common work for perhaps months or years. Self-help among workmen in cases of destitution caused by phthisis.

43257. You have dealt with some of these cases by the Poor Law?—Yes, we have.

43258. Was the family in receipt of relief?—No, not in these cases, they have been saved from any necessity for coming to us for maintenance and outdoor relief, because of the willing support that is given by the man's fellow workmen.

43259. In any of those cases was the sufferer so far restored to health as to be able to resume work?—I am glad to say, yes; in several cases the men are now following their usual employment where, but for the treatment of the guardians, humanly speaking, their lives would have been lost. Successful treatment of phthisis by guardians.

43260. Have you ever thought out any scheme for dissociating medical relief from the Poor Law. You say you would wish the access to the infirmary not to be through the workhouse. Would you dissociate out-medical relief from the Poor Law?—No, I have not thought out any plan whereby that could be done. It would mean, I am afraid, giving free medical attendance to anybody and everybody who desired it. I am afraid, at the same time, that the provision for the non-disfranchisement of persons in receipt of medical relief, does not always operate as the law intended that it should operate. Presumably every person going into the infirmary for medical treatment ought to be saved from the Disfranchisement following on medical relief.

penalty of disfranchisement, but as a matter of fact, I am afraid in many cases disfranchisement does take place.

43261. Assuming that it was possible to separate medical relief from the Poor Law would you propose to make it free?—Subject to such conditions as to repayment as the guardians might feel disposed to impose from time to time, treating such relief as a loan.

43262. I have no doubt you attach importance to the establishment and increase of medical provident institutions?—Yes, I do.

43263. Therefore, in any scheme or any suggestion such as you adumbrate, it would be necessary to take precautions that it did not undermine and interfere with them?—Quite so.

43264. Speaking broadly, your experience is that medical relief being associated with the Poor Law does act as a deterrent on the very class who should have it?—It does, undoubtedly. I think I ought to discriminate between the habits of the London poor and those of Birmingham. Provident medical institutions and dispensaries that are maintained by weekly subscriptions do not find such ready support, and are not so common in Birmingham, in the neighbourhood under the Poor Law area that I am connected with, as they do in some parts of London. The friendly societies take their place very much more largely in Birmingham and our neighbourhood than they do in London, for instance.

43265. The friendly societies provide the means by which medical relief can be provided and paid for?—Yes.

43266. Is there any general hospital in King's Norton?—No, there is none nearer than Birmingham.

43267. You calculate that the standard of indoor pauper maintenance comes within a fraction of 5s. a week?—Does that include administrative charges?—No.

43269. Has your board any fixed scale of relief?—I think I am right in saying that for persons over the age of sixty-five we give up to 3s. 6d. a week. About three years ago 3s. was the figure, but at that time a few of us went to Bradford to see the working of the system of the Poor Law there under the chairmanship of Mr. Bentham, and we so far copied the procedure of Bradford as to contemplate and provide for an enlarged scale of out-relief. I am sorry to say that that scale has not been acted upon to any considerable extent. I do not think more than thirty or forty, or perhaps not that, are in receipt of 4s. a week at the present time.

43270. Did the fact that you raised the scale increase the number of applicants?—No, it did not. In fact I think I may say that the practice of our board with regard to out-relief is so very stringent that the tendency is to diminish the number of cases where out-relief is given, and to increase the amount that is given to individual cases, but at the same time that process does not grow I think sufficiently fast as it ought, having regard to the principles laid down in Mr. Chaplin's Circular of August, 1900.

43271. Why do you think it does not grow fast enough. Do you think it is the great time that making the thorough investigation necessitates?—I think we are in some measure hide-bound by usage and tradition, we have not emancipated ourselves quite fully yet from the old ways, though we are undoubtedly a progressive board.

43272. What you advocate is thorough investigation and adequate relief?—There cannot be too much investigation. The practice of investigating by means of a cross visitor, which Mr. Bentham knows so well about, we have found answer admirably in our own case.

43273. You would reject the assumption that has sometimes been put forward by witnesses, that where the standard of out-relief is low it is low because it is assumed that there are hidden resources which the applicant has not revealed?—I do not endorse that view.

43274. Your theory is the reverse, and what you advocate is the reverse; you would say, thorough investigation, and then give, if necessary, adequate relief?—I would.

43275. You give a rather interesting statement here as regards drink; from that I suppose we may assume that, in your experience as a guardian, there is nobody in receipt of out-relief who is a recognised abstainer from all alcoholic drink?—I did not mean that, what I meant to say was, that at the time of application for either indoor or outdoor relief, I have never met an applicant who, for any considerable period previous to the application had been an abstainer. The fact of coming to the guardians may have led to the necessity of abstaining, because of the inability to provide.

43276. I understand that you have no case of an applicant for poor relief who has been an abstainer for a considerable period?—Yes.

43278. You make suggestions with regard to classification; you would classify as regards character, habits and physical condition. Would you classify on the granting of relief by taking into consideration the antecedents as far as you know, or would you wait until the recipient got into the workhouse?—I think I should wait till I had experience.

43279. You do not classify your relief as you give it. In certain unions, Sheffield for instance, they classify A., B. and C.?—We have no means of doing that. The only means of classification that we have within the house is by means of what is called the merit ward, and the person has to establish his or her right to be treated as an inmate of the merit ward by experience after admission.

43280. Have any objections come to your notice from respectable people, obliged to go into the house, of their being forced to associate with the common herd, if I may so say, of the paupers?—No, I cannot say that I have anything definite on that point. Generally speaking our treatment of such would be that those would be considered to have the first possible claim to out-relief; and with persons whose antecedents were better than those of the ordinary case we should strain our Rules and Standing Orders very considerably in order to provide for those persons outside, without submitting them to the indignity of the workhouse.

43281. Assume that two cases came up, that the first was a notorious bad character, say a woman, and she came up for out-relief and you refused it and offered her the house, the next woman might be quite a respectable woman who from old age and so on had broken down, you would try and dissociate her from contact with the other?—Certainly. In the one case we should certainly refuse out-relief, if the person could not be trusted; we should say it would be folly to give money to be squandered and we should enforce the house in that case without any demur; but in the other case we should certainly do our best to make provision for the applicant to be maintained outside.

43282. You think that there is room for a good deal of development in classification?—I hope there will be a very considerable development before long in this matter.

Mr. R. Waite. I should like to see the system of cottage homes applied to our old people who of necessity come into the workhouse, rather than the ward system.

11 Mar. 1907. Need of reduction in cost of Poor Law buildings. 43283. You also suggest that there should be a reduction in the cost of buildings. How would you set about that? Would you have smaller institutions?—I am puzzled, I must confess. The fact remains that the proportion is as mentioned in my statement, but how it is to be accomplished I do not quite clearly see. If I were to attempt to explain it would perhaps land us in a much longer period than I should like to contemplate.

Influence of Local Government Board upon increased cost of Poor Law buildings. 43284. It seems to be a very serious administrative difficulty that the cost is steadily increasing owing to the standard of the requirements of the age rising?—I must say this, that the King's Norton Union consists of two parts, one modern, the other erected about from thirty to forty years ago. That erected from thirty to forty years ago as a building is structurally sound, it would be deemed good for perhaps twenty or thirty years more, but for administrative purposes it is bad and it is condemned. The term of natural life of that building has not been reached, but the Local Government Board compels the guardians to put up buildings of such a character that, having regard to the progress of ideas with regard to the maintenance and the separation of the poor, they will last a very much longer time than the ideas which are current at the time of their being erected. Have I made myself clear?

Proposal to make workhouse a penal institution and to provide almshouses for deserving paupers. 43285. Perfectly clear. It is a difficulty, because the other alternative would be jerry building, of which, of course, you would not approve?—Certainly not, but I am inclined to think that the workhouse should be made very much more a penal institution than it is at the present time; the people who could not be trusted should be kept there, and the people who could be trusted, even if their circumstances were untoward with regard to lack of friends or supplementary means of maintenance, should be maintained I think in smaller institutions, something perhaps in the fashion of alms houses.

43286. Those buildings could in certain cases be hired?—Yes, I see no reason why they should not.

Need of decreasing deference of Poor Law relief and separating infirmaries from the workhouse. 43287. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to Paragraph 4, you speak of the bar of unwillingness to apply to the Poor Law being one you would not wish to break down, but in Paragraph 6 you do suggest that it should be broken down in the case of sickness?—Yes.

43288. Would you include all classes of sickness? Some classes of sickness are so much connected with habits, and in fact connected actually with pauperism; I should like to know whether you would look forward to including all kinds of sickness in those in regard to which you would not wish the feeling of the Poor Law to be maintained?—I should really like the infirmary to be maintained from the rates as now, but that all persons who have not means of nursing, means of being brought back to health, should have the advantage that the infirmary treatment will give, quite apart from Poor Law considerations. I think my view is not far from putting all hospitals on the rates.

43289. But being paid for out of the rates, would you leave it in the control or under the management of the Poor Law Authority?—I think on the whole, yes, because of course Poor Law patients would form a large proportion of those sent in. If it were understood that although a Poor Law institution no penalty of disfranchisement followed, and all persons with but moderate means of subsistence were open to avail themselves of its benefits, I think the repugnance would disappear. I say to people myself when urging them to go into the infirmary, "I would not hesitate to go to the infirmary myself under similar conditions to your own," and I think I would be quite willing for the means of access to the infirmary to be made quite easy to people, because by that means lives could be preserved.

The guardians should remain the authority for medical relief. 43290. You would leave it under the same authority the application for relief, which I gather people would be urged to make, would be made to the same authority?—I do not think that would be an insuperable difficulty because the distinction between the poverty caused by sickness, or destitution or lack of means caused by sickness, is so sharply in contradistinction to the lack of means caused by unthrift and those causes which generally operate to bring a man to the guardians apart from sickness. The guardians should remain the authority for medical relief.

43291. Suppose they become impoverished from other reasons, or are already perhaps paupers, and then become sick; would the fact that they become sick after they become paupers not make any difference?—I do not think so. That is rather a fine distinction that has not struck me.

43292. In any case you do not contemplate a different authority?—No. May I say that my experience has been so—it is perhaps not a wise thing to say it is perfect, but it has been very considerable—I can see no reason for suggesting a change of authority.

43293. I rather gathered that, because you said you anticipated that the guardians would demand repayment if the circumstances of the person who was relieved justified it?—I think so; we have that power at the present time.

43294. So that it would be a kind of pauperism, though of a kind less likely to be objected to?—I should almost demur to the term pauperism in that case, because the man would make a full payment in return for the benefits he received. Question of cost of medical relief by patients.

43295. But the authority would have to judge whether he was able to make that payment?—Yes.

43296. So that an inquiry of a kind would have to take place?—I do not know whether an inquiry would be necessary, because in many cases we have repayment voluntarily offered. The advantages of the infirmary treatment are so obvious to some people that the more sensible of them will put their repugnance to its being a Poor Law Institution altogether on one side; I have known cases where people come in for the sake of getting the treatment which they cannot get elsewhere, and then a return is offered.

43297. Would you expect them in that case to pay the whole cost of the treatment?—I should leave it very much to them whether they would pay the whole or part. The whole cost is not considerable. I think you will see the cost of the infirmary only runs to something like 6s. 9d. per week; that includes medical attendance, nursing, food, and all the charges of maintenance.

43298. Not the establishment charges?—No. The establishment charges would add to that a further sum of something like 4s., but at all events we generally reckon that a sum of 10s. 6d. a week per head covers all charges incidental to the infirmary.

43299. With regard to Paragraph 7 where you say the out-door relief allowance as a rule is insufficient, how do you define sufficiency. You would take into account other sources of maintenance, I suppose?—Very often all other sources of maintenance are exhausted before the persons come out, and there is nothing but that which can come perhaps from a son or daughter, and I am afraid in many cases the maintenance of the old parent works to the detriment of the children's children. Inadequacy of out-relief.

43300. You would ignore those sources?—Unless those sources were very clear and it was perfectly certain that the drawing upon those resources would have no prejudicial effect upon any rising generation or upon any vital interests that had to be maintained.

43301. If the maintenance on which you based the out-relief was a sort of minimum maintenance, you would give them the advantage of any little benefits they might obtain from other sources?—Yes, as long as it was not too great a margin.

43302. Do you think any one could really live on 5s. who had no other resources at all?—People do. Minimum living income.

43303.—Including rent?—Including rent. King's Norton.

43304. So that you regard a sum of that sort as a minimum maintenance, and would not be too particular as regards small accessions to it?—I do not think I should inquire too closely. I should satisfy myself first of all as to the propriety of the person being found under those circumstances an applicant, but if he was justified I do not think I should have regard to what you may call the minutiae of additional sources of income so long as they were of a small and minor character.

43305. How would you consider the matter of earnings?—My own view is that with regard to out-door relief it wages at its effect relief in would be as a rule an unwise step to grant it where there was any probability of the person receiving out-door relief making any considerable additions by means of his or her own earnings; where you give out-door relief to a person who is in receipt of wages, or in receipt of income from earnings, it tends to bring down the value of his labour and thereby prejudices other labour.

43306. And where it was trivial you would ignore it?—Where it was simply a means of supplementing to a comparatively slight or insignificant degree I should not regard it.

43307. There are very many cases in which a woman, for instance, would be quite unable to earn her living and yet might earn an occasional shilling here or there from neighbours?—So long as she did not interfere with other wage earners or any market or demand for such services as she was rendering, I do not think I should interfere.

43308. In order to satisfy yourself on that subject there would have to be very close and persistent inquiry, would there not?—It would not be any different from the inquiry that is now made as far as this union is concerned.

43309. With regard to Paragraph 13 and the birth-rate being stationary, do you mean by that that the birth-rate never exceeds the death-rate, or do you mean that from year to year the excess of birth-rate in itself, the excess over the death-rate is not increased?—I did not take the death-rate at all into consideration; it was purely the statistics of the birth-rate standing by itself.

43310. You say that the increase consequently must come from outside, that must be founded upon a comparison of the natural increase between birth-rate and death-rate and the increase as shown by the census, therefore you have here taken it into account, whether you intended to or not?—I am afraid I must plead guilty to not having taken it seriously into account.

43311. If the birth-rate is greatly in excess of the death-rate, although the actual birth-rate may remain stationary, yet there may be consistently with the birth-rate not increasing a very substantial increase of population?—That is so.

43312. Is that the case with regard to King's Norton, or is it not?—I should think it is the case that there is a natural increase by reason of the birth-rate exceeding the death-rate. The death-rate of the King's Norton Union is low, in fact the figures given from time to time are so low that I fail to understand them.

43313. I would be much obliged if you would tell the Commission, because I think it would be of interest to them, what has been the work of the National Committee of Organised Labour for Promoting Old-Age Pensions; how long it has lasted and what result has come from it?—As far as I can remember that Committee has been in existence about ten years; it was called into existence by a very general desire on the part of those associated with labour to replace ordinary Poor Law relief by means of old-age pensions. I think I am right in saying that a series of conferences, six, seven or eight, have been held in different parts of the country, London, Birmingham, Bristol, Glasgow, and I think Leeds, that were fully representative of the organised labour of the country, when practically a unanimous demand was made for a system of old-age pensions on universal non-contributory lines which should remove the necessity for any application being made for Poor Law relief on the part of persons who could be trusted to handle and use the pension that was designed. That organisation has been in existence now for the number of years I have stated. Mr. Herbert Stead, the Warden of the Browning Settlement, and myself have acted as honorary secretaries of the movement, and Mr. Frederick Rogers has been the organising Secretary. I should not like to forecast or to prophesy, but I am very glad to think that we seem to be within possibly measurable distance of some beginning being made on the lines that this Committee has advocated for so many years.

43314. Have the meetings of which you have spoken been held all over the country, and have they been attended by friendly society members, or trade union members or whom?—Speaking more especially of the Birmingham Conference, which I helped to organise, the friendly society members formed by far the greater number of persons represented at the Conference in question. I think I am right in saying we had a constituency of not far short of 500,000 people, and I believe somewhere about 200,000 of those were members of friendly societies. I am sorry I have not the figures by me to refer to for literal accuracy, but that is the impression I have on my mind. The question of old-age pensions has been pursued by various local committees, and I am in receipt at the present time of a summons to a general meeting of the Birmingham Auxiliary next Saturday afternoon. The Auxiliary represents the opinion of a very considerable district of country surrounding Birmingham, and it is an object that we have pursued without any cessation, and with remarkable diligence on the part of many members, for, as I have said, some years. I regard the possibility of old-age pensions as perhaps one of the greatest means of alleviating the strain of claims on the Poor Law that is within reach.

43315. (Chairman.) You spoke of the principles upon which your society wished old-age pensions to be based. Would you just state what they are?—The principles are that the old-age pensions should be universal as far as their being granted to British subjects within the United Kingdom, that they should be drawn from State funds, and that they should not be contributory as far as previous obligation went.

43317. Who instructs the cross-visitor as to the method of cross-visiting and what cases shall be dealt with?—The clerk's office.

43318. That is really in the hands of the clerk?—Yes.

43319. Is the cross-visitor used at all as a means of checking the information that is got by the relieving officers?—Practically it is an independent inquiry and in that sense it is a check, and we find it a very useful check.

43320. How are those reports of the cross-visitor dealt with?—By the sectional relief committee.

43321. By the same committee that granted the relief?—Yes.

43322. Do the cross-visitor's reports show any discrepancies in the circumstances of cases as reported by the relieving officers?—Yes, we have; in fact the cross-visitor has brought to light circumstances that could not probably be found by a mere male officer, facts relating to the cleanliness and the morality of the home, and to the tact wherewith it is probable the outdoor relief will be used.

43323. Really the position of cross-visitor is one which you think is better filled by a lady than a gentleman?—Decidedly.

43324. It is a question of sex?—Decidedly. There are two sets of circumstances that present themselves most obviously to a man's mind and to a woman's mind. The male officer does not take hold of the set of circumstances that the woman's mind does, and we find that we do not as a rule get a complete report until the situation has been investigated by the male and by the female mind.

43325. Is she used at all for teaching people who are in receipt of outdoor relief how to manage their homes or in any way to live up to rather a higher standard?—It is not any part of our instructions to the officer that she should do it, but that she does we find is pretty plain.

43326. Is there any system of revision at all, apart from that which you have already mentioned, of out relief cases?—There is the call-over; that as a rule takes place once a year, and is very rigorous indeed, very definite.

43327. It is really a sort of yearly stocktaking, is it?—That is so, it is not a mere perfunctory piece of work.

43328. Could you tell us what would be the amount of relief that is given on an average, taking women and children: how much it runs per head?—No, I have not that figure. I would rather refer that question to Mr. Curtis.

43329. In Paragraphs 7 and 8 you rather deplore the fact that the relief given is too small in amount to maintain the people; is not that entirely in the hands of the relief guardians?—Quite.

Mr. R. Wait.

The cross-visitor: her functions and supervision at King's Norton. Revision cases at King's Norton.

Mr. R. Waite. 43330. Why do not the guardians give more if it is too small? Is there a great difference of opinion on the board?—We are one of three unions within the Birmingham area, Aston, Birmingham, and King's Norton, and we are obliged to move pretty much on the same lines as the other two neighbouring unions do, otherwise it would result in the attraction of a very considerable amount more than our share of pauperism into the King's Norton Union; we cannot move faster than our neighbours.

11 Mar. 1907. Question of amalgamation of unions in Birmingham.

43331. Does that lead you to the suggestion that the whole area would be better as one, for the whole of Birmingham, to get uniformity on proper lines?—I hope you will not think me disloyal to my colleagues or to the institution I represent, but I think it would be very much to the public advantage that Birmingham should manage and control the whole of its poor.

Proposal to make municipal and Poor Law areas co-terminous.

43332. (Mr. Booth.) By Birmingham, you mean the whole district?—Yes, what I mean is that every municipality should be self-contained and self-administrative as far as its own local concerns go.

The question of transferring the Poor Law to sanitary authorities.

43333. (Mr. Bentham.) Would you confine it just to the county borough area, there is a growing population on the outskirts?—I do not know that I would, it would depend very much upon whether the area was sufficiently large to include the whole nucleus of the population.

43334. So many really depend for their livelihood upon Birmingham industries?—Very much.

43335. (Chairman.) The municipality you said should be responsible for its poor; do you propose to hand the Poor Law functions over to the town council?—How-ever desirable it might be as a counsel of perfection, I am afraid that town councils and county councils too are overloaded at the present time.

The tramp difficulty in King's Norton.

43336. (Mr. Bentham.) Whatever the body might be that would administer it, the one area would be desirable?—Yes. May I supplement my remarks by a reference to vagrancy. The tramp question, of course, is being dealt with by the Vagrancy Commission, but it afflicts us rather badly and it is by reason of three tramp wards being within two or three miles of each other that we get this affliction, Aston, Birmingham, and King's Norton. There is no reason why three sets of tramp wards should be so closely associated as these three, but each union, I believe, is bound to provide its own tramp accommodation, and the result is that when tramps get into the Birmingham area they find themselves in a very soft place.

Scale of relief in King's Norton and neighbouring unions.

43337. Do you think that in King's Norton the scale of relief is quite as high as in Birmingham and Aston?—I think so, quite. Might I supplement that by saying it is considerably higher than any of the unions which border on Birmingham.

43338. What is the most they would give, on an average, in your own union for a widow with children? How would they arrive at the amount to be given, provided there was no income whatever known to the guardians?—Generally speaking, the rule is that after the first six months of widowhood the applicant would have to maintain herself and one child; that is very often departed from. The usual 1s. and a loaf per child is undoubtedly not sufficient, and I think we have power under our standing orders to go as far now as 1s. 6d. per child and a loaf, but I am afraid that falls very far short of the object lesson that was given us at Bradford some three or four years ago.

43339. You cannot rise to the higher scale?—We cannot rise to that.

Provision for relief of children in King's Norton.

43340. With regard to the children inside, all your permanent children I take it are sent to Selly Oak?—Shendley Fields.

43341. Where are they first admitted?—The children are admitted to the workhouse, and generally speaking we have a number in the workhouse averaging from fifteen to twenty before they are drafted. We want to establish the fact, first of all, that these children are likely to be permanently chargeable. When I say permanently, I mean for a more or less considerable period. We do not want to send children to the cottage homes until we are sure that, for some period at least, they will fall under our care and supervision.

43342. Why?—I should like my friend, Canon Astbury to answer that question more closely than I can. The fact that children are sent for a short time, a few days, or for two or three weeks to the cottage homes, seems to have a disturbing influence on the discipline and the well-being of the homes. I must say I do not like the continued residence of children within the workhouse, it is to be deprecated very strongly, and I wish sometimes that the Children's Homes Committee could see their way to take the children more readily from the workhouse than they do, but for reasons which they have well considered, they have adopted this as part of their policy, and I would like you to ask this question of Canon Astbury when he is before you.

43343. The object in view in having separate homes for children is partly defeated by that arrangement, is it not?—To a small extent; I might say that we are introducing as an alternative and as a means of relief to the cottage homes, the boarding-out system, but that has not yet reached any serious dimension.

43344. That will not affect this point, will it?—No, it will not.

43345. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is that within or without the union?—Without the union.

43346. (Mr. Bentham.) The question of providing a receiving home apart from the workhouse has not been considered by the board, has it?—It has been mooted, and I believe is within reasonable distance of accomplishment. What the Birmingham people call the ins-and-outs home.

43347. Has Birmingham a home of that description?—Yes, they have, and I hope before many months are over that we shall have a similar home. The worst of it is that when children are maintained in the workhouse we have no provision for their being taught. I am perfectly sure that the Children's Homes Committee, as well as the guardians as a whole, are very anxious to make the residence of the children in the workhouse of the shortest possible duration.

43348. Are they under the care of inmates, or have you special officers to look after them?—We have special officers.

43349. Do the children attend the public elementary schools from the workhouse?—No; generally speaking there has been a reason for that; the children have been perhaps deficient in some shape or form, physically or mentally, or they have been not in a good state of health; there has been some strong operative reason which has led to their detention in the workhouse. An inquiry has been lately made as to the possible accommodation of these children in the public elementary schools of the district. I might say that the district of Selly Oak, up to within two years ago, has had a shortage of 2,000 school places; 2,000 children were running about the streets for whom there was no educational provision at all; it is only within the last two years that that shortage has been made good. Now that there is sufficient accommodation for the children there is no reason whatever why these children should not be provided for within the public elementary schools.

43350. We heard on our visit that they were attending the public elementary schools from the workhouse?—I am afraid that is only a very recent arrangement. I was not present at the last meeting of the house committee because I had to attend the funeral of a relative, but the information was probably given at that meeting for the first time.

43351. In Paragraph 18 (c), you give a sort of analogy between the cost of lunatics in asylums and the cost of Poor Law housing independent people. Does that analogy hold good quite, because this cost will include administrative buildings and accommodation for attendants, which adds considerably to the cost of building asylums and other institutions, which would not obtain at all in private houses?—Subject to that consideration it is just a rough and ready comparison, it is not expected to be anything more than what it says.

43352. (Mr. Phelps.) You have a very mixed population of rich and poor, have you not, in your union?—A very mixed population indeed.

43353. Do you find the charitable people co-operate with you at all?—Yes, we do.

Objection to sending "in-and-out" children to cottage homes.

Special home for "in-and-out" children Birmingham.

Difficulty to education of children in workhouse.

Question workhouse children attending public elementary schools.

Cost of Building

Extent of co-operation between charity and the Poor Law at King's Norton.

43354. In what way?—Through the churches and religious bodies. Some of these people help very materially to take care of their own poor, the poor who are in attendance at or are members of the different congregations, but the worst of it is that so large a proportion of the people are altogether outside the congregations.

43355. Do you at the board of guardians ever refer a case to private charity?—No, we prefer not.

43356. You have no machinery for doing that?—No, we have not.

Question of 43357. Do you think it would be desirable?—I do not think that private charity ought to be called upon to do that which is a State obligation.

43358. You do not think the State has any obligation with regard to the people whom it now supports. I will put it in this way: Is it more than a question of degrees, private charity supports a good many people now who might come on the rates perfectly well?—I am unable to say what the extent is to which private charity does support, I only come in contact with it in perhaps a few exceptional cases, so that I would prefer not to make any answer at hazard.

43359. (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you had any experience of the administration of infectious hospitals with regard to the working classes?—None whatever, other than the small infectious wards that are attached to the infirmary at Selly Oak.

43360. You have never had anything to do with the municipal hospitals?—No, we are in an urban district, we take part of the Birmingham civic area, Edgbaston, Harbourne and Balsall Heath, as part of our area.

43361. Have you any views as to the detention of any particular class of case?—Yes.

43362. Would you like to see the feeble-minded detained?—Certainly.

43363. Would you like to see the syphilitic cases detained?—Yes, I think that would be wise.

43364. Both men and women?—Yes.

43365. Do you think public opinion would support you?—I think in many cases it would support us. We have some cases where moral continence seems impossible, where, as soon as a woman is outside the restraint of the workhouse or infirmary, she falls into mischief again.

43366. And you think you could get public opinion to support you?—To a moderate extent.

43367. Having regard to what happened twenty years ago over the C. D. Acts?—I do not know that I should like to express a very definite opinion. It takes a long course of years to arrive at anything like a conclusion that should be reliable, and my experience is not long enough to enable me to reach that point, but I do think that detention would be undoubtedly useful in a variety of cases.

43368. And you think you could get public opinion to support that?—I think so.

43369. In Paragraph 18 (e) you complain of the conditions under which children may be boarded-out, and recommend that more should be paid for them; could you give us some more details as to what you mean with regard to that?—Having regard to the cost which may be paid for a boarded-out child as compared with the cost within an institution, I think the two amounts should be made more nearly approximate.

43370. I think here your cost in cottage homes is 3s. 6½d?—That is maintenance only.

43371. You are now allowed to pay 5s., are you not, under the new Order?—Yes.

43372. That gives you a margin of 1s. 5½d. for clothes?—That is not sufficient.

43373. So it is really cheaper to put them in cottage homes?—It possibly is cheaper. I know I am in conflict with Canon Astbury on this point, but I would very much rather see the boarding-out system more largely used as supplementing our resources.

43374. Have you had experience of boarding-out?—I have made it the subject of special enquiry, I have been to Bewdley, Sutton Coldfield, and other places where children have been boarded-out, I have enquired into the condition of the children as boarded-out, and enquired into their past history.

43375. Have you ever administered the boarding-out system from the point of view of the country?—No.

43376. Nor from the point of view of the town from whence the children are sent?—No.

43377. (Mr. Chandler.) In Paragraph 12 you speak, in connection with the question of poverty and old age, of the dying out of the apprenticeship system and the increased ratio of unskilled labour. Do you mean by that that the employment of skilled labour in this country could be secured for larger numbers than at present, if we had them, or do you mean that it is better for the skilled workman to provide for old age than the unskilled?—The less skilled labour is, the more casual it becomes. I made an investigation with regard to the tramps passing through our tramp wards, and I found that rather more than half the persons who come into the tramp wards have only muscular force, practically no manual skill or ability to offer to the labour employer.

43378. And these people become more migratory, less able to cope with the varying circumstances of life than a man who has a trade and who has some sort of skilled ability?—Yes.

43380. Quite so. In Paragraph 18, where you deal with suggested reforms, Section (d), you say that the orders of admission to the House are too easily obtained. Do you mean that destitute persons should be relieved outside, instead of offering them the House whenever it can be satisfactorily done?—No, I do not. We have a meeting at our workhouse every fortnight for the purpose of passing under review all the admissions to the House during the fortnight; a great part of our effort is directed to getting these people out of the House after once getting them in. At Bradford, when I was present at some of the Relief Committees there, I found that before an order was given, except in very urgent and special cases, an applicant had to appear before the Relief Committee. With us the relieving officers have absolute discretion. They practically bring no case before the Relief Committee, but they deal with all urgent applications on their own responsibility. My view is, and it is confirmed by experience, that in a very large number of cases there is no reason why particular persons should not be admitted to the workhouse in a week's time, after the opportunity has been afforded for an appearance before the Relief Committee. Our clerk tells us that Bradford works under a different Order to King's Norton. The result is that Bradford can sift its cases very much more perfectly than we can. We get the persons in because the relieving officers say they dare not refuse orders when persons allege destitution; then we get them in, and these people find that things are perhaps more comfortable inside than out, and we find the greatest possible difficulty in getting rid of them when once they are in. I would much rather those people were not admitted than we should have to rout them out or eject them when once they are in.

43381. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to boarding-out, are you clear that now the 5s. can be paid that the sum is not sufficient?—Perhaps it is, but at the same time I do not think any person ought to be expected to take a boarded-out child without some margin of profit. I doubt if Canon Astbury would agree with me there, but it is not quite reasonable to expect that people should take boarded-out children from pure philanthropy.

43382. Taking the actual sum to be paid, the 5s. does not include clothing, it does not include medical attendance, it does not include any special payment that is necessary on account of illness, so is not 5s. a reasonable sum?—Not quite. I am inclined to think that the establishment charges of our children's home (Canon Astbury will correct me) run to about 9s. 2d. or 9s. 3d. per child, taking all charges incidental to the child. 5s. plus clothing, plus medical attendance, does not run to 9s. 2d.

43383. Is there any reason why it should? You do not want the administrative arrangements supposing the child is boarded-out, therefore you need not include the cost of them?—No, but I think that possibly 6s. would be very much nearer the actual cost of maintenance than 4s. or 5s.

43384. Supposing the cost of maintenance in an institution here is say 6s., that is not a reason, necessarily, for paying it for boarding-out without an institution and its necessary expense?—No, I do not think that it does follow. I am rather anxious on this ground, that our cottage homes were built rather remote from any centre of population and the children do not, in my judgment, have sufficient contact with the world. When they are placed in a situation they come into contact with the world very largely for the first time; they have not had a proper training, which boarding-out would give. I speak with bated breath on this matter, because Canon Astbury has such more perfect knowledge than I.

43385. In Paragraph 18 (d) you say that some Boards of Guardians work under very adverse conditions in comparison with others. What had you in your mind about the adverse conditions?—My particular point was as to the illustration I gave with regard to admissions to the workhouse in Selly Oak as compared with admissions in the case of Bradford. In Bradford the investigation as to the need or non-need of admission is completed before an order is given or refused; with us the order is given first and the investigation takes place after.

43386. Is there any reason why you should not adopt the Bradford system?—I believe so, because I am told (this is not within my own knowledge) that we are working under different Orders. Bradford has a special Order which enables it to do this.

43387. There is no special order, Bradford works under the Out-door Relief Regulation Order, and King's Norton under the Prohibitory Order, but taking your case under the Prohibitory Order, supposing the case was one of sudden and urgent necessity, the case need not be admitted immediately into the workhouse?—I do not desire to prevent the admission of sudden and urgent cases, it is only the cases that are not urgent; I would like the relieving officer instructed to make some inquiry where there is the slightest element of doubt as to the urgency or non-urgency of the case. It is a very dangerous thing indeed to bring a man into close contact with the Poor-Law.

43388. What would you do with the case in the meantime, are you going to give any relief?—Yes, I would give relief in kind.

43389. Supposing that the case is urgent, that can be done now?—But our relieving officers do not do it.

43390. That is not the fault of the conditions under which the guardians work, it is merely the action of the officers, is it not?—It is an arrangement I have been altogether unable to disturb and, for reasons which I respect, the clerk supports the action of the officers. In fact, I have taken the view so strongly that I have absented myself from those Revision Committee Meetings, because I feel it is to a large extent a waste of effort and a waste of time, and because the investigation ought to take place before the people reach the House.

43391. You were speaking about the area of Birmingham in connection with Poor-Law administration. Do the three boards of guardians combine for any purposes at all?—Yes, for provision for feeble-minded and epileptic cases, cases that cannot be certified for an asylum, but which it is desirable should be dealt with other than in the workhouse.

43392. They might do that for vagrancy too, might they not?—Yes, I have been a member of a committee that was appointed some time ago for the purpose of carrying out a joint scheme of that kind, but because of the departmental inquiry as to the Vagrancy Act, our work has been held over until the results of that are more apparent.

43393. (Chairman.) You made one statement I should like to follow up a little. You said that in your judgment the more unskilled labour was, the more casual it was. Should you say that is an evil which is on the increase?—I am afraid it is. I have had some knowledge of some of the big works, Tangye's for instance; it is the division of labour carried to its extreme in the case of these large works. A man in an engineering shop will perhaps be making nuts and bolts or plumber-blocks or something like that, he will be making those from year's end to year's end, perhaps for ten or twelve or fifteen years, so that the man simply becomes a part of a machine, and once thrown out of that particular groove, he is no use for anything else. A man cannot be apprenticed for work of that kind. But leaving those trades altogether alone there has been a practical abandonment of the apprenticeship system. The Post Office, I am afraid, is to some extent responsible for that in taking into its employment young boys, and then discharging them, say at the age of seventeen or eighteen; the whole tendency of city life at the present time is for children to be put to the best productive work at the moment without regard to ulterior advantage; a lad can earn in some of these factories perhaps 6s. or 7s. a week as soon as he leaves school, and he probably has no opportunity of doing anything better, or much better, by the time he is eighteen or nineteen; there is no trade, there is nothing but the man's physical force; he can work as a carrier or a labourer, and that represents the whole of the man's skill.

43394. To take your two cases: first the boy; the boy gets work at a few shillings a week. I assume that in a considerable number of cases that work ceases when he becomes a full-grown adult in the class of work you were mentioning?—Yes.

43395. Then there is the other case, the case of the man who works at some special job and works on till he becomes, as you may say, almost part of the machine. Would you call that man a skilled workman or not?—I think he is; of course, it is under very serious limitations, but still, the man has a knowledge of tools.

43396. He would hardly come under the head of unskilled labour?—He would not. When a man has a knowledge of tools he can very much more readily adapt his knowledge to other circumstances and varying conditions.

43397. Of course the longer a man is engaged in this special work the more apt he is for that particular work and less capable of leaving it to go to something else?—That is so.

43398. (Mr. Lansbury.) I understand that the Selly Social Oak district you say is a very poor district. You say in paragraph 3 it is rapidly becoming a slum area?—I am afraid that is so.

43399. Is that to do with the people themselves, or is it the result of the conditions of labour and living generally there?—It is a compound, I think. It is within a quarter of a mile of the boundary of Birmingham and a large number of people come to sleep there and go into Birmingham for their daily occupation. It is also a refuge for people who desire to find a way out of Birmingham for various reasons. It is also a refuge for a great many unskilled people, people outside the range of trade societies. The people consist largely of unorganised labour; in some of the works the wages for unskilled labour run very low; it is not the fault of any one employer or body of employers, but it is owing to the fact that there is a large amount of unskilled labour which can be had at almost any price. Thirty years ago I suppose Selly Oak consisted of something like 300 people to-day it contains possibly 25,000. The houses have been built crowded together during that time, and we have slum areas within it at the present time, including houses built within the last twenty years, and I am afraid that the conditions of life are such as to bring a very considerable accession to the slum area.

43400. The wages are low, because there are so many people who want work?—As a rule wages are low.

43401. Because so many people are needing work, and will be glad to get it for whatever price people will pay them?—Employers who want cheap labour will be pretty sure to find all they want at Selly Oak.

43402. And rich people do not live there, I suppose?—A few, but the tendency is to go outside.

43403. Are there any people there who found charities or set up organisations for establishing any kind of civic lack of civic interest in things? I notice you say there is a lack of civic life there. Do they try to rouse that interest?—They do not take much interest in civic affairs.

43404. Therefore it is left simply to these people, who have got an eternal struggle to exist?—I think I ought to make an exception in the case of Mr. Edward Cadbury he takes a very strong interest in local affairs.

43405. Is this the district where he lives?—Bournville is just on the border line between two parishes, the parish of Northfield, in which Selly Oak is, and King's Norton. Bournville lies in both those parishes, and just that part of Selly Oak which is included in the Bournville area and the part adjacent to it consists of better dwellings than the other part of Selly Oak.

effect of outdoor relief in aid of wages. 43407. Then you say the granting of outdoor relief to partly incapacitated workmen tends to the reduction of wages. Do you suggest if all outdoor relief were abolished low wages would be abolished in that district?—No.

difficulty of apprenticing Poor Law children. 43408. Then as to the question of apprenticeship, have you ever tried to apprentice any number of boys or girls. Have you had anything to do with apprenticing Poor Law boys and girls?—Yes, we find the best means of placing our boys is in the merchant service.

43409. That is for seafaring?—Yes, or in the fishing service, and a very few go to trades like shoemaking or tailoring.

43410. That is just what I wanted to get at. What I want to know is whether you have tried to apprentice boys to trades here at home like engineering, carpentering, shoemaking or any of the trades that formerly you used to apprentice boys and girls to?—I am afraid there is a prejudice on the part of the better trades against Poor Law children.

43411. Do you think that is the reason you are not able to apprentice them?—I am afraid that has an influence.

43412. Even if you were going to pay a premium?—Mr. R. Waite. I have never known a premium paid.

43413. An employer will hardly take any apprentice to a decent trade without a premium, will he?—I do not think that is quite a correct assumption. 11 Mar. 1907.

43414. Will you tell me the trades that they take ordinary boys to without a premium?—I do not know that I can mention a particular trade, but as far as my knowledge goes of the later years during which apprenticeship was more in vogue than it is now, premiums were not necessary. Difficulty of apprenticing Poor Law children.

43415. Are you aware that in London some boards of guardians have extreme difficulty in apprenticing boys even with a premium?—No, I did not know that.

43416. That is because there are not outlets; there is nowhere to get them, nobody wants apprentices?—I suppose that is the ruling cause.

43417. The inference from your remarks this morning, and from your statement, is that it is something to do with the people, that they do not want apprentices. I suggest to you that the reason is the other way round, that there is no opening for apprentices, not no opening, but no large opening such as would absorb this number of unskilled people?—I do not know that my intention was to put the shoe on either foot, I was simply noticing the fact that the apprenticeship system had died out, and that that was one of the contributing causes to the large amount of unskilled labour at present upon the labour market. I formed no opinion as to the cause which led to the dying out of the apprenticeship system. Decrease of apprenticeship as a cause of unemployment.

43418. In the very statement you made just now, I think it was in answer to the Chairman, about a man working at a machine making plumper-blocks, is it not the fact that skilled labour, or what was formerly called skilled labour and required apprenticeship to do, is now done to a very large extent by machines?—That is so, undoubtedly. Apprenticeship no remedy for unemployment.

43419. And therefore, as a remedy for all this casual labour apprenticing boys does not seem to be one of the remedies?—I am afraid you are quite correct, because the possible area of apprenticeship is limited; much more limited now than formerly.

The Rev. Canon GEORGE ASTBURY, called; and Examined.

43420. (Chairman.) You are a guardian of the King's Norton Union and have been Chairman of that Board?—That is so.

43421. You have been good enough to prepare a statement, which we will treat as your evidence-in-chief if you will hand it in, and we will supplement that by a few questions?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The area of the King's Norton union embraces town, urban, and country districts, and therefore the social and industrial conditions are very varied and cause the guardians a considerable amount of very interesting work:—

(a) Edgbaston, Moseley and King's Heath are residential, many of the leading families engaged in business in the city of Birmingham living in these parishes.

(b) Smethwick has large manufactories and the great mass of inhabitants are engaged in them.

(c) Balsall Heath has a working class population engaged in the City of Birmingham.

(d) King's Norton, Northfield and Beoley are mainly residential and agricultural districts.

(e) Stirchley, Bournville and Selley Oak have large and important manufactories.

At Bournville Messrs. Cadbury's extensive cocoa and chocolate manufactory is situated at which a large number of hands are employed. Messrs. Cadbury's model village is very interesting and a step worthy of the consideration of other large manufacturers who are interested in the social and well-being of their employees. Many institutions are encouraged by the firm and special privileges are provided for the residents.

Bournville, the model village, has not existed sufficiently long to enable definite results to be established. So far, however, as experience has gone, everything tends for the betterment of the people. The system is being carefully watched and may probably be copied with advantage in new rising urban districts.

2. Indoor and Outdoor Relief is a large question. I am of the opinion that outdoor relief should receive the strictest investigation but it is useless under the present conditions of the law for one union to exercise the full powers given to the guardians, whilst neighbouring unions are lax and even profuse in the opposite direction. No doubt too much outdoor relief increases the number of paupers and lowers the self-respect and moral tone of the recipients. The idea that it is cheaper to give a little temporary outdoor relief than to give an order for the house frequently influences a certain class of guardians—but in the long run it proves more expensive on account of the increased number of applicants—I am inclined to favour a policy of limiting out-relief to respectable widows with children and to deserving aged people where free lodgings are provided for them, by children or near relatives. In cases of sickness I strongly urge the infirmary of the workhouse, because if it is only of a temporary character the nursing and food and warmth of the infirmary are far better than can be obtained in their own homes; if, on the other hand, it is of a permanent character, the patient will suffer far less under proper treatment with regular medical attendance in the infirmary than can possibly be obtained elsewhere. 11 Mar. 1907.

3. By far the larger number of persons applying for relief are aged people and widows with families of young persons children; of course there are always a number of elders and worthless men and women who seek relief under stress of bad weather and lack of employment. These applicants are largely of the labouring class who at the best of times only earn small wages. Respective merits of in and out-relief.

4. Main Causes of Pauperism.—Want of forethought and thrift accompanied by reckless living in time of pauperism. Causes of plenty, and not a few are made paupers by habits of intemperance and drunkenness, bad and insanitary dwellings.

5. The members of the King's Norton guardians are very representative, consisting of manufacturers, retired tradesmen, tradesmen, clerks, foremen, and three excellent lady guardians, a Roman priest, and a clergyman. All applications are considered by men who have actual knowledge of the conditions under which the poor labour, and are able to give advice and recommendations, which frequently lead to employment being obtained. I consider the King's Norton union is highly favoured in this respect.

6. The relief of the union is administered in the first instance by the General Relief Committee, which is subdivided into three sectional relief committees; these sit and receive applications at three centres in the union, and report to the General Committee, which meets at the workhouse and reports direct to the board meeting. Any members may ask for information respecting any of the cases. This system works admirably, and prevents much loss of time and long walks to the applicant. The applicant has the right to appeal to the board.

7. The Reforms in the Law or Practice :—

(a) The power of detention under special circumstances should be given to guardians :—(1) Aged people, say, over seventy-five years of age who take their discharge without either immediate or future prospect of maintenance. If these aged people are worthy of trust and confidence they might be allowed to visit their friends for the day or even longer without taking their discharge. (2) Feeble-minded persons.

(b) Well-regulated colonies for tramps might with great advantage be established throughout the country. The habit of dragging women and little children about the country should be a criminal offence.

8. Cottage Homes.—The care of children has been my special work for many years and I am fully persuaded after a lengthy experience that no other system so well meets the requirements of all children as the Cottage Homes Village system. The one difficulty that presents itself is that of the class known as Ins-and-Outs. These do much harm to the resident children, and unless very great care is taken, they frequently import contagious diseases into the Homes. If a child has been in the Homes for a period of from three to five years such child generally turns out well in after life, but the longer they are under the foster parents' care the better they do.

9. The Boarding-Out System.—This system is satisfactory in some cases, but we have experienced great difficulty in securing suitable Homes. Indifferent and bad homes are many and can easily be found. The number of children eligible under the Local Government Board Order for boarding-out is limited, and consequently can only partially meet the requirements of a board.—Scattered Homes within easy access of the workhouse do not commend themselves to my mind. It is most desirable in dealing with children to eliminate all knowledge and contact with the workhouse, so that when they arrive at the age of sixteen years, they may go out into the world to earn their own living without the slightest stigma of the workhouse. Then there is every prospect opened out to them of doing well and becoming useful members of society and this I consider should be the chief aim of guardians in dealing with children.

10. Feeble-minded Persons.—There is one most important branch of Poor Law administration not referred to in the foregoing queries, namely the feeble-minded and epileptic.

The parish of Birmingham and the Aston and King's Norton unions have jointly obtained an Order of the Local Government Board to provide a suitable establishment for dealing with these poor afflicted individuals. A magnificent site has been secured within the King's Norton union and building operations are now in progress, and it is hoped the Homes will be ready for occupation in the autumn of this year, 1907.

I consider it is absolutely necessary that power (under proper safeguards) should be given to the joint committee of management, of detaining the inmates who are received into this institution, especially in the case of young girls. If this power is not granted then all the care, expense, and training may be thrown away by some rascally lewd fellow getting hold of the girl immediately she is outside the gates and destroying in a few minutes what it has taken years of care and anxiety to preserve.

43422. (Chairman.) The subject to which you have given very special attention is the training of the children ?—Quite so.

43423. After full experience you prefer the cottage home system to any other ?—Certainly.

43424. You think it combines more advantages than any other system—To my way of thinking, that is so.

43425. The boarding-out system has in your judgment great limitations ?—The number of children that you cannot board out prevents it being regularly adopted. You can only board out orphans and deserted children. The great bulk of children you have remaining in your own hands.

43426. There is a difficulty about finding the proper kind of foster-mother ?—Certainly.

43427. I assume you would say the system should only be adopted under a very close system of supervision ?—Very close indeed.

43428. One of your difficulties with the children is the ins-and-outs ?—Yes.

43429. Have you any suggestion on that particular point to make ?—We have recently adopted what we call a probationary home. The probationary home is where we retain the children for a period of fourteen days practically to ascertain whether there is likely to be infection break out. We find very often that when children have been very badly fed, and so forth, when, they come to receive the regular good food in the probationary home, if there is any latent contagious or infectious disease it shows itself. Therefore, we keep them fourteen days. Before they are removed they are medically inspected and they are then drafted into the homes. We find that is the best thing. It is far better than going to the workhouse. We do not always have the children go to the workhouse; on the recommendation of the relief committee, provided the medical officer will give a certificate as to there being no fear from contagious disease, they come straight to our probationary home without going to the workhouse.

43430. (Mr. Bentham.) Where is the probationary home ?—At the cottage homes.

43431. (Chairman.) I was rather thinking of the interference with the training and education of the children by the parents constantly taking them away ?—That is a very serious difficulty and I really have tried to find a scheme for the homes by which we could possibly cope with that. Of course with regard to ins-and-outs in our own union we can at once communicate with the local authority and put the school attendance officer to ascertain what they are doing.

43432. Have you ever thought of the guardians having more power in those cases of keeping the children ?—We have recently been trying to meet that difficulty. Where we can possibly detain them we do and keep them in our school, and if we had larger powers to prevent that class of ins-and-outs, it would be a great advantage, both to the children's education, and morally for our institution. Nothing is so hurtful to our homes as to get a bad boy or bad girl in, because when they come into the home they bring in a very bad standard of morality and other things as well.

43433. Have you ever thought what sort of powers the guardians should have for dealing with this class of case, the ins-and-outs—whether the guardians should have power of adoption for a certain period ?—We have tried that in certain circumstances, but the difficulty is that when the parents get away and deposit the children with us, they go into other parts of the country and we lose all touch of them. If we could always make them responsible to report themselves, like a ticket-of-leave man, it would be another thing altogether.

43434. Would it be a serious expense supposing all the children of the ins-and-outs were permanently detained : I am looking at it simply from the financial side ; would, it be a serious increase of cost ?—I think not. At our workhouses the number of children we support would be under fifty ; a large number of those are under three years of age, therefore they would not come under out Cottage Homes system, it is only those over three that are eligible ; we like to have them at four years of age if we can at our Cottage Homes.

43435. Beyond the objection that it interferes with the responsibility of the parent, there is not much financial or administrative objection to what I suggested ?—I think not.

43436. Have you followed up at all the careers of the children who have been trained. Do you know how they have turned out subsequently ?—We follow them all up to twenty-one years of age as far as we possibly can. The percentage of failures, that is those who come back into our workhouse, for instance, is not more than between 2 and 3 per cent.

43437. Is it as much as that ?—Not more, sometimes it is not that much.

43438. Are a certain proportion of those simple-minded ? —Yes, most of the cases are feeble-minded.

43439. Have you ever been able to follow up the careers of children of widows who are in receipt of out-relief ?—I have followed them up in my own parish, and it is almost impossible for a widow with four or five children to rear up her children in anything like a proper state if she is not supplemented by private help.

43441. It has been suggested to us that, in certain cases the difficulty of widows, and particularly of widows in employment, would be got over if there were some system of day schools like the industrial schools where the children would be fed and looked after and taken care of for the greater part of the day and return to their homes in the evening and come again in the morning. Have you ever thought of that ?—Only in the case of young children. At one period we managed a crèche where we took the younger children, that was when I was at Redditch. In a town like Redditch, where a great many of the women are engaged in needle manufacturing, in order that they might return to their labour, never less than two months after confinement, we took charge of the children from two months up to three or four years of age, when they could go to school, but I think the idea was not what we should call beneficial, especially to the labouring-class mothers, because it was removing from the child the parental care which a young child ought to have ; they lose a great deal by it to my mind.

43442. The mother would not be out the whole of the day ?—She would be allowed to come out to the crèche at mid-day, she would bring the child before 9 o'clock, then if she was nursing the child she would come at 12 o'clock, or according to the arrangements made by the special factory.

43443. You do not think the system worked well on the whole ?—Not to my mind. It was all very well after the nursing age was passed, say from twelve months to four years, but for the younger children, the babies, the system was all wrong.

43444. Do you think what I suggest would hold good ? —To a large extent it would ; I have never thought of it before, it seems to me on the face of it a means of facing the difficulty.

43445. You would ensure the children being properly fed ?—Yes, and kept warm, whereas now many of the children get home first ; if the mother is not there the door is locked and the child cannot get in until the mother returns ; that is what we find frequently.

43446. And the children can play truant ?—Yes, they cannot count time, and they get home for their dinner probably just at the time the mother is going out again.

43447. You are strongly of opinion you ought to have more powers of detention as regards feeble-minded girls, and so on ?—I am very strongly of that opinion.

43448. I assume there would be no difficulty in occupying them or employing them ?—We hope not. I am on the Committee of the Joint Board for providing new homes which are now in course of erection, and we anticipate that the males will be employed on the land, and the females will be employed in keeping the homes clean and in the laundry work.

43449. I assume they are easily managed ?—As far as our experience from visiting different places goes they seem to be easily managed, except just at the special time. We are providing under those circumstances special rooms, both for night and day, when they are specially afflicted. Generally speaking it is only for a few days, a week or a short time longer.

43450. Would you be in favour of the opinion of the previous witness, that it would be advisable to try and amalgamate the whole area of Birmingham for one Poor Law union ?—In our union itself it would be very difficult indeed ; our union is a very long one ; I suppose from one end of Smethwick to the end of Beoley Parish is something like eighteen miles ; it seems to me a very difficult place for that. Birmingham comes in the middle of us, if we took away Harbourne we should be severed, we should have one part of the union with an area in between it and the other part.

43451. Part of your union is rural ?—Yes.

43452. Is there a separate workhouse ?—No, only one workhouse.

43453. Do you think the fact of medical relief being associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent and prevents people applying ?—I have found that practically it does so where a person is just on the border line of destitution and above ; they complain that they object to the idea of being pauperised, if they were to go and get medical relief or go into the infirmary.

43454. Do you think that tends at all to affect the health of the population by people declining to avail themselves of medical assistance when they ought to ?—I think it might possibly to some small extent, but not generally speaking. Those cases really come under our notice ; I am speaking now from the point of view of a clergyman ; those case come very much more under our notice, and we do all we possibly can to help them in times of stress and suffering.

43455. By getting orders, and so forth ?—Yes.

43456. Then it is more as a clergyman you say you get this knowledge than as a guardian ?—Quite so.

43457. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Taking the question of areas, would the part of King's Norton Union outside the city of Birmingham be sufficient to form a separate union ?—We should, practically, I think, have to form two, because there would come in the Parish of Smethwick, which has a population of over 60,000, then you have Bournville and Strichley and all those districts on the other side, with Harbourne coming in between us.

43458. Is it the fact that people who work in Birmingham live in the rural parts, outside the city ?—Quite so, owing to the system lately brought about by the trams they come into our district, doing the return journey for 2½d. or something like that, and they prefer to do it.

43459. Therefore you think that something could be said for the part of King's Norton outside the city contributing to the people who work in the city, that is to say that the area outside the city should be included for Poor Law purposes in that union ?—I am not quite prepared to go so far as that, speaking of the King's Norton Union by itself in all other respects. By taking the area of the city of Birmingham, to include other parishes within the city as well as the parish of Birmingham, and thus reduce the area of the union of King's Norton, we should lose some of our most valuable property ; we should lose the whole of Edgbaston, which is residential pure and simple, we should lose Harbourne, also residential. This arrangement would make it very much more serious for us to maintain our poor than it is at the present time, and would seriously increase the poor rate.

43460. Now take this point, does it seem to you there is some ground for the contention that an area outside the city of Birmingham might properly form part of the Poor Law union seeing that the people who work in Birmingham live outside ?—Quite so. I think that as we have them at the present time, as the union is now constituted, it is better to remain so, because if you take away that part which is in the civic area but not in the Poor Law area, you take away the paying portion and leave us entirely with all the poor class. Therefore, looking at it from our standpoint, speaking for our own union, it would be a very great mistake to alter the boundary of our union and lose those special districts which help us to maintain our district.

Norton
guardians.

43462. With regard to the children, do the King's Norton guardians exercise the powers of adopting children given under the Act of 1899?—Yes, every deserted child, every orphan, and every child placed under us because the parents are not fit and proper persons to have charge of them.

43463. Have you tried boarding out those children at all?—We are trying it now, we have lately secured a Committee to be established in the neighbourhood of Evesham.

43464. It has not been long enough established?—No, we have only three children out.

43465. So you have no experience of the result of the experiment?—No.

Local

inspection of cottage homes and
question of its adequacy.

43466. (Mr. Phelps.) How long have your cottage homes been built?—About twenty-one or twenty-two years.

43467. By whom are they inspected?—By the Local Government Board inspector.

43468. How frequently have you an inspector on the premises?—I am hardly able to speak of that, probably two or three times a year.

43469. Do you think that is adequate?—We inspect them ourselves; I am perfectly sure of this, that the guardians on the Cottage Homes Committee investigate thoroughly and visit every home within the period of every month.

Question of Education Department to Poor Law

inspection of such schools by that department.

43470. Do you think it would be a good thing if you received a grant from the Education Department for your children?—We do, we have our own school.

43471. You receive a grant from the Education Department?—The Board of Education examines them now, but I think our grant still comes from the Local Government Board.

43472. Pecuniarily speaking do you think you would be in a better position if you had the Education grant instead of the Local Government grant?—I have not thought of it or worked it out. We are now examined under the old system, that is each child is presented, they are not presented en bloc as they are in the ordinary schools. If the "excellent" grant were given to our schools I think we should be very much in the same position.

43473. Are you inspected by the Education Department?—Yes, the Education Inspector visits our schools.

43474. Has he made reports which have produced much effect upon the school?—He has only had two years at it.

43475. Do you think that if your grant were made you by the Education Department, his inspection would be more thorough and more valuable?—No, he has to inspect each child separately; under it we get the result of each child as to what they failed in and passed in.

43476. He examines each child?—Yes.

43477. Do you think it would be better if the same system were adopted in your school which is adopted in the schools under the Education Department?—And received a bulk grant, do I understand you?

43478. Yes?—Practically that is what we do get, a bulk grant now, but it comes through the Local Government Board instead of the Education Department.

43479. That is given on rather different grounds, is it not?—The grant is given on the result of the examination.

43480. Do you think if the grant came entirely from the Education Department that the inspection from the Education Department would be more thorough and useful?—No, it could not possibly be so.

43481. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do I understand that since the Board of Education took over the inspection of these children in your schools, that you still, so to speak, get a payment by results. Are you not referring to the old Individual system?—No, an examination took place a fortnight ago and the Three R.'s were marked, where a child failed and where he had been successful, and we got the grant from the Local Government Board the same as we did previously when the examiner came from the Local Government Board. There was no alteration so far as the grants are concerned.

Individual examination of children in Poor Law schools as method of moving children in one stand to another

43482. That is to say, although the individual examination of the children has been abandoned in the ordinary elementary schools it is still maintained in your schools?—Yes.

43483. You are glad of that?—Yes.

43484. You think that is better than the new system?—Yes. We have a stricter understanding of what each child is. We frequently have children sent to our homes who are scheduled as being in the third standard in the council school. When they are examined they are not equal to the position; they have been pushed up en bloc; they have never had any examination, and the result is they are only fit for the second standard. His Majesty's examiners now say that all children sent to the homes that have been in the Public Elementary Schools outside must be put in the third standard if they were in the third standard, and the result is most unfair to the children, and the result is not satisfactory. We ought to have a right to do that. I am always going to the schools myself and I go to the cottage homes once a week or once a fortnight, at least once a month, and if there is a backward child I should advise the child to go back; but now the teachers inform me that His Majesty's Inspectors will not allow them to put that child back.

43485. In ordinary schools they have powers of classification. You think it would not be a good thing for the two types of school to be practically under the same code?—I think so. That is the only weak point I see at the present time.

43486. Is not that an important point?—Certainly? until this year we have always done it, and we have not really had time to consider what the result is of His Majesty's inspector's report; we only have his schedule, not his report.

43487. It often happens, taking arithmetic, that the child gets one sum wrong, and for that the child loses a whole year out of its school life?—Sometimes it gets two wrong.

43488. The point is the child suffers very often permanently through a little accident in one sum on this system?—I quite agree.

43489. Do you not think you want to work the two systems?—You want to have confidence in your teacher, he ought to have some authority to raise or hold the child in the position it is. As guardians we should strongly advise such a course, and would make representations to His Majesty's inspector that this child had been either raised or kept in a lower standard.

43490. You say you object to the scattered homes; can you tell us why?—As far as I have been able to judge from visits to places where we went to see scattered homes, we found they were not keeping anything like the moral tone or the general demeanour of the children the same as we have in our cottage homes.

Objection scattered homes for children.

43491. You thought the whole tone was lower?—Yes, and the superintendence was not so good. A foster parent is a parent of a certain standard, and unless you have someone you can call in at any time or every time of the day, like we have at our cottage homes, a superintendent and a matron, there is not the same supervision. I do not see how it could possibly be. Then with regard to the playing of the children; you turn them out of these homes, and in some places there is a feeling: that is one of such-and-such a home, we are not going to have them playing our games, they must play by themselves; they are treated as being of an inferior class of being to the ordinary children of the locality.

43492. In Paragraph 4 you say that bad and insanitary dwellings, in your view, are a cause of pauperism and so on. I gather from what you say elsewhere that these new cottages which have been put up in Selly Oak?—I cannot say much as to Selly Oak; I am at Smethwick.

Effects of Birmingham clearance-schools on suburbs of
Birmingham

43493. I understand Selly Oak is a suburban district?—Yes.

43494. And not under the influence of the Birmingham bye-laws?—No.

43495. You do not know whether the Birmingham and Selly Oak building bye-laws are similar?—They are not, I think.

43496. Birmingham at the present time is spending large sums in removing insanitary property, and in Selly Oak the people are putting up streets of slum property?—Yes. Many people are migrating from Birmingham to Selly Oak.

43497. What do you think of sending boys to the smacks?—We are sending our boys first of all to the Navy if we can get them there, if their measurements are right. Unfortunately the authorities are always changing them. We never know what they are. We get them up to a certain point and then we find they have enough candidates and have raised the measurements, either the height or the breadth, or something else. With regard to those we send to the fishing, we invariably select strong healthy lads who have not the brain power; they are quite strong and quite compos mentis, but they have not the brain power to fight their way with the other boys; they are strong boys who are probably in the third standard, but fourteen or fifteen years of age.

43498. What time of the year do you send them?—About this time of the year, if we can.

43499. Do you keep any record as to the subsequent career of these boys?—Yes. When they have their holidays we always invite these boys to come and spend them at the home.

43500. Could you tell us what have been the careers of these boys sent to the smacks, say for the last ten years?—Just at Christmas time we had a boy who had raised himself to the position of skipper, for which he gets £2 a week with a bonus according to the result of their catch; sometimes he will get £5, £6 or £7; and he had in his bank book, which he produced, a sum of money over £50 in about six years.

43501. That is an exceptional case and very satisfactory?—There are others.

43502. I want the bulk of them?—The bulk of them is this, that so far we have sent probably a dozen, or something like that, and all except one are doing very well.

43503. They do not find the life too rough?—Not at all.

43504. Although they are inland boys and have not had any experience of seafaring life?—No.

43505. I notice in what you tell us about this epileptic colony you are establishing, that the men are to work on the land?—Yes.

43506. Because it is thought to be more satisfactory and helpful as a palliative if not a cure?—We must find some occupation for them.

43507. My point is that the work on the land is essential to the treatment of epileptics?—That is what we are advised.

43508. Is not the same treatment necessary for women; I see they are to work in the laundry and about the house; do not they want to work on the land?—We went to Chalfont St. Peter's and examined what they were doing there and they told us as a rule the women do not require it, there might be an exception now and then; our women are coming practically, or most of them, from towns.

43509. The working on the land is essential for the men?—It is not essential, but beneficial.

43510. That is one reason you take them there?—They are a nuisance to us in the workhouse. They are not bad enough to be certified and sent to an asylum, and we think in the intermediate stage we should be able to find them sufficient labour on the land; there will be a certain amount of other work, in addition to the work on the land, that we shall put them to.

43511. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the children, you say in Paragraph 9 that scattered homes within easy access of the workhouse do not commend themselves to your mind; it is most desirable in dealing with the children to eliminate all knowledge and contact with the workhouse?—You can eliminate all knowledge or contact with the workhouse only by their never entering the workhouse. The bulk of our children if they are suitable for our homes have little or no contact with the workhouse. We tried to get permission from the Local Government Board that they should not necessarily, as formerly, pass through the workhouse; we now send them as I said just now to our probationary home.

43512. The ins-and-outs who come more frequently for admission are those who need really most care and most training, belonging mostly to parents who are undesirable parents?—Yes.

43513. Will the distance of your homes from the workhouse induce the guardians to admit these ins-and-outs to the workhouse because of the cost of transit, the difficulty of cleansing them and taking them there, and bringing them back again?—We had a special ward for the children who from our knowledge of the circumstances were probably only going to stay in the workhouse a fortnight, three weeks, or a month; now if they are going to stay long beyond that we bring them up to the cottage homes, and if there is a prospect of their being removed (we are in close communication by telephone) we retain them in the probationary home until we get information before we put them into the other homes.

43514. In many cases you cannot ascertain whether an inmate is going to stop in?—Then they go on in the usual course and are transferred to one of the homes forthwith.

43515. Can you tell us approximately about the number of children who are admitted into the workhouse who are qualified enough to be taken to the homes direct, in the course of the year?—You are referring now to those that are sent by the out-relief committee I suppose?

43516. Yes?—Not very many, twelve or fourteen probably.

43517. In the course of a year?—Yes, they come in batches; sometimes you may have four, or five or six in very quick succession and then we may have a long period and not have any.

43518. We understood on our visit that a good many children came into the workhouse?—Into the cottage homes.

43519. No, were admitted to the workhouse prior to being sent to the cottage homes?—I thought you were asking me the question the other way about, how many came into the cottage homes without going into the workhouse.

43520. No, I meant the other way?—The great majority.

43521. It is the exception to be admitted direct to the cottage homes?—It is the exception that the relief committee will make the recommendation.

43522. Do you consider that desirable?—I do not. We shall get it by and by, but we cannot transform our system from one to another without considerable experience, and we are now learning that experience whether it is advisable or inadvisable to act on the recommendations of the different out-door relief committees.

43523. On our visit we were struck very much by the smallness of the amounts that were given in outdoor relief. Do you hold with the last witness, Mr. Waite, that the reason is that you are approximating nearly to the standard given by the other unions in Birmingham?—To some considerable extent that has been the cause. Some few years ago our limit was 2s. 6d. We have got that varied.

43524. The limit for an aged person?—Yes. Now we have got it varied; it depends a great deal on the circumstances. We can now give more, and in many cases we are giving more.

43525. Have you fixed a limit by resolution now?—Yes it is 3s. or exceptional cases, which must come before the whole of the committee, what we call special cases, may go to 4s.

43526. Do you think that that recommendation hampers the guardians at times in the use of their discretion?—I think not; because if the guardians feel for the case we immediately pass a resolution to the effect that that be considered by the relief committee generally, so that there shall be the same uniformity throughout the whole of the unions of the different sub-committees.

Thriftness as a cause of pauperism.

Difficulty of workmen changing from one occupation to another.

Proportion of pauperism due to thriftlessness.

Scale of relief at King's Norton.

Particulars as to Poor Law boys sent to sea.

Question of relief to widow with children sufficient to obviate her working.

43527. Are there many on the higher scale?—No, because we have not regulated it very long; as Mr. Waite says, it is of recent origin, but it is gradually increasing.

43528. (Mr. Lansbury.) You say the main causes of pauperism are want of forethought and thrift accompanied by reckless living in time of plenty. Do you get many people who have earned large sums of money applying for relief?—Yes, I am sure we do.

43529. What do you call a large sum?—A large sum of money.

43530. Per week?—Anything going into a house of £3 and upwards.

43531. Have you many of those cases?—A good many of those where the children, father and mother, all get money.

43532. All get money?—Yes, there are certain classes of children who do.

43533. What I want to get at is how many of those classes of cases have you as paupers?—Afterwards?

43535. Are you speaking here of the aged people who apply for relief?—No, I am speaking of what you would call a male aged person, who, as Mr. Waite said, if they lose their position through intemperance and so forth, cannot get on again anywhere because they are simply fitted for that particular business. In Smethwick I suppose we have some of the largest manufacturing concerns of anywhere; we begin at one end with Messrs. Chance, glass makers, then we have Guest, Keen & Company, the patent nut makers, and Nettlefold's with their screws, and we have the Birmingham carriage works, all these people have an absolutely separate class of men to work for them, and one is no use to the other, and if they lose their berth at one of these large places it is very difficult indeed to get into work again.

43536. We understood from Mr. Waite that that district was a very poor district and the people earned very low wages?—Not Smethwick, I think.

43537. I understood they lived at Selly Oak and worked elsewhere?—As I said just now, our union is a very long one, and Selly Oak is nearly four miles away from Smethwick. We have to pass through Harborne to it.

43538. The people I understand live at one place and work elsewhere?—Yes.

43539. My question is in your opinion what proportion of paupers have earned large wages so that they might have provided for themselves?—I should think not a very large proportion.

43540. If a case happens to need more than 4s. a week what happens to it?—Are you referring to old people or to young people.

43541. Aged people; I understand your limit is 4s. ?—In special cases the Board can recommend more, and if they think that more would meet the case, the whole Committee have power to give more.

43542. Could you put in a record of the boys that you sent to the fishing, a return showing actually when they went and what has happened to them?—Yes.

43543. Can you also do it for those you sent into the Navy?—Yes. (Subsequently sent, see Appendix No. XV. (A).)

43544. You believe in cottage homes and keeping the children away from the Poor Law, not letting them know that they have anything to do with the Poor Law?—I do.

43545. That is why you go in for cottage homes?—Yes.

43546. Would not you obtain that effect better by the mother, having a sufficient allowance herself if the home was decent and the woman was decent to keep them at home and preserve the home life and everything?—My experience is that they are not properly kept and fed and looked after when the mother herself has to go out to work.

43547. Have you ever given a mother the chance that you give the foster mother, of 4s. a week, or 5s. a week for each child?—No, we never have.

43548. I suggest to you that your end would be reached better, you would preserve home life and the natural affections between the child and its mother, and do away with all stigma of pauperism, if you did that?—What are we to do with those orphans and those—

43549. Excuse me, I have carefully guarded my question. I have said that their homes must be decent, and widows and that the mother must be decent. I am asking under those circumstances, with a home open to just the same kind of visiting as other homes, what is the objection to giving adequate maintenance for a child in such a home, and therefore allowing the child to go to ordinary schools and be brought up in the ordinary fashion?—The only difficulty is this, that if we allow those who come before us for relief a sum equivalent to that, we should be doing a very grave injustice to the fathers and mothers who are striving to do their duty with a very much less wage per head than you suggest should be given. What we aim at is that we shall not make our outdoor paupers in a better position than those who are striving to get what they can with their ordinary wages. We have in Smethwick many men getting 18s. to £1 a week who keep a wife and family of a number of children.

43550. I suggest to you that it is only a question of doing it in one place and not in another, the child in the cottage home is getting infinitely better conditions, being brought up under much more wholesome surroundings than the children of the man who is earning 18s. a week that is spoken of here?—That is so, but the parent has the pride of keeping his own castle over his head. He has a certain amount of pride, and he tries to make ends meet; his children are not in any sense of the word famished, or anything like that, but when you talk about the cottage homes, as far as maintenance is concerned, it is nothing like that, it is about 3s. 6d. per head.

43551. You never give a mother 3s. 6d. for a child?—No, we do not, that is above the average that the working man with his wife and children gets. He does not get 3s. 6d. per head.

43552. I am only suggesting to you that you wish to preserve the children, in all cases the child is the important thing?—Quite so.

43553. All these other things are not so important as bringing the child up well and without the stigma of pauperism, I am suggesting to you that that end can be reached much better by giving the mother the responsibility of bringing up her own children with an adequate allowance for doing so?—Yes, you guarded yourself of course by saying that the mother is in every respect a suitable woman and the surroundings of the home are also suitable. In the case of the majority of the children we get in our cottage homes those conditions would not be met.

43554. Not even if you gave an adequate allowance?—No, having regard to the position in which they were in and would have been brought up in.

43555. (Mr. Bentham.) I take it you do not compel respectable people of that class to come into the house with their children?—No.

43556. Are they starved in by giving them too small an amount of relief?—There are other sources than out-door relief. Out-door relief is the foundation, and then there are other things. We have in Smethwick what is called an aid society; that aid society provides for a man during sickness or temporary unemployment. We are prepared to do exactly what Mr. Lansbury was asking, we give them as much as 15s. or 16s. a week to go on with.

43557. (Mr. Booth.) You say in your statement that no other system so well meets the requirements of all children as the cottage homes village system. That word "village" implies that these groups of cottage homes are at a considerable distance away altogether from the workhouse, does it not?—About three miles.

43558. Therefore the reason for thinking that the best system does not apply to a group of cottage homes that are situate close to a workhouse?—Yes, I think so; at Aston they have homes quite close, but they are quite separate; there is a road between them. There is no inter-communication between them any more than there is with us. The parents, if they want to come and see a child, have the privilege at certain intervals.

43559. If there was only that road between it would hardly eliminate that knowledge of and contact with the workhouse?—No, I think it is not desirable to have them so close; I think your system is better.

43560. The system you advocate is one that would establish these groups of cottage homes some distance from the workhouse?—Yes.

43561. On the other hand with regard to the scattered

Mr. JAMES RICHARD TURNER, called; and Examined.

43565. (Chairman.) You are Chairman of the Birmingham Board of Guardians and have been Chairman of the Infirmary Management Committee and Chairman of the Marston Green Homes Committee?—That is so.

43566. You have been good enough to give us your views in writing, if you will kindly hand your Statement in we will treat that as your evidence-in-chief and supplement it by a few questions?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The Birmingham Union is almost entirely urban, and comprises largely a working-class population, the slum districts, and the lodging-houses. The residences of the well-to-do, although in many cases in the city, are generally outside the parish boundary. This explains to some extent the large number of indoor poor, as compared with those receiving out-relief, many of the former having no friends who would care for them if out-relief were given. The policy of the Birmingham Board for years has been to give out-relief in all cases where a respectable home is available, in preference to sending an applicant into the "house."

2. I am strongly of opinion that large aggregations of people in workhouses are a mistake; classification is almost impossible, and the respectable inmates often have to associate with those of a much lower type, as well as with criminals, and other undesirables.

3. The causes of pauperism are principally drink and improvidence, combined with the absence of moral stamina and self-respect in many of the unskilled classes, and to some extent, in the skilled workman also.

4. But the present system of workhouses is most costly, and not conducive to the comfort of the deserving poor, while it fosters malingering and idleness among the undeserving.

5. The attention of our Board has repeatedly been called to the large number of children periodically entering and leaving the workhouse. Such children could not be sent to the Marston Green Homes, as the work of the schools would be hindered by frequent changes. In the hope of putting an end to association with the workhouse for boys and girls, and thus preventing the taint of pauperism attaching to them in after life, the Board has acquired suitable buildings in the city as a home for these "ins-and-outs" children. We have recently opened one home for boys, and another for girls, each having accommodation for about forty children. Ultimately all children (save infants in arms) will be received here instead of at the workhouse, and, after probation, will be suitably dealt with.

6. The three Poor Law authorities in Birmingham and district have jointly obtained powers to provide homes for epileptics and feeble-minded, and are now erecting buildings to accommodate about 200 of such patients on a site near Birmingham, where it is intended to occupy them in industrial work, instead of retaining them in the workhouse or infirmary. No doubt the Commission will have had full particulars of this scheme, but I would especially mention that it is essential to success that further powers of detention be given, so that the young persons especially whom it is intended to receive after they leave the special schools for feeble-minded, may be segregated, and, while leading a life of comparative usefulness, may be prevented from the possibility of perpetuating a race of undesirables.

homes that you object to, you say the premises are not within easy access of the workhouse. That does not seem to cover the case of scattered homes that are within easy access?—I understand that the provisions are sent from the workhouse to some of the scattered homes.

43562. But not necessarily to the whole?—But to a good many.

43563. The scattered homes, I understand, usually have nothing to do with the workhouse?—I think many are supplied from the common stores at the workhouse.

43564. At any rate what you object to are the scattered homes which are near the workhouse to which the provisions are supplied from the workhouse?—Yes.

*The Rev.
 Canon G.
 Astbury.*

11 Mar. 1907.

7. The men and women seeking election as guardians are not in all cases those most suitable for the work. If guardians had similar powers to those possessed by other public bodies, such as complete control of officials, power to arrange dietaries, etc., capable men and women in larger numbers would offer themselves for election. The work, if conscientiously performed, is most arduous, and even engrossing, but there is not the public recognition of it which is accorded some other elected bodies.

*Mr. J. R.
 Turner.*

11 Mar. 1907.

Class of persons becoming guardians

8. With regard to desirable reforms, I am of opinion that, in the interests of efficiency and economy, it is essential that Poor Law matters in a city like Birmingham should be under the control of one Board, instead of three as at present. This would avoid much overlapping, enable classification to be carried out, and other reforms to be adopted, such as central test wards, and tramp receiving war's.

Necessity for making Poor Law and municipal areas coterminous.

9. The present plan of removal and settlement is very antiquated, and needs to be thoroughly revised and to a large extent abolished. It is absurd to keep an expensive army of officials to move people from place to place throughout the Kingdom. If the whole system cannot be abandoned a clearing-house might perhaps be established, or a special grant could be devoted to cover the cost to the various unions.

Need for reform of settlement.

10. I think it should be made possible for relief to be given to the wives and children of men who are temporarily out of employment. Many such people break up the home and enter the workhouse, and, owing to the difficulty of forming a fresh home, they become a permanent burden on the rates. Such relief as suggested would require judicious administration should be for a limited period only, and, in my opinion, should not disfranchise the man whose family receives it. Many of the present inmates of the Birmingham workhouse would not be there to-day if such assistance could have been given.

Need of out-relief to families of able-bodied temporarily out of work.

11. The method of dealing with tramps requires a radical change. Among the large number who frequent the tramp ward, comparatively few are bona-fide seeking for work. I would place all tramps who appear a second time in a tramp ward without satisfactory reason, within, say twelve months, in a labour colony for a term, subject to release on licence at the discretion of the authorities, if habits of industry are developed, such licence to be withdrawn if old habits are resumed. The children of these people should be placed in a suitable home, and should be given an opportunity (which most of them have never had of becoming self-respecting members of the community.

12. In conclusion, I may say that generally the present Poor Laws, while suited for the time when they were adopted, are cumbersome and difficult to work now. It therefore seems desirable and necessary that they should be modernised, simplified, and brought more into accordance with the spirit of the age. If this should be the result of the enquiry by the present Royal Commission a permanent benefit to our country will have been attained.

Need of simplification of Poor Laws.

43567. (Chairman.) There has been a considerable increase in the amount of indoor relief given in your Union in recent years?—Yes.

43568. You have had some correspondence, have you not, with the Local Government Board as regards the methods of administration of the Birmingham workhouse?—We have.

Lack of classification—a cause of increase of indoor pauperism.

Mr. J. R. Turner.
11 Mar. 1907. 43569. I saw a letter when I was at Birmingham which was rather to the effect that the Local Government Board suggested there should be more classification, and a more rigid test put on the able-bodied?—Yes.

43570. Assuming that their contention was right, would that not account to a certain extent for the increase of the indoor paupers?—Do you mean the absence of the test?

43571. Yes?—I think it does.

43572. You do not like the present system of the workhouse, I understand?—No.

Question of test work for able-bodied. 43573. It is rather a question of administration; you would impose a severer test on the able-bodied?—Last year a system was proposed of a test house for the purpose of dealing with these men. I am sorry to say it was rejected by the board after being proposed, and plans prepared, for buildings for such test work as corn grinding and stone-breaking. We have now test wards, but they are away from the workhouse a long distance, and the test is simply nominal at present. The men remain there frequently for weeks and months.

Need and difficulty of classification in workhouse at Birmingham. 43574. You have a sort of merit recognition inside the workhouse?—We have for women, and for men to some extent.

43575. I assume you agree that that principle could be pushed a good deal more?—Quite so, I think classification is most desirable, but we are so full in the Birmingham workhouse that we cannot possibly classify at present.

Special home for in-and-out children at Birmingham and its results. 43576. You have a separate school for the ins-and-outs?—That is a home which has been founded recently because the children who came into the hands of the guardians were so frequently coming in for a few weeks and out again, we could not send them to the Marston Green Homes because of interfering with the discipline in the Homes, so we have started a Home outside the workhouse in which to receive all boys and girls where they will be kept and housed and either sent to Marston Green eventually, or restored to their friends.

43577. Those Homes have been a success, I understand, but you still have difficulties from the ins-and-outs parents constantly taking their children away?—Yes, I may say we have not yet completed these receiving Homes. We bought a property about eighteen months ago, but have not yet arranged to receive the children there, they are still referred to the workhouse, but we hope in the course of the next three months to have a central building where we shall receive the children; they will not enter the workhouse door at all; but will be received at these Homes and sent to Marston Green if suitable.

43578. You still have the difficulty of the children being taken away?—We have that difficulty.

Need of power to detain in-and-out children, feeble-minded, etc. 43579. If the law had to be altered, would you suggest that guardians should have more powers of detention over these children?—I think it would be desirable to have more power in certain cases; for instances, if a man is in the hospital for a time, if he has no home the children would be there, and when he is restored to health the children could go back to him. Sometimes the man is in prison. We frequently have cases of that kind just for a period. With regard to the children of tramps, I should like to see large powers of detention in such cases.

43580. While we are on the powers of detention, you would also like to have powers of detention I assume with regard to the feeble-minded?—That is most desirable, I think it is most essential.

43581. Particularly with regard to girls?—At the present time we cannot keep them under control. Both boys and girls, and girls especially, can dismiss themselves or taken out by their parents, often with sad results; I think we ought to have powers of detention in all cases of the feeble-minded or epileptic people, both children and adults.

Proposal to amalgamate unions in Birmingham area and advantages thereof. 43582. From an administrative point of view you would like to combine all the unions which have Poor Law jurisdiction in the area of Birmingham?—Yes, I should.

43583. There might be a difficulty about boundaries, do you think it would work economically?—I think it would.

43584. You would be able to classify more easily?—Proposal to amalgamate unions in Birmingham area and advantages thereof. We could classify far better and we should not require such staffs as we have now; we have three distinct staffs working in the same locality, and we also have distinctive wards in the different hospitals for the same purposes.

43585. The division now is purely artificial?—Purely artificial.

43586. Nobody who is not a local expert can tell whether he is in one union or the other?—Even the people who reside there often do not know which parish they are in; one side of the street is in Aston, and the other in Birmingham, and a little further on it may be in King's Norton; it is a purely artificial division.

43587. You make a suggestion that it would be possible to give relief to the wives and children of men temporarily out of employment. You can do that now, either by labour yards or by a limited workhouse test?—My view is that in the case of men out of employment who are too respectable to come to the workhouse, and who suffer much before they come near the guardians. We should like power, if possible, to give some assistance in kind for a limited period to the wives and families, not to the men themselves, to enable them to tide over that time. The test we have to give them of stonebreaking is most undesirable and most unsatisfactory; for instance, a jeweller or a clerk could not do any good in stonebreaking, it would simply ruin his hands and unfit him for his ordinary occupation.

43588. Could you elaborate this suggestion at all, because necessarily, you must attach some precautions to it, otherwise you would have anybody who was out of employment, no matter for what reason, come upon your hands. How would you work an idea of this kind?—I should think that if a man were out of employment and in distress, if he would like his children and wife provided for for a time, say a month or a shorter period, and on enquiry he is found to be a man whose home is worth saving, we might, under proper conditions, give temporary relief. I have not any theory touching the matter which would be practicable, but I think it could be arranged.

43589. Your idea is that you want to prevent the breaking up of the home of a respectable man who is temporarily out of employment?—I find this, that if a home is once broken up in some cases they never get together again, but remain permanently under the charge of the guardians; whereas, if the home can be kept together and some means of living provided for them, it will often tide over a difficulty.

43590. Do you think the machinery of the Poor Law is the proper machinery for dealing with this sort of case?—I am not sure that it is, as at present constituted. We have at present a Distress Committee in Birmingham which is working on the lines of unemployed pay, it might be done in that way.

43591. You want what some of the witnesses call a sort of advance guard to prevent the cases coming to you as paupers?—I would rather prevent the cases than deal with them when they come to us, if possible.

43592. Have you thought this out enough to be able to answer this question. Would you give the relief on loan or make it a gift?—I think on loan primarily. I believe many men would have a satisfaction in repaying at some future time, any sum advanced to them; I do not say all of them, but I think many would.

43593. From your experience, do you think there is any appreciable number of people who, by the process which you have described, drift upon the Poor Law from being out of employment and their homes getting broken up?—I think there is. I think many men in our workhouses, even killed tradesmen, come temporarily and in some cases they remain permanently, because they find it is more comfortable than outside. I know a case in point now of a bricklayer who came in through a shortage of work some twelve months ago; he is at present in the Birmingham workhouse, he came in temporarily, but he has become now a permanent denizen. He was asked when he was going to retire a short time ago, and he said: "Not this year." I think he has got workshy now.

Disadvantages of indoor relief to able-bodied temporarily out of work.

Need of organisations preventive of pauperism.

43594. It means that the workhouse test may be a deterrent, your idea is that the Poor Law should either be altered or something added to it which would be a preventative in its operation?—Yes, I should like a preventative before the people come in touch with the Poor Law, to see if they can be saved from getting so low as applying for relief. I should like a system by which people should be allowed to go to the guardians and say that a certain family in their opinion should have relief, and it would be the duty of the Poor Law guardians to make enquiries and report that case. At the present time they wait until the people come and apply for relief and in many cases those most deserving are the most reluctant to apply

The element of preventive-ness lacking in Poor Law.

43595. Do you think there are many persons who have been connected with the administration of the Poor Law in Birmingham who hold the same views, or have put forward the same ideas, that you have, that the defect of the system is that it is not sufficiently preventative?—I think the most thoughtful men in the Poor Law think that; it may be a minority, but an influential one.

Evils of deterrent relief and of destitution as the qualification herefor.

43596. The Poor Law, as at present administered, is necessarily a deterrent, and its officials do not encourage applications to be made to them unless a person is destitute?—Quite so.

43597. You want to go a step in advance of that?—Yes.

43598. In order to prevent the people coming ultimately to the Poor Law?—I think in many cases if a man were assisted a little earlier it would perhaps be only a temporary requirement instead of a permanent requirement. When once the home is broken up they get into a lower status and perhaps remain there.

43599. And when once in the workhouse, they often remain there?—Yes.

Effect on status of guardians of increasing Poor Law area and of allowing them greater freedom.

43600. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the dignity that is connected with the work of the administration of the Poor Law, which you think is rather insufficiently recognised, if the area was very much larger and you had one Poor Law area for the whole of Birmingham, do you think the enlargement of the area would add to the dignity and recognition?—To some extent, but I think it would come in giving the guardians larger powers than they have at present, and being less fettered by applying to the Local Government Board on trivial matters, as they have to now.

43601. Perhaps if the area were larger those powers might be extended?—Probably so. I have often thought that if they trusted urban guardians in large towns with larger powers, that would also affect the status of guardians; at the present time we are tied in the same way in a large town as they are in country districts.

43602. Do you think that the character of the people who would try to become guardians would rise if there was more dignity?—I think it would certainly, especially if we were not simply deterrent, but had the power of assistance apart from the deterrence. It is principally a preventative system at the present time; if we had larger powers of assistance beforehand than we have now, I think people of a very high calibre would join our ranks.

Difficulty of educating adult paupers

43603. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to these unemployed men, suppose instead of giving them test work, which you say is rather detrimental to them, you were to enable them to have educational advantages which involved their whole time from half-past seven to eight or nine o'clock, a regular system of education as you get in industrial schools, do you not think that might be a way which would enable you to give relief to the wives and children without demoralising the men?—The class of men who want relief by technical education would not be touched at all, they are too old for that now. I think they have lost any wish to help themselves by education.

43604. Do you mean they are all over forty-five or fifty?—No, some are not more than thirty or thirty-five.

43605. Surely you could do something in the way of technical education and physical training?—I do not think the class of men we have apply for relief would be affected by technical education of any kind.

43606. And no hygienic regime or anything of that sort?—I do not think so.

43607. Do the guardians of Birmingham reside in the parish of Birmingham?—Very few, I think perhaps one third. The parish of Birmingham is mostly comprised of manufactories and small houses, and the suburbs are residential, largely for the middle class and well-to-do.

43608. I was told there were no relieving officers living in the parish of Birmingham?—Do you mean guardians or relieving officers.

43609. Relieving officers?—Probably that is correct. You see the Birmingham parish is only one half of the City of Birmingham; it is cut across in a section.

43610. (Dr. Downes.) You speak of the costliness of the present system of workhouses; could you give in the cost of your own workhouse?—It cost about 7s. 5d. per head in 1905.

43611. What does that include?—That includes administration, clothes and food, that is, the general cost.

43612. Would that include any loan charges?—No, except interest on loans.

43613. Then it is not the whole cost?—It would include the interest but not the principal.

43614. Not the repayment of the principal?—No.

43615. You think that includes everything?—Everything except the repayment of the principal.

43616. What is the cost of your infirmary?—The cost of the infirmary for last year was 14s. 5d. per head. I see the workhouse was lower for last year, it was 6s. 10d. for 1906.

43617. Do you find the cost of the infirmary going up or down?—It depends to some extent on the numbers. The numbers fluctuate. Perhaps for two or three years the numbers increase and then it gradually falls back to a lower level.

43618. I am speaking of the relative cost per head. Is that becoming more costly as time goes on?—No, it is roughly about the same as time goes on, except possibly a slight increase over a period of years.

43619. You speak of the circumstances which deter capable men and women from offering themselves for election as guardians. You think that such matters as the want of complete control of the officials have an effect. Could you explain that a little?—If we had any question arising as to our doctors or masters, we could not dismiss them, unless there was a Local Government Board inquiry, which is a most cumbersome method of dealing with them. They know that and that they can practically defy the guardians if they choose to do so.

43620. You think there must be an inquiry?—The only way to dismiss a staff official is by an inquiry.

43621. You think there is no means without an inquiry?—That is the only means we know of, at any rate. The City Council can give an officer notice in their own way, we cannot.

43622. I am not sure that that is the case. I have known cases where it has been otherwise as regards the necessity of an inquiry?—We have certain staff officers and all those are appointed, after the first nine months, permanently, and we cannot dismiss them; we have no means of dismissing them.

43623. What proportion of the total number of your officers would be subject to the Local Government Board's consent to their dismissal?—Probably few in proportion, but all the head officials, masters and matrons of workhouses, and doctors, and the district medical officers and some other officials.

43624. You say the want of power to arrange dietaries deters capable persons from coming forward?—That is only one of the reasons. Take our present workhouses, our guardians say the increase in the numbers there has been caused because the dietary has recently been altered by the Local Government Board, and they would reduce it to the old dietary had they the power.

43625. Do you know what the process is now for guardians to frame a dietary?—I am not cognisant of that.

Mr. HENRY JOHN MANTON, called ; and Examined.

11 Mar. 1907. 43626. (Chairman.) You have, I believe, prepared for us a very interesting paper giving the result of your long experience?—I have prepared this Statement.

Power of guardians as to workhouse dietary.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. My qualifications and experience are as follows:—I am a Justice of the Peace for the City of Birmingham, member of the Licensing Committee under the Act of 1904, member of the City Council (with an interval of some years) since 1881, member of the Education Committee under the Act of 1902, Guardian of the Poor of Birmingham since 1877, on the Management Committee of the Infirmary and the Cottage Homes during the period of their existence, senior Vice-president of the Poor Law Unions' Association, on the Executive Committee of the Central Poor Law Conference, on the London Committee of the National Association for the Protection of Children.

2. It is difficult to express, with necessary brevity, opinions on the social and industrial conditions of the City of Birmingham. I have had exceptional opportunities of forming them—from the period of my early apprenticeship to the principle and the methods of outdoor relief, from 1877 to 1890—my education on the City Bench from 1890 until the present time—and in this position for five or six years as presiding magistrate in the court where the school attendance cases were taken—and in addition as a Council member of the Distress Committee under the Unemployed Act of 1905.

Social and industrial conditions in Birmingham.

3. During the last thirty years I have no manner of doubt that the condition of the lower classes of industry has deteriorated. The Health Committee (sanitary authority) has done, and is doing, a very great deal to improve the general state of housing and hygiene, the detection and treatment of zymotic disease, and is discharging adequately the duties common to such a department in all large towns. The upper strata of industry, where skilled labour is found, are living under better conditions as to domestic life. The lower strata are in need of the attention of agencies which are not yet created on a basis of efficiency.

Prevalence
employment.

4. On the subject of unemployment I am of opinion that casual employment covers a larger area than unemployment, due to uncertainty in trade, season requirements, and the tendency in the larger firms to vary by reason of spasmodic contracts their demands upon the floating market of unskilled labour. This remark was intended to apply to the heavy and metal trades. It has also an application to the lighter trades of luxury, which affect a large section of the population, and which depend for demand on the fads and fashions of society.

The causes of unemployment and failure of Poor Law to grapple therewith.

5. Generally, unemployment is due (and particularly in the heavy trades, where joint stock company methods are most keenly exhibited in the use of labour) to the frequency and earlier discharge of the least effective, either by age or incapacity, who rarely obtain skilled employment subsequently, and deteriorate rapidly to the ranks of casual labour. In my opinion Poor Law administration has done nothing towards noting this state of things, and nothing towards putting itself into touch with this most effective contributory to the later stage of destitute pauperism, held to be its only rightful concern by some administrators.

Rural exodus results in unemployment of the aged ;
effects of town environment on physique, te.

6. There is much to be said on this question, but one thing is certain—that it is the experience of such of us as think seriously of these questions and probe deeply into them, that the great inrush of men from the rural districts into the towns during the last thirty or forty years, with special application to Birmingham, has had the effect of crushing out from the labour market the older men, born in the city, by reason of the greater vitality of the newcomers. This is to be accounted for by the deterioration of physique produced by the atmosphere and close living inevitable in large centres, at any rate inevitable under the ways in which the provision and maintenance of industrial dwellings have been exploited for profit during the last two generations. It is amongst the third generation of industrial labourers that physical deterioration, easy despondency and lethargy (the state of the casual labourer to a large extent) are to be found. Physical and nervous breakdown exists to a much more serious extent amongst the poor than in other classes, but in its relation to Poor Law administration its pitiable results are to be found chiefly amongst those who persistently avoid coming into contact with the Poor Law, and thus remain undiscovered by its agents.

Destitution
undiscover
by the Poor
Law.

7. Later on will be ventured some observations on the question of methods of relief. It is a historical fact that out of a very heated debate on the principles of relief came the several progressive movements of the Birmingham Guardians of the Poor. Isolation, or the separation of children from the demoralising associations with adult indoor poor has always been a favourite object in Birmingham. Originally and for many years they were thus separated. The children had, however, prior to 1880, gravitated to a contiguity with the House. Boarding out of suitable children under a certified committee had been carried on for several years, but had not been a success, and was in 1881 discontinued. The experiment successfully carried out by voluntary agency at the home for little boys, Farningham, Kent, was copied in the erection of the well-known cottage homes at Marston Green, which since 1881 have, with conspicuous success, provided for 440 children. A small percentage of the permanent children are known to be moral failures, and a still smaller percentage are known to have returned to the ranks of pauperism.

Origin of present policy of Birmingham
guardians to children and results
thereof.

8. It was the agitation in 1882 on the subject of outdoor relief that gave emphasis to the necessity of giving a broader meaning to the term "destitution."

Destitution
as a condition of relief.

9. It was admitted by the sterner opponents of outdoor relief that the success of their restrictive regulations rendered necessary proper provision for the remedial treatment of the sick poor elsewhere than in their own homes, where the conditions were "destitution" of the means necessary for recovery.

10. The infirmary was built in Dudley Road, Birmingham, known locally as the "Birmingham Infirmary." It is administered under a Local Government Board Order, by a management committee of the guardians, to whom liberal powers are delegated. Its medical and surgical beds number about 800, and maternity accommodation for twenty, and the area of the infirmary includes also about 300 male and female epileptics and mentally defectives.

Separate

and results.

11. The expectations with which this infirmary was opened have been more than fulfilled—it may have been abused to some extent; all such institutions are abused, whether municipal or voluntary—but it has received within its wards many a helpless householder, and returned him well to his home and family, and occupation. It is a casualty hospital, for in the midst of great works and street risks, casualties cannot be refused admittance, though the interests of ratepayers are safeguarded as much as may be.

12. It is accepted by the Midwifery Council as a training school under its regulations, and as such has a high reputation.

13. In connection with this infirmary, one further progressive step which is in progress of development may be mentioned; this is, the provision which is being made for sane epileptics and mentally defectives at King's Norton, near Birmingham. By a happy combination of the three boards of the parish of Birmingham, and the unions of King's Norton and Aston, a joint committee has been formed, which, having acquired a suitable estate, is now erecting buildings for the accommodation in the first instance of about 220 male and female patients, able-bodied and improvable. Technically the institution is a workhouse, in local designation it will be a "home" and a "colony."

tics and feeble-minded.

14. The foregoing brief and imperfect summary of progressive work brings us to the consideration of the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief.

Respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief.

15. Where indoor relief has merits, we have pretty much dealt with them, by an extent of classification which has removed from the house proper all young children, all sick poor, and all sick aged poor disabled and suffering from chronic ailments.

16. The workhouse proper is limited to aged poor, other than infirmary cases; able-bodied men, who ought to be in the workhouse.

Classes dea-with in the workhouse.

not to be there; and able-bodied women, there from various reasons more or less unsatisfactory.

17. There is also attached to it the casual or tramp department, a never-ending cause of anxiety and difficulty, but the question is now generally receiving so large an amount of attention that something ought to come out of it of administrative value.

18. The Parish of Birmingham has exceptional difficulties in the matter of able-bodied inmates within the House; the difficulty of providing task work without interfering with outside industries appears insurmountable; the class of men who are there do not appear to be such as inspire sympathy, they are chiefly undeserving, and are said to be to a considerable extent the refuse of the common lodging-houses.

19. Though irremovable from the parish, they really belong to the casual or tramp class, with whom and among whom they should be classed.

20. If land were available, they should be set to work upon it—no other solution of the law of relief suggests itself to the social economist—such law being “that if the able-bodied man claims relief, he must be set to work to earn its nearest possible equivalent.”

21. In dealing with these classes of inmates, guardian and justice are alike agreed that a commitment to a common gaol is no solution, and is no remedy.

22. The merits or demerits of outdoor relief depend on the way the subject is approached, and in what way Poor Law administration is to be regarded. Is it to be deemed judicially deterrent and punitive, or is it to be regarded as sympathetically helpful, remedial and restorative, and in either case adequate? The true answer of experience is: both attitudes have their uses.

23. The attitude of judicial deterrence and punitive treatment has, however, prevailed to so great an extent as to have brought the Poor Law into odium with the public, blurred over the more generous possibilities of the Poor Law and deadened the sense of responsibility in guardians.

24. In no Poor Law area in England has the science of investigation been carried to greater efficiency than in the parish of Birmingham; the staff, its organisation, its official zeal for limitation, has been excellent from the point of view of deterrence from applications, of relegation of every possible case to voluntary agencies, of an offer of the House to others, and specially to those where it was known it would not be accepted.

25. It is only fair to say that the years of experience which have been gained have led the heads of this department to recognise the economic value of a remedial attitude towards some of the cases, especially where a man or a woman have received what may be called first aid in the infirmary and, returning helpless to their homes, need temporary aid until their earning power is restored.

26. The real defect or shortcoming of out-relief machinery is the fetish that guardians or their officers are not required to deal with poverty except when they are applied to. The effect of such a restricted view is that many cases sink to a destitute pauperism which might have been nursed into salvation and independence by a judicious treatment at an earlier stage, and this applies with greatest force to the deserving poor who in many cases would die of starvation rather than apply to the parish.

27. There is another aspect of the subject that a progressive guardian feels acutely, that unless his function is extended to the remedial treatment of the poor, he is limited to dealing deterrently and grudgingly with the scum of society, and thus is himself subject to moral deterioration.

28. The outcome of all this as related to the merits of outdoor relief appears to be the suggestion of a collaboration of agencies and machinery for dealing with all who fall into this strata of society, deserving and undeserving alike, and in so dealing with the cases found there, to do it efficiently and adequately with a due regard to causes.

29. Little need be said as to the classes of persons applying for relief. Those who are sick are dealt with by the medical district officers, either at their homes, if possible, and if not, by order of admission to the infirmary, and adequate provision is made.

30. In the case of widows with children there is an opinion freely held that the provision is not adequate, and relief is not so widely given as this class requires in the interests of young children.

31. There have, no doubt, been special relaxations, and the presence of lady guardians on the board encourages these special orders, but the practice of relieving only a certain number of children, which excludes the mother and the youngest child, is too narrow, and reduces the general relief to inadequacy.

32. Then again the scale is inadequate and inelastic. One shilling and a loaf—leaving the mother to keep herself and provide a lodging—is totally inadequate, even though it be supplemented in winter months by a further grant of 6d. per week for coal. These are not matters of detail, for they affect the whole question of merits and demerits. If the inadequacy is intended in any sense to be deterrent, or is based on any suspicion of fraud, it is an error and an injustice; if the former, it is exercised on the wrong objects by whose injury the community suffers, if the latter the machinery of investigation is at fault.

33. The causes of pauperism have found illustration in the foregoing notes, but apart from economic causes arising from commercial conditions which affect the deserving poor the most, other causes, too plain to the experience of guardians and justices, and more especially the latter, are the drinking and betting habits of the people. The improvement in drinking has filtered down from the upper to the lower grades. It is to be hoped that a similar improvement or lessening of the spirit of gambling will follow. Some justices are inclined to the opinion that gambling is the worst of the two evils. They feel the difficulty of enforcing statutes and penalties against the betting habits of the “lower orders” whilst similar habits and practices in the “higher orders” go unheeded and unrebuked. The fascination for amusements must be a great drain on the meagre resources of industrial households, though in respect of the craze for football, it is complained by the owners of licensed houses that the payment of gate-money seriously interferes with their returns.

34. It is notorious that the class of persons who seek election as guardians is not satisfactory or conducive to good government. It brings no comfort to know that other local governing authorities are subjected to the same shortage of suitable men. Guardians are by their status the greater sufferers. The office confers no social rank; the duties are onerous; they are not within the public sight; they expose men who undertake them to obloquy; they are frequently targets for abuse in the Press.

35. Whatever may be the need or requirements of supervision by a Central Board in the case of rural unions, such supervision, restriction and limitation of urban unions by the Local Government Board has, without doubt, had a paralysing effect in many cases. The best of our men resent it, and naturally so, for it is mostly the outcome of officialism and not the honest expression of laymen at headquarters, who the laymen at home recognise as men of like passions with themselves, and, it may be added, of like aspirations and inspirations. There is no doubt that official coldness represses the spirit of initiation.

36. It does not appear necessary to add anything on this head as to administration of relief; much has been said about the classes presenting themselves, and those who do not, and opinions have been freely expressed as to adequacy and limitations, sphere of action and area of duty. An illustration may, however, be furnished of the effect of recent legislation as affecting or adding to the duties of guardians, and the way the duty or work was undertaken.

37. The feeding of school children order cast upon the guardians the work of receiving applications, of providing food, and recovering the cost. To give briefly the story as it relates to the parish of Birmingham, two authorities were brought into friction at the outset, never at any time the most harmonious since the Education Act of 1870; the guardians resented the call on them. The officers who had to make the applications, resented the machinery of forms and stationery; the actual feeding, from various reasons, dribbled down to a minute few in number; and the process of recovery laid down by the Local Government Board was farcical in character, and was dropped.

38. The illustration is given because the details of failure cast a light on the views of those guardians who desire a closer touch with the households where pauperism is manufactured. If the guardians had fed the children and then followed them to their homes and found the reasons for neglect, and then sought the co-operation of the Justices for control of the causes or punishment if they continued to exist, then the purposes of the Feeding Order would have been met, and a higher ideal of the Poor Law would have been created.

Possibility of progressive reform under existing Poor Law system and attitude of Local Government Board to such reform, etc.

39. I feel a difficulty in suggesting reforms in the law or practice, because I have personally found no serious difficulty in carrying out any progressive step which has come within the range of possibility. It has only required a circle—often a small one—of men animated by like enthusiasm for progress to be united in any scheme, for that scheme to be pursued to fruition. I know that the Local Government Board is not always easy to deal with, to persuade, that it is sometimes afflicted with inconsistency, but I, or my friends, have never met with opposition that has been destructive of hopes, and that, I am aware, is the experience of others with whose views I am familiar.

40. One of the most respected inspectors of the Local Government Board was, in 1881, opposed to the erection of our cottage homes, and the Local Government Board shared his views. He never "cursed," but he, at the latter end, most generously and unsparingly "blessed" them when the results began to be seen.

Need of greater control for guardians over their officials. Criticism of present audit system.

41. It is a general opinion amongst guardians with whom my public position brings me into association, that they ought to have a greater control over their officials—a control as full as is possessed by other local authorities. It is held strongly that the audit of accounts is transgressing beyond its legitimate limitations into a criticism of policy.

42. I will only add that I am in general agreement, with some exceptions, with the views as to law and practice set out in the Memorandum which has already been submitted for your information by the Executive Council of the Association of Poor Law Unions, of which I have the honour to be the senior vice-president.

Need for Poor Law initiative in relieving distress.

43. If I may be permitted to summarise the results of a public life of manifold experience and of large opportunities of judgment, I would add that if the Poor Law of the future is to be a real power for effective and redemptive service amongst the dense masses of our crowded cities which the economic conditions of the last half century have produced, if its agencies are to take a right position in the public estimation, it—the Poor Law—must go to the people instead of the people coming to it. Only in direct touch, aided by extended powers of supervision and control, under wise, judicious and yet sympathetic administration, will it be possible to probe into and grapple with the circumstances and habits of the people, which present problems so acute, and may become dangerous to the public safety.

44. Of the necessity for this direct touch other local authorities are already convinced—illustration is found in a report just presented to the city council by the Watch Committee in reference to street trading by children. The chairman of the committee spoke of the opportunity that licensing of children had afforded to its agents of getting close to the conditions of the people out of which this street-trading takes its rise, and its alleged necessity.

This statement was emphasised by the chairman of the Education Committee, who bore witness to the general improvement of the children, and in the conditions in which they were previously employed.

Deterioration of lower industrial classes and improvement of the upper.

43627. (Chairman.) There are one or two points in that Statement on which I should like to ask you a few questions. As I gather, you think that during the last thirty years the condition of the lower industrial classes has deteriorated?—Distinctly so.

43628. You are distinctly of that opinion?—Yes, that is so; taking the gradation of skilled labour down to lowest forms of unskilled labour.

43629. Whilst the conditions of the upper stratum, skilled labour, have improved, the conditions of those below have deteriorated?—Yes.

43630. Taking the skilled labour as one stratum, would you divide unskilled labour into two divisions, or would you say that the whole of the unskilled labour was in a worse condition than skilled labour?—I should distinctly divide unskilled labour into: (1) That unskilled labour which is a sort of adjunct to skilled labour; and (2) the pure labouring class.

43631. Which would be, I suppose, rather lower down?—Which would be of a lower type.

43632. The employment of the first class of unskilled labour would largely depend on the skilled labour, I suppose?—Yes.

43633. I understand you think that modern industrial conditions tend to deteriorate a man more rapidly, physically, than those which existed before; that is to say, the man is worn out sooner?—He is regarded as worn out sooner. The feeling that I have, which I have tried to express, is that the modern method of joint-stock enterprise regards a man at an early stage as inefficient, or if I may use the phrase, it considers that it is uneconomical to employ him under the old conditions which obtained under private employment and with private employers. That is the feeling that I have at any rate.

43634. The old system was that the workers formed more a sort of family, I suppose?—It was, and there was more consideration given to the men.

43635. It has been suggested to us that the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the liabilities attached to it have tended to increase the difficulties of men of a certain age getting fresh employment?—Yes; because, rightly or wrongly, they are held to be more liable to accident. As the law does not provide any means of contracting out (which I hold it should do, after a certain age), the employer gives himself the benefit of the doubt, and the man either is discharged or runs more risk of being discharged.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on employment.

43636. As regards boy-labour, would you say that boys leaving school find it easier to get employment now than they did some years ago?—Yes. There have been certain commercial conditions in Birmingham which have been very damaging indeed to boy-labour between fourteen and fifteen and, say, twenty. They have been encouraged to get large wages for certain commercial reasons connected with booms in the trade, and then at eighteen or twenty, when the conditions alter, they enter the ordinary labour market very much demoralised—to put it as shortly as I can.

Increase of boy-labour and its effects.

43637. You mean that the class of employment out of which they get when boys a fair return, terminates when they become adults, is that it?—Yes; at least the demand for that kind of cheap labour terminates then.

43638. Holding those views, I understand you think the Poor Law is not adapted, or has not adapted itself, to meet these particular industrial conditions?—The conditions of earlier inefficiency, do you mean?

Existing Poor Law not adapted to grapple with the new causes of pauperism.

43639. I am taking the causes of pauperism and distress which arise out of the conditions which you believe now exist; you think, do you not, that the Poor Law has not adapted itself to meet those circumstances?—That is so.

43640. I see you express the opinion that you find a difficulty in suggesting reforms in the law or in practice, because you have, by pertinacity and otherwise, found no serious difficulty in effecting reforms?—That is so. The experience that we have had in Birmingham has been that, on the whole, we have been able to adapt our powers to our progressive action, by what we hold to be the rightful demand of the time. I think the whole history of our Poor Law work in Birmingham makes that clear. We might have done more, but we have done a great deal.

Possibility of reform under existing system.

43641. Taking the functions of the Poor Law as they are at present accepted by guardians and discharged by them, do you think that the principle of classification could be carried much further than it has been?—I think in Birmingham it has been carried as far as it can be, outside what I should call the workhouse department proper; that is to say, our classification of the sick poor is pretty nearly as good as it can be. We are still charged classification with a certain want of classification in the infirmary wards, for instance, between the people of good character and the people of indifferent character; but apart from a classification of character, I think we have carried the classification of the sick poor as far as we possibly can. As I think you have heard, we have dealt also with the children as a whole, and have used for the children all the powers that we possessed, or that any Acts for the protection of children gave us. We have used them freely, and perhaps sometimes even beyond the statutes—in the interests of the children, I mean. But as regards the workhouse classification, I feel sure that more could be done if the conditions of the workhouse lent themselves to it. It is an old workhouse, out of date, and those of our colleagues who administer that department are under difficulties which the happy possessors of modern workhouses do not feel, or do not feel to the extent that we do.

Classification of pauper at Birmingham, and possibility of extension.

43642. I think you are of opinion that in the workhouse there are certain able-bodied men who ought not to be there?—That is so—partly the result of what I have already said.

43643. You could classify, could you not, the older people more thoroughly than has been done, if you had more accommodation or different accommodation, by putting them into Classes A., B., and C., say, and giving to A. more privileges than to B. and to B. more privileges than to C.?—Yes; and that has been attempted to some extent in what is called the merit wards. I think it might be done also somewhat on the lines of the cottage system which Bradford has; I hope that will come some day, because barrack wards are not the places for a good many of our aged poor.

43644. Going on with the practice of your department as regards out-relief, you think that the relief is not sufficiently elastic and is frequently inadequate, I understand?—I do.

43645. I assume that you are in favour of a thorough investigation into the cases?—Thoroughly so; no investigation can be too severe, provided it is not harsh and arbitrary. I was thinking for the moment of the condition into which our officials get by a long practice in such investigations. That does not apply to Poor Law officials alone; it applies to Charity Organisation Society officials as well.

43646. You are in favour of a thorough investigation with adequate relief according to the conditions?—I am.

43647. And you would be averse to breaking up the home wherever the occupant was a respectable person?—I should be entirely so; I think that is a suicidal policy.

43648. Have you any difficulty with widows in receipt of out-relief, in regard to ascertaining whether the relief given is properly applied to the feeding and maintaining of their children?—I should think from my earlier experience of out-relief—and I see no reason to suppose it is different now that I have other departments to see to—that on the whole the relief given on behalf of the children is properly dealt with by the mothers. In cases where it is not likely to be so, the guardians, by sending the children to Marston Green, have relieved widows of some of their children. As a member of the Marston Green Committee for the whole of the time, I have always held that if a mother is fit to see to her children properly, the family should not be divided or severed in any way, but adequate relief should be given to the mother for her children if she is a fit mother.

43649. A suggestion has been made to us—I do not know if it ever came before you—to the effect that you might start some system like the industrial school system, and let the children of widows go daily to a school where they would be fed and taken care of, but returning every evening to their mother?—Do you mean that they should be sent to a sort of crèche or nursery.

43650. Yes, except that I was thinking of the older ones?—Will you kindly repeat the question.

43651. Assuming that the mother has to work, it has been suggested that her children should go to a day school managed somewhat on the principle of some of the industrial day schools, where one could be certain of their being properly fed and looked after, the guardians defraying the cost. What would you think of such a scheme as that?—I do not think I have any knowledge of any industrial day school in Birmingham of that character. You do not mean a day nursery.

43652. No, a day industrial school?—I have no knowledge of it. Your question brings up Paragraph 37 where I deal with children who are badly fed. It is to the advantage of the children that they should have the benefit of any money which has been paid by any authority for their keep, whatever the machinery you use for it.

43653. This seemed to me a method of meeting your suggestion that the children should still remain with their mother?—I understand. Under our local Act of 1831 there was an old power to the effect that the guardians might provide places where they could receive the children while the mothers were at work, and could expend on such children the relief which they would have given otherwise for such children. It is a very admirable provision, but I do not think it has ever been acted upon.

43654. That is, roughly, the sort of idea I put to you?—I quite agree with such an arrangement.

43655. Now, coming to your suggestions generally, would you like to make the Poor Law more preventive than it is, or would you like more machinery to be set up which would prevent people from becoming paupers and would help them in advance?—It is evident that the trend of public opinion is to set up such machinery. I am inclined to hold a brief on behalf of the Poor Law, and to consider that the Poor Law properly worked is equal to such a social duty. That is my point. My standard of the Poor Law is so high in its possibilities, that I am prepared to argue that its machinery should at least be equal to, and as efficient as, any outside machinery that the Legislature seems inclined to set up.

43656. Do you think that the Poor Law should take upon itself this fresh duty, which in the minds of a great many is rather antagonistic to the principles on which you discharge your present duties; in other words, would you encourage people in this direction?—I think so, because my idea of the Poor Law covers the ground. I do not mean to say that I would argue for guardians alone, but for any accretion or addition that might be found desirable.

43657. I think you have put the case very well in Paragraphs 26 and 27 of your statement. Would it be possible with the existing machinery to undertake some of the duties which you suggest?—When I wrote those paragraphs I had in mind my own practice on the bench. If I have a case before me of neglected children, for instance, from whatever source the case is brought—whether by the guardians or by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children—I have always felt that if I could obtain the end we all desire by keeping the case under supervision and putting it back for a month or a couple of months, it would be much better to do so than any immediate attempt to punish the parents. That same view I would carry into the administration of the Poor Law.

43658. Would it not in practice resolve itself into the Poor Law guardians making loans?—I have no objection to that. How far to enforce it subsequently is a matter of discretion or prudence or expediency, but I have no objection whatever in the earlier stage to put it on loan. I know many people do not think much of it, but it might be useful and it might save the pride, if I may use the expression, of the person who is so dealt with.

43659. It has been suggested in certain quarters that this work could be done better by an agency associated with, but independent of, the Poor Law; that is to say, it has been suggested that there should be a committee representing the different charities in the locality, and that they should sit with each out-relief committee, and that certain cases should be handed over to them or that they should take up certain cases?—I have no objection to such an arrangement at all, and, in fact, I endeavoured to bring it about fifteen years ago. We are not much forwarder in Birmingham to-day than we were then. We have what is called the City Aid Committee, which is establishing its branches, but at present there is none of that effective touch with the guardians that one could desire. I think that is the point of your question, but at present there is not that effective touch between the guardians and the City Aid Committee.

43660. You may put it so ; that is rather the practical purport of my question ?—That is the present position of things. What the ultimate result may be I do not know.

43661. The criticism that I am now making on your suggestion is that the Poor Law guardians would have to undertake a fresh set of very difficult duties, in which a great deal of discrimination would be required, and which would be antagonistic to a certain extent to the principles upon which they have previously administered relief. Do you think that, looking at the class who become Poor Law guardians, you would be able to get men of sufficient discrimination and ability to undertake this very serious additional duty ?—My answer at once is this, that the higher you raise the standard of work of the Poor Law guardians the more likely you are to get good men. We cannot get them now, and if you take away to these voluntary agencies, or to these outside agencies, the dealing with the better class of people, and leave for the guardians merely the scum of the population, you will not, in the large cities, get men to come in for the work who are worth anything at all.

43662. I see you state that the fact of guardians being constantly in contact with the worst section of the population has a distinctly deteriorating effect upon their attitude ?—It demoralises them and their officers.

43663. Is it not a question of time ? Assuming that there were men of ability who were ready to devote themselves to this work, are there enough people who can afford to do it ?—The short answer to that is that if there were a fair number of men able and willing to devote themselves to it, the work of some of us who have to do it now would be very much lightened and divided. It is not so much the amount of work that has to be done, as the way it has of getting into a few hands who are over-done. I speak most feelingly on that point.

43664. Do you think that matters will ever be much improved, assuming the guardians are always elected on a large popular suffrage ?—I do not know how to answer that question at all. I would say this, though my own personal politics almost forbid me to say it, but I am bound to do it—that before the Act of 1894 we had better men than those who come forward now. My point is that the higher you raise the standard of work for any local authority, the better men you are likely to get to do it.

43665. (Mrs. Webb.) Does that not point to having one local council for all local purposes ?—Theoretically it does, but so far in Birmingham I do not think it has worked well. Take education, for instance. I am a member of the education committee, and in that case men are picked out of the city council who have a certain reputation for work ; they are put into educational work, which requires thought and consideration of the highest character, but the education work does not get done as well as if it were done ad hoc. If you add the Poor Law to the city council as well, in the first place we should have to have a considerably larger council, and in the second place we should have to add a new class of work, which is altogether different from the sanitary work or the commercial trading work (if I may use the expression) of a city council. I have advocated on the Poor Law Unions Association an objection to the amalgamation of the Poor Law in urban centres with the city council, because I think the effect of even what I have been arguing to-day would be that what I hope to get out of the Poor Law, as an ad hoc business, would not be likely to be so well carried out if it were a part of a municipal body. I am trying to put my words as short as I can, but one is tempted of course to expand, and I feel that I am speaking somewhat feebly for want of expansion.

43666. (Chairman.) I think you are putting your views very succinctly and clearly before us. I suppose you would say that the work of Poor Law guardians is essentially different from any work that the town council at present have to do ?—Yes. The only approach to it is the work of the health committee, which does bring them largely in contact with the poor. Our city council has delegated all its sanitary powers to its health committee. That is the only side of the city council which touches the Poor Law guardians at all. The education side used to touch them years ago, when the guardians had to pay the fees, but that has been dropped.

43667. Speaking from your great experience of the Poor Law, I assume you would not differ from this position, that what is wanted is a judicial and uniform administration of the Poor Law on humane lines right throughout England ?—That is so.

43668. Therefore you must try to establish some kind of uniformity ?—Yes.

43669. Between one locality and another ?—Between one urban locality and another.

43670. That being so, can you get that kind of judicial element out of the stamp of man who comes forward as a Poor Law guardian to-day ?—Yes. There is a percentage of them. I think I can say this—that some of the best of our men on the city council for the last thirty years have been trained in Poor Law. They make very successful city councillors. I do not know whether I am one or not, but still I know some that are.

43671. Then you think that the increased scope of duty which has been put upon the Poor Law guardians might be efficaciously carried out by persons elected upon a popular suffrage ?—Yes, I see no reason to doubt it, if the public estimate of a guardian's duty is raised from what it is at the present time.

43672. Is not one of the difficulties now about local election that it must be almost run more or less on political lines, because there is no organisation behind it, except a political organisation ?—All local elections partake more or less of political action. I do not know how you can separate it. But that does not apply any more to the election of guardians (probably less) than to the election of the city council. What one complains of is the general public apathy in the elections of guardians.

43673. Is there not this great difference, that men in standing as Poor Law guardians can make certain promises as regards the administration of relief, and, unlike any other sphere of political action, they can almost give effect to those promises directly if they get a majority ?—It is a common thing to make promises in elections, is it not ?

43674. It is very common, but it is very difficult to give effect to them except in the sphere of Poor Law guardians ?—Pardon me ; I think the trend of your question is that promises to extend relief may be an important element in the election of a guardian ?

43675. Yes, and that such promises can be given effect to immediately ; which is, you know, very often difficult in other cases of electoral promises ?—That is so. But I think Nemesis comes more frequently in matters relating to the Poor Law than it does elsewhere ; they are sooner found out by the community.

43676. I only wanted to get your opinion as to whether there is not very great difficulty in getting the sort of judicial administration of the Poor Law which you would like ?—I think one is quite as likely to get that in the present separated position of Poor Law guardians, as one would get it if it were added to the other local government authority. I am trying to answer your questions very candidly. I think if the work were improved in the direction I have tried to lay down, it would offer more scope to an able and educated man coming into the work than it does now. That is my general answer to your question.

43677. How many Poor Law guardians are there in Birmingham ?—Thirty-six.

43678. That is not too many, I assume, for the work ?—No, it is not too many, and they do not all work at that.

43679. Would eighteen, do you think, be able to do the work in Birmingham ?—No.

43680. That would not be sufficient ?—No. You see we have three great departments—the house, the infirmary, and Marston Green, besides the subsidiary work. Each of those departments is equal in administrative value to several of the council committees—and I am very familiar with their business.

43681. How many hours per week would a man who does his work well have to give up to his Poor Law duties ?—He would have to give up fifteen hours per week, I daresay.

43682. As much as that?—It all depends upon whether he is the chairman of a committee, or simply a member of it. A chairman of a committee, if he does his duty, spends a very considerable portion of his time in his own department if he wishes to become master of it, as he ought to be.

43683. Turning to the officials under the guardians are you satisfied with the personnel of your own staff?—Yes.

43684. Do you think with the machinery you have got you could carry out these increased duties?—Certainly.

43685. Then so far as the personnel and the machinery are concerned you do not wish to make any suggestions, but you think they are quite adequate?—The personnel of a powerful board like Birmingham is pretty much what they make it.

43686. I was thinking of the stamp of ability that your officers need?—It is what they make them, partly by selection and partly by training. I believe in expecting an officer to do his duty, and not doing it for him.

43687. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you impose any test of duty upon your relieving officers before you appoint them?—No.

43688. Have they usually been assistants before?—Frequently they have been trained in the office in other capacities. We have had very few changes during the course of the last twenty years. The last one I remember came from the Post Office, and he has proved a very efficient relieving officer.

43689. Do you think that there is need for having some kind of preparation before a man is appointed relieving officer?—I have not found the necessity for it.

43690. For instance, should he undergo an examination to show that he knows generally what are the duties of his office?—I do not see where such an examination comes in, unless he came from a training school—and that is not contemplated.

43691. It would not be impossible to have some body of persons who might institute an examination of some sort, much in the same kind of way as is now done for sanitary inspectors, would it?—In our case it would probably be an assistant relieving officer who would obtain the higher position when a vacancy arose.

43692. So that he would get a training practically under another officer in the first instance?—Yes.

43693. Supposing it were made the duty of the relieving officer to hunt out cases in which relief was necessary, which I take it is your suggestion, would you not want an increased staff?—Pardon me, but the phrase "hunt out" is a little bit further than I would mean to go.

43694. I only used the phrase "hunt out" to bring out your meaning. Your point is this, if I understand it rightly—you think the guardians should not wait until the application is made to them, do you not?—I do. My idea is that when it became known in a court or in a terrace, from neighbours or from persons interested, that a family was in distress and was gradually going down into technical destitution, I would say that it was the duty of the relieving officer, his attention being drawn to the case, to deal with it.

43695. You do not propose that he should seek out cases?—No.

43696. That is rather less than I thought you meant then. If it is only to be when attention is called to the matter, you do not think that additional staff would be required?—No, I do not; but if additional staff were required, and the purpose were an adequate purpose, our guardians would not refuse additional staff. The extent of the staff depends upon whether it is carrying out an efficient purpose.

43697. Do you consider that you have a number of relieving officers sufficient now for the work that is to be done?—Yes. I believe when I served my apprenticeship there were six of them. They are reduced to four now, that is partly due to a better system of dealing with these cases, and partly to the fact that cases are deterred from coming, and therefore there is less for them to do.

43698. Rightly or wrongly deterred, do you mean?—Half-way between the two—unwisely deterred. Mr. H. J. Manton.

43699. Unwisely deterred by the law or by practice?—By the practice; the law does not come in. 11 Mar. 1907.

43700. (Mrs. Webb.) Could you say in what way they are deterred by the practice?—Hardly, but there is a attitude of general feeling—and I have reason to believe it to some extent to be correctly founded—that an applicant to a relieving officer receives no encouragement at all, and is told frequently "You have no business to apply." I cannot go any further in my answer without an illustration. The general feeling is that relieving officers are more in the nature of watch-dogs—I do not use the phrase objectionably at all; but that is the position they hold and the function they serve. That does not apply so much to sick cases, because for fear (if I may put it on that low ground) of possible public scandal, they get more prompt attention, and even in some cases are sought after—I do not use the term "hunted" after—because of the state of sickness into which they have got. The freedom of action that the relieving officers have in sick cases is much greater than they have in the other classes of cases which do not come under that designation. When I was asked by the Chairman a moment ago on the subject, I might have said that we have already gone over the border in the remedial line, in the way in which we deal with sick cases in Birmingham. They have a home; and they are not destitute. They are only destitute—I have used the qualification elsewhere—of the means of recovery, but they are not destitute in the sense of the denudation of home. That is one of the principal functions that our infirmary is serving now.

43701. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Therefore you say that in cases of sickness the relieving officer would give an order pretty readily, because of fear?—Yes.

43702. Would he do the same if he found that the case really was one in which there was need for assistance?—Not so readily; but with greater readiness would he offer an order for the house.

43703. Do the relieving officers in Birmingham frequently give a short order for assistance in kind, whilst the cases are being investigated?—Sometimes they do. I do not think they give those provisional orders to the extent that they might, that is, orders for the period between the application and the time when they can come before a committee. In fact—I can only give my own opinion—I believe that the relieving officers frequently deter applicants from coming to a committee. I know that is the view some of my colleagues take; how far it is true or not, I am not prepared to say. I can only express the feeling that they are regarded as a sort of intermediaries between the applicants and the committee.

43704. Have cases come to your own knowledge where relief, in your opinion, ought to have been given and it has not been given?—Yes.

43705. By the relieving officer?—Yes; but in fairness to the officers I will say that no case has been sufficiently strong to make a test case of it. I could not dare to make a test case unless I was perfectly satisfied that in all its surroundings I could put it through with safety to myself.

43706. Do you mean by a test case, a case where you could make a complaint against an officer?—Yes, or preferably against the system.

43707. The parish of Birmingham only consists of part of the city; would it in your opinion be desirable that there should be only one Poor Law union in Birmingham?—Certainly. We tried that some years ago on the Joint Committee which was constituted by the Act of 1888, and were very nearly successful. Question of making Poor Law and sanitary area coterminous in Birmingham.

43708. Did the county council and the town council go so far as to have a Joint Committee?—Yes.

43709. A committee was appointed under the Act of 1888 by them?—Yes.

43710. For the purpose of determining whether the area should be altered?—Whether the parish should be coterminous with the city. In that case King's Norton was willing, but Aston was not.

43711. Did it fall through owing to the opposition of the guardians, or did the county councils object?—It was the opposition of the county authorities. Warwickshire and Worcestershire had a share in the Joint Committee, and their interests were diametrically opposed to those of the city, which was also represented on that committee.

43712. If a proposal of the kind were renewed now, would there be opposition again?—I believe the opposition to it would not be at all serious.

43713. The rural area—and by the rural area, I mean the part outside the city—would not object to it?—The rural area would benefit.

43714. It would benefit by losing that portion which is in the town, and which has got more pauperism than the portion outside?—Yes.

43715. And would the part of the parish which is inside the city be willing?—I think so now.

43716. (Mr. Phelps.) You have served on Relief Committees, I take it?—Yes, I had a double apprenticeship with them.

43717. How are your Relief Committees chosen?—By themselves. No member of the board can sit on a Departmental Committee except he is appointed by the board to sit thereon; but any member of the board can go upon a Relief Committee, of which there are four, one to each district. Or he can go on two committees if he likes.

43718. Are the members of the committee commonly the guardian representing the district?—Not to any great extent; it is not an advisable thing.

43719. Do the committees rotate?—No.

43720. Do the committees always administer the same district then?—Yes.

43721. Do the relieving officers possess the confidence of the committees?—Yes, fairly so.

43722. A committee would generally endorse their opinion, would you say, or take their advice—I will put it that way?—Yes, generally. I think there is less disposition to do it now than there was some little time ago.

43723. To what do you attribute that change?—To a greater breadth of view rightly or wrongly upon the question of out-relief. The ratepayers—I was going to say naturally—but any way have strong views upon the restriction of out-relief, and the committees, I think, have broadened their views of that question in the last seven or eight years. To that extent they may differ from the views of their relieving officers; but a committee worth its salt should only listen to its officers, and then should take its own action.

43724. Do you think that it would be an advantage if the Poor Law service was made more of a national service?—I cannot follow the question. Do I think it a greater advantage to make it a national service, that is to say less of a local service?

43725. Yes, so that its members should be practically servants of the State, as elementary school teachers are, we will say?—You are speaking of the officials now?

43726. Yes?—I think such a state of things would tend to lessen the interest of local members, just as I am pretty certain it is lessening the interest of local members in educational matters.

43727. I am not sure that we are quite on the same point, but I see what you mean. Do you find there is a want of movement on the part of the officials under the Poor Law; that they do not move about, but stagnate rather in their positions?—No, that is not my experience.

43728. Are you satisfied with the position of your workhouse infirmary at Birmingham?—Do you mean, is it as perfect as one would like it to be?

43729. I was not thinking so much of that as of the way in which it is coming to be used more and more as a private hospital?—Yes, I am satisfied.

43730. Do you think on the whole that that is a good development?—Taking the cases which are now coming into the infirmary, three-fourths or four-fifths have come straight away from outside, and one or two of us think it may possibly be abused. The answer to that is that the investigation is imperfect if the abuse continues.

43731. In those cases what action do the guardians take? Do they proceed against the people who have come in?—They recover from them if possible.

43732. They do try to recover?—Yes.

43733. Do they recover large sums in that way? No, not very much, but I believe the general total of what they recover from all cases is a growing amount. In this particular case of recovery where there has been sickness it is not a large amount.

43734. You cannot legally recover after the man has left the infirmary, can you?—I think not. But if I may illustrate it I would say this; a case comes into the infirmary which should not have been a Poor Law case at all—using the term "Poor Law" in its strict sense—and it is reported to a committee, in order that it may recover from relatives and others, that such a case was in and was there for a fortnight. Then the committee's duty is to ascertain, without any question of law, whether any of the cost of that case can be recovered. Our doors are not closed to any one. A lady was thrown from her cycle a few months ago, and she was there for three weeks, although it was not a Poor Law case at all. In that instance, I believe the husband paid something to our treasury in acknowledgment of the services rendered.

43735. As a voluntary gift?—Yes. We dare not refuse a case. We are a hospital for the moment, and I think the police brought in that case.

43736. Do you think the powers of recovery want to be extended or not?—I think they want to be extended.

43737. In what direction?—Not in the direction of the County Court, but I am not prepared to say in what direction. A moment ago you spoke of the inability of legal recovery after the patient left the infirmary. That ability to recover should be continual, whether the case was in the infirmary or not, as though it were a debt which had been contracted.

43739. Do you often have cases in which you proceed against relatives for the purpose of recovering the relief given in all departments—outdoor relief and indoor relief?—Yes, there are such cases.

43740. Do you think it would be an advantage if relatives could proceed immediately themselves? Take, for instance, the case of an old woman with two sons who are able to support her; she has to declare herself a pauper, and then to get the board of guardians to proceed against the sons; do you think it would be an advantage if she could proceed against the sons herself in the first place?—Most distinctly I do. I have also held that maintenance orders on behalf of wives would be better taken out directly from the justices in favour of the wife, instead of the guardians taking action, because, as you know, directly the wife ceases to be chargeable, the order ceases, while an order given by a justice remains good until it is revoked.

43741. Do you find that a great deal of your officials' time is spent in what I may call settling family quarrels of that sort?—No, I think not.

43742. You are not familiar with a case of three sons, say, where two will contribute if the third will?—I think frequently the time of committees is taken up in that way, and unduly taken up.

43743. With regard to the people in your workhouse you say a great many now come into your infirmary. Do many of those people who pass into the infirmary from the outside go on into the workhouse when they become convalescent?—A very small portion of them do; the rest discharge themselves.

43744. Then you do not think that any number of them having passed from one to the other find the workhouse more comfortable than they thought, and stop there?—No.

43745. (Mr. Chandler.) I think you have expressed the opinion that the higher the class of public work allotted to individuals, the better administrators you are likely to get?—Yes.

43746. Did the Local Government Act of 1894 take any of their duties away from the guardians?—No.

43747. None?—No.

43748. Then what has happened to cause that difficulty or that deterioration of which you have spoken since the time of that Act?—The answer to that is this: I would

Recovery of cost of medical relief at Birmingham.

Treatment of non-destitute cases in infirmary.

Need of more extended powers to recover cost of relief.

Proposed power to wives and dependent to obtain orders of maintenance without resort to guardians.

Persons discharged from infirmary to workhouse.

Effect of Local Government Act of 1894, on class of guardians.

System of election to relief committees at Birmingham.

Attitude of relief committees to relieving officers at Birmingham.

Question of making Poor Law service a national one.

Birmingham separate infirmary and question of its abuse.

Recovery of cost of medical relief at Birmingham.

not attach any stress to that point in relation to guardians in particular. There is the general experience that public life is not attracting the best of our men into the public service. One feels the same of the city council, that the men are not prepared to make those sacrifices to-day that they were years ago. I do not want to make out that the younger men are worse than the older ones, but still that is the simple truth.

43749. An extension of their duties by casting more upon them will hardly remedy that state of things, will it?—I think that the answer to that is rather a negative answer—that the more you take from the Poor Law and give to other agencies of what I call the higher duties, leaving the residuum of the duties to the guardians, the more you are likely to degrade the guardians, and the less likely are you to improve the class.

43750. As the state of things is now, you think it would be worse if more was taken away?—Yes. Take away from me what I have loved in Poor Law work with reference to the infirmary and the children, and leave to me the drags of society, and I would leave the Poor Law tomorrow. And I am only an illustration of what probably other men feel.

43751. (Mr. Gardiner.) In your experience as a city councillor, have you been on the management committee of your infectious hospitals?—No. That is the health committee's work. But I am familiar with that work.

43752. Could you give us any opinion as to the level of administration attained in, say, an infectious hospital when compared with a workhouse infirmary?—That is rather an invidious question. I should say that the work of the Birmingham infirmary is at least as well carried on as the work of the scarlet fever hospital or the small-pox hospital under the health committee. I should think that the supervision would be better, because their hospitals are rather more trusted to the professional element in them than we care to trust our department.

43753. Therefore, on the whole, you would expect—I do not say it is the fact—that the workhouse infirmary would be better?—I would.

43754. Can you tell us anything as to the comparative cost?—No, I cannot.

43755. Have you never gone into that?—No, and I do not think anybody else has. I do not know whether they know themselves.

43756. Not as regards the buildings, for example, apart from maintenance—that I suppose they would know?—The buildings would exceed in cost per head anything that we have done under the Poor Law; there is no doubt about that. All corporation buildings are more expensive than Poor Law buildings in my experience.

43757. Would this be a fair question? Supposing the Birmingham infirmary is up to a reasonable standard, then would the corporation hospital be above that standard?—In cost? Yes, I should think so.

43758. And the citizens as a whole do not mind?—One cannot say. They grumble at everything, don't they? Certainly if you speak of infectious hospitals, and if you speak of the provision for lunatics and mental diseases, my opinion is that their expenditure is excessive judged by my own stand point of experience and of what might be done. My friend, who was examined before me, and myself are both of us engaged on a new experiment, and we are hoping that we shall come out with the minimum of expenditure and the maximum of efficiency.

43759. As regards the application and report book, do you think it would be a good thing to have an additional column in which should be inserted the name of the landlord of the house in which the applicant resides, and perhaps the name of the agent who collects the rent? I should not ask the question only you have been thirty years a guardian and it would be useful to know your opinion?—I think it would be very useful to have that on the book. Nobody knows anything about the landlord, but the agent they know.

43760. Have you come across cases where guardians have been known to sit and grant relief to their own tenants?—I do not know of any cases.

43761. Have you never heard, in your great experience, of a member of a board doing that?—No. I do not think if any case came before our board—

43762. I am not referring to your board, I am referring to your experience as a member of the association?—I have never heard of such an illustration given. I can conceive it possible, but I have never come across it in my experience. The nearest one comes to it is that persons may promote applications within the district for which they have stood as representatives. That is sailing very near the wind, I think; I should avoid it myself as far as possible, and I should prefer some other guardian undertaking such a case.

43763. (Dr. Downes.) How many beds have you in your infirmary?—Roughly about 800 medical and surgical beds.

43764. Have you ever reckoned up the number of beds in the voluntary hospitals in Birmingham?—Roughly speaking, we have about double the beds in the Birmingham infirmary that they have in all the hospitals in Birmingham. I could not give you the exact numbers, and I am only speaking generally from memory. I think in the general hospital there are about 300 to 350 beds.

43765. The general hospital has 346 beds, and Queen's Hospital has 143, as a matter of fact; so that the Poor Law has provided nearly double the number that the general hospitals have?—Yes, but we have got one or two other general hospitals besides those.

43766. And one or two special hospitals?—Yes.

43767. Regarding the matter purely from the point of view of the treatment of the sick, and leaving the Poor Law element out of the question for the moment, do you consider your infirmary has filled a gap in the hospital provision for Birmingham, or that it tends to fill a gap?—Distinctly so. We have continual evidence of that, more particularly from the general hospital. They have to refuse cases because they have not beds for them, and our committee have been sore at times at what they consider a want of consideration on their part. However, I do not blame them in any way, but it is the fact that we have the over-plus thrust upon us.

43768. Has there been any voluntary effort to fill that gap in Birmingham?—No.

43769. Is the portal to your infirmary still the workhouse?—Practically not. Three-fourths of the cases come direct. Our disposition as a committee now is to make the central office the investigating medium, as they have all the facilities for it there, and to take their order and the order of their district medical officer as a sufficient sanction for entry. There have been dangers. For instance, we have narrowly escaped one or two scandals by the period of detention between the entry to the workhouse and the time of reaching our infirmary. We have run very serious risks at times, and the committee have felt it desirable to run that risk as little as possible. Of course the casualty cases that come frequently come from outside, and they always come in direct, night or day.

43770. Do you know whether your infirmary order provides for the admission of urgent cases and casualties?—No, it does not. On a technical legal point it is illegal.

43771. Is there any clause authorising the officer in charge to admit a case in cases of urgent necessity? There is in many infirmary orders. I do not know whether you are acquainted with your own?—Yes, I am; but I do not think there is such a provision. It is a demand that has come upon us more frequently in the last four or five years, and we have felt that we dare not refuse such cases whether police-brought, or whether brought from the works around us.

43772. Have you ever felt any difficulty from the want of such a clause in the order?—No.

43773. You have acted without it, and nobody has ever questioned it?—That is so.

43774. (Mr. Bentham.) In Paragraphs 29 to 32 you refer to the amount that is given in outdoor relief, and in your opinion you say that is inadequate in the case of widows; that is a matter entirely in the hands of the board, is it not?—Entirely.

43775. What is the reason that the relief is given inadequately?—I cannot tell you. The only thing is that there seems to be a sort of tradition that 1s. and a loaf is quite sufficient to keep a child on. During the last four or five years, or the last three or four years, they have had in the winter time 6d. extra; at least, the committees have been encouraged to give it.

43776. Is it given in this way on account of the expense?—Yes.

43777. Has there been any strong attempt to break that down? Seeing that there is a thorough inquiry made, it should not be possible for any widows to be in receipt of relief who are not deserving of a higher scale of relief? Or how was it that the attempt has failed, if there has been one?—I could not answer you. I do not think there has been any determined attempt before the board to alter it.

43778. You mean to raise the amount?—Yes.

43779. Therefore it is a general opinion evidently that the relief given meets the case?—It is assumed that there are other sources of help, and that the Poor Law help is only contributory. I think that is often wrongly assumed. On the face of it, it does not appear that 1s. and a loaf is sufficient to keep a child, especially when you consider that the rent has to be paid in some way.

43780. Has the action of the neighbouring boards of guardians anything to do with that scale?—I think so.

43781. So that one board does not raise its amount because the other is low, and it therefore might attract people into the first board's union?—Yes.

43782. In Paragraph 35 you refer to the supervision of the central board; I suppose you mean the Local Government Board?—Yes.

43783. And you suggest that it has had a paralysing effect in many cases; in what way were you thinking of that?—I do not know that I had any particular reason in my mind when I wrote those words; but it has been the habit of clerks, for instance, to say: "You cannot do that sort of thing; the Local Government Board will not allow it." I have never had much difficulty myself, because if a thing has been right to do, I generally advocate its being done, and leave the thing to settle itself after.

43784. You feel that you have been restricted somewhat by the regulations?—Yes.

43785. But you could not say in any point of importance that you have been deterred from carrying out the reform because of a fear of the Local Government Board?—I have said so later on in paragraph 39, speaking of my own experience. I have always found the Local Government Board right enough, if you get at them the right way.

43786. You have usually got all that you wanted, I suppose?—We took it first, and got it after generally.

43787. Then really the effect has been that the action of the guardians has paralysed the Local Government Board rather?—No, it has electrified them.

43788. You also say that you would like to have more control over the officers; what officers were you thinking of in particular—your relieving officers, or the clerks to the guardians?—That was rather written in harmony with the general feeling which has been expressed by the association for such control. It does not affect us very much, nor does it affect you, no doubt, who are, like us, in a large urban area, because the question of appointment by the local Government Board has been—what shall I say? I was going to say dodged—but it has been limited by the practice of appointing assistants. Many of our assistants, or subordinate officials, being appointed under Orders, we have not been hampered by the consent of the Local Government Board; for instance, nurses in the infirmaries do not require consent, and such officers as those. But among the members of the staff, in regard to what are called Local Government appointments, I have felt myself a difference between such appointments under the Poor Law, and a similar class of appointments under the municipal authority. I have known cases where the fact that an officer could fall back upon the Local Government Board has been to the detriment of that officer. He has remained in the employ of the Board longer than he would have done, and a case has ultimately been made against him which would never have been dreamt of if they could have parted on mutual terms without any such reference to London. On the other hand, I have never known officers who were under the control of the municipal authority who have been improperly or unfairly or unjustly sent about their business. The very fact that they were at the mercy of the committee, whose servants they were, has tended rather to protect them than otherwise, whereas the fact that a servant was the servant of the Local Government Board as well, has had rather an irritating tendency—"Oh, if you fall back on the Local Government Board you can take your relief there"—that is the effect of it.

43789. Then you would not agree to having a service of relieving officers and higher officials who should be directly under the control of the Local Government Board?—No.

43790. And subject to removal by them from place to place?—As now, or do you mean as a national service?

43791. As a national service?—I do not agree with that at all. They are getting too powerful as they are.

43792. You would have all the officers local officers?—Yes.

43793. Do you mean that the officials are too powerful as they are?—They are getting too powerful.

43794. You have referred also in Paragraph 37 to the question of the Feeding of Children Order. You say that if the guardians had fed the children, and then followed them to their own homes and found the reasons neglect, etc., much might have been done to punish the parents and bring them under the notice of the justices. Is that not actually what did take place?—No, it is not. They had the application from the head teacher in our case; that was the person selected by the education committee to make the application.

43795. What did the guardians do?—The application was made, and the guardians at once sent them certain forms to fill up. There was a considerable amount of red tape in it.

43796. Sent whom the forms—the parents?—They were sent to the head teachers who made the applications. They had to fill up certain forms, then the forms came back in due course, then the case was visited and reported upon, generally to the effect that the children did not want food, and that the father and the mother said there was plenty of food, and so on. Then the case went back to the head teacher, and nothing was done. That would perhaps take a fortnight or three weeks to do.

43797. The sending of those forms back to the teacher to be filled up was the action of the guardians, was it not?—Yes.

43798. Why did they send them; what was the object?—I said the result was that they set up a routine of red tape, which defeated any attempt to deal with the children properly.

43799. But that was in the hands of the guardians?—It was.

43800. Therefore, they created their own trouble?—They did.

43801. Then the sole reason for the failure was the way the guardians did it?—It was to a large extent. Then the Local Government Board process of recovery was through the county court.

43802. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There was no provision in the Order as to the mode of recovery; it was in the statute?—The county court was in the Feeding of Children Order.

43803. It is not in the Order, it is in the Act?—Pardon me. They went under the Order to the county court before the Act was passed; they have not touched the Act yet.

43804. The old Act provided for the mode in which relief might be recovered, and there is nothing whatever in the Order which prescribes the mode in which it is to be recovered?—All I can say is that the action of the guardians was to go to the county court in several cases, and they dropped that. I supposed that it was in the Order.

43805. (Mr. Bentham.) You say the numbers dwindled down to very few; was that because they did not need feeding in the opinion of the guardians, or in the opinion of the relieving officers who visited the cases?—The statements given by the responsible committee was that in a number of cases which they visited they found that there was not a necessity for feeding. The head teachers on the other hand, say that the fact of the non-feeding was there still, and that the guardians had believed the simple statements made by the father or the mother, and had come back and reported that the children were properly fed and there was no need to feed them. But the head teachers still held their views. I saw the question from both sides—the side of the education committee and the side of the guardians. The education committee's servants said there was no doubt the children were not fed; the guardians said, "The parents tell us the children are properly fed, and there is an end of our work, and we will not go any further."

43806. There are a great many of these widows who are getting the 1s. and a loaf for the child and nothing for the widow herself, who are sending their children to the public elementary schools?—Yes, there are.

43807. Did the guardians do anything to give those a meal a day?—I believe not; it was only given to children with two parents.

43808. It was not given to those who were in receipt of relief?—No.

43809. Was it held that in the case of widows their children were properly fed?—They had no application on their account that I know of. The applications were confined to those who had two parents.

43810. Did not the teachers send in the names of those children who were underfed, apart from whether they had parents or not?—I think not.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on unemployment.

43811. With regard to a question that has been put earlier upon the effect of the Workmen's Compensation Act, most employers insure against the compensation, do they not? I mean, under the Act which is at present in force ordinary employers usually insure against claims?—Yes. We have so insured.

43812. I do not mean boards of guardians; I mean that ordinary employers insure against claims under the Compensation Act, and in those cases they fall back upon the insurance company if any claim is made against them?—Yes.

43813. Then could you tell us in what way the Compensation Act has induced employers not to employ men who are getting on in years, because that has been held to be the effect of the Compensation Act?—I have been informed, and have formed the general opinion, that men are discharged from employment at an earlier date, or at such a date as their factor of efficiency, if I may use the expression, has become reduced, partly, and sometimes chiefly, on the ground that they are less able to escape injuries, or more likely to incur injuries, and therefore possibly may make a claim for compensation.

43814. Seeing that the employer is insured against it, and that he does not pay the compensation money, how is it that he is more susceptible on this point now than he was before the Compensation Act, when an accident might happen and he might be called upon to pay, not by law, but morally, for an accident which happened in his works?—I suppose it is because insurance offices only pay claims where they are satisfied that there is liability, and fight all claims where they see a chance of escape. All that the insurance people do is to protect the employer from any claim that may be made upon him.

43815. But the insurance company do not lay down any rule that they shall not employ men who have got to a certain age, do they?—They do not lay down that condition, but they discourage the employment of men who may bring claims upon them.

43816. The insurance company do?—Yes.

43817. In what way?—I cannot tell you in what way.

43818. I have never heard of it. I cannot tell you, any more than that there is a general feeling abroad that that is so. It is given as one of the causes why men are thrown out of the labour market at an earlier date. That is all there is, and I tell it to you for what it is worth.

43819. Is it more than a general impression, do you think, without any data upon which to form the opinion?—I have not the data, and therefore I cannot say what the data are.

43820. You cannot get any data on the point?—No.

43821. (Mr. Lansbury.) On that point do you not think that what really happens is that an employer, when he is shortening hands, knocks off those men who are becoming least efficient in minding the machinery or tending the machinery, and that sort of thing—that a man does not really get dismissed because of the liability of compensation in case of accident, but because modern industry needs activity, intelligence, and all the rest of it, and you get that more keenly between the ages of twenty and forty than you do afterwards?—That is so. That is the commercial side of it—that he wants the best human machine he can get. But replying further to the question put just before by Mr. Bentham, it occurs to me that while there may be no direct data for the impression which is certainly held that such things do happen, this is certain, that no employer wants to have accidents in his place, and therefore he naturally eliminates from his employees those workmen or workpeople from whom such accidents are most likely to arise.

43822. The only point is that he would do that whether there was a Compensation Act or not?—Yes, I will admit that. That is the more broad view of the position.

43823. About those public-spirited citizens who do not come and take part in public affairs, is that not due rather to the fact that, here again, modern social life has undergone a tremendous change, and that within your city of Birmingham most of the well-to-do people who get their money from the city live away, and simply use it as a means of getting money?—I have no doubt that that is one cause of it. Thirty years ago many of those people engaged in public life lived within the city bounds; now they live from 5 to 10 or more miles away. That is quite true.

43824. Therefore there is not the inducement to look after the civic life of the place that there was when they were part and parcel of it?—That is so; and in their own commercial circumstances there is a greater demand upon them for their own interests.

Mr. SENIOR FOTHERGILL, called; and Examined.

43825. (Mr. Booth.) You have prepared a statement for us which we may take as your evidence-in-chief, I think?—Yes.

1. I was first appointed relieving officer in the Dewsbury Union in March, 1880, and in September, 1883, I received the appointment of Superintendent of the Relief Department of the Parish of Birmingham, which position I still occupy.

2. The history of the change in administration which then took place and its results are recorded in the pamphlet which I enclose. (See Appendix No. XVI. (A))

3. Employment is usually good in Birmingham. Trade depression is not so acutely felt as in some large towns. There are a large number and variety of trades in which the people are engaged, and it is very rare for the members of one family to be occupied in only one branch of trade; therefore when one trade is dull another may be brisk, and poverty does not become so general as in some other towns.

4. The last time the guardians had a labour-test yard open was in 1883. Since then there have been several Mayor's Funds raised in times of exceptional distress, trade depression, or long-continued severe weather. The people prefer to receive help from this source rather than of relieving from the guardians. It may be because a fund raised in an emergency is usually not dispensed with much discrimination. In recent years the Corporation have found work for a limited number of men in the parks, and on the sewage farms, etc., the men receiving the usual rate of wages, which is far in excess of a test-labour scale; thus able-bodied men now look to the Corporation rather than to the guardians to find them employment at such times.

5. My appointment and that of a cross visitor in 1883 was looked upon by the guardians as an experiment; I am of opinion that a cross visitor is essential to efficient administration in large and populous towns.

6. Drunken, idle loafers, criminals and vicious persons should be relieved only in the workhouse, and the sober, industrious, thrifty and well conducted should have outdoor relief. Relief administration strictly carried out on these lines is educational, commending the one class of persons, and condemning the other.

7. The classes of persons applying for relief consist of aged and infirm persons, widows with families, orphan and feeble-minded children, sick persons and all sort and conditions from lodging-houses and furnished rooms.

8. Pauperism is caused by old age and inability to work, death of husband or father, sickness and infirmity. The largest factor in the production of pauperism is drink, sport, betting and improvidence.

9. Of those who seek election as guardians, some are large employers of labour, many are in a small way of business. The personnel of the board is very different since 1894. There is little interest now taken in elections, the reason, perhaps, being that in all the wards where three guardians are elected the three political parties have agreed to select one candidate each; it is almost impossible, therefore, for an outsider to get elected. This method of selection does not, perhaps, secure the best candidates and may not promote good administration.

10. Outdoor relief is administered by four relief committees and the parish is divided into four relief districts. The relief staff consists of a superintendent, four relieving officers, one assistant relieving officer, a pay clerk and cross visitor, two district medical officers, a dispenser, and two collectors to the guardians.

11. The board adopted relief rules in 1883, which were amended in 1894. The result of strict investigation and consistent adherence to the rules from 1883 to 1893 is shown in the pamphlet on page 2. (Appendix No. XVI. (A).)

12. The slip system is in use, and the information obtained is brought up to date on each occasion when the case is re-considered. It is the case-paper system in miniature.

13. The following are reforms in the law suggested to me by my experience:—

(a) Relief regulations and rules should be uniform in all unions and parishes.

(b) The guardians should have power to compel an illegitimate son to contribute towards his mother's support when she becomes chargeable.

(c) The relief regulations should be more elastic, i.e., power should be given to relieve an able-bodied man for a short period in exceptional times of trade depression or long-continued severe weather, the relief to be given on loan, and, if paid, no disability to attach to the recipient.

(d) In like manner an able-bodied man who enters the workhouse with his family must now leave it as destitute as when he entered.

(e) Out-relief might be given on loan for a short period to give the man an opportunity of becoming independent again. I have known cases of able-bodied men, who, receiving relief during illness, were on recovery given a few shillings by the members of the committee out of their own pockets, with most gratifying results.

(f) Industrial colonies should be established for large areas where guardians could send able-bodied men, loafers, and the disreputable; likewise a man who frequently deserts his wife and family should be committed to such a colony rather than to prison. The discipline, habits and industrial training acquired there should fit them to start afresh in life and, with the view of encouraging them to do so, rewards for good conduct and industry might be given to enable those who were willing to support themselves until they found employment.

(g) There should be some power to compel persons living under insanitary conditions or unable to properly care for themselves, to enter a workhouse.

(h) The process for the recovery of relief under the Poor Laws should be simplified: for instance, the procedure for the recovery of arrears under the Bastardy Acts is more simple and effective. Simplified recovery of relief.

(i) Large towns should be formed into centres for the training of relieving officers, and persons appointed to this office should possess a certificate of qualification. Better training for relieving officers.

(j) Guardians should not sit upon the relief committee of the ward for which they are elected. The reason for this is obvious. Guardians not to administer relief to constituent.

(k) Relieving officers should not remain in the same relief district more than, say, five years. Rotation of relieving officers.

(l) I am of opinion that the word "inadequate" in regard to relief is an unfortunate word to use, as it conveys to the ordinary mind more than sufficient. Suppose, for instance, that 5s. per week is considered adequate relief for an aged person. It is very rare indeed for a member of a friendly society who is receiving 5s. per week from his club to make an application for parish relief; if, therefore, that amount of relief was given to a person who is not in a club, and who has not exercised any thrift, it would violate one of the fundamental principles of the Poor Law by placing such a one in the same position as the independent member of a friendly society who had exercised thrift. Objections to express "inadequate" relief.

(m) Guardians should have the power to apply to the magistrates for an order of maintenance upon the children of aged and infirm persons who are unable to maintain themselves, although not chargeable, so as to preserve their independence, and such orders should be enforceable by the guardians if the person subsequently becomes chargeable to the parish. Power to guardians to obtain maintenance orders for persons prior to chargeability.

(n) The law of settlement should be simplified. Settlements should be retained in divided parishes. The union and not the parish should be the basis of settlement. The settlement of children under sixteen years of age should be that of its parent up to that age, and orphan children under that age should be able to acquire a settlement. Disputed settlements should be decided by the Local Government Board instead of the Law Courts, on the ground of economy. Reform and simplification of law of settlement.

(o) The Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1904, should be extended to other kinds of thrift. Extension of principle of Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Acts.

(p) Army pensions should be paid at much shorter intervals. These are the principal suggestions I have to make. More frequent payment of army pensions.

14. The Local Government Act, 1894, has brought a class of guardians who are less able to withstand the pressure of neighbours and friends, and consequently the tendency is to disregard relief rules, and favouritism is more common. Since 1894 there has been a continual increase in the number of paupers and the cost of relief. Effect of Local Government Act of 1894 on status of guardians and administration.

15. There should be some means of equalising the burden of pauperism in towns situate like Birmingham, which is administered for Poor Law purposes by three boards of guardians. The burden can so easily be removed from one union to another, frequently by only one day's residence, and the union occupying the centre of the town often suffers by the constant gravitation of destitute persons coming from the neighbouring unions, and of those in like manner being admitted into the various hospitals and subsequently becoming chargeable to the parish. This injustice would be removed if the whole town was either one union, or if the indoor poor in the several unions were a charge upon a common fund. Need of equalisation of poor rate in municipal areas containing more than one union.

16. My next point is not, correctly speaking, connected with Poor Law, but I believe if put into operation it would prevent many persons from becoming paupers. The establishment of municipal working men's savings banks, wherein small sums bearing interest might be deposited, would encourage habits of thrift, and, by advancing loans to working men in times of distress or trade depression, would enable them to tide over the difficulty and preserve their independence. The working man worth saving would prefer such assistance to charity or relief. The business man can negotiate an overdraft at his bankers in times of pressure or difficulty, but the working man has no such means at his disposal: he must Proposed municipal savings banks.

either dispose of his home or lose his independence, which involve the gradual but sure deterioration of his character.

43826. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to Paragraph 4, have you any evidence that persons in receipt of relief received assistance from the Mayor's Fund?—No, I do not think so.

43827. Then they are almost different classes that are reached in the two ways?—Yes; it is a higher class than usually comes to the parish who accept assistance from the Mayor's Fund, and the majority of them would not apply for relief from the guardians.

43828. Have you considered with regard to cross-visitors whether it is desirable that the cross-visitor should be, at any rate in some cases, a lady?—I think if you get the right persons ladies would make very good cross-visitors.

43829. Do you think that in some ways the two views—the view of a man and the view of a woman—combined would be worth more than the view of one of them?—In some cases that would be so; perhaps particularly in dealing with females you would have an advantage in having a woman-visitor.

43830. In Paragraph 7 you refer to persons living in lodging-houses; are those all privately owned, or have you any provided by the municipality?—The lodging-houses are all provided by private enterprise.

43831. Is any of this lodging-house accommodation provided, for instance, by the Salvation Army?—No, but the Church Army have a labour home where a few men are lodged.

43832. The Salvation Army have in various places what are called shelters; have they any of those in Birmingham?—No.

43833. I think we should like to know more about the political influences in the election of guardians in Birmingham. I suppose politics do play a great part in Birmingham in everything; but do they play a part especially in regard to guardians' elections?—I cannot say that they play a greater part than is necessary, considering the way the guardians are selected. In the first place, as I have told you in my Statement, in all the wards where three guardians are elected, one of the three political parties select a candidate, and I think there is no doubt but what that has some effect after the election. It is difficult to say exactly to what extent it affects the action of the guardians.

43834. That is the way in which the political struggle ends, in some sort of pact. Is the third party the Socialist party?—No; the three parties are the Liberals, the Liberal Unionists and the Conservatives.

43835. Are the Liberal Unionists a separate party from the Conservatives?—Yes; but they unite for political purposes.

43836. Are there no Labour representatives?—They do not come on to the board in the name of Labour representatives. There is a number that are what you might term working-men, who under ordinary circumstances would be designated Labour candidates, but they are selected by one of the political associations or they do not stand much chance of being elected.

43837. The Labour party are not organised there, then, as a political body?—As a party, no.

43838. In Paragraph 13 you make certain recommendations; under what authority would you propose that the industrial colonies should be established—would you say under the authority of the guardians?—Yes.

43839. With regard to the relief on loan, in Paragraph 13 (c) about which you say that if repaid no disability should attach to the recipient, do you mean that if it is not paid disability would attach to him?—Yes. It would assume the role of ordinary relief unless it was paid. The idea of that suggestion was to prevent homes from being broken up.

43840. In addition to the losing of the vote would a loan be refused another time to the individual who had not repaid it?—If that was repeated from time to time it seems to me that you would have to take that into account, especially if the person had been in a position to repay but had not done so.

43841. I do not know whether it has been done or whether you have experience as to whether they do it as a rule?—As to repayment in ordinary cases I am afraid that very little is repaid, but what one imagines in a case of that sort is that you would reach a class a little above those whom you deal with now. It is a matter of preventing them dropping down into the ordinary pauper ranks.

43842. You hold them up for a while at any rate; but if you cannot collect the loan it does not amount to much, does it?—It becomes rather a farce, then, does it not?—No, I think not. You would deal with a class of persons that you could collect from. Persons who were in difficulty through no fault of their own, as, for instance, where their trade had been displaced. I think under those circumstances you would find many a one who, if they knew the guardians could assist them for a short time, under those conditions you would have a class of people who would repay.

43843. Yet would they not be demoralised by approaching the Poor Law?—I do not think they would be demoralised, seeing that they would pay for the relief they received.

43844. Provided they do pay?—Quite so.

43845. Do you think the organisation of preventive effort would be better done by a separate committee?—Perhaps it might be. There is this to be taken into consideration, that there are the Distress Committees which deal with persons who are out of employment.

43846. You evidently wish to make it so that people of a rather more respectable class should not shrink from application, do you not?—What one feels is that there is something necessary in order to prevent workmen from dropping into the ranks of paupers and perhaps losing their homes, because if they do so it is very seldom they ever regain them. It seems to me that it would do some good in that direction.

43847. Would it not be more efficacious if it could be done by a different authority altogether?—Yes. To keep people away from the parish is the better way, there is no doubt.

43848. (Mr. Benthams.) In your recommendations, Paragraph 13 (o), you say that the Out-Door Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1904, should be extended to other kinds of thrift; what other kinds of thrift had you in mind?—One kind that I have in mind is this: We will suppose a man has worked for a life-time for one employer and that employer as a reward for an industrious life should give him, say, 5s. a week, and that is inadequate to supply his wants. If he should make an application to the parish it seems to me that that man who has led a commendable life is a species of case where you could extend the operations of the Friendly Societies Act. You might take another instance. In many parts of the country you have building societies where working men put their small amounts week by week and perhaps save sufficient money to purchase a house. Supposing the rent of the house is 5s. a week and that man had no other income it seems to me that that would be a species of thrift that one could commend and recognise in the same way as you do under the Friendly Societies Act.

43849. In both the cases you would attach the condition that they had not sufficient to live upon, would you not?—Quite so.

43850. That is that the 5s. pension was inadequate in the first place, and that the mere shelter which the man had provided himself was insufficient for his maintenance in addition?—That is so.

43851. Are not both those eligible now? What is to prevent relief being given to both these cases now? As I understand, you cannot compel a person to realise his assets?—What I mean is that in estimating what you will do for that person that amount should not be taken into account, just the same as you do not take into account the 5s. which he receives as a member of a friendly society.

43852. The guardians may or may not, and they may or may not do so in these two cases; is that not so?—Not in regard to the Friendly Societies Act. In granting relief to the members of such societies the guardians shall not take into consideration any sum received from a friendly society except so much as shall exceed 5s. a week.

43853. But who is to prevent the guardians doing otherwise?—The law says you must not. If the guardians are law-abiding subjects they would not take it into account.

43854. There is no penalty and it is really optional. It is intended that they should not take it into account, but there is nothing in the law to prevent you ignoring these other two incomes that you have mentioned, that I know of?—There may not be any penalty, but still for all that it is not recognised by law as it is recognised in the Friendly Societies Act and, it seems to me that a man who by a life of industry and good conduct so secures the favour of his employer that he recognises him to the end of his days after he is unable to work; and also in the other case that the man who has been thrifty until he has built his own house—that these men are both to be commended rather than the man who has had equal opportunities of thrift and has exercised none whatever.

43855. It is really not a question of the reward of merit, is it? It is more a question of relieving necessity?—Yes, it is a question of relieving necessity; at the same time the question arises as to the merit of the person and as to the life the person has led—whether he has led a deserving respectable life or not. Both alike have to be relieved if they are destitute, but I would discriminate—according to the character of the person you are dealing with.

43856. What you claim is that preferential treatment should be given to those people who have been good citizens?—I do so for the reason that I think relief should be an educational medium; it should educate the people to be respectable and deserving citizens.

43857. To those who do not need relief, but have been meritorious, you would not grant relief?—Their satisfaction is the consciousness of being able to provide for their own wants.

43858. Is not the effect of this Friendly Societies Act to encourage people to come to the Poor Law and ask for relief, whereas if there had been no such provision made they would have felt satisfied that they had this contribution from the friendly societies as the result of their own thrift, and that they were altogether above the position of a pauper; but this provision has really tempted them to come and seek Poor-Law relief in addition? Do you hold that view?—No. Since that Act was passed in 1904, we have had only two applications, and I am quite certain before that date we had an equal number.

43859. Then really it is a very small point, and does not weigh in the great question of relieving poor people?—It is a small point if you take the numbers that have applied. Of course it may be different in other places. But my opinion is that anything you can do in order to induce people to live honest, sober, industrious and respectable lives it is in the interests of the community to do it.

43860. Do you think giving them relief does that?—I do not think giving them relief at all will do that. I am merely advocating that the principle that has been passed by the Legislature should be extended to people who are equally deserving with those to whom the law now applies.

43861. (Mr. Booth.) That is to say, if done at all, you would not limit it to the friendly society form of thrift?—Precisely so.

43862. You would rather not do it at all, I take it?—If you had asked me this question before the Act was passed in 1904, I should have replied yes.

43863. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards Paragraph 13 (i) where you refer to making large towns centres for the training of relieving officers, would you kindly tell us what kind of scheme you would have for the training of relieving officers?—It seems to me that a man if he were placed in a large town similar to Birmingham where you have a staff of relieving officers, would be able to acquire the knowledge which a relieving officer should possess by assisting the other officers, and particularly he would acquire a knowledge of the books to be kept, the method of enquiry and engage in the practical work of the office by visiting with them, and would thereby qualify himself for taking up the position himself. An officer who is now appointed has practically to learn his duties after he comes into the work, and there is no qualification or preparation for it.

43864. As regards the certificate of qualification, what would that be given for?—It would be a certificate of qualification say, for a relieving officer.

43865. Would it include a knowledge of the theory of Poor Law relief?—It would include the law in regard to Poor Law relief, the Orders of the Local Government Board, and also of the books that have to be kept.

43866. And then he would be certified in the same kind of way that a sanitary inspector is certified?—Quite so.

43867. Would you make the possession of the certificate obligatory before a man could become a relieving officer?—I do not think that you could very well tie the hands of the guardians to appoint a man who had got a certificate. I am afraid guardians would not accept that position. But I do think that in course of time, especially in the case of the larger boards, guardians would prefer to appoint a person who had some qualification over one who had none.

43868. The Local Government Board might not give their sanction, unless he had such a qualification perhaps?—That might be.

43869. Would you like to see that idea still further developed, and a public service of Poor Law officers established similar to the National Union of Teachers?—I should.

43870. Do you think such an organisation might get too strong for boards of guardians?—I do not think so.

43872. You do not think they would take a part in the elections for example?—No, I do not think so at all.

43873. In your local elections you have, of course, known cases where the teachers have exercised a very large influence, in a particular school board election, for instance?—Yes, I have.

43874. And that is one of the reasons why school boards have disappeared, of course?—I could not say.

43876. In Birmingham. Take widows and children. The amount of relief given is certainly less than, in the absence of other known means, these people can subsist upon. We have had various reasons stated to us why the relief is so low. What is your opinion about it?—I should say that perhaps the earnings of widows are higher in Birmingham than in most places. There are a great many occupations in which women's labour is used, and it is very probable that the amount of relief has been fixed having regard to the question of the amount that a widow can earn. I don't consider the relief is low taking into account other income. The out-relief in this parish is equal and in some cases more than the amount given in some of the surrounding unions and that no doubt influenced the guardians in fixing the scale of relief.

43877. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you remove cases as between the different parts of Birmingham?—Yes.

43878. Is there much expense in that way?—There are five officers continually at that work in the three unions.

43879. Five between the three, do you mean?—Yes.

43880. So that if the whole town were made into one union, you would get rid of that difficulty?—Yes; but unless that were adjusted in some way, in all probability the union which occupies the centre of the city would suffer.

43881. I am supposing it was all one union?

43882. (Mr. Gardiner.) And that the three boards were made one?—Yes, of course. We removed 284 persons last year; 215 of those were removed to the two neighbouring unions of Aston and King's Norton.

43883. (Sir Samuel Provis.) So that the great bulk of the removal is between the three unions?—Yes.

43884. You suggest that a relieving officer should not be more than five years in his district; that would involve a good deal of expense, would it not, because he would have to move every five years?—I suggest that for this reason: The relieving officer gets so accustomed to his district and to his people that he is liable to perform his duties with less thoroughness. This is sometimes emphasised when a new appointment is made to a district where an officer has been in charge many years. This has led me to think that if there was a change of officer more frequently the work would be done more efficiently.

Mr. WILLIAM FAWKES, called; and Examined.

43888. (Mr. Booth.) You are the Clerk to the guardians of the Northampton Union?—I am.

43889. You have prepared a statement for us which we may take as your evidence in chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I have been clerk to the guardians and superintendent registrar of births, deaths, and marriages for the past ten years. I am a solicitor clerk to the Church Charity Trustees of the town and have for nearly forty years been associated with the work of one of the local friendly societies.

The Social and Industrial Conditions of the Union.

2. The displacement of manual labour by the introduction of machinery in the staple trade (boot and shoe making) and the team system of working have brought about a great change in recent years.

3. In the team system the making of a boot passes through a number of hands each waiting the completion of the work of the other and consequently each hand must keep pace with the others, with the result that men at fifty years of age cannot work by the side of men at half that age and consequently fall out of employment, independent of the fact that many men are displaced by machinery itself.

4. The liability of employers under the various Acts of Parliament for injuries to working men is also a reason for not employing men of advancing years.

5. The men are not shoemakers, each only working on a small part, and if he fails to find work in his particular branch he becomes a labourer.

6. Again, the fact that trade union societies insist on a minimum wage is an obstacle to a master employing any of those who would work at a somewhat lower wage, knowing they could not do the work of younger men.

7. Under the old system of shoemaking the worker would (save the actual cutting out of parts and preparing of uppers) make the whole boot from start to finish. Under the new system boy labour is displacing men.

8. The increasing employment of young women in factories and the growing dislike they show to domestic service results in the weakening of home influence; they are ignorant of domestic duties beyond the little taught them at school.

9. The work of the day over they are many of them beyond restraint and parental influence and enjoying (?) the liberty of the streets. The miserable pay of some of them, the lack of proper food and their surroundings tend to physical and moral weakness. There is less regard of the responsibility to parents and the tone of home life declines. Young people do not consider themselves obliged to contribute to the maintenance of their parents though the young men and women are themselves pushing the old people out of work.

10. The growing desire for sport and excitement crushes thrift and so many of the younger people have no regard for the occupation of leisure time in the improvement of the mind or rational occupation.

11. The increase of working men's clubs open seven days a week and under no restrictions is having an influence upon the community worse than the public-house subject to licensing laws.

12. The burden which is cast upon many of the heads

43885. Do you think an officer rather relies on his general knowledge without positively making an investigation, after a certain time?—After a certain time. I think the inquiries are somewhat perfunctorily done, when he feels that he knows everybody in his district.

43886. (Mr. Gardiner.) From your experience, would you kindly tell us what number of cases you think a relieving officer could be responsible for in a certain district?—From 200 to 250.

43887. Cases, not persons?—I think 200 cases would be quite sufficient for any officer to deal with properly.

of households under these conditions is very great and has probably something to do with the increasing drinking habits of women whose lives must be very burdensome.

Particulars as to any Experiments or Peculiarities in Poor Law Administration.

13. It has been necessary within this union for several years past (but not at the present time) to have the outdoor labour test (stone-breaking for want of better or more suitable employment).

14. Some few were employed in general repairs at the workhouse.

15. In these times of depression remunerative work cannot be found, and much of the work that is done would not be done were it not that employment has to be found or made.

16. These remarks apply also to work found by other local authorities.

17. Working under such conditions is demoralising to the better class of men, who have to work side by side with the shirker and there is the disposition of both to make the work last. There is, too, the tendency of the authority to make the work last, knowing they have nothing more for the men to do.

18. The better workman is brought down probably to the level of the worst and never rises.

The Respective Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

19. Both in-door and out-door relief are necessary but in the administration of them much greater discrimination is necessary than is at present shown.

20. The present day workhouse is altogether a different institution to that originally established; then it was a house of work, now it is a house of rest and comfort. Both institutions are wanted: for the deserving poor, rest and some share of comfort, but for the undeserving, shelter and work.

21. The aged and deserving poor whose home of one room may be a place of comfort and rest, ought not to be forced into a workhouse in declining years to associate with others who, though in many respects as good as themselves, yet by reason of incompatibility of temper or other cause cannot make themselves agreeable to their companions.

22. These latter again, if brought into a workhouse need therein to be classified according to their character and infirmity and kept entirely above those who are undeserving. Then again when you come to the undeserving, they need to be classified; penal colonies should be established for the worst cases. The man who will not work for his needs and those dependent upon him is a danger to society and deserves penal servitude of a degree as much as some poor fellows who by force of circumstances get it.

23. It is difficult in old workhouses and small institutions to give proper classification and I would suggest that instead of classification in workhouses there might be classification in unions of workhouses, e.g. :—

- One workhouse might be for sick.
- Another might be for non-able bodied.
- Another for epileptics.
- Another for able-bodied women.
- Another for able-bodied men, etc.

24. In this classification care to be taken that a workhouse with land attached should be for able-bodied men or epileptics.

Work found for able-bodied by guardians and municipalities unremunerative and unnecessary.

Demoralisation resulting from relief works.

Respective merits of in and out-relief.

Need of classification by work-houses.

Mr. F 25. In dealing with the question of out-relief much greater care is required in dealing with widows with children. If the woman be deserving and alive to her responsibilities and the children are young, the relief should be liberal, so that the mother may remain at home, unless a near relative who will take the responsibility will do so to enable the woman to work. If there is lack of parental care the mother and children should have indoor relief and any doubt should be decided in the interests of her children.

26. More care, too, is required in the relief of deserted women, as there is a tendency to collusion between them and the absent husband.

27. Strict inquiry should be made into the earnings in some cases, and detected cases of fraud dealt with firmly. There is too much tendency to make old age and other matters grounds for excusing, and in some cases almost justifying fraud.

The Classes of Persons Applying for Relief.

28. In the present day the failure of children to realise their responsibilities to parents is forcing upon the rates more of such persons (parents), and lack of employment by reason of altered trade conditions is doing the same, and there is a disposition to look upon Poor Law relief as old age pension. A common argument being: "I have lived in the town for so many years and paid rates I am entitled to relief."

The Causes of Pauperism.

29. The causes of pauperism include :—
Early marriages.
Ignorance of parties marrying as to the responsibilities of home life.
Lack of domestic training.
Lack of thrift.
Over indulgence in every way (drinking and gambling in particular).
No provision for sickness.
Indiscriminate giving of charity.
Furnishing on the hire purchase system.
Sports and pleasures.

30. The result of the foregoing and the arrival of a family of children very soon over-burdens a young couple, sickness follows, the happiness of the home has gone and the parents lose their sense of responsibility and leave themselves and their families to the rates.

31. As another cause you have again the fact that aged parents are not supported by their children, and in some cases children look to their parents to find them board and lodging at a less cost than would a stranger.

32. The extension of local government and the popular vote has lowered the standard of men upon all public bodies, as compared with those who filled the offices twenty-five years ago. The intentions of members of such bodies in the present day may be right, but with the growth of local government there has come an increase of party spirit and with it the temptation to men to get on to public bodies with sinister motives and to carry through their work imbued with their partisanship. The work suffers and the ratepayer pays.

33. The result is that the man who seeks office has to pander to the popular cry for the time being and this many of the better educated members of society will not do. Rather than place themselves in the position of being dictated to by the fickleness of the popular vote and sacrifice their own convictions and stifle their sense of right and justice they retire from public life. This ought not to be. Rather should they speak out their convictions even though they lose their position.

34. In dealing with applicants for Poor Law relief men and women are wanted who can seriously and firmly, yet with kindness and sympathy deal with the cases before them and while relieving the distress help remove the cause. Work of this kind should be above party spirit.

35. Take a board of guardians known to the writer having one-fifth of its members licensed victuallers or beer-house keepers. Without any reflection upon the personal character of those members I ask whether, under such conditions, drink and gambling as causes of poverty can be properly considered.

36. In administration we have again to contend with party spirit. On the appointment of officials party spirit oftentimes sacrifices a good officer.

37. These conditions even show themselves on other public bodies—and the arguments that are sometimes put forth as grounds for the appointment of stipendiary or fixed chairmen independent of the vote of their colleagues or constituents may be well considered in conjunction with boards of guardians.

38. It is a serious question whether any man who is justice of the peace should be a town councillor or a guardian or hold more than one of such posts while party spirit is so rampant.

39. I think the making of a chairman of the board of guardians a justice of the peace for the time being would give more dignity to the office, and as such the post would be more acceptable—and doubtless there would be a greater anxiety on the part of members to place the best man in the position. Further the meeting on the bench of magistrates would sometimes help to remove wrong impressions there formed as to the work being carried on by guardians.

Particulars as to Administration of Relief in the Union.

40. The administration of relief in the union is carried out as well as can be under the circumstances. Relieving officers are trying their best, but unfortunately sufficient weight is frequently not given by the guardians to the officer's reports.

41. We have four relieving officers. If one of these had a smaller district with a general supervision and cross-visiting, no doubt the work would be better done, cases of fraud would be more quickly detected and a saving to the ratepayers effected without hardship to the deserving poor.

42. The out-relief in this union for the years ending 1906, exclusive of the labour yard, was £19,253, being a cost of 3s. 1d. per head per week. In 1903 the cost was £15,834, a cost of 2s. 9½d. per head. In 1900 £12,730 was expended cost per head, 2s. 9d. In 1897 £10,061, the cost per head being 2s. 6½d. In 1895 £8,657, cost per head 2s. 3½d.

43. In 1893 with the small amount of relief then paid there were three relieving officers, and for some time previous thereto, and it was only in 1905 that a fourth officer was appointed. The relief had then doubled, but only one additional relieving officer had been appointed.

Suggested Reforms in the Law or Practice.

44. Speaking generally, I am of opinion that the present Poor Law administered in the right spirit (the relief of the deserving and the reform of the undeserving) is sufficient, but may be strengthened in the following ways :—

(a) The simplification of the law of settlement, and disputed points thereon settled in a more summary manner than at present.

(b) A codification of the law and orders. Power to guardians to compel children to contribute to parents without parents having first to become chargeable.

(c) Affiliation orders procurable as soon as expected mothers enter the workhouse to compel the putative father to contribute to her maintenance before the child's birth.

(d) Affiliation orders made whilst the mother is in the workhouse to have force on the mother's behalf after she leaves the workhouse, and also to have force in the hands of any person for the time being having custody of the child.

(e) Control over feeble-minded females to the extent of permanent care practically as imbeciles.

(f) Power to the guardians to establish homes for epileptics.

(g) Power to force into the workhouse persons who through sickness or destitution are risking their own lives or becoming a nuisance to their neighbours by remaining out.

(h) Married women with means to be liable to contribute to parents.

(i) Brothers and sisters unmarried to be liable to contribute to each other.

Extension of law of maintenance.

(j) Pensions more frequently paid, say weekly, through the relieving officers and quarterly grants from the Government to repay.

(k) Payment of relief at the homes of the poor if not weekly then at not less than stated periods, intervening weeks at pay station; this would in some cases insure more frequent visits at the homes.

(l) Extension of powers of guardians so that they may board-out (within union), children over whom they have assumed control and to any upward limit of age, but at the same time the inspection of children boarded-out within the union by a person specially appointed.

Charity.

45. There are in Northampton a number of charities both large and small and all of which are, I believe, administered carefully.

46. That to the trustees of which I am clerk dispensed in 1905 about £1,700 in weekly sums of 5s. (save ten at 6s.) to deserving old women associated with the town by a prescribed residence, and who have not received Poor Law relief for a specified time.

47. The distribution of this money is in the hands of twenty trustees and their trust is called the Northampton Municipal Church Charities.

48. This charity and the prospect of becoming eligible for it has doubtless led to the friends of many of its recipients contributing to their maintenance so as to keep them off Poor Law relief, while many others with small means have eked out the same till such time as they have reached the qualifying age.

49. The recipients of this charity are amongst the most deserving, and in order that they may be selected from the widest circle each trustee nominates in turn. Supplemented by the help of their children either in money or provision of a home the recipients of this charity are well cared for.

Provident Societies.

50. I have for years been a member and the auditor of the accounts of the Kingsthorpe Equitable Friendly Society, and I know little of the working of other societies, but I believe the conditions of all are more or less alike.

51. It has been apparent for some years past that the particular benefit society to which I belong is not maintaining the position it held.

52. Taking the members who joined within say the last ten years, and the same number of members from the earlier years of the society's work, it will be found that the old members are those who in their day contributed to what are now the clubs invested funds, but the younger members referred to will be seen to have drawn out of the society more than they have paid in, so that they are not providing any funds for their old age and are encroaching on the funds that the old members paid in for theirs. This ought not to be.

53. What is the cause? Possibly lack of employment causes the young men to fall upon the club, though some of them may through that lack of employment fall ill and be justly entitled to come on the club.

54. Others possibly make it an opportunity for seeking relief from the funds as, through want of thrift, they have no money to fall back upon as soon as they are out of work.

55. More careful discrimination is necessary in the admission of members. If the condition of this society is common to others, then the future of friendly societies is in danger.

56. Again, the friendly societies suffer by the establishment of dividend clubs, which by their yearly division of funds, if any remain, make no provision for old age.

43890. (Mr. Booth.) The hour is so late that we shall not detain you very long, but that is the less necessary as you have prepared such an excellent statement. With regard to Paragraph 13, which refers to the employment that may be used for the labour test, if the labour test is needed at all, what employment would you think is better than stone-breaking?—Here one is landed in a difficulty at once. You are competing with trade generally, and therefore you are landed in a difficulty to find anything in the towns. All that we do is wood-chopping and stone-breaking. Our staple trade is shoes, and we have no alternative. We could put the men to work on the land, but unfortunately in our position we have no land to put them on.

43891. If there was some arrangement by which larger areas combined in some way for the treatment of cases of that kind, so that you could have special institutions on the land, do you think employments could be found that would be more desirable?—If there were something in the nature of a colony of that kind within a county area it might be done, or possibly there might be a combination of counties.

43892. Have you considered that as a possibility?—Yes, but it has not been considered by my board in any way.

43893. It has been considered by yourself?—Yes. Proposed But my board went so far very recently as to consider the purchase of land for themselves, and did enter into a provisional contract for the purchase of about sixty acres, with the idea of establishing a branch workhouse which it was intended to put the able-bodied men from the workhouse into. But that did not then meet, or probably would not meet, the case of an exceptional time of distress.

43894. That could be best met by some combination of areas which would give a larger basis, because the exceptional distress would perhaps not occur in every part of the district?—I feel so.

43895. In Paragraph 2, where you refer to the classification in the workhouse, is the kind of classification you advocate based upon past conduct or upon conduct in the workhouse?—I think when you separate persons in the workhouse, you must mainly classify them on their conduct in the workhouse. At the same time I do not think you must ignore past conduct altogether. On their first entry into the workhouse, you would put them into the lowest grade having regard to their past conduct, and if their conduct showed reform or improvement you would raise them in the workhouse.

43896. That is, on his first arrival you would classify a man as well as you could according to his reputation?—I think so.

43897. Then he could either be put up a class or down a class according to behaviour?—Yes, that is my feeling.

43898. So it would have a disciplinary value?—Yes.

43899. As well as the value of keeping the more decent people protected?—That is my feeling.

43900. In Paragraph 23 you suggest that there should be one workhouse for this purpose and another workhouse for that; all that would involve, would it not, the administration of the Poor Law by larger areas in some way?—Yes, it might do so, but not necessarily.

43901. Do you think that that is a step which it may be necessary to adopt in the pursuit of good administration?—I think it may be in the course of time.

43902. Would you prefer the combination of existing unions for certain purposes only, or would you rather have definitely larger areas of administration?—I think I would rather see the combination of existing unions.

43903. Not for all purposes, but for some purposes?—For some purposes.

43904. In definite areas, or for definite purposes?—You might have a combination of unions I think for definite purposes.

43905. With the common purse for that purpose?—If you are going into the question of the common purse you would probably have to limit it to definite areas. With regard to taxation, you would have to come to the county area possibly.

43906. It would be conceivable that the existing areas would exist for minor purposes, and for certain purposes they should be superseded by a large area?—Taking my own neighbourhood, we have several outlying country unions with workhouses; why should we not be allowed to have the epileptics throughout the county dealt with in one of those institutions, because the epileptic does not need to go to the asylum proper?

43907. To organise that you would want a central board?—You might take the county area.

Relief of widows with children.

43908. The county area would have to have a board of its own, which would be perhaps representative of the various boards of guardians?—You might have a representative committee taken from the guardians of the various unions.

43909. In Paragraph 25 you speak of widows with children; do you ever relieve the widow by taking some one or two of her children into the schools?—Yes, we do.

43910. Do you find that answer?—We do not like to separate parents from children if we can help it. It may be a case of necessity sometimes. The parent comes and complains of her inability to control the child, and then we take it into the workhouse; but as a rule we do not separate them otherwise.

43911. It is not done merely as a means of giving the mother relief?—No.

43912. I suppose if the child goes into a school the mother would see it frequently?—Yes. We have scattered homes in our union; the mother would be in the workhouse and the children would be in the homes in the town, and she would have the opportunity at least once a month of visiting the children in the homes.

43913. Have you ever considered whether it would be possible, in order not to break the connection of the child with its home, that there should be special schools provided where the children should be boarded as well as taught, returning to their homes in the evening and coming to school in the morning, but having all their meals at the school as a means of cheapening the task to the mother?—That has been through my mind, but I am not favourable to it. I think it is breaking up the home life.

43914. You think that that would break the home life?—I feel it does.

43915. Although the child would spend much time at home?—The child practically then only comes home to sleep. It would go out in the morning and would not return till night, and it would be for hours away from the mother's eye practically.

43916. (Mr. Gardiner.) But if the mother goes out to work, the children are away from her eye now?—Yes, but I am in favour of the mother being kept at home if possible. I put the widow as an applicant for relief, having lost the head of the house, the bread-winner, somewhat on a different level to many other applicants for relief, and I think she should be dealt with with every possible consideration.

43917. (Mr. Booth.) And have out-relief?—She should have out-relief if her character would at all justify it, and if it would not, then she should be brought into the workhouse and the children should be placed in the scattered homes where they go to the ordinary day-schools of the town.

43918. With regard to the suggested reforms in your Paragraph 44 in (c) you deal with affiliation orders; there is a difficulty in deciding who the putative father is, is there not?—Yes; but you should have the same power as you have after the birth of the child, of course having confirmatory evidence.

43919. You really want to be able to act sooner then?—Yes, that is all.

43920. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the question which you refer to in Paragraph 23, your scheme would rather be, would it not, the formation of a joint committee between unions for the purpose of dealing with certain classes?—That is my view.

43921. That would not involve any alteration of area at all, would it?—Not necessarily, and I do not think it would. It need not in my view.

43922. It could be the system under the Act of 1879, could it not?—Something of that kind.

43923. Another method would be, would it not, for one board of guardians to agree with another board of guardians to send certain classes of cases to their workhouse?—Yes, as we do.

43924. Do you do that now?—Yes, to a neighbouring workhouse we send about twenty old men.

43925. Do you find that answer satisfactorily?—We have had no complaint whatever. They have been there some two or three years.

43926. Do your guardians visit them occasionally?—We have no fixed rule about it, but occasionally guardians in driving past the place visit them, and then report that they have called at the workhouse and found so-and-so satisfactory.

43927. So that these people are not, as it were, isolated from the general oversight of the guardians?—No. They are only about three miles away from the town.

43928. Is it not an advantage that they are not too far off; are they still visited by their friends?—Yes, they are I think visited by their friends.

43929. If they were sent off too far there might be complaints perhaps that such visiting was not practicable?—It would probably be so.

43930. (Mr. Chandler.) Under the heading of "The Social and Industrial Conditions of the Union" you speak in Paragraph 2 of the displacement of manual labour by the introduction of machinery and certain other systems of working which have brought about great changes. You mention the team system, and, according to your description, in the team system the making of a boot passes through a number of hands each waiting the completion of the work of the other, and consequently each hand must keep pace with the others?—Yes, a man has to keep pace with the others. When I say that they have to wait, I mean that a man does a certain part of the work, and then he passes it on to somebody else to do the next part.

43931. The conclusion you draw is that men of fifty years of age cannot work by the side of men of half that age under that system?—Yes.

43932. Therefore that is an additional factor in the displacement of men?—Quite so.

43933. You are speaking there in connection with the boot and shoe industry principally, I suppose?—It is entirely that; we have no alternative.

43934. Referring now to Paragraph 4, can you explain in what way the liability of employers would affect that state of things if it was removed to-morrow?—Since the Workmen's Compensation Act has come into force the claims by workmen have very largely increased. As soon as a claim is made, the whole question is left as a matter of fact between the injured man and the insurance company, and the master drops out of it. He is practically, as far as my experience goes, told to stand by, by the representative of the company. But there is necessarily I think a certain amount of trouble to the master caused by these increased claims, and so he is prone to say, "Well, I am not going to have any trouble over these things at all, and why should I have trouble? So for that reason I won't have any such men on my premises." I know this because in one particular case I had to make a claim on behalf of a working-man against an insurance company. I tried to deal with the employer, but as soon as I got to the employer I was shuffled off on to the company, and the company's representative came and saw me, and I got into such a position that I did not know with whom I was dealing. I think the tendency on the part of the employer is to say, "Now these things are becoming more common, and therefore I won't employ such people again."

43935. I was simply reading that paragraph in the light of your two previous paragraphs, in which you distinctly refer to the causes of pauperism, which I thought were the displacement of men by the introduction of machinery and the team system?—The liability of employers under the Act is not a main cause, or perhaps I should say the trouble attached to the Act, not exactly the liability.

43936. Then referring to Paragraph 6, could you explain in what way the fact that trade union societies insist on a minimum wage is an obstacle to a master employing any of those who would work at a somewhat lower wage if all restrictions as to wages were removed?—Perhaps that paragraph may want some little qualification. I say there that the minimum wage is an obstacle to a master employing any of those who want work at a lower wage. It wants this qualification. A man placed in that position can go to his trade society and get a permit from them, and then can go to work for the master at a less wage; but the master, while he can get men who will come and fill up that man's place, is not going to be troubled with that sort of go-between, or with having to go to the society at all himself. The man may work under certain conditions for a less wage, but he has to get a permit, I think, from his union.

43937. (Mr. Gardiner.) Can you tell us a little more what you meant by the statement that you have made in Paragraph 18—you are talking there about relief works?—When you get relief works you have all classes of men working side by side. There are certain classes of the community who are always ready and waiting for something to do; I do not want to say unkind words of any man, but I must put it down that there are men who will do as little as they possibly can, and a man who is an industrious person is placed to work by the side of such men, and then the tendency is for the better man to come down to the level of the others.

43938. Have you come across cases of that sort in your experience?—Certainly. I think after a little time the man gets to learn—how he gets to learn I do not quite know—that he must not do more than a certain quantity.

43939. Have these cases been so numerous that you have formed the opinion that this distress work has done more harm than good?—No, I would not go so far as to say that—certainly not. I would not say it has done more harm than good, because the distress committees have been more or less under the circumstances a necessity.

43940. Still the guardians could have done it themselves, could they not?—Relief works have been done in our town. We have had the corporation and distress committees doing a great deal, and they have had men working down at their sewage works digging, and they have also found a lot of unremunerative work about the place. They have taken the whole thing off the hands of the guardians, of course with the aid of the grant from the Exchequer and voluntary contributions.

43941. Are you in a position to give us any opinion as to the comparative value of the two systems? Do the corporation do it better, do you think, than the board of guardians?—I should not like to discriminate between them. I should think they are both about the same. They both do it of necessity.

43942. In Paragraph 35 you talk about the quality of the members of a certain board of guardians that you have known; have you come across instances of owners of small property being elected in order to give relief to their own tenants?—No, I could not say that.

43943. You would not like to see an additional column in the application and report book for the landlord's name, would you?—No.

43944. You do not think that is necessary?—I do not think it is necessary. I have had a landlord call on me privately, and tell me that so-and-so was not paying his rent, and would I try to bring my influence to bear upon him.

43945. That landlord was not a member of your Board, was he?—No, he was not a member of my Board. I told him it was no part of my business.

43946. In Paragraph 36 you refer to the party spirit shown in the appointment of officials. Do you mean that a party selects a second-rate man rather than a first-rate man because the second-rate man belongs to the party?—I mean this: probably there will be a party meeting beforehand to settle whom they are going to vote for, and I think on those occasions I am able to say that better men might have been selected.

43947. Are such meetings held for a post like a relieving officer's?—Yes.

43948. Have you often known cases where members of a Board have resigned in order to become candidates for office?—Never in my case, during my ten years' service.

43949. Have you heard of such cases elsewhere?—Yes.

43950. Then as regards the figures you give in Paragraphs 42 and 43, what is the increase shown there due to?—It is mainly due to the necessity of the extra relief for unemployment. My Board have of late years been, I think, more liberal in their relief. I think the Northampton Union is one of the most liberal in the country.

43951. Would you consider that that was mainly due to this change of employment to which you have referred?—Yes.

43952. You would not think it is the effect of administration at all?—Merely this, that I do not think in our administration there is discrimination enough between the deserving and the undeserving. I have had that feeling for a long time.

43953. Practically everybody gets it who apparently needs it?—Pretty well. My point is this, that there is not discrimination enough between the deserving and the undeserving.

43954. (Chairman.) In fact the investigation is not in your judgment thorough?—It is not thorough.

43955. Is the relief adequate?—The relief is quite adequate. In some cases we give the old people 5s. each, that is 10s. for the two. The lowest we give is 3s. 6d., and most of our old people (single cases) get 4s. or 4s. 6d. or 5s.

43956. Has that been the practice for a long time?—It has been the practice now for some years past. We used to have a rule that a widow should keep herself and one child, and that she should have 1s. 6d. and a loaf for the others, but now we give no bread at all, and we give the widow relief for practically every child, and perhaps something for herself too.

43957. Did that increase of scale bring a large number of applications upon you?—No. Our relief has always been for five or six years past very high, and, as I say, the great increase has mainly been due to the lack of employment and the abnormal distress.

43958. (Mr. Gardiner.) And not to any change of policy?—Not to any change of policy. The board has been more liberal, and I think both influences have combined, but we have not a sufficient oversight by the relieving officers, the staff being insufficient.

43959. Apparently, according to Paragraph 43, you want one additional relieving officer?—I think for the present we should have one additional relieving officer, although I think the time might come when perhaps by a little different system, including the adoption of cross-visiting, we could even do the work with the present officers.

43960. Have you not got a cross-visitor now?—We have no cross-visitor and no superintendent, and I think that is where we are at fault.

43961. You have no proper supervision?—No. We work it now with two relief committees. I have known cases where the recipient of relief has gone out of the district of one committee into the district of another when he has been refused relief, and he has got relief in the second district, and it has not been discovered until perhaps some little time after. That could not have happened had there been proper supervision.

43962. Do the members give relief in those wards for which they are elected?—No. We have a number of parishes, but we have only two relief committees.

43963. Are the relief committees so arranged that no guardian gives relief in the ward for which he is elected?—Not necessarily. I do not think there is any study made as to what parish a gentleman sits for.

43964. Do the guardians as a body try to prevent that?—No. On the one hand, I do not know that a guardian is not allowed to sit on a relief committee when a case comes from his own parish; and on the other hand, I could not say that a guardian seeks to sit on a relief committee in such a case.

43965. Do the guardians regard themselves as judicial officers, or do they regard themselves as distributors of money for charitable reasons?—I think our guardians try to act up to the middle course. I think they always try to remember that they have the poor to attend to as well as to represent the ratepayers. There are, in a Board of thirty-six members, one or two perhaps who would go there with the idea that they represent the ratepayers rather more than the poor. You are bound to get some in a body of that kind; on the other hand you get some whose sole object seems to be to get what relief they can for the applicant.

training for indoor officers.

43966. Have you any views as to the establishment of a training system for indoor officers, like workhouse-masters, and so on? Do you think a workhouse-master need be trained in any other way than as a labour-master perhaps?—I do not think the master wants a particular training, provided he starts his position from the lower standard in the workhouse.

43967. Do you not think it desirable that he should work up his way to a very large workhouse towards the end of his career, supposing he is a very good man?—I think he ought to be able to do so.

43968. But at present it is very difficult?—Yes, it is difficult.

43970. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to Paragraph 32 where you speak of a change in the personnel of the board since the extension of the franchise; what is your remedy for that? I note that in Paragraph 37 you hint at the appointment of a permanent or fixed chairman to get over the difficulty; have you any other suggestion?—No. I am afraid it is a difficult matter to suggest a remedy for it. I have suggested somewhere that you should make the chairman a Justice of the Peace. I think, to some extent, that would rather add to the dignity of the office, and that the board itself would be disposed to be more careful as to the gentlemen on their board that they would put into that position. That is only a small thing. When I speak of the lowering of the standard it is rather a delicate thing for an officer to say, and you will quite understand an officer's position in that. I make no sort of suggestion against the character of the gentlemen at all, but I do feel that if you go back to twenty years ago you had then on your Boards of Guardians a number of gentlemen who had retired from business and had time and leisure for the work and went into it; and in those days, I think, the individual member did more as a guardian. I know in my experience several gentlemen who occupied that position, who made it part of their business to know personally many of the applicants for relief.

43971. Was it not rather the case then that people were not influenced quite so much by feeling outside, and had not so much in mind the opinions of the voters who had put them in?—That had, I think, something to do with it. I have said elsewhere I do feel that there is too much of a party spirit in local government in the present day. In our own town very recently we tried to start an independent association with the object of putting lady guardians on to the board. We are now having our triennial election, and it has failed—we have not a single lady out of that body.

43972. Would you say that the granting of relief to people who are the constituents of those who are popularly elected is mischievous?—I would not like to go so far as to condemn Boards of Guardians to that extent. There may be that tendency, and in the hands of some men it may be used for this purpose, but I do not think we should condemn Boards of Guardians generally in that way.

43973. Would you go so far as to say that the work itself is not work that ought to be done by those who are popularly elected?—I feel that it would be a good thing for boards if there were a certain number of co-opted members working with them..

43974. So as to get a little leaven?—Yes. In my own union we have about six or eight rural parishes, and in them we get country farmers and country clergymen and men of that stamp who are a different class of men to the borough representatives; there is a case of leavening, decidedly.

43975. In order to get elected, do candidates make promises of what they will do?—They do not openly make promises on the platform of what they will do in the way of relief; but it is possible for relief to go up a little on the eve of an election.

43976. They will circulate literature, will they not?—There is very little literature circulated, but literature has been circulated by some sections.

43977. In Paragraph 49 (g) you suggest that powers should be given to force a certain class of people into the workhouse who become a nuisance to their neighbours, and who are risking their own lives; do you mean to suggest that boards of guardians should have power to do this without appealing to the magistrates?—They should have power to do it, if it is a case which they are relieving; but I should not say that they should do it without a medical certificate. We have had on our board several cases of people living out in country villages right away from the workhouse, which have given a great deal of trouble to the relieving officer.

43978. Would you go so far as to say it was necessary to get an order of removal from the magistrates, or would you leave it to the board of guardians themselves?—I would leave it to the board of guardians, on the certificate of the medical officer.

43979. (Chairman.) Are the proceedings or the individual votes of guardians much canvassed outside? It has been stated to us that in certain towns meetings are held periodically, in which the actions of the guardians who take this or that course are discussed, and I believe almost votes of censure or reprobation are passed on them. There has been nothing of that kind in Northampton, has there?—I cannot say, but I do not think so. I know their actions are criticised. We have one very strong paper in our town which writes articles which are circulated. It speaks very strongly of the conduct of the board. That paper, I know, has been put about very broadcast sometimes, and scattered over the whole of the town.

43980. Speaking of insurance, do you know if the insurance companies put any limitations on the age of the persons to be employed?—I could not say that they do. I do not know that.

43981. You have a Distress Committee in Northampton, I think?—Yes, we have had it for years past.

43982. Could the Poor Law guardians have done that work?—No, I do not think they could, because we had not the work for them to do.

43983. Do you, on the whole, think it better that that class of work should be given to the town council?—The town council and the guardians in our case have worked well together. Two years ago the Northampton guardians went in the first instance into the inquiries into the whole of the cases; some of the cases they sent to the borough for work and some they sent to our own stone yard. This year we have closed our stone yard, and the borough have done the whole work.

43984. Are there any causes contributing to distress in Northampton other than the change in the manufacture of boots?—There are no other direct causes. Of course there is a general lack of thrift, but that applies everywhere.

43985. I suppose the boot trade is the industry in Northampton?—It is the industry; we have no other staple industry. The whole system of making shoes is altogether different to what it used to be years ago.

43986. Should you say that, though fewer people are employed, the wages have gone up, or not?—I think the wages have gone up, though fewer people are employed. I am speaking of the maximum that a man can earn, but then there is a loss of time which brings that down. I do not think the average earnings of a man in the shoe trade are more now than they were twenty years ago.

43987. Was there much distress amongst the old shoe-makers when they made by hand?—I do not think there conditions it was so much as there is now. They worked at their boot trade homes then, and now they work in a factory.

43988. There were fewer of them then, were there not?—Yes.

43989. Does it look now as if this is a temporary difficulty that will gradually get absorbed?—I do not think so in the boot trade.

43990. Do you think it is more or less permanent?—I think it is more of a permanent nature. I should say there are as many boots made in Northampton as ever.

43991. How long have these changes been going on?—These changes have been going on for the last ten years, I should think, at least as far as the gradual introduction of machinery is concerned.

Industrial conditions in boot trade. 43992. Do you think the changes have been so far material that there has been time for an expansion of the new system?—It is continually going on.

43993. Going on expanding, do you mean?—Yes, there is a continuous introduction of American machinery into the boot factories.

43994. If boots can be made more cheaply, there might be an increased demand, and, consequently, an expansion of business?—I foresee this, which may be a serious matter for Northampton if boots are all made by machinery; why not take the boot-making trade away to the sea-port and make the boots close to the sea-port, because you do not want the old-fashioned skill which the old shoe-maker had, and the master doing a shipping trade can save the cost of railway transit. Northampton may lose its shoe trade altogether.

43995. You will find, I think, generally that where a trade is located which originally was manual the tendency is to continue there when it becomes sustained and carried on by machinery?—That would be the general course of things, but when you get machinery, I think the tendency of the time is for the labour to become less skilled. Where there is manual labour it is a sort of skilled labour, but machinery does away with all that.

Dr. ALBERT HENRY BYGOTT, called; and Examined.

43996. (Chairman.) You are District Medical Officer of the Deritend and Bordesley districts of the Aston Union?—I am.

43997. You are a whole-time officer?—I am a whole-time officer, partly for district medical work and partly as a public vaccinator.

43998. You have prepared a statement, which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence-in-chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I am a Doctor of Medicine of the University of London, a D.P.H., Birmingham, and a barrister-at-law.

I have been the district medical officer and public vaccinator (whole time) of the Deritend and Bordesley districts of the Aston Union for five years.

I was previously engaged as an unqualified assistant and principal in general practice, for most of the time in poor districts, for about twelve years.

Industrial and social conditions in Aston Union. 2. The union of Aston commences within one mile of the centre of the city of Birmingham: it extends in an easterly direction into Warwickshire.

3. It contains a population in the city of Birmingham larger than that contained in the parish of Birmingham. There is also a town population in the borough of Aston Manor of about 60,000, which is continuous to that of the city of Birmingham. The union then extends into Warwickshire as a large rural district containing Erdington and Sutton Coldfield, both populous centres, and some smaller places. It is about seven miles across.

4. It has in it the Birmingham Small Arms Factories, Kynoch's, Metropolitan Carriage Works, and some other large concerns, and numerous small works mainly devoted to metal trades. The distributing depots of the London & North Western and Midland Railways are in the union.

5. House property and the character of most of the streets compare favourably with those in most large areas. Rent—4s. is the common rent of a three-roomed back to back house; houses at this rental are scarce, plenty of accommodation can be obtained at 6s. 6d. There is one set of flats built by a company in Palmer Street which has not been very successful; they are badly kept and many rooms are unoccupied. There is a Rowton House of 800 beds erected about two years ago and several smaller lodging houses.

POOR LAW.

Whole-time
District
Medical Officer in Aston.

6. About five years ago, on the death of a district medical officer, the guardians superannuated the officer in the next district and combined the districts and appointed a whole-time man, the salary being £120 per annum as district medical officer, £475 per annum from fees as public vaccinator. These last fees have been considerably added to. The object as stated by individual guardians was to get a man to do the district work well and to fill up his time with vaccinations. The incidental expenses connected with the medical office are very heavy and the net value of this portion of the work is very small; if the medical work were heavier there would be a great temptation to the officer to neglect it so that he might earn more money by his other work.

Whole-time
Medical Superintendent at Aston
Infirmary.

7. About four years ago the guardians on the resignation of the elderly visiting doctor at the workhouse, decided to appoint a whole-time medical superintendent. The emoluments were fixed at under £400 a year and a house. They insisted on the officer being married.

Abandonment of use of alcohol in Poor Law
cases.

8. I was, many years ago, sceptical as to the value of alcohol as a drug, but the public expected me to use it (I do not often now treat acute cases). When I did so I used in Poor Law work a pure spirit given as a medicine. The results were equally good as when I used brandy and whisky. I then substituted ether and hypodermic injections of strychnine. I did equally well.

9. The use of alcohol is now abandoned in the Deritend and Bordesley districts. I am not an abstainer and I would use it if I thought it was beneficial to patients.

Abuse of
extras.

10. I found that I was called in by patients simply to get extras and that my medicine was thrown away. I decided to relieve the patient at my own cost after making the able-bodied relative responsible for the sick one's maintenance work for me—the work being to roll a lawn or chop wood. The patients being carefully observed to see that no harm resulted to them from the practice.

Several invitations were issued to applicants for the relief. Most never came at all. A few came twice or three times. More came once. Only two showed any honest desire for work. One man drank, the two were assisted in getting other work. It was usually found the father had other work he could do that paid better.

Respective merits of in and out-relief and classes of cases suitable therefor.

11. The routine method of relief should be indoor—outdoor the exception. Through want of opportunity of watching cases it is difficult to speak from figures.

12. Outdoor relief should only be given to :—

(a) The aged who cannot work, when it has been carefully ascertained that they will be cared for well outside. In many cases old people seem scantily covered, in cold damp bedrooms, putting up with great hardships which would be avoided in the house.

(b) Widows with children who can get employment and then it must be adequate.

(c) Persons with incurable diseases on the same terms as the aged.

13. Outdoor Relief should not be given :—

(a) To sick men who will be capable of work. If they are in such a condition as to need any parish relief keeping them at home must protract the illness, because it can never be adequate—if a man is in an institution it is usually an incentive to get well to go out—it prevents men joining clubs. One case was specially striking, a very decent man had pneumonia. His doctor asked for relief that he might stay at home. After wasting valuable time on the experiment of out-relief he had to go; when he came out he was most grateful and wished he had gone earlier. In other cases I have received very grateful thanks from patients on whom I have applied pressure to go in.

(b) In cases where the patient is a danger to others (e.g., phthisis, some cases). The position of the authorities is rendered very difficult in these cases as there is no power of compulsory removal; only the great tact of the relieving officers and the weakness of guardians prevents at times scandal in some of these cases.

14. In the Deritend and Bordesley districts medical relief is not much sought for in proportion to its size, as there are numerous voluntary agencies that supply it more easily. Most of the cases have some bearing on other forms of relief.

15. I have examined 326 cases which are I think a fair sample of the work.

111	are persons over sixty years of age.
43	" " whose ages are not stated.
34	" " under fourteen years of age.
94	" " for examination only.
44	" " aged between fourteen and sixty.

326

The 111 are mostly old persons with the discomforts of old age and receive usually outdoor relief.

Forty-three whose ages are not stated are usually chronic cases as in the above class, where the person fetching the medicine does not state the age.

Thirty-four children—some are children of widows receiving relief, most of the others were transferred to the Children's Hospital to keep them away from the Poor Law.

The ninety-four cases for examination contained some middle-aged people rendered prematurely old by alcohol (number not ascertainable) and some who could not possibly be treated at home were connected with families who would not ordinarily come to the Poor Law.

The thirty-four remaining cases appear to consist of persons either broken down before sixty or others visiting the doctor as a means for getting other relief.

16. There is no apparent use of this department as a genuine poor man's dispensary.

17. There are about sixteen to twenty midwifery cases annually; these patients being very poor and the medical officer being sent for to assist a midwife in a difficult labour.

18. About fifty persons are annually certified insane.

19. From an examination of the figures quoted in the last section the greatest cause of pauperism appears to be inability to make provision for old age, most of the persons there were connected with the labourer class.

Old age and alcohol as causes of pauperism.

20. Many of the people between fifty and sixty showed signs of premature senility in which alcohol seemed to be an important factor.

21. Neglect or inability to insure against sickness I almost always ask whether a man who should work is in a club. Most of them have never been in any club at all, some have been in unstable societies connected with factories or public houses, fewer have been in their trade clubs, very few have been in the established friendly societies and have run out.

Thriftlessness, though lessness, lack of administration, etc., causes of pauperism.

22. Some paupers admit that they wish to use the outdoor relief department as a club.

23.—Soon after my appointment some of the persons who had previously been my private patients got medical orders, they soon began to ask for other relief as well which was not desirable. They were remonstrated with, and apparently without any special hardship returned to more independent habits.

Medical relief the first step to pauperism.

The neighbours or some persons who have had relief apply and are very persistent because they say that it has been granted easily to others.

24. The medical officer frequently does not know what becomes of a case after he has reported on it. His relieving officers give him to understand that it is advisable to inform those persons that he will not recommend for relief that he is not going to do so, as the guardians through want of time, personal interest, are not sure of giving that judicial discretion to many of the cases which they need.

Need of power to guardians to compulsorily remove to the workhouse certain classes of cases.

25. I beg to submit the following recommendations, suggested by experience :—

(a) There should be provision for the compulsory removal to the workhouse of persons who on account of sickness or destitution are liable to be a danger to themselves or others.

need of power to guardians to compulsorily remove to the workhouse certain classes of cases.

During this week a man was attended who was lying in a dirty bed in a pool of matter. His son shared the same bed; he flatly refused to go away. The only furniture in the house seemed to be a bed and a box.

A man with phthisis and a large family, with no comforts, insisted on staying at home and spitting where he liked. His wife and son have since come up for treatment, they were thin and poor, not enough time has elapsed since he died to see perhaps the full extent of the damage he did. If outdoor relief is refused in these cases, a scandal is possible.

Proposed administration of relief by stipendiary.

(b) The appointment of a proper paid officer to replace the Relief Committees in interviewing applicants for relief. Such officer should be a magistrate capable of signing all orders, lunacy certificates, etc.

This would remove all backstair influences in their department, it would prevent persons trying to influence guardians for their protégés, it would prevent fluctuation in the amount of outdoor relief when elections are pending. It is very difficult for a guardian in business or humble circumstances to refuse to relieve, or to do justice in the case of money orders in the case of his tenant, his customer, or his neighbour. It is not difficult for a paid officer acting for two or three unions to hold a little court and give a judicial decision in these cases.

The details of this scheme need working out, but it seems that there are many capable men of the class of Local Government Board inspectors who could do credit to these offices. In large towns, if he had not enough to do he could assist the stipendiary, or in smaller places, with advantage supplement the local bench, or by a combination of some other office do useful work.

need of emphasising men's responsibility to provide medical assistance for their wives and children.

(c) The duty of a father to provide assistance, medical and otherwise, should be more insisted on; it is frequent for medical officers to see a big powerful man sitting by the fire, whilst a delicate wife goes to the parish officer to apply for relief or medical help for a child. He should be taught his responsibilities, he does not often need to go, but his duty should be recognized.

(d) The duty of a husband to provide for a wife seems to need more recognition and should be defined by statute.

A man some time ago refused to get a doctor for his wife when she was ill, although her serious condition was pointed out to him by his neighbours. He had also a report in writing from the district medical officer stating her condition and pointing out his duty to make an application and to fetch medicine; he did neither till the woman was dead. The result of a post-mortem disclosed that the life could have been saved by proper treatment.

On consulting authorities, the coroner found that the person not being a child or apprentice, there appeared to be no warrant or precedent for a prosecution—there seeming to be an assumption that an adult married woman can take care of herself; the presumption here is not justified. I have met with other cases where a husband has discharged his natural duties after threats which it appears could not have been carried out.

Proposed abolition of out medical relief, and its transference to provident dispensaries.

(e) The abolition of the outdoor medical department of the Poor Law as a means of treating the sick and the transferring of the cases to a dispensary or some similar institution.

Almost all parish patients now at times are dealt with by these institutions. They respect them more, and they are brought into contact with the struggling respectable poor which is very beneficial to them.

further facilities for operations in Poor Law
infirmaries.

(f) The provision of an operating surgeon to all infirmaries above a certain size where the nursing is efficient.

(These last two recommendations will be discussed more fully in the section dealing with medical assistance to the poor).

MEDICAL ASSISTANCE OF THE POOR.

Birmingham
health visitors and question of their access and qualifications

26. Several health visitors are employed by the City Council; I meet with them rarely—I do not hear them much quoted by mothers whom I know they have visited and advised as to the treatment of infants, although soon after their visits commenced there has been an improvement in the design of feeding bottles used. From meeting some of the visitors; they seemed to devote much energy to the compiling of statistics; I have not remarked much force of character about them calculated to influence people. There seems to be a very serious question as to whether it might not be desirable to employ a better class of woman; in cases where personality is of value, if a higher salary is necessary then for the same expenditure perhaps better work would be done by employing a smaller staff. I should however like to see more of this work done by district nurses, who now I believe are quite adequate to advise in cases of sickness.

Birmingham
visitors and question of their success and qualifications

27. Poor Law.—See paragraphs under the heading "Poor Law."

28. The help of the clergy is frequently sought in providing tickets for the various charities; appeals in newspapers are frequent asking for these tickets to be sent to the clergy by subscribers.

Church charity in Aston.

The notes are frequently given to cases in which they are unsuitable.

29. The same remarks will apply to the district visitors and voluntary workers, but their tact and discrimination is less. I had to prevent valuable in-patient tickets being used:—(a) Case of tertiary syphilis; (b) a case of chronic gout, where in-patient treatment would have been useless.

Misuse of "inpatient" tickets for voluntary
hospitals.

30. Much work of this kind is definitely done; in many more cases doctors undertake work for which they know that they will not be paid, in three recent cases in which a doctor was very kind the result was not so great as the intention was good.

Gratuitous work for the poor by medical men.

(a) Case of child neglect where a prosecution was necessary.

(b) Case of enteric needing removal.

(c) Case of pneumonia needing removal.

In many cases this charity is shamefully abused and at the same time the recipients have money which would pay the doctor's fees.

31. For their number and work reference must be made to their reports.

Class of persons using Birmingham
hospitals.

It must be remembered that owing to the reputation of the Birmingham hospitals many patients treated there come from long distances outside its area. The people using them are:—

The submerged.

The labourers.

The artisan.

32. Speaking as a resident officer (I acted as house physician for six weeks at the Queen's five years ago). I noticed some people there, not many, who could afford to pay fees. In most cases I believe they went there to obtain better treatment than they thought they would get from a doctor at home. The bulk of the patients are drawn from the other two classes. The casualties, especially from the submerged, the number of cases which are trivial which seek treatment in the middle of the night, are numerous and vexatious. I was at the Queen's during the diarrhoea season when this nuisance is at its worst. In the out-patient departments the work is so heavy that it is impossible to do justice to many cases and to go into the patients' circumstances and to give that advice which is usually more important than drug treatment.

Quality of
medical assistance in out patients' departments of Birmingham
hospitals.

33. The ticket system is in use at the General hospital and the Eye hospital. There is a registration fee in most of the others; in some cases it is not enforced. I have seen great distress caused to respectable workmen whose dependents have had to be refused admission to in the ticket hospitals because they could not produce the tickets as they did not know any rich charitable person who would give them one.

Admission by tickets to voluntary hospitals and its evils.

34. Both hospitals are crippled for want of beds, the list of patients needing operations or other treatment in the General, Queen's, and Women's is very large. I have had to keep at home, to the danger of their lives, patients needing immediate relief.

Inadequate accommodation at Birmingham voluntary
hospitals.

35. As a student I dressed for a surgeon who had no public reputation; he had to have allotted to him a certain number of beds, he could not fill them with good cases. He had to get in trivial cases, e.g., one case was a superficial abscess, with which to fill his beds. At the same time another surgeon had to keep serious cases waiting as his beds were so full.

Dr. A. H.
Bygott.
12 Mar. 1907.

36. The admission of patients is very unsatisfactory as the door is guarded usually by a young lately-qualified man having no idea of the worry of general practice and who seems not to appreciate the danger of keeping bad and doubtful cases under very improper conditions. It is often impossible for a doctor to say what is the matter with a patient when he knows that the patient should be in hospital to help someone to find out.

Birmingham
District
Nursing Society
operations.

37. This work is not done so extensively as in some other large towns; it is rapidly improving. I have been extensively connected with this work. With their help it has been possible to do successfully in emergency some major operations in patients' houses, and to treat successfully many cases which, if left to the nursing of their friends, would probably have died. The discharge of patients from hospital is rendered by their help possible at an earlier date. I think I once, in practice, sent them eighty cases in a month. They do very valuable work in connection with the General Dispensary. Their co-operation with doctors is getting closer, hardly any send in cases quite systematically; in others it depends on caprice rather than necessity, some never send any in at all. The matrons would gladly answer any questions. Very few schools are attended by the nurses.

Voluntary Lying-in Hospital.

38. A lying-in hospital is in course of erection. Up to a few years ago the nurses employed in this charity were of the Mrs. Gamp order. They have recently been replaced by trained women. The ticket system has also just been abolished, a registration fee of 2s. 6d. is paid.

Need of larger supply of midwives.

39. I was in the habit of transferring to them my parish cases (not many) where arrangements are made some time before the birth of the child. For a long time the charity has been so crowded that they will not take my cases. A doctor is of very little value to a woman in a straightforward labour; he cannot do any of the necessary nursing and the patient cannot, as a rule, provide it. I am reduced to paying out of my own pocket women I cannot trust to nurse my cases. The following question was addressed some time ago to busy general practitioners:—

You are a workman earning 30s. a week, your wife expects to be confined. Do you, outside the lying-in charity, know of any decent and respectable woman whom you can afford to pay, whom you would trust to attend your wife? No satisfactory reply was ever received.

Birmingham
General
Dispensary
operations.

40. This is the most important system of providing for medical assistance to the poor outside the hospitals. I occasionally act as locum for one of the doctors. The medical staff are young men who have usually held hospital house appointments and are careful, energetic men interested in their work.

Arrangements are made to pay specialists to see serious cases at their homes; the specialist, having under his control hospital beds, makes entrance into hospitals, easy from the dispensary.

System of admission to
Birmingham
Dispensary.

Tickets are obtained:—

- (a) From clergy and voluntary workers.
- (b) They may be bought (3s. 6d. for one month's treatment); this is not common.
- (c) Works in which the workpeople subscribe about 1d. per week. This seems to supply a very great number.

The great blot on the dispensary's usefulness is the ticket system. Some cases needing help cannot get them, whilst they are often given to cases who do not need them.

Birmingham
Hospital
Saturday Fund.

41. Just under £20,000 is raised by this fund every year. It is divided into doles to the various institutions, but a very large amount now is kept back to maintain their excellent Convalescent Home at Llandudno, and one for children at Great Barr (a few miles out). £10,000 a year is given for convalescent work, the rest in doles. Most of this money is raised by compulsory weekly payments in factories, and the good effect of this system is an argument in favour of compulsory provision on the part of the workers against sickness.

Birmingham
Convalescent Homes.

42. These consist of those connected with the Hospital Saturday Fund—one at Blackwell, and one for children at Moseley, and some small homes of rest, etc. They are absolutely necessary to restore patients after serious illness. It is necessary to pay 10s. towards the railway fare to the homes at Llandudno. The guardians oc-asionally pay for paupers going to tubercle sanatoria. There is no charity sanatorium of this kind near Birmingham. Sanatorium tickets are most difficult to get.

43. Well-known friendly societies, e.g., Foresters, Medical Oddfellows (numbers could be furnished by Councillor assistant Middleton, J.P., Dale End). These societies have amalgamated for purposes of medical assistance, and employ a doctor of their own. Doctors, as a rule, consider it bad form to undertake this work, thus the number of good medical men who are available is small, and the power of the working men, who appoint, to discriminate is not great.

Friendly societies of good repute—outside these are few in number, e.g., Ebenezer. The medical work is done by doctors in general practice of good repute, and consisting largely of adult men gives little trouble.

Clubs connected with insurance companies have ceased operations since General Medical Council forbade advertising.

Private doctors' clubs, and those conducted by business agencies.—Before the Medical Council forbade advertising, medical Birmingham was infested by an army of canvassers clubs, pressing forward the claims of enterprising medical men. The business arrangements were bad. The doctors were glad to receive the money: after seeing the work in various practices it can be said that the club patient was looked on as a nuisance: the service he got was very bad, similar to that obtained from the cheap doctor. Some medical men have taken statistics, and they say that calculations based on amount received for each case was remunerative.

44. It is said that this society cannot live against Sands Cox the dispensary. It was an honest attempt by a great Dispensary man to solve the problem of medical assistance for the provident workman. I do not know much about it.

45. Many years ago Dr. Sands Cox founded a school for clergyman and doctors, hoping that many of them would practise in the town, that they would grow up and work together for the good of the city. This conception has never been fulfilled—each profession goes its own way.

46. Co-operation may be effected as follows:—

A workman subscribes to Hospital Saturday Fund, his son suffers from appendicitis:—

- (a) He gets a note from his factory for the dispensary.
- (b) Dispensary doctor calls in a surgeon, at expense of dispensary, who admits him as a favour to a general hospital.
- (c) Father gets Hospital Saturday note for a Convalescent Home.

The case is well treated throughout.

47. The links in the chain are made easy by the Hospital Saturday Fund; but it is easy to see that if father had worked in a factory which did not subscribe to Hospital Saturday Fund he would have had to beg a note from a clergyman or philanthropist, or take his boy to the hospital himself, on the chance of his getting in. Also it is most difficult to get convalescent notes. It is easy to see that the case of this class of sick poor is not to be envied.

48. As to overlapping:—

A man able to walk about may get assistance from several places:—

- (a) Private doctor by payment.
- (b) Private doctor by charity.
- (c) Dispensary doctor.
- (d) Parish doctor.
- (e) Doctor at medical mission.
- (f) Out-patient department, General.
- (g) Out-patient department, Queen's.
- (h) Out-patient department, Special Hospital.

49. All these methods are used in some cases one after another by people whose illnesses persist. No doctor is given a proper chance; in many cases nothing can be done and much valuable time and medicine is wasted.

50. It is common for people to use two institutions at the same time, especially where both distribute other relief, e.g., parish and dispensary, and to throw away one or both lots of medicine.

51. There is frequently a slight spirit of rivalry on the part of the governing bodies of institutions which would be hostile to any amalgamation. Some years ago it was proposed to unite the Lying-in Charity and the District Nursing Societies; it would have lessened expenses and have afforded a valuable means of training the two staffs by working together in obtaining a mutual knowledge of the two departments. I was present at a committee meeting of the latter Charity. It was concluded that it would be a lot of trouble and the Society would lose its identity; it was decided not to proceed further. Since then each society has bought house property and an amalgamation would be more difficult.

52. The special hospitals were mostly originally one-man movements; they do the same work as the special departments in the general hospitals. They are always appealing for funds, it is often more difficult to obtain admission to their beds than a general hospital. Owing to the reputation of Mr. Lawson Tait, the congestion at the women's hospital is always very great.

53. Our Poor Law services are quite separate from the Health Department. I know and am on friendly terms with all the health medical officers, but the opportunities for interchange of courtesies are not numerous.

54. The provision of one central authority is much to be desired, and the same arguments which have been so prominent in the education question apply to this also. It would, I think be resisted by the governing bodies of the various institutions, when it is remembered the total number of beds in all the Birmingham voluntary hospitals are compared with the number in the city hospitals; and the able way in which the latter are managed, it seems to suggest a solution of the difficulty.

55. Subject to correction from the coroner, it seems that few people die without having received any medical assistance when their friends thought they needed it. In most cases, when a person dies unexpectedly without aid, the doctor discovers that if he had been called in earlier his services would have been unavailing. People do die from insufficiency of medical treatment.

A woman, wife of a labourer earning 18s. a week, was seen by a doctor at a favourable moment for interference in a case of labour. He sent the man with a note asking the relieving officer to admit the case to the Workhouse Infirmary, as the husband could not provide his wife with the assistance she needed. This was refused; the woman died and left a family, an inquest was held, it was decided that everyone concerned had acted within the law.

A patient with strangulated hernia had an operation delayed twenty hours before being admitted into the General Hospital. The delay seemed to make all the difference between death and recovery.

An old man with cancer of the lip waited more than three months with his name on the waiting-list of the General Hospital; finally a general practitioner took the man into his own house and operated, life was prolonged sixteen months and might have been saved by more prompt attention.

56. Damage as to Quality of Treatment Supplied.—Cases where death or serious damage may result through want of immediate application of first-rate or prompt treatment are fortunately rare, such cases as:—

- (a) Choking due to foreign bodies in air-passages.
- (b) Strangulated herniae.
- (c) Glaucoma or serious eye disease.
- (d) Very serious bone inflammation needing immediate operation.
- (e) Heart failure which could be combated by drugs or treatment.
- (f) Appendicitis needing immediate operation, or rupture of ulcers of stomach or intestine.
- (g) Internal abscesses which may rupture into chest or abdomen.

57. The busiest general practitioner cannot give a long list of any of this group of cases he has met with in practice, but it is fortunate that many of these cases get taken to the hospital first-hand.

When these cases do arise in practice is best determined by considering the quality and sources of assistance available to the poor:—

(a) Case may be taken to the hospital—then, except for the avoidable mistake of entrusting the decision as to the admission of such cases to recently qualified and inexperienced men, the patient has the best chance.

(b) Case may get assistance from the dispensary, who may get an honorary to take it in as a favour.

(c) Assistance may be obtained from the parish—the outdoor staff are experienced general practitioners, but the only further assistance is that of another gentleman of the same description in the Poor Law infirmaries, except in the parish of Birmingham which does not contain half the population of the city. Doctors often apply to me for aid in cases needing treatment by specialists, but I have to draw their attention to this state of affairs and to leave them to get out of their troubles as best they can, or facilitate admission of case into a hospital.

(d) Assistance may be got from a private doctor. Although the general practitioner does very kindly acts for which he does not get credit, the quality of the doctors who frequently attend the poor has to be examined.

58. For many years in Birmingham the cheap doctor has flourished. He has done better since the inferior medical clubs were done away with—that they have an important bearing on the question is evident. A registrar of deaths states that the greatest number of death certificates which he receives are from doctors of this class. Most of them are Scotch or Irishmen who are not highly educated or well trained, few of them make anything like habitual use of nursing societies, many never send in any cases at all; very few of them are well in touch with any form of voluntary charity.

Several of them (fortunately their numbers are diminishing) drink, some to an extent as to render them just capable of getting about, unfortunately not quite enough to prevent them working altogether. Practically none of them have received any instruction in Public Health (it was only added a few years ago as a compulsory part of a doctor's curriculum). The scale of fees is as follows:

6d. for consultation at the surgery and medicine. Some of the higher class doctors try to get 1s. for adults.

3s. 6d. for attendance at home for one week, with 5s. for an adult, if it can be got.

10s. 6d. for midwifery.

These are usually inclusive charges. The doctor usually has no horse, or assistant, or dispenser, and when it is considered the amount of work which must be done to earn from £250 to £400 a year on this scale, or in rare cases from £700 to £1,000, it is not conducive to thoroughness. Many of these doctors profess to work on a cash basis, but all give more or less credit for work for which they are never paid, which greatly increases the total.

Practically they never strip a patient's chest in the surgery to carefully examine it. They listen to a chest with a stethoscope through thick overcoats, and if they do hear anything they seem to have no idea of the significance of what they hear. I have shown a naked chest full of fluid to one of these men and he has failed to detect it and has proposed to treat the patient for indigestion. I have known them treat cases of appendicitis about to rupture with stomachic drugs and put poultices on strangulated herniae.

They encourage patients to treat wounds with dirty poultices. In their midwifery practice they never carry out the requirements of the central midwives board arranged for the guidance of midwives.

The patients who apply to them have only one desire, viz., some medicine in a bottle; many of the patients, through carelessness or ignorance, are loth to take advice. Many of these doctors trouble them very little in this way, except to order poultices and alcoholic stimulants which they should know cannot be used with any discretion. We have thus—

Evils of cheap doctors in Birmingham.

The great safeguard against this system seems to be that most ailments tend to get better, and if the illness is protracted, the patients go elsewhere, as their power to pay fees has its limits. I have discussed this question with working women, who tell me that to pay 5s. a week for two weeks out of an income of under 30s. where there are children, means some form of deprivation.

It is common to find bad cases of adenoids and discharging ears in other children in which no treatment has been suggested when doing vaccination work. At the same time it is not uncommon to find children with well-marked heart disease and the only previous illness recorded is some trifling ailment in which they were treated by a cheap doctor who did not examine them.

The question of postponement and discontinuance of treatment may be answered to some extent by examining the systems.

Overlapping between agencies for medical assistance to the poor and evils thereof.

43999. (Chairman.) Your statement is so full that I hardly think it is necessary for me to take you through it paragraph by paragraph, therefore I will put some general questions summing up your evidence. There is in your opinion a good deal of overlapping as regards the medical relief which is obtainable by the poor?—A very great deal of overlapping.

44000. Should you say that that is beneficial to the patient or not?—Most detrimental.

44001. In what sense is the relief that he gets in consequence of this competition inferior?—The relief is very inefficient; in order to carry the case through a patient may have to seek aid from several institutions; they do not co-ordinate at all at the present moment. It is an exceedingly difficult matter sometimes to go from one place to the other. In Paragraph 46 I give you an instance of a hypothetical case of a boy suffering, say, from an attack of appendicitis. I show you a large number of institutions that he might have to come into contact with before the case could be properly alleviated.

Deterrence
of medical
relief.

44002. We will go very shortly through the various systems of relief that are available for the poor, using that in a very broad sense. I will begin now with the Poor Law medical relief. Opinions have been expressed that the fact that the medical relief is associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent?—I am sure it is.

44003. You are satisfied of that?—I am very strongly convinced indeed on that point.

44004. And in consequence people who have difficulty in paying for medical relief do not come as soon as they ought to for Poor Law medical relief?—They put it off as long as possible; in many instances they shrink from it.

Birmingham
free dispenssaries and classes resorting thereto.

44005. There are free dispensaries in Birmingham?—Yes.

44006. What sort of class go to them, much the sort that would come to the Poor Law?—No, a superior class as a rule; but all Poor Law patients practically that I have ever treated, if they can get dispensary notes, if they can beg dispensary notes from clergymen, will seek the aid of these public dispensaries.

44007. Next come, I suppose, the provident medical institutions?—We have not very much in the way of provident medical institutions in Birmingham.

Provision of medical assistance through friendly
societies.

44008. Do the benefit societies at all take their place?—The benefit societies from a medical point of view are not doing a very large work in Birmingham, such as the Foresters, Oddfellows and that kind of thing.

Difficulties
of medical assistance for class immediately
class.

44009. How do the class above that particular social stratum which comes to the Poor Law authority get their medical relief?—With the greatest of difficulty. I have been discussing that matter on several occasions recently with the mothers of babies that I have vaccinated, and I find it is a most difficult and undignified arrangement very often for people in that class to get any medical assistance at all.

44010. Why; because they cannot afford to pay?—In the first place they cannot afford to pay a doctor; if the patient is sufficiently well to allow it to be taken to an institution, of course that sometimes means in Birmingham travelling for a mile or two. Then, of course, there are the institutions which cater for them, but even those institutions are prohibited sometimes by the use of the note system; if, on the other hand, they require a doctor to visit at the home, unless they are able to get dispensary notes, say from the works where their husbands work, they have very great difficulty indeed. They have either to go to a clergyman or some philanthropic person and beg these notes.

Difficulties
of medical assistance for class
above pauper

44011. Do most of the large factories subscribe to dispensaries, and in that way give notes to their employees?—They do.

44012. Does that apply to the wives too?—Yes, they can get a certain number for their families. The arrangements sometimes are rather complicated. A man pays about 1d. a week, and for this he is allowed one dispensary note a year; if he happens to want another I think they pay about 3s. 6d. for the other note. Every subscriber of a guinea receives six tickets, that is 3s. 6d. each, and then these tickets may be sold to the workmen who require additional notes.

Compulsory deduction from workmen's wages for subscription to hospitals and benefits
thereof

44013. Is that practice prevalent?—It is not very prevalent, but that is a practice that is made use of.

44014. A man who subscribes his money only gets treated once in the course of the year?—The rules vary in different factories, but that is a common rule.

44015. In the case of anybody being seriously ill what happens?—The usual way, unfortunately, is for many of them to call in a doctor and not pay him if it is a matter of real emergency.

44016. Would the doctor, supposing it was a serious case, be able to get the patient into a hospital?—He has the greatest difficulty; when I say that I speak from experience.

Difficulty of securing accommodation in hospital for patients.

44017. Is that from lack of accommodation?—From lack of accommodation and the note system; and of course another troublesome thing is this: the person who decides as to who shall be admitted into a hospital is usually a young house surgeon, a recently qualified man. That man has no idea of the worries that a general practitioner has; a doctor, for instance, sends up word that he wishes to send in a case, but he may not be sure, and very often is not sure that it needs immediate operation; the answer he gets back is a sort of supercilious answer from this young gentleman, who says, yes, if he (the House Surgeon) thinks it is a proper case he thinks it may be all right, he will admit the case if he has a bed. The result is that the doctors do shrink from sending these cases in as much as they can, and in consequence I have known a great number of instances where patients have sustained damage through that system.

44018. Summing it up, would you say that medical relief from a domiciliary point of view is deficient?—Very deficient.

Deficiency in supply of domiciliary
medical assistance.

44019. You are an Aston medical officer; what you say, I suppose, applies to the whole of Birmingham?—To the whole of Birmingham; I have been an Aston medical officer for five years, but then, of course, the parish of Aston contains a very large part of the city of Birmingham; all my district is within the city of Birmingham, and before I was district medical officer I was in practice in a poor district, and that was in the parish of Birmingham, so my experience does apply to all Birmingham.

44020. Taking Aston as a whole, I assume you would say it is a better district than the old part of Birmingham?—The greater part of my district is; for instance, about 78,000 of my people are more respectable than people who live in the older parts of the town.

44021. You have a large infirmary at Aston?—We have.

44022. And there is a very large infirmary at Birmingham? Do the poor show reluctance to go into the infirmary?—They do. It is oftentimes very difficult indeed to get them to go in at all, because it is the infirmary, because it is connected with the guardians.

Deterrence
of medical
relief.

44023. Both infirmaries are exceptionally well equipped?—I do not think they are; as a matter of fact we have no consulting staff at all at Aston, and if a serious operation has to be done in the Aston Infirmary it is supposed to be done by a general practitioner with very little experience and probably very poor medical qualifications.

Need of consulting medical staff for Poor Law
infirmaries.

44024. You have no consulting physicians?—No consulting physicians or consulting surgeons either.

44025. Is a doctor called in specially?—No, if a doctor is called in he has to be called in as the friend of the medical superintendent. There is no official arrangement for that purpose.

44026. Do any of the hospitals give free out-patient treatment?—The Queen's Hospital is supposed to give free out-patient tickets, but as a matter of practice the house governor there is a business man and he puts on as much of a lever as possible in order to get a shilling out of the applicant; he gets the shilling if he possibly can.

44027. What proportion of the cases does he get his shilling from?—That I could not say. I do not think they can grant many free tickets there. I have seen their annual report (I am speaking from memory now) and it did not strike me there were a very large number of cases except ordinary casualties that were taken without the payment of the shilling. Practically everybody expects that he has got to pay the shilling.

44028. Summing up your evidence, you would say that the health of the community does suffer from the insufficient quality of the medical relief obtainable?—I do.

44029. Supposing you had a free hand, what would be your remedy? What would you try to set up?—If I could do as I liked, I should like to institute the German system, the system of compulsory insurance, but, knowing the working classes as I do, I am not at all sure whether they would allow me to do so; if that is so that is a matter for other people to decide; I do not think they would, but if they did not the first thing I should do would be to unite these scattered forces.

44030. Let us see how the German system would operate; there is compulsory insurance against sickness?—Yes.

44031. Do doctors take certain families, or are there certain doctors who are available and are paid a fee in Germany?—I am not absolutely certain as to what takes place in that respect there, but I understand that there is a list of doctors in every town who are willing to work for these fees, and the applicant can call in who he likes.

44032. Failing compulsion what would you suggest here?—Unification as far as possible of all this existing machinery; so far as the voluntary charities are concerned, they have done an exceedingly good work for a great many years, and one would not like to disturb them perhaps at the present moment, but the first thing to my mind that ought to be done is to unite all the public medical services. For instance, my department ought to be united with that of the medical officer of health, and then our Poor Law infirmary and the treatment of the sick should be entirely divorced from the giving of relief. First of all there is the linking up of the two public medical bodies, secondly the taking away of treatment of the sick entirely from the treatment of the destitute. I do not think at the present stage one would be able to go very much further than that.

44033. Let us take first the linking up. You would have two separate branches, keeping the health department separate from the medical or curative?—I should make them all one. I would have one person who was responsible for everything; if we had two departments they would at once commence to quarrel.

44034. It has been suggested to us that linking up in one sense would have a very great advantage, as it would concentrate all statistics, and it would be possible to trace cause and effect much more easily than is at present possible?—It would; as a matter of fact at the present moment it is exceedingly difficult to trace anything as far as we are concerned, because we keep no statistics.

44035. Your suggestion would be to link up the two departments and dissociate them practically from the Poor Law?—Absolutely.

44036. And put them under the town council?—That seems to be the only available body at the present time, and I certainly should.

44037. Following up this idea of general insurance it has been suggested to us by certain medical men that to get over that difficulty, we might utilise provident medical institutions much more than is done now; that, we might put indirect pressure on persons to join them and that where persons have not joined the Poor Law authorities should pay the fees?—That in Birmingham at the present moment would be almost impossible; we should have to create our provident dispensaries, that is to say, from a medical point of view.

44038. How would you deal with that difficulty; you would not make medical relief free?—I should prefer not to make it free because as a rule a person values what he has to pay for and that has to be considered, but I am afraid at the present time my feelings in England would be to make it free.

44039. Free for all or only those who could show that they were earning below a certain standard of wage?—I should make it, I think, free for all, because it is exceedingly difficult to take a figure as to an ordinary income, it is exceedingly difficult to lay down definite rules, that is to say, unless you make a very wide margin.

44040. Assuming you make it free for all, there would be a considerable charge on the public funds. How would you bring in these voluntary charitable institutions? Would not the effect of a scheme of that sort be largely to reduce their subscriptions?—I am afraid it would, but I feel sure it would bring about very much greater efficiency.

44041. Assuming that you had a sort of unified service of this kind, I assume you would contemplate having medical schools?—Certainly.

44042. In the infirmaries?—Yes.

44043. Do you consider present medical science loses much by there being no schools in infirmaries, and consequently medical students do not get all the detailed information they might conceivably get in a great many chronic cases, such as rheumatism in its various forms?—I am sure it does. For instance, in our Birmingham Infirmary certain members of the consulting staff hold classes there. The practice is somewhat irregular, but they do hold classes in there, and friends of mine who have attended them have spoken of the very great value they have received from those classes. As a matter of fact before I presented myself for my examination as Doctor of Medicine at the University of London I did some medical work myself in the Poor Law infirmary in Birmingham, and I know it was of very great value to me, so I speak from experience.

44044. You would separate not only the domiciliary medical relief and out-relief but also the infirmary from the Poor Law?—Most certainly.

44045. Assuming the workhouse was kept separate the guardians would still require some wards?—You mean for the aged and infirm?

44046. Do not a great many people pass from the workhouse into the infirmary, and vice versa?—Yes.

44047. How would you deal with those cases; would you have a separate small hospital attached to the workhouse?—In all probability these two institutions would be somewhat near to one another, I certainly would not advocate a dual system, I should move them across. Of course it would be advisable to have a very small method of treating emergencies that arise in an institution, but I do not think that need present great difficulty.

44048. A further difficulty has been suggested to us that in so many of these cases doctors order food and material comforts. Would you give this gratuitously under a medical system or would you call in the Poor Law?—I have thought about that a good deal, and the way I would deal with that question is this. I should object at any rate in large centres to the work of the district medical officer being trusted to young and inexperienced men, but they certainly ought to have someone to look after them, who could supervise, if necessary, these arrangements if they were not satisfactory. What I should do would be this, if I went to see a patient as district medical officer I should go to the house and take note of the house and the patient's surroundings; if it were necessary for me to draw the attention of the ordinary health department to anything that was going wrong there I should be prepared to do so. At the same time I should write a prescription for the patient which would be taken to the dispenser. I should then write the diet and a list of the articles that ought to be provided for the patient. That list would be handed over to the friends, and it would be the duty of the friends to see that that patient had what was ordered. If they were not able to provide it themselves they could take it over to some voluntary agency or to the relief department under any kind of Poor Law system and get it in that way. If of course it was a matter of great urgency where something was required at once, then arrangements ought to be made for the supply of that, say, in the case of emergency from the dispensary, 44049. Assuming that the Poor Law guardians had in certain cases to supply this, would you give power of recovery, assuming the patient's family were capable?—There certainly ought to be power of recovery (I think I am speaking of this as a principle), if it was proved that it was entirely due to the patient's thriftlessness.

44050. Now as regards women, are you in favour of having lying-in wards?—Most certainly.

44051. At present is there much reluctance amongst poor respectable women to go into the infirmary?—There is great reluctance and in my union the guardians strongly object to their going in.

44052. They prevent them going in?—As far as they can.

44053. Is there reluctance because it is associated with the Poor Law or on account of the class they have to associate with?—The reluctance varies, the women have a shrinking from going away from home, that is the first thing. They do not think apparently about the class they will have to go in with. I have not heard that stated as an objection, but they strongly object to going into a place that is associated with the Poor Law.

44054. Have the health committee any milk establishments, do they help the mother at all?—Not in Birmingham. The medical officer of health has proposed it, but he has had such strong opposition from some of the members of the town council that he has not been able to go further with it.

44055. I assume the Health Authority have some infectious hospitals?—Yes.

44056. Are all treated there free?—All free, and as far as I know the practice is not at all objectionable. People go into those hospitals as a matter of course; there is never the slightest difficulty.

44057. Do the municipality support, or do the Poor Law guardians support, the families of the men who are in these infectious hospitals, and unable to work during that period?—Our guardians under those circumstances, treat the woman as a widow with a family during the time that the man is away.

44058. Does the municipality at all contribute?—No.

44059. We have had it in evidence that where there is an infectious case and the head of the family is taken away, in some municipalities there is a contribution made towards the cleaning of the house and maintaining the family?—The municipality in Birmingham cleans the house, and in the case of smallpox they remove for a time, but I believe only for a short time, contacts to a sort of small institution just for a little while, that is all they do in the way of provision of food and that kind of thing.

44060. Is the category of infectious diseases increasing as science develops?—Very much.

44061. So that that class of medical relief to the poor is growing?—Yes, for instance in Birmingham we have added typhoid and diphtheria during the last few years. Before that was done the difficulty in treating typhoid was something terrible. I have seen patients kept at home in some cases, and in fact I have seen people die through not being taking away.

44062. Is the notification of those cases compulsory?—Yes.

44063. (Mr. Booth.) There is a division in medical treatment between those that can be treated in their homes and those that need to go to an institution, is there not?—There is a division, but it is a somewhat shadowy division. The more that I have to treat the sick the more firmly convinced I am of the necessity of treating anything that may be looked upon as serious in most cases in an institution.

44064. Is the decision as to that to be the decision of the medical man in charge of the case?—Yes.

44065. Absolutely?—Absolutely.

44066. Without any liberty on the part of the patient or of his friends to object?—There are two classes of cases that I think come under that category. There are certain cases where either for the saving of the life of the patient or through being dangerous to others I think the patients' liberty ought to be curtailed. There are certain other cases where the evil which would result would be this, the patient would not get well, the suffering would then be the patient's, and under those circumstances I do not think it would be fair to interfere with their liberty.

44067. Under your scheme would you organise some authority; you would not leave it for any individual medical man who might be a man perfectly incapable of deciding. Would you organise some authority who would decide that?—I should; for instance, in a matter like that a district medical officer, who would be an official, should see the case, and if he decided that was a proper case to be sent away, the matter should be referred to a magistrate, and the patient should be removed on a magistrate's order.

44068. Where that is now done in the case of infectious disease owing to the fear of injury to others, it is considered necessary to keep the family from whom you have forcibly removed the breadwinner, is it not?—Of course the matter now at the present moment is referred to the guardians, and the guardians use their discretion in the matter. In our union they practically always do keep the wives and families, at least they allow them a dole.

44069. What I had in my mind was that apart from the Poor Law, I do not say it is so everywhere, in some municipalities they have made an allowance to the family, if the person upon whom they are dependent for their support have been removed?—I consider that is a perfectly fair arrangement. Personally I have never known anyone suffering from an infectious disease removed under a magistrate's order. Of course that can be done, the law provides for that at the present moment, but in the course of my experience I have never known anyone removed to an infectious hospital with the help of a magistrate's order.

44070. Is it not almost a matter of justice that if a patient is removed for those reasons the family's claim should be considered quite apart from pauperism?—Certainly.

44071. Your whole idea is to separate the question from the Poor Law?—To separate the two.

44072. Would not that ultimately raise rather a difficult question; you would have to prevent people coming in, as well as entreat them to come in, would you not? I mean a patient wishing that his family should be relieved in this easy way might possibly imitate or pretend that he had a disease that he had not got, or at any rate made the most of a disease that he had got, so that the authority would have to decide not only who had to come in, but who ought not to come in?—They might as a rule; my experience is this, that a patient does not as a rule like to be compulsorily removed to an institution, because he would feel if he were compulsorily removed he might not be able to come out when he liked.

44073. You would control liberty in both directions? (Mrs. Webb.) It would be a case of diagnosing illness?—It would be a case of diagnosing illness. One certainly feels we deal with that kind of thing in the common cases of insanity. I send away about fifty lunatics a year, but I have never met with a man yet who pretended to be mad for the purpose of getting his wife and family supported.

proper authority for his liberty completely and that would obviate that. It is perhaps hardly a fair question to ask, but are you sufficiently satisfied with the perfection of the knowledge of medical science to give such an enormous power over the liberty of the man into the hands of professional people?—I am, provided that you employ a doctor of sufficient standing and experience to do it.

44075. I think you did propose there was to be a lay authority, a magistrate?—Yes, at the present time I am sorry to say the magistrates do not give you very much help.

44076. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the point that Mr. Booth raised, I understand it would be only in case the patient was dangerous to other people, or that his life was in danger that you would think of compulsory removal?—Those are the only circumstances.

44077. If he simply did not want to be removed, and there was no danger to his family and his neighbours, you would simply say, "I must cease to attend you if you refuse to come in"?—That would be the way we should treat them. If a man will not co-operate in his own cure he takes his chance, he does what he likes.

44078. And although there is a theoretical objection it is not a practical objection?—It is not.

44079. You do not in the case of fever find any practical difficulty?—No.

44080. They are quite prepared to come in when you want them to come in?—Yes. Of course there is a little more trouble perhaps with the case of enteric, but with scarlet fever we never have the slightest trouble. Enteric is a disease that has only recently been notifiable, and we have a little more trouble with those cases. Our main trouble at the present time is with bad cases of phthisis.

44081. You are really extending what already exists in principle?—That is so.

44082. With regard to throwing the poor back on the cheap doctor and the sick club, does that sort of medical attendance lead to better hygienic habits on the part of the poor?—It does not.

44083. Are not hygienic habits the things that you want to grow more than anything else?—They are.

44084. You deliberately say that the sick club doctor and the cheap sixpenny doctor do not lead to better hygienic habits?—I do.

44085. It leads merely to a bottle of medicine?—A bottle of medicine.

44086. And it encourages a sort of superstition that they can be cured by bottles of medicine?—It does.

44087. Without improving their habits?—Without improving their habits at all.

44088. Do you think if you could organise medical assistance of the poor under the medical officer of health, you could make medical treatment an instrument for the improvement of the habits of the poor?—I am sure we would.

44089. That you could increase the responsibility of the poor by creating a new obligation to keep healthy?—I am sure we could.

44090. In that way do you think we should be counteracting a moral evil?—We should be counteracting a moral evil.

44091. So we should be decreasing the death rate?—Yes.

44093. And we should be improving the character?—Very much.

44094. That you are quite convinced of?—That I am quite convinced of. I have had practical experience of this kind of thing. We have in Birmingham an efficient district nursing service, I have worked with those women for years, and I have been surprised in some cases at the reformation that the influence of that woman has been able to effect. She has been able to do far more than I could. I have often perhaps wanted to get a patient to go into a hospital or some institution. My persuasive powers have had their limits, and I have not infrequently asked the nurse to take the thing in hand, and she has been able to do things which I could not. By the effective co-operation of the nurses and myself, we have been able to do a very great deal.

44095. This is a very important point; in that way you not only increase physical healthiness but you actually increase the measure of moral responsibility?—You do.

44096. So supposing you could get a system of free medical attendance, including these health visitors and district nurses, and force it on the worst slums of Birmingham, do you think you could raise the moral character of that slum?—If you were to do that some difference would be made at once; there would be a great difference made almost directly after the thing had been in proper working order for a comparatively short time, but for the future the good that would be done would be enormous.

44097. You would increase the responsibility of the parent with regard to the infant?—You would.

44098. You would not diminish it?—Not at all.

44099. You would make an obligation on the part of the mother to keep the child alive?—You would.

44100. Under the present system they regard death as the Act of God and they do not feel under any such obligation?—They do not; many of these people seem to feel that they have no responsibility at all to their families.

44101. So that by this system you would practically increase the consciousness of family obligations?—You would increase the obligation.

44102. You are distinctly averse to our throwing back the poor on to the cheap doctor or club?—I am; in many cases it is a very cruel thing to do.

44103. As regards the medical profession, do you consider that the cheap doctor's practice is one which leads to more scientific attainments?—It does not. It is a sort of plague spot on the medical profession altogether. As far as the medical profession is concerned it would be very much better if that system were removed.

44104. It is a sort of diseased part that you had better cut away?—A diseased part that wants amputating.

44105. Would you explain to us, because I do not think we quite realise it, the effect on the character and intelligence of a doctor of doing this cheap practice?—The whole of his desire to improve is gone. The man becomes a sort of medical shopkeeper. I should like to give you an instance of what happens to a man when he does that kind of work. An elderly practitioner once asked me to see a patient with him, he wished to have my opinion; on the way there we went into a house where there was a poor woman suffering apparently from puerperal fever, it is quite likely there was a piece of placenta left in the uterus. This woman was very ill indeed; this practitioner went and had a look at her and gave some very ridiculous directions; I asked him why he did not examine her; he said, "I cannot because of my hands;" I said, "Won't you let me, I shall be very pleased;" he said, "No, I will not." The man was very angry with me and would not allow me to do it. I always regretted afterwards that I did not press my services rather more strongly than I did. On our way down the street the man said to me: "You know my hands are of much more importance than that woman's life—at least, they are to me." If he had taken proper precautions I do not think he need have risked his life in any way and he might have saved that woman's life. The same man was talking to me about administering anaesthetics, and he told me he could not afford to pay for anyone to administer them, he had to do the best he could for himself; and he said if ever it came to a question of the coroner's court, and he was questioned about it, he would have to say that he could not afford it; it was simply a matter of money.

44106. Apart from those terrible cases, do you think from the common run of their practice it means that they simply ladle out medicine, the effects of which they do not understand and which they do not observe?—It seems to be a recklessness of the consequences of what they do.

44107. It is not because they are bad men, but because the system does not allow of anything else?—The system does not allow of anything else; many of them, I believe, are good-hearted men.

Difficulties of

and sanitary authority
medical service.

Scheme of training for public
medical officer of the future.

Lack of incentive in existing Poor Law medical service.

44108. It has been suggested to us that any attempt to unite the Poor Law officers with the health department might injure the health department or might impair it. What is your view of that?—At first there would be some difficulty. The medical officer of health as a rule has received an entirely technical education, he has never had anything to do with the treatment of the sick. Of course, we, on the other hand, have never had anything to do with public health questions, and I can see that at first there might be some difficulty, but what would eventually happen would be this, that the district medical officer's office would be the stepping-stone to that of the medical officer of health. The district medical officer would have something to look forward to, it would make him do his work very much better. When he eventually became medical officer of health he would have a knowledge of the treatment of the sick; he would have been amongst these very people, he would know them and he would have knowledge of how to take measures for their welfare; he would not do that, as he very often does now, as an armchair politician. Whatever the system would do it certainly would not impair the efficiency of the medical officers of health, but before many years had elapsed it would be their salvation.

44109. What sort of medical training and qualifications would you suggest if you had this municipal service, where would you begin?—I should begin first of all in the medical schools, and I should teach my student a thing, which is unfortunately never taught now, not only to treat the disease but to treat the patient. One of the most important things that a doctor has to realise is this, that a patient is a human being and has to be treated from his human aspect. Then when the man has done that and he has served his hospital appointments I should send him out to get special experience in fevers, and while he was doing his fever work he would probably take his diploma in public health. When he had done that I should then put him on to a district as a district medical officer; he has got his fever training, he has got his good hospital training, he is a first-rate practitioner; we presume then he goes and puts into practice in the houses of the poorest what he knows, and it has a very sobering influence, and it tends to make that man a very practical man. Then, of course, when he comes to rise in the service, so to speak, he has a very sound and practical knowledge of it in all its branches.

44110. He might either become a specialist in one of your hospitals if he takes to specialism, or he might become a medical officer of health?—He would practically have to become a medical officer of health.

44111. He, as a medical officer of health, having had that sort of training, would have an enormous advantage in preventing disease?—I am sure he would.

44112. On the other hand, you think the district medical officer would have a hopeful future to aim at?—He would. One of the greatest blots on our present service is this, a district medical officer has no hope. When I was thirty-three I had risen to the highest rank in my service. One of my colleagues, I think, at the age of twenty-five had also risen to the highest pinnacle that he is ever likely to be able to reach in the Poor Law service. We have no incentive to work.

44113. You also find that, owing to the fact that your service is connected with the relief of destitution and the stigma of pauperism, you have not good opportunities for successful treatment?—We have not, our opportunities are practically nil. As a rule, what we have to do is simply to go into the house and tell the patients that they must go into the infirmary.

44114. You find a curious kind of atmosphere against you?—We do.

44115. Because of its connection with the relief of destitution?—Yes.

44116. On the difficult point of medical extras, would it not be desirable to leave the provision of food, except in urgent and sudden necessity, when it must be given to the Poor Law authority?—I think it might very well be left to them.

44117. Do you not think that would act as a sort of automatic check on the treatment of disease in the home in improper cases. Supposing you had your district medical officer under the health department, and he went to a home and said: This case may be treated in the home if there is proper nourishment, and then the Poor Law authority said: No, we do not wish to give nourishment to this case, would it not be in some way an advantage that a district medical officer would have to take that case into an institution? What I am driving at is this: Is not that a prima facie case against treating a case in a home where there is not sufficient nourishment coming in?—It is.

44118. Would there not be some positive advantage in separating the medical treatment from the giving of food?—There would.

44119. In order to make a stand against the treatment of disease in destitute homes?—Yes.

44120. So that there would be no practical disadvantage in dissociating medical treatment altogether from the relief of destitution?—There would be no disadvantage whatever.

44121. And, of course, in a case of sudden and urgent necessity, the relieving officer is at present obliged to give food anyway?—Yes.

44122. So that you could send an order to the relieving officer in case of sudden and urgent necessity?—Yes.

44123. And he would be withholding it at his peril?—Yes.

44126. With regard to the German system which you suggested tentatively, I understood that you thought that in Germany they had a free choice of medical men. That has been suggested to us, a public medical service to which all practitioners should belong leaving the paupers to have a free choice of medical men; do you not think there would be some disadvantage in leaving the patient accepting free treatment to choose his own medical man?—There are great disadvantages in that, as one has seen that sort of arrangement in Birmingham. There have been on a small scale clubs which have a list of doctors, and you unfortunately then begin to find that these medical men have a tendency to compete one with the other, and one man would say, or he might not say, but it would soon be assumed in that neighbourhood: If you go to Dr. So-and-so you will be allowed milk and other things, but if you go to Dr. Somebody-else he will allow you more, so that if that work were done by ordinary medical practitioners you would get a great deal of difficulty.

44127. If you regard medical treatment as checking people's bad habits, it would follow, would it not, that if you allowed free choice to the patient he would choose the doctor who least objected to his bad habits?—He would, undoubtedly.

44128. Therefore, from the point of view of the public health department, it would be a bad system?—From that point of view it would be a bad system to allow a choice in that way.

44129. And also it would encourage malingering?—It would.

44130. One of the suggestions that Mr. Booth made just now was that you would have malingering; that would be very much encouraged by leaving the choice of the medical man to the patient?—It would.

44131. You want rather the kind of medical man who looks at disease from the point of view of prevention?—You do.

The difficulty of medical comforts is transferred to the sanitary authority.

Proposal to allow paupers to choose their own district medical officers a objection thereto.

44132. Could you give us any notion of the character of the houses occupied by your patients?—I have made a small report, which I think perhaps might be valuable. I have taken a hundred of my patients and put down the diseases they were suffering from and their ages; I have described the houses and also put in the wards in which they live, and there is a list of the death rates.

44133. (Chairman.) Does that refer to the deaths?—This is really a public health question. I have in my district inhabitants of three Birmingham wards, I have put down here their names, their ages, and their addresses, and I have put down the ward in which they reside; then I also make a note as to the character of the house in which they lived. (For return, see Appendix No. XVII., (A).)

44134. (Mr. Loch.) Is there any relation between the diseases and the surroundings?—There does not seem to be any great relation, but it shows the different class of houses that are occupied.

44135. Is not your point in this to show that there is a relation between the disease and the environment?—There is this point, for instance: I have a population of 78,000 who live in comparatively clean streets, and if you notice these marked green are very much less numerous than the others, whereas there would only be about 22,000 in the other parts of my district.

44136. Have you so dissected the matter that you can say with any certainty that it is not conditions of depression of purse, and other things of that sort, that affect the persons that are represented by the reds?—The reason I have made this was that this practically shows the class of person that I find. I have not drawn any deductions from that, I leave that to the Commission.

44137. Are there the elements of a deduction in it, that is the main point, is it not? It would be very interesting to get the deduction, but it seems rather doubtful from that.

44138. (Chairman.) The return that you have compiled shows that there is more sickness and illness in certain parts of your district than others?—Yes; where the habits of life are bad.

44139. (Miss Hill.) Does that list show the habits of life or the condition of the houses?—The condition of the houses and the habits of life.

44140. (Mr. Bentham.) In Paragraphs 21 to 23 of your Statement you attach very considerable importance to people providing by insurance against sickness?—I do.

44141. In the answers to the questions which you have already given, by suggesting that relief in sickness shall be given free, all this will go by the board, I suppose; there will be no necessity for insurance or any thriftiness to provide against sickness if free medical relief is to be given?—I do not say that at all; when sickness comes into a house there are other things that have to be provided for by thrift, there is the provision for the family, and that kind of thing.

44142. What you mean is that it leaves money free for other purposes?—Yes.

44143. Are you speaking here of medical relief? You say, "Neglect or inability to insure against sickness—I almost always ask whether a man who should work is in a club." You are deploring the fact there, that these people have not insured against sickness?—That statement apparently needs some explanation. I look upon the provision of medical assistance as one thing, and the providing of money, either for the person to live upon or for his family to live upon, as another.

44144. You had insurance against sickness in mind here?—Insurance against the various casualties that are dependent on sickness.

44145. Not necessarily insurance for medical attendance?—Yes, separating the two.

44146. You have said in answer to questions that free medical relief might have the effect of increasing the feeling of obligation of the people?—Yes.

44147. In Paragraph 23 you suggest that people who get medical relief orders are induced to go there for the sake of other kinds of relief. You say: "Soon after my appointment some of the persons who had previously been my private patients got medical orders, they soon began to ask for other relief as well, which was not desirable"?—Yes.

Dr. A. H. Bygott.

12 Mar. 1907.

44148. Pointing to the fact that this easy way in which they get medical relief also induces people to apply for other kinds of relief, that is, they become more demoralised?—That always must be so. Many of our Poor Law patients apply for medical relief as a prelude to getting other assistance.

Medical relief the first step to pauperism.

44149. They apply because they need medical assistance, do they not?—Not always, certainly not in a certain number of cases, under the present system these people apply for relief and then throw the doctor's medicine away as soon as they get it.

44150. What do they gain by that, I do not quite understand?—They gain this: the doctor may be able to recommend the case to the guardians for monetary relief; and what they are really asking the doctor to do under these circumstances is to get them monetary relief; it is only monetary relief that they want.

44151. Is that what you meant in these paragraphs? You also suggest here that: "They were remonstrated with, and apparently without any special hardship returned to more independent habits," and "the neighbours of some persons who have had relief apply and are very persistent because they say that it has been granted easily to others." Does not that all mean that neither medical relief nor ordinary relief should be granted free to others because of the effect upon their neighbours even?—No; medical relief to my mind stands on a very different footing to the other relief. The other relief where it is given ought to be administered very discreetly, and it was because I had in my mind the indiscretions of the present system that I expressed myself so strongly on those points. Assistance in many cases is an absolute necessity; as far as the other relief is concerned, of course that relief should be given on the medical relief; with regard to the form that the other relief, the relief in kind, and that kind of thing, should take, that is often rather a vexed question.

44152. If you turn to Paragraph 25 (c) you say: "The Compability of free medical relief with parental responsibility.

duty of a father to provide assistance, medical and otherwise, should be more insisted on; it is frequent for medical officers to see a big powerful man sitting by the fire, whilst a delicate wife goes to the parish officer to apply for relief or medical help for a child. He should be taught his responsibilities; he does not often need to go, but his duty should be recognised." Do you mean by that that the duty of the father to provide assistance, medical and otherwise, should be insisted on by some penal method, or what?—Certainly, if necessary; in fact I carry that out at the present moment; very often if I find a man is not doing his duty I get the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to exercise their powers under the Statute.

44153. By this paragraph you cannot mean free medical relief?—

44154. (Mrs. Webb.) You are talking about the present system?—Yes, if we are going to work on the present system, where medical relief and the relief of destitution are so much mixed up this paragraph has much more importance than it would have in the new system.

44155. (Mr. Bentham.) Under the present system you infer that it is not insisted upon, and that it should be more insisted upon?—I do.

44156. (Mrs. Webb.) For the child's sake?—For the child's sake. In my union I have got the relieving officer to insist upon that, and it has been of great advantage.

44157. (Mr. Bentham.) You attach importance to the medical officer teaching habits to the people and encouraging the people to provide for themselves?—Yes.

44158. If you read on a little further in this you say: "A man some time ago refused to get a doctor for his wife when she was ill, although her serious condition was pointed out to him by his neighbours. He had also a report in writing from the district medical officer stating her condition and pointing out his duty to make an application and to fetch medicine; he did neither till the woman was dead"?—Yes.

44159. When the medical officer was called in where was his influence in that respect either to teach this man his obligation, or to teach him his better habits? Is this yourself you are referring to?—Yes.

44160. You tried, evidently?—I did my best.

44161. And failed?—I failed. My answer to that question is this: I hope there are not many men like that among the inhabitants of this country, because that man was a most dreadful man.

44162. (Chairman.) Were not these cases suggested to show the need for an alteration in the law?—In Paragraph 25 I speak about compulsory removal and deal with it, but my dealing with that question is finished when I come to that note (b) as to the appointment of a proper paid officer. Then when I come to "A man some time ago refused to get a doctor for his wife when she was ill," that is quite a different statement.

44163. (Mr. Bentham.) If you had intended free medical relief in this case would you not have suggested that the free medical relief should be without questioning the man's habits, and then the man need not trouble his head about it?—No; as a matter of fact that was a case in which we had to give free medical relief because a health visitor found this poor woman in the house, and she communicated with the relieving officer who got me to go there, and we had almost to exceed our duties at the present time in order to deal with that woman; but after we had found this woman and discovered that she needed assistance I drew the attention of the husband to the fact that he ought to perform certain natural duties, and the man flatly refused to do anything.

44164. It seems to be his natural duty, but if it is to be taken to him free, he need not trouble his head about it?—There are duties we should expect him to perform. For instance, we should think it the duty of that man to go and fetch medicine and find his wife food and things of that kind; we should not take those duties away from him.

44165. (Mrs. Webb.) You would increase his responsibility?—Yes.

44166. (Mr. Bentham.) I want to try and understand these paragraphs and to see whether in these recommendations there is any recommendation that medical relief should be given free, and that the cost of medical relief to poor people should practically fall upon the rates rather than the people providing it themselves. I read this paragraph to mean that the father should provide relief both medical and otherwise?—I did not necessarily say by payment there.

44167. If we take another point, if you have free medical relief to poor people you would naturally transfer, I think you have said, all Poor Law institutions for the sick to the public authority?—I should.

44169. Let us take an acutely sick person, say, who needs medical treatment in an institution; this person is admitted to the institution, the municipal hospital if one may call it such, and that person has been a most thriftless undesirable citizen, that person has no stigma of pauperism attached to him at all, the case is taken to the municipal hospital with flying colours, as it were?—Yes.

44170. Then you come across a chronic case of sickness which does not need any special care and attention on the part of the medical officer, which would be held to be too trivial an ailment to take up a bed in an acute hospital. That patient would be taken, not to the municipal hospital, but would be taken to the Poor Law institution. Are not you driven if you take those moral considerations into account, to say that the stigma ought to be removed from that person too?—I never said that I wanted that person particularly to have a stigma. If that person had to be removed there must be some cause for the removal, and if you have to remove that person you would have rather to take that case on its merits.

44171. You say for moral considerations you would not like that a stigma should attach to that class of person either?—There should be no stigma attached to anyone whose misfortune is due to illness.

44172. The misfortune may not be due in the acute case I have suggested, to an ordinary ailment, it might be because of thriftless habits and manner of life?—I should take no notice of that so long as the man was ill. Proposal to remove all stigma from medical relief.

44173. You would attach some stigma to the person who is not ill?—If they had to be removed and taken away because they are not ill and have been thriftless, I should attach some stigma to them.

44174. Not thriftless at all, but merely they have lived long and outlived their friends and they require some little attention, but not particularly medical attention, and they have no home; people like that should be taken to institutions; what would you do with them?—It is like punishing a corpse; I would attach no stigma to those poor old things.

44175. Would you have municipal institutions for those people too?—I would.

44176. Practically you are making out a case for the abolition of Poor Law methods, as we understand them, at all?—Yes.

44177. (Mrs. Webb.) Except for the able-bodied?—Except for the able-bodied and the casuals and people of that kind. Proposal to confine the Poor Law to the able-bodied, casuals and families of the sick.

44178. And also, as I understand, you would give relief to the family of the sick person through the Poor Law?—Yes.

44179. (Mr. Bentham.) You need not necessarily have a Poor Law to do that, need you?—They would have to be relieved somehow and every encouragement should be given for them to provide it for themselves.

44180. (Mrs. Webb.) Therefore you would have the Poor Law?—Yes, for that and for the worthless.

44181. (Miss Hill.) Do I understand that there is to be no stigma on the man who is ill, and taken away, but there is to be a stigma on the family that is left behind?—No. Question of relief to the families of the sick and conditions thereof.

44182. If they are to go to the Poor Law, there is a stigma attached to the Poor Law, or is there not?—There is a great amount of stigma attached to the Poor Law at present.

44183. Then it would attach to the wife and children of the man if the man is the sick person, and it would not attach to the man who is removed?—To a certain extent I am afraid that that might be inevitable, because you see if something of that kind were not done there would be no inducement to provide for them, the wife and family would, I think, have one's sympathy, but at the same time one has to consider if we think these points over too broadly that there might not be any necessary inducement for a man to provide for them; if he was a man who could not provide I should certainly let there be no stigma at all.

44184. Would not there have been a duty upon him to provide attendance for his own illness?—At the present time they cannot as a rule in Birmingham provide for that satisfactorily.

44185. I was a little puzzled by one of the answers you gave. At present a man and his wife rather consider themselves bound to provide for their children in illness, do they not?—The majority of the people, I think, some of them do not. Question of effect of free medical relief on parental responsibility and analogies of the Education Acts.

44186. There lies in the back of their minds some sense that they have that responsibility, does there not?—Yes.

44187. It may be a good thing or a bad thing to give free medical attendance, but I do not see how you increase the responsibility by providing it. Mrs. Webb asked you whether you increase the responsibility—

44188. (Mrs. Webb.) If I may say so, I suggest that you make a new responsibility, you may take an old one away, but you create a new one, viz: the obligation to be healthy and keep your children healthy—question of effect of free medical relief on parental responsibility and analogy of the Education Acts.

44189. (Miss Hill.) You do not maintain really that you reduce the responsibility of parents by taking off them that of providing for their own illness or that of their children, do you?—No, I do not; I would refer you, as an example, to the Education Act, in the olden days, if a man had to pay school pence, he might say: I cannot send my child to school, because I cannot afford it.

44190. I never heard anyone maintain that the Education Act had increased the responsibility of parents?—Then I am afraid I must be the one person who does maintain that.

44191. In what direction?—It increases in this way, because the school attendance officer can go to a man now and say: "Why does not your child attend school?" And the man has to look about for a reason; some years ago he could say: "I have no money to send it with, and it is rather a troublesome thing to get that money from the ratepayers and to put the machinery in motion for that, instead of doing that I want to go and look for work."

44192. That obligation was put on him by the Compulsory education Act, not the Act which made education free?—The theoretical obligation was put upon him by the Compulsory Act, but a more practical obligation is put upon him by the free Act.

44193. You think the free feeding of children also would place upon him further responsibility?—I should not like to give any opinion upon the subject of free feeding.

44194. (Mr. Phelps.) Your proposal, I gather, applies to what is called out-door medical relief as well as in-door medical relief?—I am associated almost entirely with out-door medical relief.

44195. You would not be disposed to make a distinction between the varieties of disease as the basis of different treatment. It has been suggested to us that cases that require treatment inside an institution might be treated as you say by the State, but out-door medical relief should be left to the people's initiative?—I do not think it ought to be. I do not think it would be efficient, in fact I am sure it would not.

44196. How many out-door relief cases have you on the average?—I get about twenty cases a week, and I have in my book for the month about 120 to 150 names—they vary.

44197. You are visiting constantly?—We do not visit a very large number, there is a well organised general dispensary in the district and a large number of these cases go there.

44198. You have a free dispensary?—Yes.

44199. Do you find that you have more cases than you can manage, is the work within your compass?—The work, considering the size of my district, is remarkably small. I have a population of about 110,000.

44200. Is that due, do you think, to the action of the guardians or to the dispensary?—It is largely due to the dispensary and the pauper stigma, the people have to be driven to us as a rule.

44201. Although it has been removed with regard to medical relief?—It has not been removed, at least the people do not feel it has been removed.

44202. They do not appreciate that it has been removed?—They do not.

44203. You are often attending cases of widows?—Yes.

44204. You attend widows with families?—Yes.

44205. Are those widows receiving out-door relief?—Yes, they are allowed 1s. and a loaf for each child.

44206. What is your experience of that system, have you noticed the effects of it at all?—Yes, it is a thing that has rather interested me.

44207. Will you give me your experience?—My experience is this, that in many cases a woman is driven to earn her living suddenly, she is asked to enter the labour market untrained, and the result is that in a very large number of instances this out-door relief is totally inadequate. There are numbers of very respectable widows who are bringing up their children and doing their best with them and their means are very, very much narrower than they ought to be; the children come down to me, they are not well fed and nourished as they ought to be, and one certainly feels that in those cases the question of the widow's doles ought to be dealt with scientifically, the whole of the facts of the case ought to be taken in hand, and in many cases I am sure they should be largely increased.

44208. What remedy do you propose for that state of things?—I propose enquiry into each case by some skilled person.

44209. Should you be in favour of giving such an amount of out door relief as would relieve the widow of all obligation to work?—I should like to do it, but it is simply a question of the provision of the money.

44210. Apart from that, in the ideal system you think that would be best?—I do.

44211. What do you think would be a fair allowance for each child; for a widow with four children what should you say?—That is a question of domestic economy upon which perhaps I ought not to speak. I should be very sorry to give an opinion upon that matter. I have some sort of idea as to what it costs me to live, but I am afraid even after a careful consideration of Mr. Rowntree's book I hardly dare give an opinion upon that subject. I know the present sum seems to me very inadequate.

44212. I went round some of the poorer quarters of Birmingham. Do you think looking at the houses of the poor in Birmingham it is a good thing to keep families of that sort together, the families of widows?—Yes, I do.

44213. You think it is better than the guardians taking the children to Marston Green?—It depends upon the family. I can think now of at least half a dozen families where the present system seems to me the better one. You get an idea of family life inculcated into these children, which I do not think you would in the other case.

44214. Are you assuming that the outdoor relief is inadequate or are you assuming that the relief is increased?—Even where the outdoor relief is inadequate, I think this is the better system.

44215. It has been suggested to us it would be a good thing if the Corporation started a series of day schools to which the children in such cases could be sent and fed, in order to allow their mothers to go out to work, and returned at night. Do you think that is a good system?—I think that is a somewhat debatable question. If you are assuming the present system and the mother has to go out to work, I think it would be a very good idea.

44216. On the whole you would be against the mother going out to work, I gather?—I am against the woman going out to work at all, whether she has a husband or not, if she has a family.

44217. Have you noticed any demoralisation taking place from a woman remaining at home in the way of having nothing to do?—If she has a family she has quite enough to do with that family just as if she had a husband. As a rule the work that a husband makes in a house does not make the difference between industry and idleness.

44218. (Chairman.) You talk of inadequate relief, were you alluding to Aston?—My experience is in Aston, but I think it is pretty general throughout the country.

44219. In Birmingham the rate of relief seemed a good deal higher?—I think it is, but I cannot speak from experience.

44220. (Dr. Downes.) I think you give your whole time to your office?—I give my whole time to the service of the guardians in my capacity as district medical officer and as public vaccinator. Most of my time is occupied as public vaccinator.

44221. Could you tell us what proportion of your remuneration is by salary and what by fees which are not directly connected with the Poor Law?—At the present time I am receiving somewhere about £1,000 a year, and for my Poor Law work I get, with lunatics, about £160.

44222. You say "with lunatics," but lunatics would not necessarily come under the Poor Law?—We always consider those fees in our remuneration. It runs to about £25 a year for certifying these lunatics. I receive 10s. 6d. for each lunatic I certify.

44223. Under the Lunacy Law Act?—Yes.

44224. That would not be a Poor Law matter?—It is a Poor Law matter in connection with my salary, part of my emoluments comes from that.

44225. It is tacked on to the Poor Law?—Yes.

Emoluments and functions of Aston District Medical Officer.

- Dr. A. H. Bygott.*
12 Mar. 1907.
Emoluments and functions of Aston District Medical Officer.
44226. The point is that a very small proportion of your remuneration comes direct from your duty as a district medical officer?—Very little.
44227. You have mentioned the incidental expenses in connection with the work as heavy. What would those be?—Because I hold this post the guardians insist upon my living in a special part of the district and in consequence I am paying £20 a year more rent than I need pay if I were only public vaccinator. Then there are some travelling expenses. I have to provide my own telephone and a large amount of drugs, and pay my deputy; as a matter of fact I pay my deputy more than I get myself for the time that he does my work.
44228. Do the guardians provide any drugs?—Some, not all.
44229. What drugs do they provide?—What they consider expensive drugs; they have been fairly liberal.
44230. Do they provide anti-toxin and serums?—They have been willing to provide them, they are on their schedule, but the medical officer of health provides those things, so we never have to trouble them.
44231. You have no difficulty in getting those?—No, the guardians are very fairly reasonable in a matter like that.
44232. What arrangements do you make when you go for your holiday?—My parish work is looked upon as rather a small matter, and I go off just as I think.
44233. Do you have to provide your representative?—Yes, and pay him.
44234. Yourself?—Yes, I make my own arrangements.
44235. In the case of that man you describe in Paragraph 25, as lying in a dirty bed in a pool of matter, what was the nature of the illness?—The man had a large ischio-rectal abscess, and there was a boy occupying the same bed.
44236. It was a serious case?—Yes.
44237. You tell us a little further on that the lying-in hospital is in course of erection; is that a charitable hospital?—Yes.
44238. And a registration fee of half-a-crown is paid. Does that guarantee admission?—No, I am speaking of the ticket system of the charity. That half-a-crown fee would entitle the woman to receive the services of a lying-in charity midwife, it has nothing to do with the hospital; what they expect to do is to fill the hospital from cases from their outdoor work.
44239. They will be passed on to the hospital?—Yes.
44240. Cases that require institutional treatment?—Yes.
44241. That will be the manner of admission?—Yes, that is the mode of admission.
44242. A little further on you say, "I am reduced to paying out of my own pocket women I cannot trust to nurse those cases." Are those Poor Law cases you have to pay for yourself?—Yes, that means this, a certain number of people get notes for me to attend them in their confinement. I am out a great deal, and I have to make some arrangement for the woman being attended in an emergency. The arrangement I have to make now unfortunately is this, I give that woman a note that Mrs. So-and-so expects to be confined and has arranged with the parish of Aston to attend her; if it is an ordinary case the woman calls in the nearest ordinary registered midwife; then I pay her 5s., I get a fee of 10s. myself.
44243. Would you have to go to her yourself?—I go to the case and order necessities; if any medical treatment is required I visit the case for about a fortnight to supervise the case.
44244. How soon after the confinement would you come?—Assuming the confinement took place in the course of the night I get them to inform me by half-past eight in the morning, and then I go and visit the case as soon after that as I can.
44245. In Paragraph 54 you suggest that the provision of one central authority is much to be desired. Would you tell me a little more precisely what your solution of the difficulty of hospital services is?—My idea is this, that eventually all the medical systems will have to be unified, and that we shall have probably eventually some State system.
44246. What part would the voluntary hospitals play in your solution of the difficulty?—A similar part to the voluntary hospitals in the present scheme of State medical service.
44247. You would retain them in some form, I take it?—Yes, I would not be inclined to deal with them at the present time; I should supplement them where necessary.
44248. Have you worked out any scheme in detail, or is it a general idea?—A general idea.
44249. You have not considered the details?—I have not.
44250. The expression "stigma of pauperism" has been considerably used; are you prepared with any definition of that term?—I am not.
44251. A definition that has been suggested is "the stigma of depending on persons who have to compulsorily contribute to funds for the support of the recipient." Would you accept that?—That is a matter I should wish to consider before I gave an opinion.
44252. The conclusion of your statement with regard to the cheap doctor is rather an indictment of medical education, is it not?—To some extent it is.
44253. Do you think that that class of imperfectly equipped medical men will tend to decrease?—I am sure it will. A large number of those medical men who are doing work like that got into the profession through being unqualified assistants; they were undesirable men to let in at all.
44254. (Mr. Booth.) They would be the elders of the profession then?—Most of these men are by no means young.
44255. (Dr. Downes.) You have more hope of the rising generation?—I have much more hope from them.
44256. Have you observed any want of acquaintance with the class of disease you find in the Poor Law on the part of the new-fledged men?—I have; in fact I have recently had an object lesson; a very skilled young man has come down to practise in our poor neighbourhood to try and take it up as a sort of career, and some of his ideas on the subject are particularly interesting.
44257. The medical schools do not see quite so much as they used in former days of chronic cases, and the infectious class of cases is now taken away from the hospitals?—Yes.
44258. They are removed either to special hospitals or else to the Poor Law?—Yes. In private practice most of the work a man has to deal with has an element of chronicity in it.
44259. The old apprenticeship system had something in its favour from that point of view?—It had a good deal in its favour.
44260. (Mr. Gardiner.) You told Dr. Downes just now your salary as medical officer was £120 a year?—Yes.
44261. What proportion of that do you have to spend for drugs?—About £20 a year, roughly speaking; I am speaking from memory now.
44262. (Chairman.) You are not satisfied with the composition of boards of guardians as at present constituted; you think they are amenable to influences other than the proper administration of the Poor Law?—I do.
44263. This view is rather strengthened than weakened by your experience?—It is.
44264. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the guardians, you would like a better class of guardians elected.—Certainly.
44265. Have you any suggestions to make with that object?—I am afraid the only suggestion one has to make is that they should be abolished. I do not see as a practical man that you could very well secure a better body of guardians than you have got now.
44266. That is to say they really represent the people?—I am afraid I cannot agree with you there.
44267. They do not represent the people?—No, but no one takes an interest in it.
44268. Is there no way of getting the representation of the people?—Not for Poor Law purposes under the present constitution, I think.
- Position of voluntary hospitals in scheme of State medical service.
- Meaning of "stigma of pauperism."
- Cheap doctors and evils there
- Necessity of increased facilities for medical education Poor Law cases.
- Provision of drugs by district medical officer.
- Objection to boards of guardians and proposal to transfer their functions to sanitary authorities.

Method of admission to Aston Free Dispensary.

Quality of medical relief at free dispensary.

Possibility of free dispensaries taking over out medical relief in Birmingham.

44269. Having abolished the guardians, what would you do?—I should transfer their work to the city councils.

44270. Practically your suggestion is not only for the transfer of medical relief work, but the whole of the relief work to the city council?—From what I have seen of the other relief work I should transfer the whole of that work to the city council.

44271. All questions that you have been asked as to the difficulty of having two opinions, one as to medical relief and one as to relief, would vanish in the light of your last answer?—They would.

44272. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you not have two separate committees?—Yes, two separate committees.

44273. (Mr. Loch.) Should you suggest you might have two separate committees?—Yes.

44274. If the committees differed who would settle?—Then we should have to have the Local Government Board strengthened and they would have to settle.

44275. Do you mean to say you have found at present any antagonism as between your giving the medical relief and the guardians giving the general relief?—I have.

44276. Has that lead to harm?—As a rule the guardian gets his own way perhaps, and I never know anything about it.

44277. That is to say, you do not know whether it has led to harm?—In some cases I do not know whether it has led to harm.

44278. Have you any suggestion, taking it for granted for the moment the boards of guardians are not abolished, by which things could be improved?—I do not know that the present system with guardians as they are is capable of any great improvement.

44279. Is it because there is not interest enough in the question of relief?—Yes, there is not a sufficient interest in it, the result is that practically almost anybody of any class who likes to volunteer can become a guardian and there is no credit in the work at the present moment. We have a very much better class of men on our city council then we have on our board of guardians.

44280. Therefore your proposal would be to throw the duty upon the council because there is a better class of men there?—It would.

44281. With regard to your own work what are the terms of your engagement? Are you engaged to give your whole time to this?—I signed two contracts, first of all as district medical officer, and secondly as public vaccinator. My public vaccination contract is the ordinary contract as approved by the Local Government Board, a special contract which they have for public vaccinators. The other is the contract that is used for district medical officers with the additional stipulation that I do not engage in private practice.

44282. To this particular branch of work for which you are paid you give comparatively little time?—I am supposed to be present in my house for two full hours a day, that is from half-past ten till half-past eleven in the morning and from six to seven at night.

44283. It is such that you can get away at any time, that you can have a deputy?—It is.

44284. And you manage your maternity cases by arrangement too?—Yes.

44285. Is the other work that you are doing not technically private practice?—No, it is the vaccination of infants, I have to pay a large number of visits every week to vaccinate infants; that work is very heavy.

44286. Is it work that brings you in the remainder of your salary?—It is as I say here in my statement: "If the medical work were heavier there would be a great temptation to the officer to neglect it so that he might earn more money by his other work."

44287. Does the suggestion arise out of that that the vaccination work should be in the hands of the public medical officer of health?—That is a question which it is rather awkward to give an answer yes or no to. If I might qualify my answer I should like to say I do not consider that the present arrangement is satisfactory. I do not consider from a public point of view my arrangement is satisfactory.

44288. May one push that just a little further. What do you think in the case of a district medical officer, is their work enough for them to give their whole time to it and pay them a salary equivalent to that?—Not under present conditions; in my district there is not enough work to keep one man fully occupied to be paid such a salary as he ought to have in my district.

44289. Is that because the district is too small?—No, it is because at the present time there are certain people who, perhaps, it would be well to deal with on a general basis, who ought to receive treatment and could be better dealt with than they are now, and also because we have a very large number of charities in the neighbourhood who already cater for them.

44290. With regard to the charities, you have to do, I suppose, with the free dispensary; I think you mentioned one?—Yes.

44291. How are the cases admitted there, just as they come?—No, those charities are ticket charities; that is to say the subscribers receive so many tickets in proportion to their subscription. A very large number of those tickets are given away by clergymen and philanthropists. Then certain works and places of business subscribe also, and in proportion to the amount they subscribe they receive a certain number of tickets, and those tickets are distributed amongst the workpeople.

44292. Granted admission is made in that way, do you think it is effectual relief that is given at the dispensary?—I think the medical work is very good indeed.

44293. Would you disturb it therefore? You said you wished to bring it into a new organisation of some sort?—I should certainly disturb the ticket system.

44294. Supposing you disturbed that and set that aside, you had other views beyond that as to an organisation for the whole town which should be brought in?—Yes.

44295. What position would you give them in such an organisation?—As a matter of fact, if they were to abolish their ticket system and practically take all who come, my work as district medical officer would practically cease, all my district medical patients would go to them.

44296. That is to say the Poor Law in this instance is keeping up a function which, if it were left to voluntary agencies, would be fulfilled by them?—That is to say, if you abolished the ticket system, if a man were able to go to the dispensary and say: "I have got a child ill," and give particulars, and say, "I want a doctor to attend it," practically everyone would go there.

44297. And that would be equally so if it was a question of the public officer of health?—If the public officer of health were to be appointed on those terms.

44298. Therefore your voluntary charity from that point of view would make it unnecessary to have either Poor Law or public medical officer of health administration in that department?—If you were to open the door wide, the voluntary charity, provided it were able to supply the funds, would obviate any necessity for a public service at all.

44299. (Mrs. Webb.) How would the funds come?—That is the difficulty.

44300. (Mr. Loch.) In this case you have the funds?—You would not have enough funds to deal with the whole town.

44301. But a dispensary would not necessarily deal with the whole town, would it; dispensaries as a rule deal with localities?—We have a system which practically covers all Birmingham.

44302. Through dispensaries as well?—We have what is called the Birmingham General Dispensary, and we have branch dispensaries all over the town; there are about five or six large places.

44303. Voluntary dispensaries?—Yes, charity dispensaries.

44304. Have they ever closed for want of funds?—No, it is a rich charity.

44305. Has it ever closed for want of voluntary funds?—No.

44306. Is it a popular charity?—Very popular.

Dr. A. H. Bygott.
12 Mar. 1907. 44307. Is it likely, if the ticket system were given up, it would be closed?—If the ticket were given up there would be a tendency on the part of some of the subscribers to lapse, if that is your question.

Possibility of free dispensaries taking over out medical relief in Birmingham. 44308. But you do not know definitely that they would lapse?—No.

44309. Besides that, you have in Birmingham two hospitals?—Two general hospitals and several special ones.

44310. I think you take it the special hospitals might very well be merged?—I do.

44311. Supposing that that were adopted, it would strengthen the voluntary movement further, you think it would concentrate it?—Yes, and in that particular it would strengthen it.

44312. With regard to the out-patients' department of the general hospital, it is a large one, is it not?—Very large.

44313. That is another centre for free relief?—It is.

44314. Except for the ticket?—They have tickets at the General.

44315. Therefore between the reform you want, as far as the voluntary hospital is concerned, there simply stands the ticket?—There stands the ticket and there also stands something else; patients have no right to be treated in large crowds by the small number of medical men who have at present to deal with them.

44316. That is another question. Let us take it. With regard to the medical out-patient department, first of all, do you think it is fair to the profession that these large medical departments free should be available?—That is a very large question; it certainly I consider, is very fair to the cheap doctor, that is to say to take them in classes; it does undoubtedly press hard on some of the respectable doctors; I consider it is a very proper system to have to compete with the large number of doctors who practise amongst the poor; it does and must press rather hardly on doctors who are dealing with patients in a better social sphere.

Effect of free medical relief on medical profession. 44317. If you had a free system, which was a municipal system, would the doctor be better off under it, the doctor that you say is hit by this, than he would be under the present condition of voluntary charity?—For some time I think from the pecuniary point of view that the medical profession would suffer, but it would readjust itself in the course of a comparatively small number of years.

44318. If there was a greater amount of free relief given in what way would the medical profession re-adjust itself?—So many men would not go into it.

44319. That is to say the income which the profession could draw from the country would be smaller?—The income the profession could draw from the country might be smaller. If you were to do that, you would have to create a certain number of offices which at present do not exist, and they would provide for some medical men.

44320. Your argument will take you the whole length will it not, of the position, that is to say you would reduce the number of medical men by reason of the fact that the State is rendering medical relief free, and so, as it were, starving a certain number out of the profession?—That would be inevitable, I think.

44321. You think that when that process is complete, the medical profession being reduced in numbers and free relief being given still to a very large degree, because it would be free for all, there would still be room for a smaller number of medical men?—Yes.

44322. Have you taken the opinion of your medical confreres about that?—I have.

44323. Are they of opinion that it would re-act to the advantage of the medical profession if all medical relief were free?—I have heard a great many different opinions given upon that subject.

44324. On what do you base your own personal opinion, apart from this assumption. What evidence do you base your opinion on as to the effect of your enlarging free charities very much, and free medical relief very much?—What one finds is this, that in the more respectable working class districts there is a great tendency to use the existing charities, because the people think that they will get better assistance. In some cases the people go to the hospitals, in fact as I say in my statement, you get many cases of people going to hospitals, not because it is cheaper, but because they believe it to be better.

44325. And the bearing of that upon the argument?—The bearing of that upon the argument is this, that if you were to increase the facilities some people would go to the State hospital because the facilities would be increased.

44326. That is to say, there would be more medical relief free?—Yes.

44327. I want to know the effect of that, whether that would be injurious to the profession?—It would injure the profession. May I qualify that statement? It would, I think, make a pecuniary difference to some practitioners; it would influence the pecuniary profits of some practitioners; that is the best form for my answer to take.

44328. With regard to the medical men you speak of so strongly who are having these clubs and doing the lowest practice, do you say that those men were all, or most of them, men who came in before the present system of medical education was on foot?—Not before the present system of medical education, but about eighteen years ago a very large amount of work in the country was done by unqualified assistants. During that time the period of study consisted of four years instead of five, it was then possible for a medical student to register as the pupil of a practitioner, and he never need go near that practitioner again. He could put his name down on the medical students' register so that a man might if he liked qualify in two and a half years. The result was that a large number of men, especially Scotchmen and Irishmen, came over into England and acted as doctors' unqualified assistants, very often without proper medical training, and during the time they were engaged as assistants they were studying at the medical schools, and they qualified in that way.

44329. Is that a large number?—A very large number.

44330. In Birmingham?—There are a very large number in Birmingham.

44331. Who have never been through their four years' course anywhere?—They have been probably through a four years' course.

44332. Including the apprenticeship period?—Yes, including the apprenticeship period.

44333. Surely they have had the same advantages of education as almost all the others?—They have had the same advantages of medical education.

44334. Why should they be taking this kind of practice up as against other people just of the same type?—For this reason, that as a rule the unqualified assistant flourished in practices of that kind, and it is what these men have always been used to.

44335. If you could give me the names of the men you refer to in Birmingham, if I looked them up in the Medical Directory, I should find they have had this lower medical education than the other men?—You would not find that; there is no record at all.

44336. Would they not be in fact registered?—Yes, but you would find no record as to that part of it.

44337. If this is going on, the question is its remedy. What do you propose as a remedy? Do you think these men will simply die out?—Yes.

44338. With what numbers do they deal?—At the Extent of present time there is a population in Birmingham, I should think, of about 30,000 or 40,000 people in a valley in which most of the people are poor, and almost all the doctors that are practising amongst them in the district are absolutely careless; thousands and thousands of people are being treated in this country by men like that.

44339. With regard to the combination of doctor and moral adviser, you said that you preferred, in the first instance, the German system which left the question open as to who the man would apply to, and then you made another statement that you thought it would be well that the option should not be given, because in that way someone would be chosen who would do more to promote moral responsibility. Do you think that the people at large would accept the position under which their doctors should be chosen for them with a view of ultimately affecting their morals?—They have to submit to it now, so I certainly think they would.

44340. How do they submit to it now?—That is to say, if a person seeks assistance from the Poor Law, or a person seeks assistance from a dispensary, they have no choice in the appointment of the doctor.

44341. That is to say, they go to the doctor, they go, for instance, to you?—Yes.

44342. Do you undertake anything connected with their moral responsibility?—I do whenever I get the chance.

44343. That would be incidental to your humanity?—Yes.

44344. Putting that aside, would you have a list made so that a person should go to those doctors who would most affect their morals?—No, I am sorry to say that would be an impossibility.

free treatment of infectious diseases and bearing on free medical relief

44345. There is a division, is there not, between the infectious diseases and normal medical diseases or trouble? There is a division, but the division is a very artificial one. We are continually adding to the list of infectious diseases.

44346. Is it not true that these are diseases which we pick out as specially dangerous to the community from the point of view of infection?—Yes.

44347. And that other diseases have not that same quality of infection?—It is because we do not recognise it. Take a disease like phthisis; the mortality from phthisis is very great, it is only during the last few years that we have looked upon it as a disease in which there is a possibility of preventing infection by isolation and other things.

44348. As our knowledge increases, we find it has this infectious nature, and we isolate it?—Yes.

44349. So there is, according to our knowledge, a certain line of isolation which we undertake for the good of the community?—Yes.

44350. Need we, therefore, because people for the sake of the community themselves submit to municipal treatment, and have it free, with regard to those cases, say, further that it is necessary that all medical relief should be given free?—Yes, because we have also to consider the benefit to the community as to the spreading of infectious disease; we also have in some cases to consider the benefit of the individual. For instance, if a man needs an important surgical operation, to my mind there should be no doubt that that man should have that at the expense of the community, and it should be rendered to him in a very prompt and speedy manner.

44351. Would you say that he should have it free necessarily?—I should.

44352. For the same reason that he would wish to be freely treated for that, you would wish him to be freely treated, if he was suffering from infection?—In one case you have your duty to the community, and in the other case it is the matter of the duty to the individual.

44353. The duty to the individual cannot be fulfilled unless it is free?—It is not fulfilled at the present moment.

44354. Is it not fulfilled in the case of those who go to hospitals for surgical operations?—That is to say, if they are admitted there as a rule, the community does its duty by them, but in many cases it is practically impossible or exceedingly difficult, to get them admitted under the present system.

financial difficulty of improving the present system of
medical relief

44355. Would you think it impossible to improve on the present system at all?—The present system might be capable of improvement, but if you wish to extend very much on the present system, you are going to raise a financial difficulty; I believe it is almost impossible.

44356. You propose to put that financial burden on the State?—Yes.

44357. Then your difficulty will disappear?—It must disappear.

44358. It is merely a question of money?—It is a question of money to that extent.

44359. To what extent?—A question of money, for instance, with regard to surgical patients.

Dr. A. H.
Bygott.

44360. Other medical men who have given us evidence have suggested that patients should pay according to their means and that when you get to a surgical case such as that they should pay according to their means for such a case, do you disapprove of that?—No, I should like to see people pay according to their means.

12 Mar. 1907.

Principle of payment by patients for medical relief according to ability and difficulties
thereof.

44361. Is it not that the direct antithesis of what you have just said?—No, it is not.

44362. What is it then?—As a matter of fact the whole problem arises because we have to deal with such an immense population who have no money to pay at all.

44363. I am raising another question, the question of people who could pay according to certain standards, and I suggest to you there are ways out of the difficulty if you carry out what is suggested by your own profession with regard to this question of treatment. Why should you set aside the whole of that system unless you have good cause to show that if there be payment there will not be proper service?—I think perhaps before answering that question I should like to consider an instance. We will say there is a working man earning under 30s. a week, his wife needs an operation for ovariectomy, the ordinary expense in connection with which case would be about £30. What proportion do you think a man like that ought to contribute towards that £30?

44364. Those who gave evidence on behalf of your profession said there would be every degree and grade, and that to some of course the charge would be nil, for others it would be more, based always on that line that they paid according to their means?—I have gone into that; I have read the evidence of the British Medical Association given here, and I have also gone into that matter with a large number of young men attached to the hospitals and we consider that the practical difficulties in the way of that system would be so great that it would be impossible.

44365. What would be the practical difficulties?—I should almost have to read a long essay to get them in.

44366. One or two will suffice; this is the very heart of the question which you are arguing?—The first difficulty would be to find institutions where this work could be carried on, and certainly as far as I can see it could not be carried on in the existing voluntary hospitals; you would have to duplicate the system, you would have to build, or get together, a large number of hospitals on a sort of sliding scale paying system. I do not think it would be feasible or workable at all.

44367. That is to say you have not got the hospitals at present to do it?—No.

44368. Is it the fact that many of the in-patients of the hospitals could pay according to their ability now?—I will not say many, some could pay something.

44369. You do not think it is possible to create the intermediary hospitals that other members of your profession thought was possible?—No, I am sure it is not.

44370. Because of the want of money?—Because of the want of funds, and one has to say this, as medical men we are not particularly good organisers; I should not only add to it the want of money, I should also add our limited powers of organisation.

44371. You want to transfer the duty to the State to organise for you, you yourselves being incapable of that?—I do.

44372. You spoke in favour of the recovery of relief given, I think you said, where there was entire thriftlessness; if you accepted the principle of recovery, surely you would admit the system all round and those men who had tried to do what was worthy would also be asked to pay as well as those whom it would be extremely difficult to reach, who had been thriftless?—When I answered that question I answered it rather from a hypothetical point of view as admitting a principle, but from a practical point of view I have discussed that matter frequently with the relieving officers and it seems to me that a very large amount of the money that is recovered under these circumstances is more trouble to get than the value of the money that they really do get.

Quality of medical assistance provided by friendly societies.

Effect of free medical relief on prevalence of idea of right of relief.

Question of improvement of status and prospects of medical officers of health and district medical officers.

Reasons for amalgamating Poor Law and sanitary authority medical service.

44373. You do not think the value to character is at all important when it comes to raising the money?—It would be of some value, but I should not consider the value to character would be sufficient to justify the creation of very elaborate systems to deal with it.

44374. In Manchester there are many provident dispensaries, but I understand in Birmingham you say there are very few?—Very few.

44375. Can you account for that difference, are the people in Manchester richer?—I have discussed it with people in Manchester, and on the whole I think they are.

44376. Are the friendly societies better off in Birmingham?—With regard to the friendly societies, I have not been very much in touch with them for some years; through not being in practice I never met with much of a system of that kind. A very large number of our work-people are not in these better class societies. As I say in my statement very few of the people who come under the Poor Law are connected with those societies.

44377. I think that would hold good generally, but I was thinking of the friendly societies' means of providing resources and medical relief during sickness; it surprises me that that should be a matter of so much extent in Birmingham?—In a way it has surprised me, but from a medical point of view, I must say that there are a large number of members in these friendly societies who make use of the charities, hospitals and things of that kind, because the medical men that the societies have at their disposal in Birmingham are not men of very great experience and of a very high standard.

44378. And are they too of the unqualified period?—Yes, some of them are. It is looked upon in the medical profession as somewhat blacklegging to go and work for money of that kind.

44379. You have a penny Hospital Saturday Fund?—Yes.

44380. Do you find the men who give their pennies there and then think that they have a right to out-patient relief in the hospitals?—If they want to go to the hospitals they feel that through their pennies a week they buy it up, that they have bought up the whole building.

44381. Do you think that if it were free there would not be the same feeling that they had the right?—There would be the same sort of feeling; they would tell you, as the people who apply to the Poor Law now, that they have contributed to the rates and taxes and have bought a right to go to the establishment in that way.

44382. You made some statement with regard to the medical officer of health, and suggested that the salvation of the medical officer of health would be secured by his being related in some better way to the Poor Law service, or what would be your substitute for the Poor Law service?—Yes.

44383. Do you look upon the medical officers now as insufficient for the purpose for which they are appointed?—For the purpose for which they are appointed the majority of them do that work very well indeed, but like a great many others of us, I think they are capable of improvement.

44384. The office would be one with a higher salary to those capable of doing the district medical work?—The present tendency would be that, and I think that would have to be continued.

44385. I understand now promotion to such a salary and such an office is out of your reach?—Fortunately, through an accident, I am at present receiving one of those salaries, so it is not out of my reach, but the dignity of the office is out of my reach.

44386. Do you see any objection to a system by which medical officers in any department, on proved competency according to those who elected them, might be transferred to any other?—That is a system which I want to see adopted. I think it is a system which ought to be adopted.

44387. Does it necessitate that there should be one great department such as you have in view containing relief work of the guardians, the medical health work of the guardians and the public medical health work?—I am afraid it does, for this reason, if you have two or three systems you get a certain amount of jealousy between them, whereas if you have one system with graduations into these different offices they would work into their places automatically.

44388. Could you not have a system by which the officer was introduced, not to medical service connected with the guardians or any other, but to the medical service, as you would, for instance, in selecting men for India?—I do not think that would be possible. What I should like to see would be a medical service.

44389. If you were admitted into a medical service, would you not be available for any branch of it?—Yes, in the service I wish created.

44390. Would not that of itself meet your idea of allowing the person who is appointed to serve in either one or the other department as it might be?—It would not be possible under present conditions, because, owing to the want of cohesion between our different services, men would not be able to get the necessary experience.

44391. If they were all made part of one service, would it not be possible?—If they were all made part of one service; for instance, the medical officer of health in Birmingham knows nothing of the individual treatment of cases of the sick, and my knowledge of public health questions is, of course, very limited.

44392. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Taking up that point, under your plan, supposing that the work of the guardians in relation to medical officers was transferred to the town council, would you have the same man acting as medical officer of health, or rather the same man doing health work and also doing district medical officer's work?—In smaller towns I think that would be inevitable. Of course, in large towns the work would be divided between you. You have to have some man as head of the service, speaking of Birmingham specially, to deal with it; practically, if my scheme were adopted, instead of being the chief of my department, I should be an assistant, but in order to bring about efficiency I would far rather do that than be my own chief where I knew the system was bad.

44393. You do not contemplate in a large town like Birmingham actually the same man doing the health work and also curing the patients?—He would not be able to do it.

44395. In the smaller districts you would contemplate something of that kind?—I should.

44396. You were proposing to transfer the medical work generally to town councils. Would you apply that plan also to the smaller districts?—In the smaller towns I should, and in the country districts, but my experience in country districts has not been extensive. I was a country doctor for about nine months once, and I do not think it would be difficult to transfer it all to the local sanitary authority.

44397. It would make a good deal of difference to the incidence of cost, whilst now it is spread over the whole union, in a particular instance it would be charged on one parish?—That is a question of finance, with which I do not deal.

44398. But it would be an important point in your scheme?—A very important point in my scheme, but, of course, that might, if necessary, be obviated by working the thing from the county council.

44399. But in that case you would transfer the work to a different body?—Yes, but I should be prepared to consider that, because there are difficulties in the way of that in the things which one has noticed.

44400. It would be rather difficult if you brought in the county council at the same time to carry out your plan of making the district medical officer and the medical officer of health the same person, because the medical officer of health would not be an officer of the county council?—There would be a difficulty there, because two distinct bodies might then want to appoint. I do not think even then there need be a difficulty. You would put the two officers together and they would have to fight it out.

44401. Would you also have some difficulty with regard to the infirmaries, seeing that the sanitary district is so very much smaller than the union?—As far as the infirmaries are concerned, those I would unhesitatingly have managed by the county authorities in counties.

Reasons for amalgamating Poor Law and sanitary authority medical service.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority and details thereof.

Question of the county council as authority for medical relief in the country.

44402. So that with regard to the indoor medical relief you would not put that under the sanitary authority at all, except in the very large towns probably?—I do not think it could be done, that is an administrative difficulty.

44403. (Mrs. Webb.) When you replied to Mr. Loch that you would diminish the number of medical men under your system, you meant medical men in private practice?—Medical men in private practice.

44404. Free education has not decreased the number of teachers in England, has it?—It has not, it has given them a very much better status.

44405. And has actually increased the number?—It has, we hope that the number of children will increase, but that the number of sick persons will diminish.

44406. The preventive work would go on?—One hopes that eventually, as far as diminishing the number of medical men is concerned; of course what I should really like to see would be that medical men should be rendered absolutely unnecessary.

44407. They should be scientific men?—They should be scientific men.

44408. Who would consider prevention?—Yes, there should be no disease at all.

44409. That is a distant Utopia?—That is a distant Utopia.

44410. (Chairman.) You are in favour of a minimum fee for the medical profession?—As a matter of fact that is an exceedingly difficult matter. Medical men are taught in their medical schools everything connected with the treatment of disease, but they are never taught anything about ordinary business in their profession, as to what they are to charge or anything of that kind. It would be very difficult I think to decide anything with regard to minimum fees. I should certainly like to see a minimum fee, because it has such a bearing on the trade unionist side of the profession.

44411. (Mrs. Webb.) If you had a salary fees would be abolished?—Yes.

Dr. ROBERT BURNET, called; and Examined.

44420. (Chairman.) You are medical officer of the parish of Birmingham?—I am.

44421. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence-in-chief if you will hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

M.B., Ch.B., M.Sc. (Victoria and Liverpool), First Class Honours and University Scholarship, B.Sc., Victoria. For over four years whole-time District Medical Officer to the parish of Birmingham, holding that appointment now. For seven months Resident Medical Officer to the Rawcliffe Hospital, Chorley, Lancashire, and Medical Officer to the Chorley Dispensary (voluntary subscription). For eighteen months assistant in a large general practice in Manchester.

1. Alcoholism is rife and, in my opinion, is the chief cause of pauperism in this union. This pre-disposes to phthisis, as the people often would rather indulge in alcoholic excess than partake of a good meal when they have the money, debility, poverty and consumption resulting. Phthisis mortality is therefore excessive and the incidence of the disease in parish cases high, especially considering the fact that the local industries largely contribute to the pre-disposing causes of the disease; for example, brass working, metal polishing and indoor sedentary occupations such as button carding and hooks and eyes carding and cheap chain making, many of them carried on in their ill-ventilated and insanitary homes.

2. Whole-time district medical officers, not in private practice.

Residence in the centre of my district.

Parish offices in centre of whole relief area, so that applicants for relief are not unnecessarily troubled.

Doctors (two), dispenser, and relieving officers (four), all accommodated in the same building, and on the same ground floor.

44412. (Chairman.) Is not a minimum fee almost necessary under your scheme?—I should have nothing to do with fees under my scheme.

44413. You would have a paid service?—A paid service.

44414. Then nobody would treat the poor who was outside the paid service?—Unless he likes.

44416. Would not your own profession fight any scheme of this kind which gave priority and preference to the State service?—There would be some objection to that, but at the same time there is another thing to be remembered. I have been speaking of the sixpenny doctor and that undesirable class of men who are at present at work, and I also told one of the Commissioners that I think this class of man will become more and more extinct. Who is going then for the future to provide for these people? You have a certain number of people ill in a district, they at present get doctors who are very undesirable; the time I think will come when they will go, in fact one sees it coming. The young man has had his long training in hospital and that sort of thing and he does not like to go to work in these poor districts.

44417. Surely the number of qualified medical men is, relatively to the number of population, increasing and not diminishing?—It is increasing, but not so rapidly as it did.

44418. The number in the profession of course depends upon the number of entrants, and owing to the spread of education is not the number of entrants increasing in the medical service?—When I joined as a student at the Birmingham Medical School eighteen years ago, there were forty students who joined the same year that I did, but now there are only about twelve.

44419. But you admit your scheme might have a large proportion of the medical profession against it?—I do.

The telephone at the medical officer's house, an innovation of recent years, has proved in my experience to be of inestimable value in urgent and late cases.

Daily attendance of the medical officers, at the parish offices for two hours, for the examination and treatment of such cases that are not visited at their own homes.

From the above I venture to conclude that there is not much, if any, room for improvement, and I feel sure that no other class of the community can receive as reliable and prompt attention as the poor of Birmingham.

The whole-time medical officers should, however, be entrusted with the vaccination, each of his respective district, as he is on the spot and in direct touch with the people.

There are one or two other points in our system which, as medical officer, I feel require some adjustment.

3. Magistrates ought to be given power to remove compulsorily to the infirmary certain cases which are dangerous to the community at large and to their families especially, such patients having refused to be removed.

I shall take, for example, two instances, namely, patients suffering from the third stage of consumption, and those afflicted with the last stage of cancer. I have had recently a bad case of each of these, and I am rarely without them.

In the one case, the man, a third stage consumptive, insists on remaining at home with his wife and young children, and I am prepared to find evidence of tuberculosis of the lungs in members of his family in no distant period of time.

In another, an example of a breaking down cancer of the cheek, with attacks of profuse bleeding; the stench from the wound was so bad at intervals, due to formation of small abscesses, that his wife and children and the nurse who assisted (in the dressing) were complaining, and this despite antiseptic treatment with boracic acid, iodoform, gauze, etc. This man recently agreed to be removed to the infirmary, an excellent Poor Law institution for such cases. At the same time I would not be surprised if he came out again almost any day. (*A later note:—*This man is again out of infirmary, after a few days.)

4. The loan system should be abolished, as it is calculated to increase pauperism, banish parental responsibility, and discourage thrift, encouraging at the same time idleness and most of the vices. I can give absolute proof of abuse.

I got a Parish Visiting Medical Order to attend a woman ill with alcoholic gastric catarrh recently, man, woman, and child of fifteen in the family only; average earnings for previous four weeks were certified per week at about £1 13s. 8d. I was called in on the Sunday, and about this amount was received the day before. I was still visiting the following Saturday, and not until the Friday of the next week after did I get a written note to cease visiting. The guardians have ordered him to pay 7s. 6d. at 1s. per week for my services; I get a fixed salary, and I get none of this money. This is exploiting my services, and is unfair to the local medical profession and to the ratepayers, but most unfair to myself.

I have now discovered also that the note was issued by a person who is not the proper authority according to the Poor Law Regulations to grant a medical order. I have called the attention of the clerk to it, yet the man was appointed by the guardians for this duty as well as "carrying coals" and "shaking mats"—a wretched state of affairs!!

5. I think if such fees are claimed they ought to be paid to me for extra services. We will take, for example, a possible midwifery case under these conditions: a man may feel he need not provide from his wages sufficient for his wife's pending confinement, if he knows he can borrow my services at the critical moment. This, I argue, would tend to increase pauperism, as in these instances the men are sometimes in employment at the time, but no local doctor would attend without the money.

6. I get no extra fees for midwifery: it is included in my salary—£350, rising to £400—and I have to be a married man, whereas my predecessor received £500 (£450 and £50 for cab hire) and he was a bachelor—the guardians only appoint married men now. The guardians are just now, at the instigation of the health authorities thinking of "compelling" the medical officers to attend all midwives, difficult cases—not pauper cases. By making them paupers by a parish medical order for each, we doctors would have to attend, and then the next day they could put each on the "Loan System," after getting the work done by us for nothing. I would not care for the responsibility if we were paid enormous sums, as two men could never be responsible for every midwife in a difficulty in this huge city. It would be a cruel imposition on the suffering women; it would be shamefully abused and would be a most flagrant example of mis-management and mis-government, as well as a palpable cause of pauperism.

7. Indigent aged should be accommodated in workhouses, and married couples not separated.

Children should be boarded out, so that any workhouse taint is removed. Power should be given to magistrates to remove children from vicious parents and the efforts of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children encouraged.

8. Deserted wives (and there are many in Birmingham) should be provided for within the workhouse, as my experience has taught me that they usually degenerate, and if out-relief for these became the rule, such desertions would assuredly increase.

9. Feeble-minded unmarried mothers detained in institutions.

10. Outdoor relief should be generally discouraged, but not altogether, and, where permissible, it should be administered not by guardians at all, as personal interest, errors of inadequacy and superabundance are inevitable. It should be administered by a paid official with no political or religious bias, and whose duty should be that alone. It should not be given to widows with illegitimate children, nor to persons living in adultery, nor should guardians be permitted to arrange marriages for them to make them eligible.

11. Only the indigent poor should be considered medically or otherwise. The rich and numerous local charities in Birmingham amply cater for the rest.

12. Alcoholism in Birmingham seems to be the worst. Causes of The lesser causes are wife desertion, shortage of work, pauperism, advertisement of other paupers, especially those in receipt of outdoor relief, influence of guardians in a low social scale, and a loose recommendation of the Poor Law by clergymen of divers denominations.

13. I believe it is impossible to get a complete board of guardians in any union, which is not liable to be associated with self-interest with respect to some of its members. Some join with the hopes of getting eventually into the council, others for political reasons, and others to assist their different classes of trade, however small. I would prefer to make no comments on any members of the Birmingham Board here, nor on the board as a whole.

14. The sanitary authority takes charge of the usual cases of infectious disease amongst Poor Law patients, but diphtheria and typhoid are as a rule attended in the workhouse infirmary.

15. Voluntary institutions are more efficient and numerous than in any other town of the same size I know, though due to the "Note system," cases or urgency are apt to be forced to the Poor Law. The General and Queen's Hospitals ought to have an "ever open door," like other hospitals. The Birmingham general dispensaries are numerous and efficient, and tend to prevent pauperism materially.

16. I believe the town council ought to take the place of the guardians, and the Poor Law and borough boundaries should be co-terminous.

44422. (Chairman.) You conclude your statement by expressing the opinion that, in your judgment, the town council should take the place of the guardians?—I do.

44423. You would transfer the whole of the functions of the guardians to the town council?—Yes.

44424. Consequently it necessarily follows that you would transfer the medical work now done by the guardians to the town council?—To the health authority under the town council.

44425. You would try to amalgamate or combine the work now done by the health authority with the work now done by the Poor Law authority?—Yes.

44426. May I take it that you substantially agree with a great deal of the evidence of the preceding witness?—You may.

44427. May I go further and say that you agree with most of it?—I believe I may say I agree with most of it.

44428. You say in Paragraph 4 of your Statement that the system of loan relief should be abolished; that is as regards medical relief?—That is as regards medical relief as at present constituted under the present Poor Law system. The loan system in Birmingham, from such examples as I have had that are representative of the loan system as it is supposed to be, I entirely disagree with.

44429. (Mrs. Webb.) Could we have the examples?—I could read them.

44430. (Chairman.) You say it is calculated to increase pauperism, banish parental authority and discourage thrift?—Yes.

44431. That is to say, as the loan system is now worked in Birmingham?—As the loan system is now worked in Birmingham, I wish that to be understood, taking into consideration the particular way they have of reclaiming it, and the small amount they do reclaim, it is calculated to cause all that I have mentioned as to banishing parental authority, encouraging idleness and discouraging thrift. It is due to the system and the way it is done.

44432. Can you give us one or two examples, you have given us one in your statement?—I cannot give you another example with name and address, but I can just mention that there have been others, and that I have got notes marked "on loan" by the relieving officer, some of which loans, he said, were never recovered or attempted to be recovered afterwards, although the loan was given to the man by signing a paper and all that, they never even attempted to press the point. Those are the words of the relieving officer. This specific case I mention because it was one which occurred to my mind as being extremely unfair and extremely well calculated to cause the evil that I mention in the first part of that paragraph.

44433. Would you state what the case was?—I got a parish visiting medical order to attend a woman ill of alcoholic gastric catarrh, the first stage of gastritis. There was a man, woman and child of fifteen in the family only. The average earnings for the previous four weeks were certified per week at £1 13s. 8d. I was called in on the Sunday, and about this amount was received the day before, and I was still visiting the following Saturday.

44434. This is the case you refer to in your statement?—Yes.

44435. Have you any other case?—I have no other case that I could give in full like that; I simply took that as a representative one.

44436. Is medical relief ostensibly given on loan in Birmingham?—It is, but there are only a few instances; I only mention this one because of what it is liable to and what it might become; it might become a danger.

44437. Are there many cases where the medical relief is given on loan?—There are not many cases, but they tend to increase.

44438. As a matter of fact very little is recoverable of that which is given on loan?—Very little is recoverable, and I believe very little has been recovered; certainly if recovery has ever taken place at all it has not been adequately done. The thing is a farce, in other words.

44439. You say that it does more harm than good, and free medical relief would not be worse?—Free medical relief would be decidedly better.

44440. Because you think there is an unreality?—There is an unreality in the first instance.

44441. Do the people pretend they think they are paying for what they get under this system?—Yes, they do, and they are not slow to distinguish themselves from the other pauper patients. I have had a woman tell me, when I was attending her child, that she was not like the other patients I attended, that her husband was going to pay back the cost of my attendance to the guardians. It was a lengthy case; I do not know how much they recovered, if anything at all. I doubt if they recovered anything.

44442. You are a full-time medical officer?—I am.

44443. Your experience is in favour of that system?—I am certainly in favour of the full-time medical officership.

44444. I suppose you agree that the present system is somewhat chaotic, and some efforts should be made to establish something like a co-operative system between the different agencies at work?—I do.

44445. You think that the simplest method would be to combine the health duties and those of the Poor Law under one head?—Yes.

44446. Would you agree with the preceding witness that in order to administer this system you should have a medical service and that the relief should be free?—I do in its entirety. The words of the last witness I agree with entirely in this respect, and that the medical officer of health should be the superintendent in chief of the whole system.

44447. The salary of the health officer is a good deal higher than that which usually obtains in the Poor Law medical service?—It is.

44448. You would make it an interchangeable service?—I would make the service such that the district medical officership should be part of the training of the medical officer of health, and he would be more able to do his work of administration and take preventative steps after he had had a thorough apprenticeship as district medical officer in the work of curing people and seeing them in the conditions of illness and destitution together.

44449. Do you do much domiciliary work?—I do not.

44450. (Mrs. Webb.) You visit in the homes, do you not?—Yes, but the visiting is nothing like the outpatient work; the visits for a large city like Birmingham are extremely few, so I cannot say I do much home visiting.

44452. They give you less chance if you do not visit?—They require some visiting, that is true. One is bound to do some good, but very little in proportion to the work done amongst people of a higher class. They seem to feel that they are not paying for your services, and nobody is really paying properly and adequately for your services; they do not seem to realise that they are getting enough attention compared to what they would if they had to pay for it provided they had the means. They do not seem to realise that you are serious, as you are, and very often will not carry out your treatment.

44453. Should you say that the fact that medical relief is associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent to respectable people applying?—Certainly, it is a decided deterrent.

44454. You are clearly of that opinion?—The association of the Poor Law with medical relief is a decided deterrent; people will not come under the present conditions of the Poor Law; the system itself frightens them away.

44455. And you agree with the preceding witness that there is at times a good deal of difficulty amongst respectable people in Birmingham in getting medical attendance from the general hospitals?—Yes, I am constantly having experience of that in seeing these people finding very great difficulty in being able to get to the hospital, but then again I have seen the hospital notes abused, just the reverse, people can get them too easily at times and not easily enough at other times in the case of needy people.

44456. It is a question of personal solicitation?—It is, largely.

44457. And the person solicited has neither the time nor the knowledge to go into the merits?—That is so.

44458. Is there any sale of these tickets?—I believe these tickets of the dispensary are sold to private individuals; you can either have them by a regular subscription or you can buy them individually at 3s. 6d. a note. I believe that can be done, and you can give them to any person you like.

44459. Is there on any large scale a system by which individuals get these notes and then sell them to others?—I have no knowledge of that. I have no knowledge of their ever having been sold one to another individual. I rather am of opinion that the patients' names are entered at once and they are not transferable.

44460. You have a very large infirmary attached to your union?—A very large infirmary.

44461. Do the poor dislike going into that?—They dislike going into that on account of the stigma which they think is attached to going into a pauper institution.

44462. The institution itself, I suppose stands, very high?—I would say the institution itself would stand very high, because it has the very finest specialists we can obtain as visiting surgeons and visiting physicians.

44463. And as to the organisation and management?—The organisation and management of the infirmary itself I should think is good.

44464. Putting other questions on one side, you see no practical difficulty in transferring this part of the work to the town council?—I do not see any practical difficulty in transferring it.

44465. If they were properly organised and worked in unison should you say that the Poor Law infirmary and the medical institutions in Birmingham are adequate to the demand that is made upon them?—Do you mean if the voluntary hospitals and the Poor Law infirmaries were worked together under another system?

Dr. Robert Burnet.
12 Mar. 1907.

44466. Yes ?—I think they would. I think on account of the overlapping of the several charities there is a certain amount of inefficiency inevitable on account, first of all, of the difficulty of getting notes, and then the overlapping besides. I think there are enough institutions under proper management if they were put under one authority.

44467. Have you been long in Birmingham ?—Nearly five years.

44468. Where did you come from before ?—From Manchester.

Question of extent of provident dispensaries and medical relief in Manchester.

44469. There is a great difference, is there not, between the number of provident dispensaries in those two places ?—I cannot speak from experience of either provident dispensaries or Poor Law work in Manchester, because I was assistant in a large practice there, but I do not believe from my experience as a general practitioner but that there must have been a good deal of voluntary help in the way of provident dispensaries in Manchester compared with Birmingham ; I never heard once the name of the district medical officer, although I was in practice in all kinds of classes ; I never heard the Poor Law mentioned at all ; that led me to think that there must be something in Manchester which affects the working of out-door medical relief in that city. I rather believe the people in Manchester are not so poor as they are in Birmingham.

44470. You think they are better off ?—I think they are better off. I think that is another reason why one did not hear so much of Poor Law medical practice as one would have expected.

44471. The medical dispensaries in Birmingham are endowed, are they not ?—They are endowed, and yet they are also kept up under voluntary subscriptions.

44472. Your ideas as regards reform correspond pretty closely with those of the preceding witness ?—They do.

Question of union of offices of district
medical officer and public vaccinator.

44473. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Are you the public vaccinator as well as district medical officer of health ?—I am not ; we have a whole-time public vaccinator in Birmingham.

44474. And he undertakes the whole of the vaccination ?—Yes.

44475. You yourself, I gather, do not see objection to the union of the two offices ?—Not to the union of the two offices, but both offices should be transferred to the health authority.

44476. You do not think the duties of one office at all interfere with the duties of the other ?—I do not think so at all.

Objection to loan medical
relief.

44477. You have made some observations with regard to giving medical relief of loan. Do you know at all to what extent the guardians do that in Birmingham ?—I think it is very little, but I mentioned that because of the abuse it was calculated to bring about and the danger of the system as exhibited by the case I have mentioned.

44478. In point of fact, do the guardians recover the money, do you know ?—I think very little at all ; they often abandon it after the proper procedure has been gone into, the signing of names and all that, they have abandoned it entirely. In this case this man did not know he was getting it on loan ; they made him pay 7s. 6d. for all the visiting I had done ; in other words they put him on the loan system.

44479. In point of fact do they take proceedings, or do you think they write for the money and put on pressure ?—I think they write and put on pressure, I do not think any case has yet reached proceedings.

44480. Do you know at all how they arrive at the value of relief in making a claim against the persons ; you gave an instance of 1s. a week ?—I think they have failed to arrive at the value of my services.

44481. Do they take rather what the man can afford to pay them than what is considered to be the value of the relief ?—I think they take rather what the man can afford to pay ; in this instance I think they have failed. The man received £1 13s. 8d. for four weeks previously, and he was still receiving it the next week. I was still visiting as Poor Law Officer the week after I was asked to desist the day before he got his salary again, so that while I was attending, that man practically got three times

£1 13s. 8d. and he had only to pay back 7s. 6d. That is robbing the local practitioners, and is unfair to the ratepayers ; therefore the system, as carried out in Birmingham, is not good.

44482. (Mr. Gardiner.) In Paragraph 10 you refer Proposed a to out-door relief in money or kind, do you not, not ministratio of out-relie by State medical relief ?—I mean money or kind.

44483. You tell us it should be administered by a paid official ?—Yes. stipendiary 44484. Whence is the money which he gives or uses to buy them relief in kind to be provided ?—That should be provided by the State.

44485. From the State, or the rates ?—If the present Poor Law system has to be, it will be from the rates ; if the one I suggest, it will be from the State.

44486. Assuming this present Poor Law system con- Question at tinues, would the ratepayers, do you think, be satisfied to whether with the administration of relief by a paid official ?— guardians represent tl I think they would. I think the average ratepayer is not in favour of the Poor Law boards as constituted at present. I do not think it is the voice of the ratepayers. I do not think the elections of the guardians coincide at all with the opinions of the ratepayers.

44487. The board of guardians, supposing it con- Proposed tinues, it to have no control whatever over this official ?— administra The board of guardians is to have no control over this tion of out-relief official. by State 44488. There can be no appeal from his decision ?—The board of guardians would not administer ; the official would take the place of the board of guardians.

44489. He is like a magistrate ?—Like a magistrate entirely.

44490. But from a Magistrate, if the Magistrate states a case, there is an appeal, is there not ?—Yes, there can be an appeal.

44491. Ought there not to be an appeal ?—I think there might be an appeal to the Local Government Board if this condition existed.

44492. And only to the Local Government Board ?—I think so.

44493. As regards the relieving officers, would they be Position of appointed by the paid official ?—The relieving officers relieving would not be appointed by the guardians, they would be officers and ratepayers appointed direct by the head authority. under syste of adminis- tration of relief by stipendiary 44494. By the Local Government Board ?—Yes, if this remained as Poor Law.

44495. I do not quite understand. If the ratepayers find this money the Local Government Board appoint the paid official and appoint the relieving officers ?—Yes.

44496. The ratepayers have no control whatever ?—The ratepayers have no control.

44497. No control over the sums which they are to find or the conditions under which the relief is given ?—They would not need to have any control, they would not be in the best position to judge ; if it was referred to a sensible authority and there was a system of gradation of officers all the way through they would be the ones to judge the fitness of the officer, and not the ratepayers ; I do not think the ratepayers by themselves would be able to appoint a man and a proper man ; certainly guardians cannot.

44498. And the decision of how much relief is to be Functions and appoin- ment of proposed stipendiary for out-relie and popula attitude to idea of stipendiary Birmingham given ?—That would be in the hands of the stipendiary that I mentioned entirely.

44499. Supposing you had a man of very liberal views appointed, he could put up the rates very considerably ?—He would be still subservient to someone else that put him in authority. The ratepayers would have nothing to do with that. You might get liberal judges.

44500. You would have him put under the control of the Local Government Board inspector ?—Yes, or under the Local Government Board direct.

44501. You think that system would give satisfaction ?—I think it would.

44502. In a place like Birmingham where the people administer their own affairs ?—Yes, the people of Birmingham, I daresay, are not at all satisfied with the present condition of the affairs of the Poor Law ; I think they would prefer that system to the present system of administration by guardians; I think they would practically throughout.

44503. As regards the last line but one in that paragraph you say: "Nor should guardians be permitted to arrange marriages for them to make them eligible." What do you mean by that exactly?—I stated that because I think they should not do it. I have two instances here. I rather think if this is allowed to be you would have it occurring in younger people, and you would have a guardian doing it just because it was a case he was championing which was barred, in order to do it and say: "I did do it at last."

44504. He was championing the case in his own private interest?—I did not say in this particular case, but in the kind of case I mention I think it is an abuse which might lead to this system becoming worse even. I have an example here where the people were married "by the advice of the guardian to qualify for parish relief." This is the actual note of the relieving officer. This is a short time ago, it is nothing to do with my inquiry.

44505. Did that happen recently?—That particular instance was in 1903.

44506. Have you another instance there of the same kind?—Yes, that happened recently, the end of 1905.

44507. To the same effect as your note?—Yes, it is the relieving officer's own words, his own note, his own handwriting.

44508. To the same effect?—Yes, I can read it.

44509. I think you might?—In the first instance J. R. S. cohabited for thirty years, and then the relieving officer's own words are: "Married by the advice of Mr. J. T. B." (a guardian) "to qualify for parish relief"; that is the significant part.

44510. After living together for thirty years?—Yes, after living together for thirty years in adultery; in the next case W. B. had been cohabiting for thirty-seven years.

44511. In regard to those three words you put in italics "as personal interest," what do you mean by that?—I think the guardians are very apt to come on the boards for personal interest, with no idea of anything else; they come for selfish motives. I think it is pretty clear that guardians do so.

44512. By selfish motives what do you mean exactly?—For instance a small shopkeeper might come on the board of guardians with the express object of increasing his trade.

44513. How?—By his influence with his fellow guardians or by getting further business amongst the pauper people; some get their living amongst them.

44514. Some guardians go on the board in order to get the relief spent at their own shops?—I think I can go so far as to say that some guardians would be of the style to do that sort of thing, and of course there are other greater objects.

44515. Contracts you mean?—Yes.

44516. Have you any evidence you would like to give with regard to that?—None, I have heard of that, but I have none that I could give.

44517. None of your personal knowledge?—No.

44518. Your drugs are provided by the board of guardians?—Yes.

44519. Entirely?—Except for urgent and late cases which I have to provide for out of my own pocket.

44520. And you are not repaid for that?—They put £5 a year on my salary to do that, but being paid as a whole, and paid monthly, one does not notice it as a grant, it is really a grant although the cases may come to that, or may come to more. I am supposed to provide for urgent and late cases out of that grant of £5 per annum entirely.

44521. Until the dispensary opens the following day?—That is it, precisely.

44522. (Mr. Bentham.) I do not quite understand your objection to the guardians insisting upon repayment for a particular case which has received medical relief. You suggest at the end of Paragraph 4 "this is exploiting my services and is unfair to the local medical profession and to the ratepayers, but most unfair to myself"?—Yes.

44523. You suggest that the 7s. 6d. that is recovered should be paid back to you?—I do not want the 7s. 6d., but I suggest that in a case like that, not 7s. 6d., but adequate payment for a medical man should be paid back to me.

Dr. Robert Burnet.
12 Mar. 1907.

44524. You are a whole-time medical officer?—Yes.

Objections to loan medical relief.

44525. Do you not consider you are sufficiently well paid?—I do not. When appointed I got £150 a year less than my predecessor who was a bachelor, and I have to be married. I will modify that. I started at £150 a year less than my predecessor's maximum, to put it clearly, I commenced at £350 a year, rising to £400, it is a sliding scale in each instance, but my predecessor was a bachelor, and I have to be married. See the statement in my evidence in-chief. He rose to £500 (£450 + £50 for a cab).

44526. Apart altogether from the question as to whether this 7s. 6d. which is repaid to the guardians for your services is paid to the guardians or not, you feel that the salary paid to you is insufficient?—Insufficient, absolutely. I do not want to press this point, that is a personal one to me, but I had to mention it in connection with this case.

44527. The question of repayment really is not involved if they paid you sufficiently?—If they paid me sufficiently I should say it was involved even then. If they paid me sufficiently to attend it would be because it is not a parish case really, there has been an error made, and they are reclaiming on the loan system, the error was made by an unqualified officer.

44528. I was going to ask you what that officer was?—That officer was a porter.

Porter as relieving officer.

44529. Can a porter give an order on you to attend a particular case?—Not I believe according to the Local Government Board.

44530. (Mrs. Webb.) May we have that explained? Was it because there was no relieving officer resident in the parish?—He is used as a relieving officer, and actually himself gets less money I believe than the man who applied.

44531. (Mr. Bentham.) Is he appointed as a general relieving officer do you know, or as a sort of assistant relieving officer?—He is appointed so that he has to carry coals and shake mats and give urgent and late notes to the doctor.

44532. Is he stationed at the workhouse?—At the parish office, the centre of the whole relief area.

44533. He is really the porter at the central office?—Yes, and the junior (resident) porter, junior to the curator.

44534. Is not this given merely for convenience because the relieving officers are not resident within the parish?—That is so.

Results of non-resident relieving officers.

44535. Would you prefer that someone should give this order, which is a matter of convenience to the applicant, or would you prefer that the applicant should come direct to you without an order?—I would prefer under the conditions of the Poor Law working to-day, that is under the conditions that this actually came about, that that man should go to the proper relieving officer to inquire into his case.

Difficulty as to orders for emergency relief.

44536. Surely you do not insist that in a case of urgent necessity the applicant should seek out the relieving officer, who might be living at some considerable distance, in order to give you a note which is in proper order?—No, I would not do that.

44537. Just for the sake of conforming to a regular rule, you would not insist?—I would not on principle, but this particular case in the first place was not urgent.

44538. I suppose he thought it was urgent?—The porter would have issued it I believe whether it was urgent or no. It is supposed to have "urgent" written on it if I get it as urgent, but it had no "urgent" on it at all.

44539. So far as that arrangement is concerned, because he happens to have other duties which are of a menial character, if it answers the purpose in urgent cases, you have no objection to it, have you?—I have no objection to it at all except that I like to be in order. In a case of urgent illness they ought to have treatment.

objections to loan medical relief.

Dr. Robert Burnet. 44540. To turn to the repayments, you think that because you are paid for your services, and provided you are paid adequately, the guardians ought not to compel the people to repay, if they are able to repay?—I think the guardians under the system they have taken ought to compel them to repay, and to repay properly, and have the whole thing done in order. This I consider is not repayment at all. It is a fine for coming to the parish officer. I take it it is in that nature.

44541. Repayment is according to ability, and not according to services rendered?—I argue that this man was able to pay on two occasions after I was called in, and was never asked.

44542. They have not enforced repayment when they might have done since then?—They have not done; if they were going to do it at all they ought to have done it in that case.

44543. Because they have not fully carried out their duties, you think they should not do it at all?—Either not do it at all or do it properly.

44544. What you mean is they do not make people repay who ought to repay?—I argue in this case they have not done so; they ought to repay if this system, the loan system, has to be in vogue.

44545. That really is a matter of administration which does not affect the status of the medical officer in the least, does it? Surely guardians can have a discretion whether they will make a person repay or not, whatever the opinion of the medical officer may be?—It may be that he ought not to have come to me under the conditions I have mentioned, and ought not to have gone to the guardians.

44546. You think the guardians ought to have taken some preventive measures in order to prevent that person coming to the Poor Law at all?—The rules which they work under are inconsistent with the way they have done it.

44547. You mean it is incompetency in administration?—Yes.

44548. You are not against the principle at all?—Not at all, I am in favour of anyone in sickness getting medical assistance, irrespective of destitution. I have to consider this specific case as our law is now, not as we would have it. I would prefer that that man should get his medical attendance at once, without any question of payment at all.

44549. The question of repayment is an after consideration?—I should say so.

44551. You have no objection to their getting the relief and having the inquiry afterwards?—I do not object to its being done properly.

44552. If it is not done properly you think it is an injustice to you?—I think it was an injustice in exploiting my services as a medical man for a very small pittance.

44553. You put that on the ground that it was not urgent?—It was on the ground that it was not urgent that they made money by my attendance on that case.

44554. You say in Paragraph 11 you only want to have the indigent poor considered medically or otherwise?—Yes.

Proposed free medical relief.

44555. You do not believe that all people who care to apply to a medical officer, whether he be under the Poor Law or under the municipality, for medical relief, should have it given regardless of their means?—I think the medical relief should be given regardless of their means; we are speaking of the Poor Law there, as it is at present constituted, only cases that belong to the guardians; that is the Poor Law, that is the indigent poor, ought to come to them.

44556. When you have transferred them to the municipality, as you suggest in Paragraph 16, would you confine it to the indigent poor?—No, I would not, I would put anyone in that category who was in illness who required medical attendance.

44557. Anyone who cared to come for medical attendance could do so?—I would say so.

44558. That is your position?—That is my position.

44559. You have something to say in Paragraph 13 with regard to the class of guardians. You seem to think that members seek election on the board of guardians for ulterior motives?—Yes, I believe so.

44560. You do not think that applies to the town council at all?—I think it is likely to. I think if the scheme of transferring the guardians to the town council was carried out the town councillors generally (i.e., throughout the country) would have to be looked into, I think to a certain extent it is "out of the frying-pan into the fire," yet at the same time it is a system I agree with, that the public health should embrace the two services, embrace the treatment and the prevention of disease, not so much the fact that it will be in better hands under the town council, not at all, but that it is an arrangement that I would be in agreement with.

44561. It is on purely medical grounds?—That is what I am speaking of.

44562. Apart altogether from the body who administers it?—Yes, but the town council in Birmingham, if a comparison is allowed to be made, on the average is composed of men of much higher position intellectually and monetarily.

44563. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the present state of affairs, is it your opinion that there is a certain amount of preventable death and preventable illness which is incurred through lack of proper medical attendance?—I certainly do; I think there is a great deal of medical suffering that is not relieved under the present circumstances.

44564. This means preventable death and also damage to the people who survive?—Yes, it means both.

44565. You would consider that this illness which was brought about by lack of medical attendance actually increased pauperism?—Certainly, it is one of the most potent factors in the increase of pauperism.

44566. You really do consider that?—I certainly consider that.

44567. We are manufacturing paupers by lack of medical attendance?—By lack of efficient medical attendance I think we are increasing the number of paupers.

44568. Would it be possible to further restrict medical relief and force all poor persons who are not actually destitute to take refuge in the private practitioners and sick clubs; would that be a solution that you would recommend?—I do not think I should recommend it.

44569. Would you object to it on account of the quality of the medical attendance that the people would get?—Ethically one has to be careful and one has to feel that one belongs to a medical brotherhood, yet at the same time, I have seen in my surroundings in Birmingham things which bear out my statement when I say that I think in these poor districts the medical practice is not medical practice at all.

44571. Could you describe the process by which this deterioration is brought about; is it because he gets too little for each case, or because he has to pander to the patient's desire for a bottle of medicine. What is the process?—The process is this, so small has to be his fee in my opinion that he has to get such a number of cases in order to make his living that he has not time to examine them sufficiently. That is the first instance; then he degenerates; he finds that proper examination is not really necessary for the object for which he is there, and yet the people cannot see it.

44572. He tends really to sell a bottle of medicine and not his advice?—It really amounts to that. I will give an instance of that. I was called in to attend a woman suffering from violent abdominal pains, she had spent her last shilling on a cheap doctor and she had no food. I discovered a large malignant growth; he had not even examined her.

do and reans for infirmary of is medical attendance.

44573. So that practically these cheap doctors do not give medical attendance, they simply sell bottles of medicine to a large extent?—I will not say they do not give medical attendance, they give medical attendance which must vary according to their time and ability, and I think as years go on both of them get less, the ability and the time; they get so many patients I think they have not time to give to them and their ability lessens simply because the opportunity for exercising their experience in medicine for the finding out of physical signs certainly diminishes, and in the end he degenerates as a physician.

44574. So that that part of medical practice is deteriorating in the medical profession?—I think decidedly. I think to the ordinary practitioner it would be decidedly deteriorating.

44575. (Mr. Bentham.) Is not he deteriorated already if the practice is as you say?—Do you mean that the general practitioner has deteriorated?

44576. Yes?—I think the practice of cheap medicine in the poor districts is decidedly deteriorating to the man, no matter what he was in the beginning; he might commence as a thoroughly honest man and gradually degenerate; he might be brought there through stress of circumstances.

44577. (Mrs. Webb.) Supposing you could take over that sort of medical attendance by salaried people, it would not necessarily diminish the number of medical men employed?—I do not think it would necessarily. I think it would begin to absorb them into the system, and it would seriously affect the number of the cheap practitioners.

44578. At first?—But that I consider is desirable on the ground that it is a great advantage to these people that they supervise.

44579. On the other hand it would give openings for young men to come on as salaried men?—It would give openings to young men to come on as salaried men and become district medical officers and those district medical officers would have something in view which they now have not.

44580. And they would tend to become more scientific and more skilled?—Certainly, they have every encouragement, they could rise and become medical officers of health in big cities, or to whatever height an officer could get in the service.

44581. They would be continually treating individuals from the point of view of preventing future disease?—They would.

44582. That would be an advantage to the profession?—A great advantage to the profession.

44583. That would help towards the establishment of a greater scientific preventive medicine?—Yes.

44584. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you mean to say a man paid by salary is animated by higher motives than a man who has to make his way in the world on fees?—I certainly think so under that condition, because he has something higher than fees or salary to think about. He has his advancement in his profession, and it is already pointed out that he has every encouragement for scientific research which in practice, even middle class practice, he has not always, and certainly in low class practices he has not at all.

44585. (Mrs. Webb.) You do not object to payment by fees, but only to payment by fees, under those conditions?—Yes.

44586. The fees under better conditions would go on?—They would certainly go on. I do not think I would interfere with that service.

44587. It is only fees under the particular conditions of a low grade practice that you object to?—Yes, the result is not worth the fee to the people, small though it is.

44588. On the whole you would be in favour of transferring the whole of the medical relief to the health authority?—The whole of it to the health authority.

44589. Putting the medical officer of health as the supreme person over it?—As the supreme person, they would be entirely responsible to him. It depends on the largeness of the city.

44590. Do you think that the provision of free medical inspection and medical attendance would discourage sense of responsibility on the part of the poor or would it tend to give them better habits?—I think it would certainly tend to give them better habits provided that those people who visit are well qualified for the particular work. We have health visitors in Birmingham to-day, I believe, in theory, but the present health visitors I believe are not trained sufficiently to cope with these cases.

44591. Are they voluntary?—They are not voluntary; they are put under the medical officer of health.

44592. What sort of payment have they?—I could not say, I know nothing about the actual payment.

44593. You do not know whether they are qualified?—I daresay they get quite enough payment to justify the existence in their place of a trained nurse. I really think a nurse would be better than a health visitor as at present constituted; the nurse would know what, from my experience, the health visitor neglects.

44594. (Mr. Bentham.) These are salaried people?—Yes.

44595. (Mrs. Webb.) Those are of an inferior type?—To my mind they are.

44596. They have not taken a sanitary certificate?—No, I think not.

44597. (Mr. Bentham.) What is there to prevent the public authority employing these inferior men on salary?—You say they already employ inferior persons to do this health visiting; they would be open to the same temptation with regard to medical men?—The inferior medical men could not get into it; it could be made such that the inferior medical men could not get into it.

44598. By the qualifications?—It would have to be made competitive to get into it, and if he proved himself inferior, if he got into it he could be coped with.

44599. Are not the health visitors appointed by competition?—I do not think so.

44600. (Mrs. Webb.) This service of health visitors is a new service?—Yes.

44601. And there is as yet no recognised qualification for it?—I think not, I will not be certain. I think there is no qualification at all, judging from the health visitors I have seen—no qualification whatever—certainly not.

44602. In some municipalities there is a qualification and in some there is not?—I was not aware of the qualification except I know certain of them hold sanitary qualifications, but I did not know it was essential.

44603. In Manchester there is not any qualification but in Sheffield there is?—And in Birmingham there is not to my knowledge.

44604. (Dr. Downes.) I think you told us in the course of your evidence that the Poor Law system deterred people from seeking medical relief?—Yes.

44606. In the statement which we received from you last December you say this: "I venture to conclude that there is not much if any room for improvement, and I feel sure that no other class of the community can receive as reliable and prompt attention as the poor of Birmingham." How do you reconcile those statements?—We have been asked two things, with regard to that statement; we were asked as to the present state of affairs if it has to exist, and then we have been asked what can we do. I put that in the first category; if it has to exist we cannot have better than what is provided in Birmingham, but if it is not to exist my opinion is different.

44607. There is no qualification in this first statement I have, it is an absolute statement, I cannot trace any qualification there?—I was asked there about the present conditions in Birmingham, and as I am asked the question about the present conditions I answer it.

44608. Do you think the reluctance of the poor to seek medical relief in Birmingham is a reasonable reluctance?—Certainly, I think it is a reasonable reluctance.

Question of

and its

44609. Why is it a reasonable reluctance?—Because of the present state of the Poor Law, and the present state of the administration by the guardians of the poor; they can see it, and they feel the stigma of pauperism and object to it.

44610. What is that stigma?—They do not feel free, they feel that they are under a stigma; for instance, they get the name workhouse mentioned, and they do not like that.

44611. Is that all?—They do not like the workhouse; they feel all the visiting of the relieving officer, and so on; and it is objectionable to be brought before committees of guardians and have their cases inquired into; they do not like that—not in that form.

44612. Do they object to being dependent on others, is that it?—They do object to a large extent to being dependent on others.

Mr. HORACE BAGSTER WILSON called; and Examined.

Mr. H. B.
Wilson.

12 Mar. 1907.

44617. (Chairman.) You are the Medical Superintendent of the Birmingham Medical Mission?—I am.

44618. You have prepared a statement which, if you will hand it in we will treat as your evidence-in-chief? Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Qualifications and Experience.

1. I was born in Kendal, matriculated at London University, spent five years training for a manufacturer in a woollen factory employing some 400 hands; then worked two years at the Yorkshire College, Leeds (Technical Departments), including two months in Germany, which I have since visited three times, returning to Kendal.

2. Deciding to become a medical missionary, I qualified in 1895, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., London, besides passing the first M.B., London. After six months as resident house-surgeon to the Birmingham and Midland Ear and Throat Hospital, I became junior officer at the Birmingham Medical Mission, taking the place of the medical superintendent on his death, February, 1899. I have been in close touch with religious and philanthropic work from childhood.

3. I send testimonials and printed papers which explain themselves. With regard to "Drawn unto Death" I wish to emphasise that the title is not mine, and that my share of it began as a social investigation. It has had, I am told, a far-reaching effect on the public conscience and on official effort.

The Birmingham Medical Mission.

Birmingham
Medical Mission and its work, taff, etc.

4. The current work is summarized by the latest Report, and the other papers, also by the actual photos of the district. The Mission has existed for thirty-one years under the control of an undenominational committee. While making no secret of its intention to exert a religious influence, its doors are open all day, and often at night, to the poor of all beliefs or no belief. It acts as a close-at-hand medical advisory board to the poor, treating all within its scope, and passing on—with personal letters of explanation—cases suitable for the hospitals, general or special. It is a dispensary, with a minor surgery department, ambulance department, and home visiting department, my home visits for the last half year, July 1st to December 31st, 1906, being 1,012. I am assisted by a trained nurse, and by the wife of the resident missionary, in the home visiting.

5. There is a salaried assistant surgeon, an hon. aural surgeon, and an hon. gynaecologist, a qualified dispenser, with salaried assistant secretaries of the general and ladies' committees, resident missionary and wife, porter and cleaners, and some seventy voluntary workers more or less engaged throughout the week.

6. We have no beds, except for emergencies and for recovery after rapid anaesthesia. No maternity work.

7. The religious and social agencies are detailed in the Report.

44613. (Mrs. Webb.) Do you find that people object to going to the isolation hospitals, the fever hospitals?—No; I have never heard of any objection.

44614. There is no feeling of degradation there?—None at all; they know that all classes go there.

44615. That is unconnected with pauperism, is it not?—Absolutely. I should like to say I quite agree with the statement I made that under the present conditions of the Poor Law, if it had to remain, I do not believe there could be a better system than the system in Birmingham provided it was properly carried out.

44616. But you do not want the present system to go on?—No; that is the question on which I was asked my opinion. The other is a statement about the existing conditions; that is my explanation of any apparent discrepancy there may be.

General Impressions.

8. Please refer to "Drawn unto Death," especially the marked paragraphs; the whole, if time allows. If my descriptions are accurate, yet applying only to a limited area of Birmingham "Slumdom" alone, what must be total amount of evil condition in the whole United Kingdom, where, in great areas or patches, practically identical conditions obtain? I am, however, firmly convinced that if the poor are led, and not either driven or flattered by political or other bribes, a very definite percentage of improvement is obtainable. And I believe in the great educational, as well as the immediately practical, value of an extension of citizen interest in the actual conditions of "The Poor."

The Medical Assistance of "The Poor."

9. May I, for the immediate purpose, make a rough classification of my material?

Average family of five—three children:—

Class I.—Average family income, 30s. per week, artisan.

Class II.—Average family income, 20s. per week, labourer.

Class III.—Average family income, 10s. per week, odd-job man.

N.B.—The average total weekly income of 100 families, richer and poorer, near the Medical Mission, January, 1903, 4'4 per family, was 19s. 2d., the average rent being 4s. 2d. Eighty-one of these families averaged only 18s. 1'4d. ("Drawn unto Death," p. 42.)

10. Does the health of the community suffer owing to the insufficiency in amount or quality of the medical assistance at present available for the poor?—Unquestionably; and in the aggregate, enormously.

A.—Amount of Medical Assistance.

11. Classes III. and II. cannot possibly afford home attendance even at the minimum of 3s. 6d. per week. I come across but few men in medical clubs; wives and children "never." Visiting a case lately, I found the breadwinner also in bed. "Is the doctor attending him?" "No, Sir, Dr. ——— knows his complaint, the gout, and we get a 6d. bottle at night from his dispensary." The bottle will last three days, and may be eked out to five or six days. This is a practical solution of a kind. Home medical assistance is deferred to the last moment, credit for provisions or rent is obtained, clothes or furniture may be pawned, money borrowed at a ruinous rate of interest, or a collection made for the 3s. 6d. to 5s. required in advance; it is discontinued at the first opportunity, to be hurriedly resumed should the presence of medical man or minister of religion seem urgently required. The rarely obtained dispensary notes are understood not to guarantee frequent visits, except in urgent cases; there is no visiting from the hospitals as the cases drop out from increasing illness. Incipient, or subsiding illness, and convalescence, are left to providence; and the visiting doctor may be purposely not told of a fresh case in the house because of the inevitable expense of its treatment. I have often been called in just because another doctor was in attendance, and it is not impossible for three of us to be on the scene!

12. Out-patient treatment is fairly easily obtainable, but much abused. Many of the cases presenting themselves are those who have time to attend, not those who are in greatest poverty or bodily distress. As arranged, i.e., at a few great centres, it involves a prodigious waste of home time, also a great deal of exposure to the very weather which coincides with the most illness. Many stay indoors exactly when they most need advice and treatment; others go out, and suffer in consequence.

Crowding out
from dispensaries
and hospitals

13. I have frequently been told that Classes II. and III. and even Class I., are crowded out of the dispensaries by the favourites of those who have the notes under their control, i.e., by those who ought to pay for private attendance, a double injustice resulting if the dispensaries are meant for the poor.

Difficulties
as to payment by artisans for medical assistance.

14. Class I. is exposed to the same evils as to home and out-patient attendance as Classes II. and III., but in milder degree. Continuous attendance of a medical man for a few weeks becomes an unbearable burden, often either coming to a dead stop, or crippling the whole family when in greatest straits. Its attention ought to be directed, during illness, to the extras of special diet, bedroom fire, extra light, washing and help; not to the task of paying a minimum of 3s. 6d. a week, on a progressively reduced income, for attendance and medicine only. Again and again have members of Class I. come to me with profound apologies, declaring a history of temporary bankruptcy; and we have helped them—after due enquiry—to turn the corner. Such a rare refuge as our comparatively small and solitary mission ought not to be the only dernier ressort of such people. The sick are neglected; the doctors are over-worked, underpaid, and weary of the treadmill.

B.—Quality of Medical Assistance.

Deficient quality of
medical assistance for the poor.

15. It is inevitably deficient. The average poor man's doctor, once immersed in his work, enjoys no rest, no leisure; he has no time for society, lectures, or music, and can but rarely attend even medical gatherings. He and his family must live; he must pay at both ends for his holiday if he takes one. If successful, he has no time for study; if unsuccessful, grave temptations wait on him, and his outlook is dismal. The doctor of the poor is regarded as an unwelcome expense, only wanted at a crisis. And what can he provide of time, medicine, etc., at 3s. 6d. a week? How can he supply adequate dressings, bandages, lotions, etc., whose value is unappreciated by the poor, and for which he dare not charge extra?

16. But in any case, in these days of specialism and more costly treatment, how can one man at 3s. 6d. (or even 5s.) a week be all in all to every patient? Further, he is not able by mere recommendations to open the door of hospital and specialist in any complete sense, despite the courtesy of the hospital staffs; and too soon the question of notes arises. The family doctor ought to be first and foremost a diagnostician as to the kind of treatment required and which he, or others, must give. There should then be none of the delays which, in the present miserable and inchoate state of affairs, bring such grave immediate and later consequences, and so lower the health of the community. The medical profession and other health agencies constitute an army of non-organized volunteers, fighting the great national battle against disease. No one with a conscience can be satisfied with the results.

17. May I remind the Commission of the many poor not included in my classification, such as isolated men and women, widows and orphans, clerks, decayed gentry, etc., to whom much of the foregoing applies, mutatis mutandis?

C.—Preventive Medical Assistance.

Preventive
medical assistance
by Birmingham
Medical Mission and by suggested State medical service.

18. At the Medical Mission our case-papers are numbered, and card-indexed alphabetically. They bear record of instructions as to the feeding of infants, supply of nourishing food and suitable clothing, the care of the teeth, ventilation, extra hours of sleep (day and night), country holidays, etc. These instructions are very frequently carried out. If a Medical Mission, with only private influence and slender resources, can obtain such results, what might not be done on a universal scale and with State influence at the back? I am firmly convinced that a heavy percentage of the illness-roll could be removed by meeting the ignorance, fatalism, and helplessness of the poor by kindly medical advice, ultimately enforced, if need be, by authority.

19. I pointed out to the Child Study Association, meeting at the University last December, 1906, the urgent importance of utilizing the school as a Local Health Centre, the parents and the homes being quietly revolutionised through the care of the children. A simple medical inspection would open the way to "talks" with the parents at the local school, "talks" differing utroque from summons reprimands; though it would—after a carefully graduated stringency—become known throughout the local area that these talks were not mere pious opinions. They would proceed on the initial assumption that the parents or friends intended well by the children, and that they only required information as to their health, food, clothing, etc., to do everything possible for their offspring. Praise would be meted out even for one item of attention; and after a time a health-conscience would be established, an asset of great potential value. The attendance officers and city health visitors would meanwhile be in no sense rivals, but cordially co-operating ancillary agents; and their information, supplemented by doctors' surprise visits, e.g., at meal times, would place the little and simple evening "Court" (the name must be avoided) in a strong position to deal with parents. When local public opinion was ripe, when the majority had been sufficiently encouraged, and had acquired a conscience (little prizes, certificates, etc., smoothing matters and stimulating the parents at the same time), an example would have to be made of the worst offenders, of whom it would by this time be said, "Serves them right; did you ever see such miserable children?"

20. What is the use of prosecuting a few vicious parents while what I termed "The Average Shum-child" is minus the prevision of the State? The whole gamut of medical treatment should at least be made known to the parents; and, if I may stray into finance, I would suggest that any insurance for children of the really poor be very light, or, possibly, either borne by the State or by the federated voluntary agencies of each district, whom I long to see co-operated into working order on some English development of the Elberfeld system. More encouragement, far more stringency, more determination that the present revolting state of child neglect shall and must come to an end, seems to me imperative. A very important official of the city suggested to me the arrangement of a trial scheme of this kind in a congested district, a special feature being that the Schoolmasters within the area proposed should checkmate the transference of the children under observation from school to school while it was in operation. I believe it would be most instructive and would be a valuable test.

21. Constantly seeing children as units and in masses, I am convinced that the condition of at least half of them might—even under present conditions—be greatly improved; and that half of this half urgently require medical and other aid. All done for the children helps the parents and homes now, and the future homes hereafter.

Local Operations of Assisting Agencies.

22. Health Committee.—The operations of this Committee are energetic and well organised as far as I can judge.

Any notifications, or even suggestions, are received with courteous thanks and thoroughly seen to. We have full liberty, and are encouraged, to point out any improvement which may strike us. The reports of the medical officer of health on Infant Mortality, and especially his Report on the Floodgate Street Area, where we chiefly work, have thrown a flood of light on local problems, and have reacted on other civic departments. The standard of what is essential to health is being slowly but steadily raised.

The lady Health Visitors, with whom I have had a good deal to do, and who ask me to diagnose and treat for them many neglected cases, are fulfilling a useful function, and this agency is capable of great development.

23. Housing Committee.—This agency does not assist the poor with medicine or advice, but it cannot be omitted in the survey. Not only does its direct work improve courts by letting in air and sunshine, and by seeing to drains, water supply, etc., but it causes a healthy emulation even where it has not itself taken action. The worst dwellings are being quietly removed without the creation of a house famine.

24. School Attendance Officers.—Of these I must speak with unqualified praise; they are devoted men whose tact is marvellous. I append our case-paper forms for boys and girls (buff and blue), those for women being white, those for men red. (For copies of completed case-papers, see Appendix No. XVIII. (A.).) These case-papers are numbered, and the patient has a home card with this (permanent) number on it. We enter on the case-paper, in the appropriate column, either the length of non-attendance, or leave the column blank, or state that attendance is to take place. The case-numbers, with any additional remarks, are forwarded every evening to the attendance officer. If, on visiting, non-attendance is claimed, the number is taken and collated at the office. Our verdict is always taken as final; but the attendance officers have access to the papers at the mission, which they may endorse, and they frequently interview the staff. We thus play into one another's hands for the children's sake, and I willingly undertake this wholly extra work for the same reason.

25. The schedule of standards, which I keep up myself, gives me an indication of abnormal advancement at school, or the reverse, and sets me on the track of fruitful enquiries. Often I accelerate school attendance; often keep a precocious and yet very delicate child back. The head teachers are also in close touch with us. It is my aim at least to deal with the whole situation of each separate child. There is actually a danger that "a bottle of medicine" may blind the parent to important issues, and I do all I can to minimise this.

The Poor Law.

26. In speaking of "The Poor Law" as an assisting agency, I only mean the system; and I wish to convey no personal reflection of any kind. Nor am I in favour of a total overthrow of that system.

Illustration of insufficient medical relief
for phthisis.

27. Poor Law Out-Relief (Medical).—If I am correct in what I have stated as to the inability of "the poor" to pay of themselves for adequate medical assistance, we must not look to the Poor Law to help us. It is not worth keeping up to meet this need. I append the actual case-paper of a man who came to me last week which illustrates a whole range of Poor Law problems. As will be seen, I diagnosed phthisis (pulmonary) on January 12th, 1903, and I recommended him for Blackwell Sanatorium or the Llandudno home. (All these notes are in shorthand and rapidly written under great pressure.) Had he been an insured Berlin workman, and I the physician at one of the city stations, I should have recommended him for removal to the magnificent Workmen's Consumption Sanatorium. Had there been a federated Elberfeld system for the ward, his wife and child (the Commission will see that this consumptive respectable man has begotten two children since, the three now living) would have been superintended, adequately helped, and the "home-life" kept up. None of this was done. He attended till February 23rd, 1903, and now turns up, January, 1907, having infected another house, with two more children, his nett club money 9s. 6d. being on the verge of reduction to 4s. 6d. nett, and no prospect of working again. Society is simply tinkering—in the twentieth century—with such a man. If I send him to the Poor Law they will say "Come in." He will refuse, and probably refuse to the last. He will not become a pauper; the neighbours will not allow the wife to allow it. The Poor Law is now absolutely clear of all responsibility. The man has refused their kind offer; I am assured that they cannot insist on his removal; and the miseries and social disgrace of the whole situation are unworthy of a practical nation.

Deterrence of
medical
relief.

To test him I said (see notes on case paper) "Why don't you go to the parish doctor?" "Do you mean the Infirmary?" "Didn't you know there was a doctor to see you folk outside?" "Naw, is there?"

"How have you been living?" (Sick pay thirteen weeks at 9s. 6d., soon to be 4s. 6d.) "My wife isn't working now; there's nothink in it; only 6s. or 7s. at a factory, and so much to pay for minding that it only leaves about 2s. And it ain't like their own mother mindin' them." No outside help or lodger. The indoor and outdoor departments of the Poor Law are thus, as in countless other cases, cleared of all responsibility and expense; a blank wall would yield more easily than this rigid organisation, which is compelled by law to Deterrence of promote self-help and thrift at such a cost of human medical health and happiness, not to say decency. relief.

This case admirably illustrates the plea for some agency to act concurrently with the medical arm of social service. The humble medical mission is merely palliating the evil, while straining its slender resources beyond measure in a case which, for want of system, cannot be aided without pauperisation, and will not be aided pauper fashion. The whole family is now qualifying in every direction for inefficiency, being taught to beg, becoming dirty, ill-clothed, underfed, infected, and discouraged.

Case 5053 is also instructive. This man, with incurable oedema of the legs, and a mystery to both surgeons and physicians at one of the hospitals, alternates between indoor treatment at the workhouse infirmary, or at the hospital (by note), or he is at home without any relief or medical attention, because, if he has a fancy to be with his family (and he is not dangerous to their health), the State, which would keep him luxuriously in an institution, regards him as having refused a good offer. I found him when visiting his child, and for very pity offered him medicine. He also gets a dispensary note when he can.

If suggestions on this subject would be of any interest I would gladly lay them before the Commission.

28. Poor Law Indoor Relief (Medical).—In the great majority of cases it is dreaded, and grim tales are told me. But I believe the objections are largely superstitious and traditional; they suffice, however, to relieve the rates greatly, in the first instance at least. I have no evidence of anything but efficiency; yet I have the greatest difficulty in obtaining the consent of the friends, or the patients, to removal.

Deterrence of indoor medical relief at reason the
of.

The hospitals are too overcrowded to meet the situation as a matter of routine.

In my experience the very idea of the Poor Law supplying any nursing facilities (save dressings) is unknown, though I understand that the guardians are not limited in their powers as to this. They believe it is false kindness to institute, or even supplement, Home-nursing of any kind.

Failure of Poor Law
supply nursing.

Voluntary Hospitals.

29. These are, I believe, overcrowded in every department; and this state of affairs is given as a plea for more support. Is it possible for even the ablest men to do justice to such crowds? I suggest a decentralisation of the routine work by the establishment of "dispensaries," it being understood that all special and severe cases are to be reserved for more highly equipped institutions. These might (possibly) in the present state of public opinion be supported by a dual system of admittance (treatment the same):—(1) by the notes of the charitable; (2) by the admittances of the insured on production of insurance book. An immense amount of work could be cleared off in this way close to the homes, and, in nursing cases, a State or private doctor recommended, also specialists.

Overcrowding of voluntary hospitals and proposed remedies
therefor.

I should prefer small central hospitals for very urgent and seriously injured cases, and large suburban hospitals, like the one I saw in Hamburg for all other general cases. If I remember right, even the visiting staff were paid; the patients were charged for at 2 m., 3 m., 5 m., 8 m., and 10 m. each, according to the social scale and the willingness of friends, or authority, to pay. The hospital, on the barrack system, was far more advantageously situated than a centre-of-the-city hospital in everything, but the convenience of the visiting staff.

I do not think we ought to expect the hospitals to do more under present circumstances; but there is a great deal of time wasted by the patients, and there is necessarily swift work on the part of the doctors, many of the cases not needing treatment in so elaborate an institution.

The begging for notes is a wearisome and unsatisfactory procedure; free admission would paralyse the outpatient departments.

Medical Clubs.

30. From my outside experience, and special enquiries I have made from those well acquainted with them as patients, I believe these are a dead failure. They are a clubs.

Objections to medical

salve, not a remedy. How can a medical club qua medical club deal with every class of case, or even effectively with routine cases, when the means of time and sinews of war at the disposal of the often single practitioner are so meagre?—The patients are often profoundly dissatisfied, and not without some cause. Further, if the club is local, and the member moves to another town, or it may be even district, his “insurance” becomes a dead letter. Were this insurance national, or civic and transferable, I understand that working men would very willingly have a reasonable sum stopped from wages. They would know how to apportion their income. would be able to pay higher rent in better surroundings if efficient medical attendance were guaranteed; they are now quite sufficiently educated to grasp the value of insurance schemes. I believe medical clubs as wings of a friendly society are considerably more satisfactory than the pure sick clubs.

In my district I have never come across a woman or child in a sick club. There is much insurance for death; for life and health, a scramble for hurried, temporary, intermittent, and too often inadequate treatment is the order of the day. May we not pay too dear for “the liberty of the subject?”

Causes of Seeking Assistance.

31. These are:—

(1) Poverty, as previously indicated, even when income is normal.

(2) The Causes of poverty as separate factors, e.g., unemployment, accident or illness of one or more family breadwinners, drink, idleness, thriftlessness, vice, nomadism, gambling.

(3) Of course illness, real or fancied; and, in the medical mission experience, the diminution in the amount of sick pay as the case proceeds and the family goes more rapidly to pieces.

Overlapping, Co-operation, Single Agency.

32. The patients have the choice, where notes can be obtained, or where they have rights, of several agencies for treatment, and they pick and choose to the best of their power. The agencies being too often, for the reasons alleged, inefficient or choked with work, this in theory unlimited choice does not tend to effective treatment. Co-operation is unorganized, dependent on the private influence of the doctor in many cases, and it is most imperfectly carried out. To quote a hospital surgeon of many years' experience, “We are quite at the end of the voluntary system.”

33. In my opinion, further co-operation will not be greatly advanced till system takes the place of no system, and till the poor come to understand that not as paupers, but as those who by combination have a right to medical treatment, they have the privilege of being courteously received at local stations, there to be thoroughly examined, the examiners being superintended (of course not in every case) by head district officers of proved practical experience, men who have the health of the people at heart and who are not mere birds of passage. By arrangement with existing institutions such as the Dispensaries, and the creation of State Dispensaries (the two comparable to the “shop” Post Office and the “pure” Post Office), a start could soon be made, and it is well that the change should take place without expectations being suddenly raised too high.

34. Further, these local stations should be placed in touch with existing Charitable and Poor Law Institutions; and patients applying for, or requiring indoor or special treatment, should be unhurriedly seen by experienced men, not by tyros, however potentially gifted. There should be no experience gained at the expense of the public in this way, i.e. competent men must be paid.

35. I venture to think we should then work our way, English fashion, to suitable and sufficient medical provision for the poor; and all charitable donations to institutions would be to the good. For this provision I firmly believe the average artisan, and even labourer, is willing to pay; but the article must not be a bogus one, nor incomplete in any feature. It must include, if need be, not only the initial consultation, but also the most costly essential treatment, conducted of course without extravagance and sentimentalism.

36. The efficiency which public control would demand, and meet, would attract as paying patients, or semi-paying patients those to whom extra privacy, etc., not better actual treatment, could be offered. Beds, hours etc., might be, with care, arranged in view of this, i.e., special hours for charity notes, and so on.

37. The importance of co-ordinating Poor Law and charity has a bearing on this, for they do not yet co-operate near us, as the charities are not federated; and, too, the guardians seem to want, in spite of the Poor Law Minute of Mr. Goschen, November 20th, 1869, to keep to themselves. This impression is unfortunate. I append a copy of that Minute and the newspaper reprint of an attempt to federate the actual representatives of agencies working in the ward, brought to a standstill by my ill-health in 1905, and now being revived in connection with the St. Bartholomew's “District” (Ward) of the Bordesley “Branch” (Division) of “the City of Birmingham Aid Society,” of which District I am Hon. Medical Referee.

Children.

38. Last year I had weighed and measured and otherwise tested by the Instructor of Physical Training in the spacious and well-equipped Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, Mr. C. E. A. Heywood, the whole of the Bournville School as per cards herewith; also a number of local children. The comparisons as far as they went are of course very striking, and I hope to present them as an Appendix.*

Medical Clubs and Women.

39. After addressing a typical mothers' meeting not far from us, I enquired how many present, out of sixty-five, were in medical clubs. None were in medical clubs as part of a friendly society; three were in clubs for medical attendance only, and would forfeit benefit if removing from Birmingham, and, presumably, if moving out of reach of even the club locality.

None were willing to pay 3d. every week for life for any bribe of complete medical and surgical attendance; but few 2d.; almost all would willingly pay 1d. I gathered that it would be little use seeking for insurance money for the children.

Education.

40. I believe that the principle brought out in the Report by women inspectors to the Board of Education on children under five applies in measure to the whole of the educational life of the average slum child. Mere knowledge is swiftly forgotten; we should aim chiefly at what will most tend to promote physical efficiency plus mental and moral stability; at capability rather than acquirement. Nor should we forget that we are training boys and girls for civic, industrial, and home futures.

State and Charity.

41. In 1903 I inspected in three days about fifty only of the congeries of epileptic and other institutions associated with the name of Pastor v. Bodelschwingh, a personal friend of the late Emperor Frederick and personally known to the present Emperor and Empress. I found that while these and many other Homes, etc., were largely supported by “charity,” the State was at once appreciative and yet possessed of full powers of friendly inspection and suggestion. This happy co-operation and understanding appeared to me to be mutually educative, and must have notably reduced State expenses, as so much of often revolting work was cheerfully done from Christian motives, salaries being small.

Our medical mission is neither criticised nor encouraged by the State. In my ten years' experience we are always the suitors for any attention; and I have practically given up expecting the slightest official interest, however long we may have staved off applications to the guardians in special cases and through our daily work. One exception occurs to me where I obtained for a worn out button-maker a pension from the “young masters” of 2s. 6d., which was supplemented by 2s. 6d. out-relief, I undertaking medical attendance. Thus the “old-age pension” question was solved.

42. I have had little leisure since the Secretary's request came, so I hope you will make allowance for any re-iteration, and that you will ask for further details on any point. I hope the documents, map, and described photograph, will illustrate Birmingham conditions.

43. Should you desire to see the work, my out-patient days are Tuesday and Friday at Floodgate Street, and Wednesday at Ellis Street, 9.0 to 1.0 (Ellis Street is only in a mission-hall used for the purpose once weekly). I visit Monday and Thursday, and most other days. My colleague sees out-patients Monday and Wednesday from 1.30 to 3.30 or so. I should be very happy to show the case-papers and our institution, and the district.

44619. (Chairman.) We have had some very full evidence about the general system of medical relief in Birmingham. Your statement is interesting because it deals with the work of the medical mission. We should first like to ask you if you would care at all to expand what you have said in your statement about your medical mission?—I should like if I might first of all to show by these series of classified case papers, from the actual work, the facts which have led me to certain conclusions; then I would like with your permission to interpose the remedies as they strike me working in the congested area, and thirdly, I should like to be allowed to speak about the schools and children. I think if I might take that course it would save a great many questions.

Case papers and their use by Birmingham Medical Mission.

44620. You would like first to make a statement about your mission?—The medical work at the medical mission, apart from surgical and medical casualties, is all carefully recorded on case papers, something on the lines of the Charity Organisation Society. Each patient on entering the mission is registered and receives for himself or herself one of these cards. (Produced.) Red for men, and white for women, buff for boys, and blue for girls. Each of these contains a key number; the case papers are numbered seriatim numerically, and we keep as well a card index alphabetically arranged with the names and addresses of the patients, the addresses being revised whenever they change at each renewal, the key number being in the corner. When the patients come to the mission again they quote their number, the case paper is extracted from its numerical file and is placed face down wards, until all the case papers for the day are placed downwards, then they are reversed and placed on the doctor's table, and the cases come in in that order. The case papers I have submitted to the members of the Commission, but there are some case papers here, if they wish to see them. (Produced.) The four colours correspond with the cards which the patients have and also the card index has the same four colours. This helps to check mistakes and facilitates reference. The case paper as you will notice has as a common character a place for the name and address of the patient and various details as to the parish, religion, and so on, as far as our registrars have time to find it out. It has on the left-hand side "Instructions to dispenser." It has to the right of that, in the case of an adult, a relief column in which instructions for relief are made for our own relief department, and in the case of a child it has a "no school" column in which the number of days a child is to be excused from school is put. There is a report every night to the education authority as to the number of the case paper, or that the child is to go to school; if the child is to go to school, the name and address is sent to the education committee as well as the number. Then the doctor has the right hand side of the case paper for his observations, and he is able to glance at that before the patient actually comes into the room, and he gradually has the whole history of the case with any other details that he can get. The children's paper, the yellow ones for instance, has also a table which shows the standard and school at which the child is attending and also the standard that it ought to be in. If you take six years from the age you get approximately the standard of an up-to-date child. I will now go on with these case-papers. The first set specially illustrate why a family doctor is an impossible luxury, temporarily or permanently, but the case is not eligible for any State help. The first one is on March 25th, D. M. B., whose age is eleven; father, mother and seven children, eldest eleven, and youngest six months. Father earns 24s. a week, less 5d. club money. The mother paid 1d. for each bottle of medicine she received, each consultation being free. The 1d. does not go to the doctor, but solely to the dead expenses of our medical work. The next is the case of a girl recommended by the nurse to a church. There, there is a father, mother and four children, the eldest nine and the youngest three and a half. This child of three and a half is more or less starved, and is wasting. They are getting 2s. 6d. a week, groceries and coal for two weeks from the Birmingham Aid Society; that society has a very useful future before it. This is the mother's statement:—"But if he could have had work he would rather have had it. He has applied to the distress committee; the metal is such a price they will not buy it. That is why so many are out of work." I was compelled to order this child twelve days' milk at 2d., a day. I also ordered the child to have a day sleep. Here is another case, that of a woman who had double mitral disease and aortic disease, she was in extreme poverty. Part of her work almost to the time of her death was the carrying of forty gross of steel stretchers up flights of stairs; she worked almost to the last, but she would not have qualified for the parish doctor, because she would not be destitute. She worked with advanced heart disease, complicated heart disease, to the very last. I gave a little milk and the nurse visited her, and we did what we could to help the friends afterwards to get the money from the insurance company. Here is another case, of a girl two months old. There there was a father and mother and three children, four years, three years, and two months. The father has been out of work five weeks owing to the frost, being a coal carter; mother says work is stirring up a bit better, husband hoping to get work from the old master. I also ordered milk in that case and Virol; the relief orders always have attached to them my instructions. I attach to them the number from the relief order, so that I am able to trace if our people have dealt with it. That case was given temporary relief. Such a man as that in my opinion is perfectly able to give a small payment for insurance.

44621. You have a large number of case papers, and I think we quite understand the class of case you are dealing with. You can put those in your evidence in an appendix (see Appendix No. XVIII. (A).) I think we can quite realise the varying nature of the cases with which you are dealing?—May I give the headings of them without the cases?

44622. I really do not think it is necessary. It will all be in the appendix to your evidence afterwards. If you can tell us something about the conclusions which you have formed from those case-papers, we should be glad?—I would suggest this that there being in my opinion a great need of medical relief and more adequate medical relief in dealing with the question of the poor, what are called the poor, who, in my evidence, I was dividing up for the present purpose into those earning 30s. a week with a family, and those of 20s., and those of 10s. I suggest that we are cursed with a multiplicity of agencies in any particular area; yet each agency, as a whole, is overburdened and very largely ineffective. We imperatively need far better ground plans, such as every army organiser has in reserve. We want far fewer independent officials, public and charitable (each is the pan and the kettle in more ways than one) each official representing some far off authority, of which he is the faint echo. The poor look upon all State officials, many not of superior education and practical ability to some of themselves, as their natural enemies, and they circumvent them right and left every day. We want to take a map of every large city and carefully mark it out into health districts, the more congested districts being the smaller, and having the best men at their head. Each area should be considered as a little imperium whose welfare lies on the heart of someone, as truly as if that someone were the health officer of a small town. The smallest district we should dare to plan would in any case be far more populous than many a small town amply provided with a fully trained medical officer of health. If these premises are admitted, I venture to propose the following—44623. Is this supplementary to the printed paper you have sent us?—It is.

to this evidence, and we should examine you a little upon the practical management of this mission? We understand your views. What we want to know is how your mission links up or combines the existing agencies. I think in that way we should more rapidly be able to come to a conclusion than if you read us any paper. How many persons do you deal with in the course of a year at this medical mission?—6,305, that is if they have attended over six weeks it is a fresh case, so it is not as many as that of course. (See Appendix No. XVIII. (B.))

44625. All the assistance you give is gratuitous?—The medical advice and surgical advice is absolutely gratuitous, but each patient is expected to give a 1d. at the dispensary for coal and gas and heating, and also for each dressing, but we always excuse those who are the poorest when we find it out and put an F. on their case paper.

44626. Where do you get your funds to carry on your work?—Entirely by voluntary subscriptions. We have no endowment, but we have a building fund which has a few hundreds in hand now.

44627. Who is your authority; have you a committee?—Yes, we have a medical president who is a general practitioner, and has been president of the local branch of the British Medical Association. We have a medical vice-president, and a lay vice-president, and a committee with lay and medical members on it of all Protestant denominations.

44628. You have a dispensary?—We have two dispensaries; we have one at our headquarters and one fitted up in the mission hall of a parish room.

44629. You have a home visiting department, is that where your home visitors live?—I mean by that that we do home visiting.

44630. You said you ordered a child a day sleep, I think?—Yes.

44631. Where did you put the child?—I ordered the mother to see that it had a day sleep. That is my technical word for seeing that the child gets enough sleep.

44632. This mission has been a great many years in operation?—It is in its thirty-second year.

44633. Is the number of cases it deals with increasing?—They increased 30 per cent. the last complete year ended June 30th, 1906. We have, in this year 1906-7, gained one month in seven; the last complete figures are for January; that is owing to departmentalisation.

44634. Taking your classification, what proportion of the people dealt with would come under each class?—I should think roughly, giving an off-hand answer, two-thirds would come under Class 2 and one-third under Class 3, and a few under Class 1. We discourage Class 1 from coming to us.

44635. You deal with the class who unless they belong to a club would have to go to the Poor Law for medical relief?—Yes, as I explained, they do get medical attention just at the crisis; they scrape 3s. 6d. or 5s. together just for the crisis of an illness.

44637. What is your remedy, or what would be the improvement you propose to effect; to organise voluntary charitable agencies—do I understand that aright?—Yes, that is part of it. I should organise health districts under the ultimate control of the medical officer of health for the city; he should be assisted by what I regard as of very great importance, a medical staff or advisory staff of the most experienced consultants, medical and surgical, of the city, the best representatives of the main branches of our profession, men who would deem it an honour to meet as a full committee, or in sections as called together by him. Such a staff, if not too unwieldy, would be of great moral help to the medical officer of health. I wish to state that these views have not been discussed with anyone, and that I purposely refrained from obtaining the expert advice of the local medical officer of health. Such a staff, or council, could enormously facilitate co-operation and co-ordination of adequate medical relief, and could elaborate locally the national scheme of medical insurance already so belated. This council would advise the medical officer of health as to the superintending doctors for large divisions, and as to the appointments of district doctors. I have omitted to say that picked representatives of the general practitioner arm of medical service should also be invited to serve. The medical officer of health is not engaged in actual curing in the ordinary sense of the word; if he had this staff I am of opinion that they would take a great interest in the whole medical work, preventive and curative of the city, and that we should enlist the sympathies and the skill of these men and also have on our side with regard to the health of the community the hospitals and the general practitioner.

44638. (Mr. Bentham.) Would they find you an honorary staff?—Yes, I think they would be proud to serve.

44639. (Mrs. Webb.) Like the honorary staff of a hospital?—Yes, we have a doctor on our council, but what is the use amongst sixty-six; his time is practically wasted in my opinion.

44640. (Chairman.) Would you make them a sort of consultative body to advise the corporation?—To advise the medical officer of health, meeting at his call in such sections as he thought desirable.

44641. Do you think they would come?—I think they would. I think there is a public spirit amongst the doctors as much as amongst anyone else.

44642. Unless the question is very important they would not be likely to forego their own private work?—I think they would meet between five and six, or half-past five and half-past six, with pleasure, in the centre of the city.

44643. (Mrs. Webb.) You see they would gain by the advantage of having their names before the public, like they do in the hospitals, although that is a low way of putting it?—I cannot agree with that. I would not put it on such a ground. I think as medical men interested in the welfare of the city, they would serve.

44644. (Chairman.) I thought they were to be the first consultants in the town?—Men of standing, consultants.

44645. (Mrs. Webb.) Just like at the hospital?—Yes, for instance the Dean of the medical school.

44646. (Chairman.) They would advise the health officer as to what he was to do?—I take it he would be the general of the medical officers and they would be able to help him with regard to surgical and medical treatment and serious gynecological work which he is not competent to deal with in detail.

44647. They are not so much to advise him in the operation of the health department, but to assist him in the treatment of medical cases?—Yes, and to organise and bring about the co-operation which we all think needed.

44648. How would they do that?—Because I do not think they would accept his dicta at the present time as to the internal work of the hospitals and the treatment of cases; his function is somewhat different from that of the skilled physician or surgeon.

44649. You want this body in order to get the voluntary agencies and the hospitals to co-operate?—Yes, to bring about an arrangement of the whole of the medical work, and advise the medical officer of health as to the improvements which will result from what I propose. He will also want advice as to the appointment of the new style of medical officer which I will come to directly. I think a question has already been raised to-day as to the class of man that you would get.

44650. Where do the town council come in?—They would be supreme over the medical officer of health, they and the health committee. I do not want to go beyond my last; I could not go further than that. I am looking at it from the medical point of view. I think the health committee in Birmingham would be quite powerful enough to keep the doctors in order.

44651. You would put on the health committee the duty of trying to organise the medical relief throughout the town, is that it?—Yes, I should.

44652. You would take all medical relief away from the Poor Law?—I cannot speak about anything but the outdoor medical relief, it is the medical outdoor relief

Mr. H. B. Wilson.
12 Mar. 1907. that I understand. Some medical relief, I understand, is already out of the hands of the Poor Law. We have municipal hospitals; the fever hospitals are not under the Poor Law.

Proposed re-organisation of agencies for medical assistance under medical officer of health with advisory medical council.
44653. Only the infectious hospitals?—I believe the very large percentage of cases is drifting more and more into municipal hospitals. I think that is the tendency, and will be more so.

44654. I do not think there are any municipal hospitals other than infectious hospitals?—If consumption is regarded as an infectious disease, would not that be so? I was not proposing to upset the Poor Law system.

44655. (Mr. Bentham.) Is the Poor Law hospital called the City Hospital, in Birmingham?—No, I think the fever hospital is called the City Hospital.

44656. What name is the Poor Law hospital known by?—Spring Hill Infirmary.

44657. (Chairman.) Going on with your scheme, you would make medical relief free?—There is one other element I would wish to mention.

44659. They would be in private practice subsidised?—Probably. In some wards they would have to have a whole-time officer, not to do all the work, but a whole-time officer to represent the medical officer of health; in others, an ordinary doctor who had qualified himself to serve under the State might do so, and to the extent to which he served the State his services would be recognised.

44660. These doctors I suppose in certain cases would be whole-time doctors, but in most cases they would be practising privately as well?—It depends on how much money the State was prepared to allot from the insurance money which I am about to propose.

44662. Allotting to whom?—To the agencies which increased and developed, say the hospitals and dispensaries and so on; at the same time where there was a district where there was no near-at-hand dispensary, which is a very important thing where there is sickness, the municipality or the State would organise some small dispensary, because nineteen-twentieths of medical relief could be treated in the small dispensaries with very simple arrangements.

44663. Is your insurance to be compulsory?—Personally I do not think we are ripe for that.

44664. If it is not compulsory, how would the insurance go to the local authority? A man insures himself against sickness and when he is sick he either gets medical attendance free or he gets some sum provided which will procure him that medical attendance. I do not see how that would go to the local authority?—Because no one would be able to get free medical treatment or surgical treatment, from the initial consultation to the most advanced surgical operations, unless they could bring forward evidence that they were insured; then there would be some kind of ticket or check, and whether they were treated by private practitioners or not, I do not wish to be harsh, or by the voluntary institution, or in some cases by the inevitable State dispensary, they would get credit for treating this particular case and the funds would be allotted according to the treatment that had been given.

44665. It is very complicated. What would you do with people who were not insured?—For the present those people would not be worse off than they are now. Every one that was insured would be to the good, the rest would fall into two classes, either those who could have been insured and would not, or those who could not afford to be insured. We should have to treat those who had neglected insurance but we should have to bring all the possible resources we could upon them through friendly societies and in other ways to insure.

44666. Would you give different treatment to people who were uninsured as compared with those who were insured?—The treatment should be identical, but I make a classification or distinction which the poor soon understand; for instance, at the dispensary I would have separate hours, or a separate entrance; in that way you could make a difference while the treatment would be the same.

44667. That inducement to insure would be slight, would it not, if all people get the same treatment?—As a medical man I do not see why we should treat a poor body different from a rich body. The body is the same.

44668. I am thinking what inducement would there be to insure?—Because people do not like to be treated free, there is a very strong objection to being treated by the Poor Law.

44669. (Mrs. Webb.) Do they object to fever hospitals?—No, we say they must go, and it is no good objecting.

44670. They do not object?—They have no choice. I could not say, I do not think they do object.

44671. (Chairman.) Would you say that the fact that medical relief is associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent?—Certainly.

44672. Do you say it is the fact that it is associated with the Poor Law, or because there is a suspicion or belief that it is not quite efficient, or is it both combined, which of these causes would you say it is?—There is a great objection amongst people that I know to going to the Poor Law office to get the medical order; then they feel also that the district medical officers have not the time to attend to them.

44673. What would you do in the case of serious illness or an operation under your scheme?—Do you mean if insured?

44674. No, take an ordinary case; or first, take the case of a person insured.—A person insured would go to the nearest doctor in the district who was authorised by the local medical authority to treat insured cases, that man being on my supposition superintended in a friendly manner by experienced medical men, all these nuisances of not examining a case would not exist, the man dare not do it. If it was a case of strangulated hernia, or anything of that kind, he would be in a position at once not to tell a person to go to a hospital or to a dispensary, but he would send a case to the proper surgeon or physician which he thought was necessary. If he made a mistake he would be told about it, but there would be no delay.

44675. Assuming it was a case for a hospital they would send him to the hospital?—Yes, they would send him at once, it will have to be as easy to send him to the hospital as to give him a bottle of medicine; there would be beds at the hospital for insured cases.

44676. You assume that all the hospitals come into this scheme?—I do, but I also assume that nineteen-twentieths of the work which is now carried out in the hospitals will be done in dispensaries, either created specially where they are needed, or by an extension of the present dispensary system in Birmingham. Nineteen-twentieths of the medical applications can be cleared off close to the homes, without keeping the women from cooking and washing and seeing to their children, by using small dispensaries.

44677. Would you want paid officers at the dispensary?—No.

Proposed universal scheme of insurance against sickness and allocation of insurance funds.

Suggested inducement for insurance against sickness.

Deterrence of medical relief.

Arrangements for surgical operations under re-organised scheme of medical assistance.

Position of hospitals in re-organised scheme of medical assistance.

Proposed extension of system of dispensaries.

Details of scheme for re-organisation of medical assistance.

Proposed universal scheme of insurance against sickness and allocation of insurance funds.

Proposed extension of system of dispensaries.

44678. Who would attend these dispensaries?—Either the new district medical officer or a general practitioner in the district who had time to see to it and who was recognised by the local medical authority. You would get some of the very best men in the best practice who would give two or three hours in the week, taking different days and see to it, and in proportion as they did State work they would receive remuneration, and it would not be a disadvantage to them; they would be able to do a good many things in the dispensary that they could not do in their own private rooms. At a State dispensary you can have arrangements by which dressing can be done and you can have a nurse in attendance.

Proposed inducements or insurance against sickness.

44679. What would you do with regard to the uninsured in a serious case?—I should like to see that class which is not insured, and which is not a Poor Law class, treated for a time to see what happens, but less eligibly than those who are insured, distinctly less eligibly. I think if we make the distinction in a kind but firm way there would be a steady drift from the uninsured to the insured, we should tend in this way also to classify our poor in a way we are not doing to-day.

44680. (Mrs. Webb.) When you say less eligibly, do you mean they are to have less chance of recovering?—Not at all.

44681. Then they are to have all the food that is requisite for recovery?—I do not think that is a medical question, is it?

44682. In the institution they are to have exactly what food is required for recovery?—I should not give this intermediate class all the food that is required, I should only give it to Poor Law cases.

44683. What I want to know is whether this intermediate class are to be treated less eligibly from the point of view of recovery?—It will be so; as far as I have personally thought it out, I think we cannot possibly feed all those; they ought to be made to do more than they do. It is difficult to arrange to do that while paying in each illness for private consultations; when they are relieved of that expenditure, but they ought to do that much for themselves; if they will not do that they should drop into the Poor Law class.

Existing adequacy of medical assistance poor children.

44634. (Chairman.) Going back to your scheme, you would want fresh Acts of Parliament, you would also have to get all the hospitals to combine, which you could only do by voluntary effort, and you would again have to get the doctors to co-operate with you. Those would be very very serious difficulties to get over, and some of them would be insuperable because it would depend on what the local feeling of the doctors was and the charitable organisations?—I am speaking only for my own district, but it is a typical one; the poor are not being treated properly now; if the children have measles they cannot be sent to any convalescent home, they are turned out of the fever hospital after six weeks with scarlet fever, and very miserable lives they lead for the next few months.

44686. You see no hope of improving it until you have got all the various authorities, both voluntary and public, who are now not in combination all in co-operation working one with the other?—That is the ideal, but every measure of co-operation is to the good; if we can only improve things 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. it means an immense amount of good to the health of the community.

Proposed universal system of insurance against sickness.

44687. (Mr. Booth.) I should like to be clear that I understand exactly what you mean by insurance with regard to sickness; the ordinary what is called sick benefit means a payment for carrying on the support of the family while work is perhaps impossible owing to sickness; you do not mean that at all?—I do not refer to it in any way.

44688. The ordinary medical club, which is another form of sick benefit, does not include any institutional treatment; that means merely the visit of the doctor?—For instance, in the London and North Western Railway it does, but speaking generally it does not; it only means the doctor and medicine.

44689. If your insurance is to include the treatment in an institution it necessarily includes the support, the food and all that. I imagine from what you have said in Paragraph 39, when you speak of women and your inquiry as to what they could pay for complete medical and surgical attendance, you do not include in that attendance the idea that they were to be transferred to a hospital in any case?—I did. Mr. H. B. Wilson. 12 Mar. 1907

44690. Because I do not know whether there are any actuarial calculations as to what it would cost to provide hospital treatment, but at any rate the ordinary terms on which these medical clubs are run would evidently not cover it?—They would not. Proposed universal system of insurance against sickness.

44691. You say in Paragraph 35 you believe the average artisan, and even labourer, is willing to pay; how much is he willing to pay, something or the cost of the treatment, because that refers to an institution I think? You say that all charitable donations to institutions would be to the good, and for all this you believe that the average artisan would be willing to pay. Do you mean pay actually what would be the cost of the institutional relief, or only make some kind of payment?—I have not calculated it out; I do not know what it would cost. I understand in Germany 3d. a week is sufficient for a man and his family; I understand that from Sir John Gorst's book. Willingness of lower classes to pay for medical assistance.

44692. What do they get?—From the initial consultation up to three years in a consumption sanatorium if necessary. I believe that even a labourer would pay a few pence a week for that purpose.

44693. If it were based on a universal and comprehensive scheme your opinion is that the payment would be small and the benefits large?—It is.

44694. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I ask you definitely whether you think that the lack of medical assistance for the poor leads to premature death?—Undoubtedly. Evils of inadequate medical assistance of the poor.

44695. And to preventable ill-health?—Undoubtedly.

44696. Therefore it does create destitution and pauperism?—Yes. The very attendance of a doctor helps to drag a family down under present conditions. Deficient medical assistance a cause of pauperism.

44698. Why should not they pay it out of the rates?—I do not personally approve of that. Objections to free medical relief.

44699. You are definitely under that impression?—I think it would sap the independence of people to pay it in their rates, and it would lead to political bribery.

44700. Does the provision of a fever hospital sap their independence?—We send them to the fever hospitals because under present conditions we will not have them out; they have no choice in the matter at all.

44701. With regard to sick clubs you give rather a black account of them in Paragraph 30 of your statement. Is it your deliberate opinion that the sort of medical advice which is given by these clubs is not efficient?—It is, in the medical clubs in our district qua medical clubs. Medical clubs as branches of the great friendly societies have a higher status. Question of quality of medical assistance given by medical clubs and friendly societies.

44702. But the doctors of these medical clubs do not give very efficient advice?—I think they do the best they can, they are over-worked and under-paid.

44703. The system leads to inefficient advice?—Yes, I admit that.

44704. (Mr. Bentham.) In sick cases that come under your notice do you inquire whether they are in receipt of Poor Law relief?—Our registrar does not do it, but I always try to find that out ultimately myself. Overlapping between Poor Law and charitable medical assistance.

44705. It is possible some of them are being attended by the district medical officer of the guardians and also by you?—Yes. There might be three doctors in, conceivably.

44706. If you knew would you refuse the case?—I should.

44707. That is you would leave them to the Poor Law if they were already attended by the district medical officer?—I never interfere with any existing treatment.

Mr. H. B. 44708. Do you think there are many people come Wilson. to you who prefer not to go to the district medical officer and come to you because of that ?—I will put it in this 12 Mar. 1907. way; there are many coming to us who prefer not to be under the Poor Law, because they regard it all as a part Deterrence of and parcel of pauperism.
medical relief.

44709. They feel they would rather accept service from a charitable institution than from the Poor Law ?—
Yes, because there is a touch of human kindness about it which there cannot be about the Poor Law.

Advantages 44710. Any State system might become the same, there of charitable is a perfunctory way of doing the business through official-over rate dom that people might resent, is that what you mean ?— assistance. That is a constant danger.

44711. You feel that when the work is done by a voluntary charitable organisation the people feel that they are receiving the personal kindness, as it were, of other people who are interested in them ?—Yes, they do.

44712. That is the whole basis of your charitable work, is it not ?—Yes. At the same time, if you had a district medical officer who was deeply interested in the health of his own district, he would like to help the poor in every possible way; he would to that extent be just as good as the officer of a charitable institution; I do not think there is any monopoly of kindness in the officers of charitable institutions. I should be sorry to think so.

Provisions 44713. With regard to nursing, do you provide nurses for nursing of to attend the homes of the people ?—Our resident mis-the poor in sionary's wife is not a trained nurse, but she does some Birmingham. nursing, and we can use trained district nurses, of course.

44714. That is paid for by your society ?—Yes, she is paid £77.

44715. Is there a district nursing association in Birmingham ?—Yes.

44716. Are there many nurses ?—I do not know how many they have, I should guess about thirty, but I do not really know. I have come across them and worked with them.

44717. Do the guardians make use of those nurses, do you know ?—I do not know, I think they do not.

Reference of 44718. The people you deal with evidently do not cases by bring you in touch with the other methods that obtain district or nursing or treating them medically ?—I not infre-medical quently come across district nurses, and I have had even officer to cases sent to me by the district medical officer that have charity for been referred by the district medical officer to the medical medical mission.
comforts, &c.

44719. (Mr. Gardiner.) On what ground, might I ask ?
—I cannot say; they have been and we have supplied them with cod liver oil and various things.

44720. For medical extras as they call them ?—Treatment as well.

44721. It is not only for food and nourishment, it is for treatment ?—Cod liver oil our committee considers medicine; we cannot give away much in the shape of extras.

Deterrence of 44722. (Mr. Bentham.) You mention a case of con-medical sumption which I understand you sent away, or rather relief. recommended for Blackwell Sanatorium ?—Yes.

44723. Does that mean that you actually gave a recommendation to this particular case to go for treatment ?
—I do not think he got there; it means I asked our lady secretary to try and get him there. We get several men there a year, but we have to beg for the notes, and they would be there for two weeks; three weeks in the winter.

44724. You say people have an objection to going inside an infirmary to be treated, even incurable cases of consumption have an objection to going inside ?—Yes.

44725. You would say it would be better for them to go in, would you not, and better for the family ?—
Certainly

44726. Would you use compulsion in those cases ?—I should, while seeking to humanise the treatment, and make it as much of a home as possible for the consumptive.

44727. (Mr. Phelps.) In your experience of work amongst the poor of Birmingham do you think you have noticed any change in the character of the people ?—I do not quite follow you.

44728. Do you think people are growing more provi-dent or less provident, for instance, the people you come in contact with ?—I think they are getting more outwardly respectable than they were; the adults are more outwardly respectable; the young people are not getting so, but they are better dressed outwardly.

44729. Do you find, for instance, that intemperance is Progres less rampant than it was ?—Among men I should say it temper was less; among women I am doubtful. I think there is amongst more drinking during the day. I frequently catch women lower cas drinking. I think there is more drinking amongst girls in factories than there was.

44730. What do you say as to gambling ?—It is very Prevalen prevalent indeed. If it is abolished in the streets it goes gamblin on up in the courts. I frequently see it going on.

44731. What do you think are the reasons for these Effects changes, what should you lay your finger on ?—The aggrega aggregation of great masses of people of a similar class of the together, all studying the same literature and absorbing refined.
the same ideals, who are being steadily divorced from all country influence, poetry, and refinement of every kind.

44732. Do you find the housing question acute in The ho Birmingham ?—I should not call it acute, and I think difficul it is being very well dealt with. Our courts or streets in Birmin are being steadily improved by the housing committee of the council without creating a house famine.

44733. Are they dealing with the courts ?—They are turning the courts into terraces to a large extent, they are substituting pan closets for water closets, and providing internal water supplies, internal pantries, and trapping the drains, and exposing the court to police supervision, and the access of air and light; not only is this what the corporation itself does which is good, but it stimulates others.

44734. Do you think the Poor Law as administered Questio at present has much effect on the character of your the effe people ?—I have not traced any special influence at all. Poor L 44735. Do you think it tends to make them thrifless on char having the Poor Law to fall back upon ?—I do not think of the p so. I have not traced it. I think they avoid the Poor Law as much as they can; there are cases where people take advantage of it of course.

44736. With regard to outdoor relief, have you many Policy cases in your area of people receiving out-relief ?—Out- Birmin door relief is sternly discouraged in Birmingham. Guardi 44737. Do you think with good effect ?—I think so on to out-the whole. It is sternly discouraged, but they will make relief exceptions. For instance I had to treat an old prize and res fighter, and by getting 2s. 6d. from his employer the Birmingham Guardians were able to provide 2s. 6d., and thus the old-age pension was secured. I got a similar thing out of the Midland Railway Company for one of their men, that is all the result of medical work.

44738. What is the basis of your institution ?—It was The co really started thirty-two years ago to exert a religious nition of influence on the poor, and that the medical work should religious be a handmaid to that; there was to be no compulsion in medic any way; it was founded on the basis of medical missions in charita abroad, it is a kind of pioneer of religious work in the slums. work.

44739. The medical work which you do is a means of attracting people to the other influences that are brought to bear ?—I should not say so much attracting as providing an opportunity for making the people accessible to all kinds of effort which will help them socially, physically and morally.

44740. You would not put the physical and moral improvements side by side as equally your aim ?—I think I should say so. We drill girls and boys, we have an ambulance brigade, we have a cycle club and several things of that kind.

44741. What I want to get at is whether you think the medicine leads to the morals or the morals to the medicine, so to speak; which comes first in your scheme ?
—We seek to give the best medical treatment within our power as an out-patient dispensary to as many people as we can who are sufficiently poor to deserve it ; they have to come to the mission free, we seek to help them to see to themselves, their homes and their children. Some attend our meetings afterwards, but the vast majority do not. We refer them back to their clergy or minister, we send children to school, and so on.

44742. Should you say as a result of your experience that you look for improvement mainly to the personal influence ?—Yes, I should.

44743. Do you see your way to any system by which that could be combined with Government ?—I do, from my point of view ; I think that if you had your health districts small enough and that your new district medical officer was sufficiently trained to understand the elementary laws of hygiene and also the treatment of Poor Law cases as we do at present, and treat them himself, that he would take such an interest in the poor for the sake of his district and as a citizen that he would treat them in a different way from what he does now when he only functions as one element in their treatment.

44744. Would the crowning success of your efforts be that we should have medical officers who also be moral missionaries ?—I do not know what you mean by "moral," I do not think they would preach.

Mr. H. B.
Wilson.

44745. Whose object would be to raise the standard of life ?—Certainly, I believe they would have an enormous influence because they would deal with the unit. We want to deal with the individual ; if the same man not only treated the patient but had a right to go into the homes and see that everything was done properly he would then have an influence he has not to-day ; and if he or any other medical man knew of a nuisance in a court, he would go into that court and see that that was set right at once.

44746. I see what you mean in that way quite ; do you think we could ever have a medical service of which you could guarantee that it would go a good deal beyond medicine, and take a personal interest in the characters and doings, and so forth, of the patients ?—I think we could.

44747. You would look forward to that ?—Yes, I should have that as a definite ideal.

44748. That would be your idea of the medical mission in its highest development ?—Yes.

Mr. FRANCIS WILLIAM DANIELS, called ; and Examined.

44749. (Chairman.) You are the General Secretary of the Ideal Benefit Society of Birmingham ?—I am.

44750. You have prepared a statement which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence in chief ?—Very well.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. Previous to coming to Birmingham, fifteen years ago, I was the head-master of the British School at Ebley, near Stroud, Gloucestershire.

2. While there I took a great interest in the welfare, not only of the children, but also in that of their parents, and was actively engaged in nearly every institution of the district which had that object in view : mutual improvement societies, savings bank, building society, sick benefit society, promoted an industrial and horticultural society and the like.

3. Coming to Birmingham, what struck me most forcibly was the general lack of thrift amongst the working classes. While the industrial conditions were far in advance of those I had left behind, while there was much more employment, while the wages were also very much higher, in most cases quite 50 per cent., while clothing, food, in fact everything except rent was cheaper, yet, proportionately, I should question whether the savings of the working classes would average 25 per cent. of those in the district I had left.

4. In seeking for a cause I was forced to the following conclusions :—

(a) The great love of pleasure and excitement of the people.

(b) The purely local friendly societies had just been declared financially unsound.

(c) The small number of what I should call real self-help societies.

(d) The prevalence of money clubs which yielded large profits, encouraging speculation rather than thrift. Most of these have since come to an end.

(e) The bad and demoralising influence of philanthropic and benevolent societies upon the working classes (as distinguished from the poverty-stricken people), caused by too much reliance upon those agencies. The people under the influence of such organisations became the most unstable in character, the least self-reliant, and the natural consequence was that they were deeper in debt with the tradespeople than any other portion of the community.

5. Of the "slums" of Birmingham, I only know through religious agencies, and have had no experience of Poor Law administration in those areas, but I should not hesitate to say that quite nine-tenths of the poverty is caused through drink and gambling, and that the real, as distinguished from the preventable, poverty in Birmingham could easily be dealt with by the various religious denominations, if they would sink their differences and look after defined districts. The loafer and wastrel would then be very soon unearthed. This is, however, quite outside my work.

6. My work, as I have designed it, is the inculcation of the habit and practice of thrift amongst the working classes, and with that object in view I have spent thirteen or fourteen years in hard work, chiefly in building up the Ideal Benefit Society.

Daniels.

7. Getting a number of friends and colleagues round me, I conceived the plan which I felt sure, if we could popularise, would protect the workman under all conditions, and while we are now only just maturing my fully-conceived scheme, yet what has been done in operation has already worked wonders.

8. Before starting I approached Alderman the Right Hon. William Kenrick to be our President. He, however, made it a condition of taking the post that the scheme should be actuarially examined. This was immediately done, and it came successfully through the ordeal.

9. The scheme is for men and women, who, however, are kept in separate sections, each retaining to themselves the financial results they earn. There are seven classes, to suit the varying conditions of age and position, ranging from $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 3d. per day, with corresponding benefits and results. The basis is Class 3, or 1d. per day.

benefits, etc.

10. The scheme is intended to enable members to make substantial provision for sickness, old age and death. A member joining at sixteen in Class 3 would pay 30s. 4d. per annum. The 5s. 4d. is estimated to pay for the sick benefits (viz., 10s. per week) and for the management, leaving a surplus of 25s. per annum. This continues until the member reaches thirty-one years of age, after which he has to pay a slightly increased contribution, viz., an increase every year of $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per annum amounting in the total up to 65 to £16. 2s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. in the class I am describing, with corresponding increases in the other classes, continuing until sixty-five, when the membership ceases. This additional payment after thirty-one is calculated to pay for the increased sickness risk, as the member grows older, and maintains the surplus of 25s. per annum at all ages, so that every member is really paying for his sick benefits and also for a surplus of 25s. per annum.

11. This brings about three results :—

Advantages of scheme of contributions

(a) Perfect equality of membership. The members as they grow older pay for becoming so, and thus no portion of their benefits is chargeable upon the contributions of the younger members.

(b) It secures financial soundness. This must be so, for every member at all ages pays for his sickness risk and the surplus.

(c) As a result of (b), there is no need of an accumulated or reserve fund, but the whole of the surpluses estimated at 25s. per annum in Class 3 are set aside and placed to the credit of the individual member. For instance, if the contributions for 1906 came to £20,000, out of that amount the cost of sickness and management would be first taken, and the balance, whatever it was, would be divided proportionately, according to their classes, amongst the members, and put to their individual credit. It is this annual surplus, together with the compound interest, that accumulates and makes the provision for old age. The investments have up to the present yielded 5 per cent. interest.

12. Membership ceases at sixty-five, when the member has two options:—

(a) Either to have a Government annuity purchased for him, or (b) he can receive the amount standing to his credit in full.

13. It is estimated in the class I have been describing that a youth joining at sixteen would accumulate about £250 on reaching sixty-five, in addition to receiving sick pay when entitled to it, an amount which would, at sixty-five years of age, purchase an annuity of about 10s. per week.

14. If the member died before sixty-five years of age his accumulations are payable to his friends. Should he resign or lapse his membership, the amount standing to his credit is paid him, less the accumulations of the last two years. Of course, this forfeiture renders the society absolutely sound. For instance, at the end of 1905 £64,000 was standing to the credit of the individual members; if all had resigned, roughly speaking about £50,000 would have been required to pay them out, leaving a margin of £14,000, which would be ample in case the assets of the society had to be realised.

15. The only real difficulty in advocating the claims of the society has been the question of the increased payment after thirty-one. While every financial authority would immediately recognise that these increased payments are the secret of the whole of what the society can offer to its members, yet these payments are a difficulty which probably would be felt by some as the members grew older. The increased contributions from thirty-one to sixty-five, over and above the ordinary subscription, come to a total of £16 2s. 3½d., and of course are heaviest towards the end of the membership. This difficulty has been met partially by pointing out the great advantages arising from the increased payments and the splendid results achieved.

16. Two years ago I formulated and introduced a table which gave the present worth of all future increased payments at every age. For instance, £4 9s. 10d. paid at twenty years of age will pay up the whole of the increased subscriptions, viz., £16 2s. 3½d. When it is remembered that under this table members can at any time withdraw the balance of the fund by giving a week's notice, and that the amount can always be ascertained by consulting the table, the only objection to such a table at once vanishes. Of course, withdrawal of the fund places the member back under the ordinary rules. It is interesting to know that in less than two years three hundred members have paid up all their increased contributions, and the number doing so is rapidly increasing.

17. A similar table has been prepared to pay up all future contributions at every age on precisely similar lines and conditions as the table for paying up the increased payments.

18. Further, to enable members to obtain the amount required to avail themselves of these benefits, we have registered, under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act a savings bank. A member at twenty saving 1s. per week for two years would accumulate more than enough to pay up all his future increases. While members after passing thirty, who find it impossible to save, and yet wish to free themselves of the increased contributions, can transfer from their own appropriations or savings in the society, such an amount as will place them in benefit under this table.

19. One of the greatest attractions of the society is the fact that we offer unique facilities for members to purchase or build their own dwellings. To find a ready and remunerative investment for our funds we advance on mortgage to our members, to assist them to get their own homes, and as the members have an individual interest in the society, which very rapidly increases, we can give them far more assistance than can any building society, at and the same time with absolute security.

20. Already hundreds of members have purchased their houses in this way, a good many have already completely paid for them, for while we only insist upon a small repayment, amounting to about the ordinary rental, yet members can pay back as rapidly as they like. Up to the present time all our funds have been invested in this way, Ideal Benefit and we have recently entered into an arrangement with the Society. Birmingham City Council to take over a small leasehold estate of 17½ acres, together with 11¼ acres of freehold land adjoining, which we have also purchased to make into a Garden Suburb for our members.

21. This short statement of facts will, I fear, cause many questions and criticisms, but space prevents answers being given here, but I should like to tabulate the following observations:—

(a) Our members are nearly all of the labouring Classes and artisan class, perhaps 50 per cent. not earning above 30s. per week. belonging to Society

(b) We have no honorary members, nor do we receive subscriptions from non-members for any purpose whatever. It is purely and entirely a self-help society developed and worked on business lines. Our members would regard it as an insult if we were assisted in either of the foregoing ways.

(c) The society has, no doubt, been extremely successful in encouraging thrift amongst a large body of working-men, and has exercised a considerable influence on the other self-help organisations in the city. In proof of this a portion of our members some five years ago subscribed capital for the starting of a mutual bakery, which is probably the largest and best equipped in the Midlands. While our bank, already referred to, has been very largely patronised, I think it would be very easy to raise from amongst our members £20,000 in a month for any well-thought-out scheme for their mutual benefit and improvement. Encourage ment of this a result of the society.

(d) We have paid nothing for the getting of members. I have attended hundreds of public meetings, large and small, to discuss the principles of the society. We have made about 11,000 members in twelve years, chiefly through the personal influence of the members. Methods of increasing membership.

(e) No meetings are held at public-houses.

(f) We have found when men have saved a few pounds it appears to increase their self-respect and importance, and sets them thinking, the result being a general development in other directions and an improvement in their habits all round. Not 5 per cent. of our members resign or lapse; a few—certainly not more than 1 per cent.—resign to get at their money, chiefly when in difficulties. Effect of saving on character. Proportion of members lapsing.

(g) Being a mutual society we find malingering almost unknown, and as a consequence the sickness risk is correspondingly benefited. Members will not see anyone robbing them without reporting them. Malingering unknown.

(h) The common feeling towards sick societies is that a man is justified in getting as much money as he can out of his society; this does not exist in our case, because the sick benefit is not the only object in view.

(i) So successful has the society been in Birmingham that recently we have re-organised it with the object of making it into a national one. Proposal to make society national.

(j) Every member is supplied annually with an exact statement of his accumulation as it stands in the books of the society.

(k) We do not grant loans on account of the members' accumulations, as we try to teach them to religiously hoard them up for old age. We know that to grant loans would weaken the object which we have in view. Sometimes, however, we grant small loans from our bank to meet temporary emergencies. This, however, is viewed in an altogether different light from what it would be if the loan was granted from the society, inasmuch as the loans from the bank have to be repaid in a given time. While the feeling would be, if granted on account of the members' interest in the society, that they were only using their own money. Extent of loan operations.

22. Briefly summarised, my experiences on the question of the promotion of thrift amongst the working classes in building up this society are:—

(a) Benevolent and philanthropic organisations weaken the self-respect and character of working men. Effect of charity on character of recipient.

(b) The best way to help a working man is to show him how to help himself.

deal Benefit Society.

Attitude of working classes to old-age pensions.

Need of popularising Post Office Annuities.

Proposed extension of benefits to widows and children of members.

Number, class, and wages of members.

Contributions increasing with age and difficulties thereto.

(c) The accumulation of a very small capital increases the self-respect of every man who saves it.

(d) I have found the labouring class as a body as thrifty as the artisan class. It is not a question so much of income or position as the acquisition of the habit.

(e) If the preventable poverty and want was dealt with and abolished, real poverty would be comparatively very small, and could easily be dealt with.

(f) Distress organisations for the relief of working men out of work I have found very demoralising. In case of hard weather in the winter philanthropy would be very much better occupied in promoting temporary unskilled industries. Very many articles for every-day use could be made with very little training and supervision, while these enterprises might be made nearly, if not quite, self-supporting. The loafer and vagabond would not like this method, but it would be well if those who would not work should not eat.

(g) While personally in favour of old age pensions for the deserving poor, and while I find the working classes generally are not averse to them, yet there is no enthusiasm amongst the bona fide working man, largely, I believe, because 75 per cent. would not live to enjoy them. I think the State, even if it provided old age pensions, would be conferring a far greater benefit upon the working population if they held out inducements and encouragements for working people to provide for their old age, and it would immensely popularise the system if the assured should not reach the age limit, that the amount standing to his credit should be payable to his friends.

(h) If the Post Office Annuity and Life Assurance tables were made popular by giving them more publicity, and with fixed surrender values, it would be a step in the right direction and be an immense step forward.

ADDENDUM.

23. A Future Development.—Our society protects its members at all points except one. For instance, if a member joins us at twenty, he can look forward to an accumulation of about £200 when he reaches sixty-five. Should he die at thirty-five, his membership has not been sufficiently long to make provision for his wife and family. We are anxious to make it possible for a member to protect his family, and that, from the very first day he becomes a member, he should be covered by the £200, which he would receive at sixty-five if he lived, as a provision for his wife and family if death should occur at any age before reaching that age.

The principle is that at first the member should be covered for the £200 assurance, but just in the same proportion that his accumulations increased, so the covering of insurance should decrease as follows:—

AGES - - -	20.	30.	40.	50.	60.
Accumulations (approximately)	£ nil.	£ s. d. 15 14 4	£ s. d. 41 6 6	£ s. d. 83 0 9	£ s. d. 199 12 1
Insurance (approximately)	200	184 5 8	153 13 6	116 19 3	nil.

We constructed an insurance table, in which the amount assured decreased £2 per cent., per annum, which nearly approximates to the above. The annual premium at twenty would be 13s. 6d. per cent. The difficulty of making the insurance exactly cover the difference between his accumulation and the £200, arises from the fact that the accumulations are variable, being dependent upon the annual surplus of 25s., and the earning of 5 per cent.

The registry of this table was deferred on the suggestion of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, in order to try ordinary insurance first, and also because there had been no previous experience of such a scheme.

44751. (Chairman.) You have given us some interesting particulars of the Benefit Society you started in Birmingham. How many members are there at the present moment belonging to it?—11,000 in Birmingham.

44752. You state that nearly 50 per cent. of your members are of the labouring and artisan classes not earning above 30s. a week?—That is so.

44753. Putting the smaller considerations on one side, I think the great feature of your society is that the contributions increase as the person gets older?—That is so.

44754. Have you had much difficulty in getting compliance with that?—We have not up to the present time, but I anticipate it as the members grow older, therefore we have met that difficulty by formulating and introducing a table which gives the present worth of all future increased contributions, which can be paid when the members are young.

44755. You have rather reversed it, you have made the payments heavier when members are young?—Not exactly that; in Class 3, which is a payment of a penny a day, the increased contributions from thirty-one up to sixty-five come to a total of £16 2s. 3d.; I introduced a table a couple of years ago to enable a young man if he cares to do so to pay up the whole of that increased contribution of £16 2s. 3d.; the present worth of £16 2s. 3d. would be £4 9s. 10d. if paid at the age of twenty years.

44756. Have most of your members come in early, or do you get any persons of tolerably middle age?—When the society was first started the members were nearly all middle-aged men simply because they were the thoughtful part of the community, but now young men come in, and form the great majority of the new members.

44757. Is there much migration in Birmingham; do they move about from one place to another?—Yes, quite one-third of our members change their residences, many of whom leave the city, and they are not by any means the poorer part of the working classes; I should say quite one-third of the membership moves every year.

44758. As a rule, do they fall out of the society?—No.

44759. They still continue to pay?—Yes; we have members to-day all over the country.

44760. Do you give them a surrender value?—Yes.

44761. You attach great importance to inculcating the habit of saving early in life?—Yes.

44762. I suppose your experience goes to show that when they have begun to save a little the habit of saving increases?—Yes, it increases all the way round.

44763. And the pride in the little savings increases?—That is so.

44764. You have 11,000 members now; have many dropped out?—Not more than 2½ per cent. per annum.

44765. Are your accounts audited every year?—Yes, by a chartered accountant.

44766. You have combined a number of advantages which seem to be appreciated; you have enabled houses to be acquired, and in that part of your work you have lost very little money?—No money at all.

44767. You find if they are taken early in life that the labouring classes are as thrifty as the artisan classes?—Yes, those I have come in contact with.

44768. How low down in the scale of wages do you think a man could be who belonged to your society?—We have them as low as 15s. and 18s. a week. We have seven classes, the lowest class is ½d. per day and the highest class 3d.

44769. What does the ½d. a day member get?—5s. a week in time of sickness.

44770. What would he get for a pension?—We estimate the annual profits would be 12s. 6d.; in that case they would work out at about 5s. at the age of sixty-five, if membership commenced at 16. Very few members indeed contribute for less than 1d. per day; the average, I should think, would be 1½d. per day.

44771. You do not divide at the end of the year if they want it?—No; we practically divide all our funds, but instead of being paid out they are put back to the credit of the individual members.

44772. We had some evidence the other day from the benefit societies and they told us that there was a considerable change of opinion with regard to State old-age pensions; that until recently the benefit societies had been rather hostile, but apparently their views have changed, and mainly so because they think it would relieve them of the very considerable burden of the sick pay which becomes almost permanent for aged people?—That is so.

44773. What is your view, looking at it from the point of view of your society?—I do not think it would affect our members at all. In fact if there was a 5s. pension at the age of sixty-five paid by the State, I think it would rather encourage thrift amongst the type of persons who form our membership.

- Mr. F. W. Daniels.* 44774. You would keep them going up to sixty-five ?
—Quite so.
- 12 Mar. 1907. 44775. Do you think, supposing there was a prospect of an old-age pension, it would stimulate amongst a good many men the desire to save in order to get that ?—I certainly think so. The one great drawback to the old-age pension system as generally advocated is this : there is not very much interest among the working people in the question, for this reason : they feel that quite 75 per cent. of the working classes would never reap any benefit from that system. What I think would be a good deal better is that all should have to contribute to an old-age pension ; and there should be a surrender value of the amount which they pay.
- Ideal Benefit Society. 44776. You mean so many die before sixty-five ?
Effect of old-age pensions on thrift. Quite so, quite 75 per cent.
- Need of surrender value for old-age pensions. 44777. (Mr. Booth.) Are you sure of that ?—I think so.
- Large proportion of working classes dying before 65. 44778. (Chairman.) 75 per cent. of the working classes die before sixty-five ?—That is so.
44779. (Miss Hill.) Where do you get those figures ; do you know at all what they are based upon ?—Nothing more than general reading ; I have studied this question for a good many years.
44780. (Chairman.) If you could send us on any evidence bearing on this question we should be glad, because it is new to us ?—I certainly will. (See Appendix No XIX. (A.))
- Capacity of Society to pay pensions. 44781. You give either an annuity or a lump sum when they get to a certain age ?—That is so.
44782. A lump sum is more popular, is that your experience ?—The Society has only been in existence thirteen years, so that we cannot tell, the Society is a comparatively new one.
44783. Are you paying any pensions now ?—No.
44784. You are only paying sick pay ?—Yes.
44785. Will the funds stand the pensions do you think ?
—I do not think there is a doubt about it.
- Preference of beneficiaries for lump sum rather than annuity. 44786. What is the reason that the lump sum is preferred to the annuity, is it because it gives the man something to play with or with which he can start his children in life ?—Any wise man would prefer a lump sum, for this reason, he can do better with it than to purchase a Government annuity ; a Government annuity is assessed at a very low rate of interest to start with.
44787. And of course he may die. If he is short-lived he would die before he could get the full benefit ?—That is so.
- Prospect of increased membership and class of members. 44788. Do you think that you have covered the ground very much in Birmingham, or do you hope to go on increasing ?—I think we shall double our membership very quickly. The evidence we have in Birmingham, at any rate from the corporation, is that we have the cream of the working class of Birmingham at the present moment.
- Question of improvement of conditions of labour. 44789. And you say that the condition of skilled labour has improved ?—I think so.
44790. What should you say of the class below ?—Personally I think the working classes have improved all round.
44791. Take first the section of the stratum of unskilled labour next the artisan ?—I think so.
44792. Would you come down to casuals and the lower classes ?—I cannot speak with any authority of the lowest class.
44793. You do not come in contact with that ?—No, Dr. Wilson would do that.
44794. Taking the two strata of which I have spoken, and of which you have experience, would you say their position was better ?—Most decidedly so.
44795. The price of commodities is much lower ?—Everything is much cheaper.
- Scheme for State to take over work of friendly societies old-age pensions, insurance, etc. 44796. Is there anything further you would like to tell us particularly ; your paper is a very clear one ?—I should like to say this, looking at the marvellous success of the Post Office Savings Bank and the Postal Department, I have for years felt that the State, either in conjunction with the foregoing or by a department worked on similar lines should take over the question of thrift, combining in one the work of a friendly society, old-age pensions and insurance. I am familiar with all the various proposals for the provision of old-age pensions, both at home and abroad, and while in principle I am in favour of a general scheme, yet I believe their establishment would greatly discourage thrift, and disastrously weaken self-help amongst the lower working classes. Amongst the thrifty artisan classes I believe it would probably have the opposite effect. Rather I think the State would make it easy to get them. Every working man appears to recognise the necessity of belonging to a sick society, but, as at present existing, great reforms are necessary. Collecting societies on account of their waste and expense should be abolished. Dividend or slate clubs should be ended because of their unreliability. The cumulative societies have got out of touch with present day requirements, while the giving of old-age sick pay threatens to ruin them. They cannot reform, the vested interests are too strong. A great weakness in all these societies, too, is the feeling very largely prevailing amongst their members that it is quite legitimate to get as much as possible out of their societies. Would it not be possible for a Government scheme to be formulated to provide for sickness, old-age and death ? I have longed and dreamed for such a system, absorbing all existing societies. The premiums or payments could be divided into two parts, or three if insurance was included. First for the provision of sick pay ; second, for the provision of old-age pay ; third, the premium for insurance. Surrender values should be given in all the funds, in case of decease in Nos. 1 and 2, and in the event of discontinuance in No. 3. If the insurance was not included in the above the Post Office insurance tables should be framed so as to give surrender values. I believe it would be a boon and would absorb the present altogether unsatisfactory industrial insurance. Could some such Government scheme be established, it would solve the old-age pensions outcry, while the State provision for sickness and old age would save untold loss to the working classes, promote absolute confidence, and I feel convinced would prove as great a success as the present splendid work of the General Post Office. Of course there are difficulties, but not, I think, nearly so great as the establishment of the Penny Post, while the great advantages, certain to be realised, would be of untold benefit to the nation.
44797. Just working that idea out a little, would the State contribute ?—I think not.
44798. It would simply give its machinery ?—I think so.
44799. What would happen to existing benefit societies ?
—I think the sooner they ceased to exist the better. I am speaking of my own equally with the others.
44800. Independent of the actual work they do in the way of insurance, are not these benefit societies very useful in keeping together bodies of men ?—I think not. Those of us who know most of the working of these friendly societies, particularly dividing societies or slate clubs and industrial insurance companies, are thoroughly disgusted ; there is a very great waste extravagance and disappointment in the whole of them.
44801. The trade unions would remain the same ?
—Quite so.
44802. You would have proper societies or unions growing up, if they are not in existence, in connection with each branch of trade ?—Yes.
44803. The State would only give facilities for the encouragement of thrift ?—That has been my view for years.
44804. You do not insure against unemployment ?
—No.
44805. Would you have the State do that ?—No. I should rather provide employment.
44806. But that is not so easy ?—I think it is.
44807. Irregularity of employment, I think we are constantly told, is perhaps the most fertile source of pauperism ?—Yes, but I think the greatest cause of want of employment is drinking ; drinking and gambling are the primary causes of practically all the mischief.
44808. It takes a good many years to eradicate that ?
—That may be, I am quite aware of that.
44809. (Sir Samuel Provis.) When you said you thought that unemployment should not exist, because you would provide employment, do you mean that you think that the 44812. Do you mind expanding that a little; on what ground do you think that?—I think if working men as a rule had 5s. a week to look forward to they would try to save to increase that amount. The older societies have done an immense amount of good; I should not like to bracket them with the dividing societies; I would not do that for a moment. What I say of the older societies is that they possess great weaknesses; first, only about 25 per cent. of those who save the accumulations get any return; secondly, a man never improves his financial position; and thirdly, the giving of old age sick pay is very ruinous; the latter is the chief cause of the deficiencies in these societies.

44826. They are all part and parcel of your society?—Yes.

44827. So with the exception of the mutual bakery, you have introduced a number of features?—Yes, I have also built up the bakery.

44828. Does that make any difference in the stability of your society?—None whatever; every new feature has added to it. Mr. F. W. Daniels.

12 Mar. 1907.

44829. Have you had any statutory valuation of it?—As a matter of fact the principle is this; you do not need Ideal Benefit actuarial examination, for this reason; owing to their Society. increased contributions after thirty years of age (of course there is an increased risk as you grow older), every member is paying for his benefits and for a value of surplus at all ages, the only unknown quantity is the Ideal Benefit size of that surplus. Thirteen years ago we were of Society. opinion that we could rely on 25s. a share.

44830. It would give greater confidence to the public if there was this valuation?—How can you have it? For this reason, I have £70 standing to my credit, but another man of my age might only have £20, so how can you have that valuation? My share, therefore, is controlled by my contributions and length of membership. I pay an increased contribution each year to provide for my increased risks.

44831. They are conditions which render a valuation almost impossible?—There is no need for a valuation simply because every member at every age is paying a contribution sufficient to pay for his benefit and to produce a uniform surplus at all ages.

44833. (Dr. Downes.) If the management of such a society as yours passed to the State, would there not be a danger of some loss of initiative?—Yes; possibly there would be a lack of personal enthusiasm. Every one of our members is a missionary and an enthusiast, so that there might be that danger. Effect of society as yours passed to the State, would there not be a danger of some loss of initiative?—Yes; possibly there would be a lack of personal enthusiasm. Every one of our members is a missionary and an enthusiast, so that there might be that danger.

44834. For example, this off-shoot of your mutual bakery?—That is so, but the fact that each member would have every year a personal growing account creates enthusiasm.

44835. And you would balance the one against the other?—That is so.

44836. (Mr. Bentham.) I take it your desire is to encourage thrift in people by any proposal you have to make?—That is so; and it is solely that.

44837. You think that providing an old-age pension at a given age would encourage thrift, that is to say, it would encourage saving in order to add to it?—Certainly, but on one condition, namely, that if a man did not reach that age there should be a surrender value. There is not an incentive to save if it is merely to be got at sixty-five. For instance, if a man died at forty-five I think there should be a surrender value of his payments to his friends. You take away the incentive to save if the man feels that he may have no personal interest in it. Effect of old-age pensions encourage saving in order to add to it?—Certainly, but on one condition, namely, that if a man did not reach that age there should be a surrender value. There is not an incentive to save if it is merely to be got at sixty-five. For instance, if a man died at forty-five I think there should be a surrender value of his payments to his friends. You take away the incentive to save if the man feels that he may have no personal interest in it.

44838. That is, an old-age pension should be based upon a surrender value at an earlier age for the benefit of his family?—Yes.

44839. Supposing it was a State pension, there could be no such surrender value unless there were contributions? Yes; that is so, but I should prefer the State to encourage the saving of the money by the working classes.

44840. Are you thinking of a system of old-age pensions that would be got by contributions during life?—I think the State would be doing a great work if it encouraged this, or a similar organisation, if you like, to our own. I am not speaking about the giving of general old-age pensions; I am not touching on that at all for the moment.

44841. Then State old-age pensions is not under your ken at all?—I was not thinking of that then.

44842. My question was with regard to State pensions?—I do not think they will ever be popular, or in any way encourage thrift, or have a tendency to elevate the masses unless they have surrender values. That is my view.

44843. What would be the effect of State pensions without contributions on the habits of the people?—It would have very little effect, I think, except to the betterment of the working classes. I think that it would stimulate an additional saving to add to the pension amongst the better part of the working classes; but the lower ones, I think, would go on quite indifferently.

44844. That is to say, a thrifty-minded person who is inclined to save for old age would not be influenced at all, would he, by the knowledge of the fact that he would get 5s. a week?—I think he would; 5s. plus something that he might save himself would be a considerable help.

44845. But there is really less interest for him to save if he is going to have a sure 5s.?—There is always this feeling of uncertainty that a man never knows what is going to turn up amongst the working men.

44846. Is not the feeling of uncertainty the reason why he saves?—That is the reason why it would stimulate him to save and add to his pension.

44847. If you remove the uncertainty to the extent of 5s., one would expect he would save less?—I do not quite follow you there. My experience leads me in the opposite direction.

44848. I understand you do not approve of State pensions without contributions?—I should not care to go so far as that. I am in favour of general pensions all the way round, but I do not advocate them keenly.

44849. What effect on thrift do you think State medical relief would have?—We do not believe in giving anything for nothing. A man does not value anything whatever that he does not pay for. That is my experience.

44850. Do you think that a free system of medical relief is pauperising?—I certainly do.

44851. Do you look upon it as equally pauperising whether given through a municipality or through a board of guardians?—Certainly.

44852. Or in any other way, if a man could possibly provide for it by his own energy?—Certainly.

44853. (Miss Hill.) You say your members are scattered in various places now, and that some of them have left Birmingham?—That is so.

44854. Do you accept members from other parts of the country?—Yes.

44855. What is your machinery for managing those?—I did not come here to advertise our society. We are just nationalising the society. We have remodelled our rules and had them passed by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, and we are dividing the country up into twenty sections, appointing divisional secretaries in each. That was begun on the 1st January of this year. It is too early to say very much about it, but we are going to gradually organise the whole country.

44856. And you are doing all you can to bring it under the general regulations for benefit societies?—Yes, that is so.

44857. How many, do you think, of these 11,000 members owe their enrolment to the individual enthusiasm of those who started the thing—a good many, I suppose, necessarily?—Everyone, as a matter of fact. We have never paid a penny for the getting of a new member.

44858. Do you find it growing in other neighbourhoods?—Yes, wherever it is started. The difficulty is to devote the time to it. This has been my hobby. I am engaged in business, and I have two or three businesses in addition that I am answerable for. If I could devote my whole time to it, I think I could very soon spread it throughout the whole country.

44859. You seem to have thought out very carefully all the things which really would discourage working people from saving?—That is so.

44860. It seems to me, reading your statement, that you have met all the things which seem to come in the way of working people saving?—What I have endeavoured to do is to protect the working men on all points.

44861. You have worked on the principle of encouraging them, for instance, to pay this money down when young instead of leaving it, and so paying a smaller sum because they pay it soon?—That is so. I looked at my books before I came away this morning, and I find that in fifteen months 300 have paid up the whole of their increased contributions.

44862. I suppose, in reference to your building scheme, it is rather like a building society?—Frankly, if you get a lot of money, you are faced with the trouble of investing it to the best advantage. I maintain that the people whose money you are handling should have the full benefit of it. The fact that each person in our society has a personal account accumulating every year, enables us to lend to our members money to get their own homes on a great deal more liberal scale than an ordinary building society can. So that you see we introduced this scheme first of all as a medium for investing our own funds, and in the second place as a means of encouraging members in getting their own homes.

44863. What part does Mr. Kenrick play in the concern?—He is president and he knows as much about the society as I do. I keep him informed of every development and often seek his advice.

44864. He is interesting himself in everything connected with it, is he?—Certainly.

44865. Is that the Mr. Kenrick who lives at Edgbaston?—That is so. He is brother-in-law to Mr. Joseph Chamberlain.

44866. Have any separate societies started, or are all the people in the various places who have adopted it members of your society?—There are other societies who have the system of increased contributions but only ours with the other developments.

44867. So that those that are scattered about have not formed other societies?—No, not independent societies.

44868. Do you think the natural development would be the extension of this one society or the formation of others in various districts?—There is a difficulty in having small isolated districts. There is not the stability, for instance, that you may get otherwise in a large society covering a considerable area.

44869. And you do not get the average that you want?—That is so. There is a difficulty, of course, in starting them. You also cannot get public spirited men in sufficient numbers, I think, to start these societies. There is a good deal of self denial and a good deal of perseverance required to build them up.

44870. (Mr. Booth.) I gather that you do not undertake that any actual sum of money or benefit shall fall due at sixty-five; it merely is that there will be at that time an accumulation which will belong to the men?—That is so.

44871. And consequently actuarially, as you have said, there is nothing to settle?—That is so.

44872. Because the only thing that you absolutely undertake to do is to supply the sick benefit?—That is so.

44873. And the rest is the surplus, after having supplied the sick benefit?—That is so. Up to the present time there has been no difficulty whatever, and no trouble in realising the 25s.

44874. Up to now you have, as a matter of fact, met your obligations with regard to sickness at the estimated rate?—That is so.

44875. Do you think that your members have been exceptionally free from sickness?—Not more than others, but then we are extremely careful whom we admit into the society. We have a very careful medical examination.

44876-8. The rate appears to be a very low one?—Yes, but it must be remembered that after thirty, there is the continuous increased contribution every year, that is estimated to pay for the extra cost of the sick risk.

44879. That is the idea, that up to thirty you have the minimum risk of sickness, and that after thirty an extra contribution covers the additional risk?—Yes.

44880. The initial rate is, as a matter of fact, a very low rate, as I suppose you are aware?—I am quite aware of it. I have discussed the question in debate with the members of other friendly societies scores of times. As a matter of fact the rate is low for the simple reason that there is no inducement to the members of our society to malingering. That is a very great feature. It pays a member to keep off the funds as much as possible in view of the surplus which comes back to him at the end of the year.

Benefit Society. Question of malingering. 44881. That is, after all sickness is paid for, of course; it would not only be in the case of his own sickness, but it would also be to his interest to see that nobody else malingerers?—That is so.

44882. The man who did malingering would gain, of course, at the expense of his fellows?—It is questionable whether a man could malingering for many days without being reported.

44883. To some extent it is the case in all friendly societies that they look after each other, is it not?—I do not think so—not in the older ones so much as in ours, at any rate.

44884. As a matter of fact you have so far always found your 25s. ?—Yes.

44885. Have you ever found more?—Yes, it has gone up to 28s. but that was in the earlier years, and it is not fair to quote that.

44886. Has it often been less?—It has never been below 25s. I may say that this is not a new principle, the increased contributions. Sir Michael Hicks Beach was the Grand Master of a society in Stroud that was started thirty years ago, and up to the present moment they have realised every year 25s. I believe he was the first to draw a small pension from that society.

44887. But it would be almost unreasonable that it should never have been the other way; you might have a very sickly season or an epidemic that specially struck you?—That is the only value of spreading it over the country, and that is one reason why I am very anxious to spread it.

44888. If they have sometimes got 28s. nobody ought to object if they occasionally get 22s?—That is so. We do not guarantee anything at all as to what the surplus shall be, but they get all the surplus that is earned.

44889. In fact, to put it quite shortly, yours is a dividing club, which does not divide?—Yes, with this great distinction, that a man pays for his increased risk as he gets older, and the fact that he divides does not affect his future risks.

44890. The increased payment you consider does cover the risk?—Undoubtedly it does. Up to the last two or three years we had a larger proportion of old members than of young ones, I mean middle-aged men of between forty and fifty.

44891. Are your funds in the hands of trustees, or how do you secure that side of it from the risk of loss? You have enormous accumulated funds which are standing at the credit severally of the members?—That is so.

44892. Each member has accumulated so much money and these funds you invest, and you say you have been able to make 5 per cent. on them?—Yes.

44893. That is a great deal more than the insurance companies usually calculate for their accumulations. They do not count that they can, one time with another, safely reckon on so much as that and they base their valuations, as you know, on either 4 per cent. or 3½ per cent. or whatever it may be; you have invested your moneys well apparently, and they have, up to now, yielded 5 per cent. interest. What rules have you with regard to the class of investments you make so that you shall not lose money by bad investments?—Every investment is very carefully looked into and is valued by a valuer before an advance is made upon it, or else the buildings are put up by our own architect, or we know the value of the houses; that is to say, we do not lend money upon speculative properties. Insurance companies assume a very much lower rate of interest than they earn in order to obtain greater profits.

44894. Supposing you did, owing to any circumstance, make a loss, would you debit each account with its share of that loss?—No, we should debit it to the profit and loss account. In our balance sheet we have a profit and loss account showing on one side the interest arising from investments and so on, and on the other side if we made a loss we should have to debit that account with it that year.

44895. So it would simply affect a particular year?—That is so.

44896. And if you made a very heavy loss through some foolish investment instead of dividing 25s. you might divide 5s. ?—That is so. On the other hand there is no form of investment so safe as small property in the hands of your own members, who have a personal stake in the property and a personal stake in the society. I cannot conceive of a safer investment.

44897. Is most of your money invested in that way?—Every 1d. is invested amongst our members.

44898. All of it, do you say?—Up to the present moment we have invested every 1d. amongst our members. We shall never go outside our members until they do not want it, and until we have got too much for them. That is the reason why we have taken over the Bordesley Green scheme in Birmingham, to provide for the building of 500 houses for our members. It is simply that we may put our surplus into it.

44899. Are you ready to lend money to any of your members for house building?—Yes.

44900. (Miss Hill.) Who owns the estate to begin with; who buys the estate?—The society buys the estate.

44901. Have you trustees?—Yes. There is every safeguard taken that nothing shall go wrong.

44902. (Mr. Booth.) And up to now you have been able to invest the money and there has always been a demand for it?—Yes. We have generally overdrawn at the bank at the end of the year about a couple of thousand pounds. I encourage that. It looks rather bad for a business man to say that, but at the beginning of a winter or before the winter comes, I generally over-invest so as not to have the money standing idle in the winter, and we have generally more than a couple of thousand pounds overdrawn at the bank at Christmas.

44903. Any time any man chooses to abandon the society and sacrifice his last two years' contributions, he can draw out the money to his credit?—Yes.

44904. (Mr. Bentham.) Is an ordinary mortgage deed drawn on each property?—Yes.

44905. At what rate of interest?—At 5 per cent. We advance 90 per cent. to our individual members on house property if they are living in it.

44906. Any person with a few pounds could get better terms than that, could he not?—Yes, if he can find a third of the money required; but there is all the difference in the world between 10 per cent. and 25 or 35 per cent. for a working man to find.

44907. (Miss Hill.) That would make a great deal of difference if he has only got the 10 per cent. to find?—If he goes to a building society he will have to find 25 to 35 per cent.; and that makes all the difference.

44908. (Mr. Bentham.) It depends on the value which the valuer of the particular society would put on the property. We have known cases where they have lent more than they paid for it?—Yes, but we should not be so foolish as that. Perhaps I did not quite gather what you said; I beg your pardon.

44909. We have known cases where even an ordinary society has lent more on a piece of property than the person has actually paid for it?—Then they are extremely foolish.

44910. It depends on the bargain to a certain extent, does it not?—This is what is done: A man wants a house; he comes and interviews me; I advise him what to do and then send him to the valuer in his own interest as much as the society's, and then we advance on the valuer's valuation, and he generally buys on the valuer's valuation.

44911. Is the valuer appointed by the society?—Yes.

44912. Does the man pay a fee?—Yes, a guinea.

44913. (Mr. Booth.) What is the managing body—a committee?—Yes, of twelve.

44914. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is it elected annually?—Four are elected annually, four retiring every year.

44915. Is that four out of twelve?—Yes.

44916. (Mr. Booth.) Is there any payment at all for the management?—None whatever.

44917. (Mr. Bentham.) My point is that the 25 per cent. is not a hard and fast rule, but it is a margin within which they would lend?—I think that is the usual figure.

44918. Possibly it might be the usual figure?—In Birmingham to-day the margin varies from 25 to 30 per cent.

44919. (Mr. Booth.) Is your society registered?—Yes; I have a copy of the rules here if you would care to have them. (See Appendix No. XIX. (B).)

12 Mar. 1907.

44920. (Chairman.) You have been good enough to prepare for us a statement which we can take as your evidence in chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Unsuitability of workhouse for unmarried
mothers.

1. When I first became a guardian a matter that seemed to me to require immediate attention was that of the young unmarried mothers who are received into the wards of our workhouses.

2. I learnt that there are a class of women who return in some cases almost annually as many as eight, nine, or even ten times to give birth to an illegitimate child.

I also learnt that it was almost impossible to separate from such women the very young unmarried mothers who were admitted for the first time, and who in many cases are received some months before confinement, and who through illness of the baby and one cause or another are kept some months after.

I was persuaded after a short time that the workhouse was the wrong place for our young unmarried mothers.

Birmingham
Workhouse
Magdalene
charity, its operations
and results.

3. The Birmingham Workhouse Magdalen Charity Committee has worked for some years in the maternity wards of the three local union infirmaries.

The object of the committee is to send a lady visitor into the wards with a view to rescue all the young girls after a first fall. The work has been carried on with the consent of the guardians and also with the hearty co-operation of the ladies of the board.

The girls are helped in many ways after they leave the workhouse, situations are found for them, foster-mothers for their children, if the mother is engaged in domestic service, clothes often are supplied, and in some cases it has been found expedient to pay the part cost of placing the child out to nurse.

Affiliation orders are always obtained when possible, but that is more or less a very disappointing feature of the work.

4. The result has been most encouraging, but the committee have felt that for some long time their work has been very sadly handicapped for the want of a home to which these young girls might be sent, instead of mixing for long periods of time—as many often have to do—with the degraded and vicious women who haunt our workhouses all over the country.

We believe that the list of these women which now appears to be so large would be wonderfully decreased in the future if we could only rescue all our young unmarried mothers and help them to regain their footing.

The moral atmosphere of a workhouse is such that no young girl should be introduced into it if we have any hope or wish to reclaim her.

Need of special homes for unmarried
mothers.

5. To meet this difficulty and do the good we would urge that a sufficient number of homes should be started by charitable agencies all over the country to which guardians should subscribe and after due consideration send suitable cases and maintain them in the home for the requisite period.

The cost should not exceed that of the maintenance in a workhouse; the rate-payer, therefore, would only be paying for the case to be maintained at some institution other than the workhouse.

6. In these homes special training should be given and individual interest taken in each young mother. She would be placed under good influence, taught from a religious basis how to maintain herself, and also how to take care of herself, taught to nurse and bring up her child, for we would not separate the mother and child at such a tender age—surely to do this is against all the laws of nature and largely tends to the increase of infant mortality.

The girls should be allowed to stay in such a home for just so long a time as it would take to train the individual sufficiently to make a fresh start in life.

7. After she leaves the home there should be a system of “after care,” so that in any trouble, such as loss of work or of health, the girl could receive, not only good advice, but when necessary money help as well, which she would afterwards be expected to refund. Need of special homes for unmarried mothers.

This scheme is an outcome of experience. Rescue workers all over the country will agree as to the terrible difficulties and temptations which beset a woman when once she has fallen.

In many cases it is absolutely impossible for a girl to maintain herself and her child respectably. As a servant she will earn from £10 to £13 per year, and has to pay 4s. or 5s. a week to a foster-mother for her baby. As a factory hand 8s. to 10s. a week, and has no prospect of legitimately earning more unless some training can be given her.

8. The Birmingham Magdalen Charity is about to open such a home in the course of a few months. A copy of the scheme I beg to enclose with this. (See Appendix No. XX (A).)

44921. (Chairman.) I see you have been a guardian for some time at King's Norton and that you are President of the Workhouse Magdalen Charity?—Yes. Birmingham Magdalen charity, its operations and results.

44922. You have found that a class of women of an undesirable character were in the habit of constantly returning to the workhouse to have children, and that their presence was very unfortunate as regards the girls who were in trouble for the first time?—That is so.

44923. I understand that your committee has taken up this subject and worked with great success during the last three years?—Yes, we have.

44924. I gather you have a home to which the girls go afterwards, and that your object subsequently is to make provision for maintaining the child separately from the mother, and getting the mother herself out into service?—We have not a home at present, but we are starting a home now. Our object in starting the home is to keep the mother and the child together till the child is about six months old, and also to train the mother so as to give her a chance of earning an honest livelihood in the future.

44925. Have you been successful in that way?—We have been very successful so far as we have worked without a home, but we feel that the home will help us tremendously.

44926. Have you much difficulty in placing these girls after they have been in trouble?—It depends upon the girl. In many cases the girl has had no training whatever, and then it is most difficult to get her into a decent respectable home as a servant. We want to get her into our home for a certain time so that we may train her to be a good domestic servant.

44927. Do the people who take them know of their antecedents?—We generally tell them. I personally always make a point of telling them.

44928. I suppose there are a certain class of mistresses who will take these girls now that you have established a certain reputation there?—Yes.

44929. Do you find that any considerable proportion of these girls are feeble-minded?—We find a great many feeble-minded girls amongst them. Feeble-minded mothers and need of detention there.

44930. What do you do with them now?—We cannot do anything. We are really waiting for the Report of the Commission on the Feeble-minded. It is hopeless to tackle that subject just now.

44931. You hold the general view that for certain of these girls there ought to be a power of detention?—Certainly.

44932. Do you find a reluctance on the part of respectable women to go to the maternity ward on account of the people whom they may meet there?—Not amongst the older ones, I think, but I do not think I can speak as an authority about that. I do not think I have ever noticed it.

possibility of girl maintaining their children on their own earnings.

44933. Can the girl as a rule maintain the child on the pay that she gets?—In some cases they can, but in very few cases. We have had cases of girls about fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and so on who have never been trained to do anything in the way of domestic service. As factory workers they have been earning in some cases not more than 5s. a week.

44934. In the case of the factory girls, do you generally separate them from their past work?—We always try to do so, because we think it is bad for them to go back.

44935. Because they have a knowledge of their past there?—We should never send a girl into a factory if we could help it.

question of marriage of unmarried
mothers.

44936. Do these girls ever marry afterwards?—Very rarely, and personally I do not think it is a good thing to do.

44937. Not even to the putative father?—No. I always discourage it myself, but I know some rescue workers do not. I do not think it answers.

need of special homes for unmarried mothers and power of guardians to contribute.

44938. What you suggest is that the guardians should be empowered to contribute to a home which should be run under voluntary and charitable agencies?—Yes.

44939. Have the Birmingham Guardians agreed to do that?—Yes, all the three unions now have agreed to it. If the Local Government Board will give their consent—of course it is subject to that—they have each agreed to give us twenty-five guineas a year.

44940. I suppose that is a good deal due to the president of the charity?—I think it is due to the work that has been done by the charity.

44941. You have not yet got the consent of the Local Government Board, have you?—We have not tried yet and shall not do so until we have got the home.

44942. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The guardians do subscribe now, do they not?—They have subscribed seven guineas, but that is without the home.

44943. Of course you now want a larger subscription on account of the home?—Yes. We feel we shall do something towards reducing the rates if we can save these girls from coming back again. We have had cases where they have come back from five to ten times and the rates have had to keep the children. When one looks back to the history of these people one cannot help thinking that they have never had a chance, and that they were turned out to earn their own living without any means whatever of earning their livelihood decently and respectably.

44944. (Chairman.) In these cases where there are ten children, can you say whether most of those children are left on the rates now?—I am afraid a great many of them die. One woman now whom we have has had six children chargeable to the rates and there is no chance of her ever going out of the workhouse again until her children are grown up.

44945. Are the children all there?—In the particular case I am thinking of now, they are.

44947. Really?—Yes. So many times a girl thinks that after her first fault, she has learnt a lesson and she can keep on all right by herself; but after the second she is only too willing to come and be helped and to take your help. We really want to confine it to girls who have not had a chance after the first fall, or who do not seem to have had any visible chance of leading a respectable life.

44948. You have a certain rural area in your union, I think, have you not?—Yes.

44949. Do the girls who come to you come from the town, or are they distributed all over the unions?—They are distributed all over. This charity is working the three Birmingham workhouses, and every first case comes before us at present. We get as many as 130 first cases a year to deal with—that is first cases only.

44950. How many cases would you have of all kinds in the year?—I never had an opportunity of counting up, but it would be much more than double that, I should think.

44951. You have had great experience in this matter; Need of lady have you any suggestion other than that contained in your workhouse statement to make to us?—I do not think so. It is only inspectors on the question of rescue work that I have anything to say. I should very much like to see in workhouses some more lady inspectors amongst the women and the children; I think that would be a very great help.

44952. Have you classification carried far inside the workhouse in your union?—Yes, I think so.

44953. I suppose the girls before they are confined go to the workhouse and remain there?—They sometimes lack of go in four, five, or six months before, and that is the time classification when they get so much harm. in workhouses.

44954. Because they come in contact with these bad women?—Yes. They are kept apart as much as they possibly can be by some matrons who are wonderfully good, but they must work together, they must do washing together, and all that sort of thing, and much harm is done by contact with these other women then.

44955. (Mr. Booth.) In this special institution for these young women would there be any industry for them to pursue—anything that they can do?—We have thought that we must have something, but at present we are rather waiting to see how it works out. In many cases the girls are not fit to do very much hard work and they will be coming and going. Need of special homes for unmarried mothers.

44956. But they would be there a considerable length of time—four months?—There is all the work of the house to be done, and there may be sixteen children to look after. We want especially to lay great stress upon the training of the mothers in looking after their children so as to teach the mothers. We want the mothers really to be responsible for their babies, and we do not want one girl to look after all sixteen babies.

44957. The work of the house is done so as to make it a training?—We think that that would be enough, but if we find it is not enough then we shall try laundry work.

44958. Of course they would make all the baby clothes?—Yes, and their own outfits to start with when they go out.

44959. So that when they leave the home they will leave it with clothes?—Yes, so as to be able to start respectably.

44960. (Dr. Downes.) Who would act as midwife in your proposed home?—We should send our cases to the lying-in wards of the unions.

44961. Would you still send them there?—Yes.

44962. Although you do not approve very much of these girls going into those wards?—It will be only for three weeks or a month, and we do not think they will get much harm during that time. The reason is that the Midwives Act is so severe that the guardians would not get enough cases for the training of their nurses if we took our cases away.

44963. Do you approve of that severity of the Midwives Act as affecting the supply of midwives in the country?—It certainly would reduce the supply in that way.

44964. You think it would reduce the number?—Yes, very much.

44965. Are you able to classify at all in your maternity wards? Have you any way in which you can separate the girls?—No. Lack of classification in workhouses.

44966. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the girls who come to you for help, are most of them domestic servants or factory girls?—I should say there are quite as many domestic servants as factory girls?

44967. Not more?—No, I should think taking the unions together, from King's Norton we have more servants and from Birmingham we have more factory girls.

44968. Do you propose to teach these girls to do anything besides domestic service?—No, I think not.

Miss H.
Newell.

12 Mar. 1907.

- Miss H. Newill.* 44969. To earn their own livelihood, I mean?—No. Domestic service is what we think of mostly; it is the most guarded, and we can get them into places where they would be looked after.
- 12 Mar. 1907. 44970. You take great interest, do you not, in the nursery of your workhouse?—Yes.
- Need of more paid helpers in workhouse nurseries. 44971. Have you any notions to lay before the Commission about the supply of trained officials in nurseries?—They are a very great want in most of these places.
44972. You go about visiting a good deal, do you not?—Yes.
44973. And that has been the general impression left on your mind, that there are not enough paid helpers?—Yes. They are left to the paupers to look after them.
44974. I take it that has a bad effect both on the paupers and on the mothers?—Yes.

EIGHTY-SIXTH DAY.

Mr. CHARLES CASTELL COOKE, called; and Examined.

- Mr. C. C. Cooke.* 44975. (Chairman.) You have been a Poor Law guardian of the Aston Union for thirteen years?—I have.
- 18 Mar. 1907. 44976. You have prepared a statement which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence-in-chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I have been a Poor Law Guardian of the Aston Union for thirteen years. I was for three years Chairman of the Workhouse and Infirmary Management Committee; three years Vice-Chairman of the Board; two years Chairman of the Board, and I am at present Chairman of the Cottage Homes Committee. I was President of the West Midland Poor Law Conference in 1903. I am a member of the Joint Poor Law Committee for the Treatment of the Mentally Defective, and a member of the Birmingham Distress Committee.

I have been for thirty years an active trades unionist, and was President of the Birmingham Trades Council for three years. I was Secretary of the Trades Union Congress at its meetings in Birmingham in 1897, and am at the present time Treasurer to the Amalgamated Society of Gasworkers, Brickmakers, and General Labourers, one of the largest local trades societies in Birmingham.

I am Chief Secretary to the Loyal Caledonian Corks Friendly Society, which is one of the largest friendly societies in the Midlands. I have been identified with the friendly society movement for thirty-two years, and was the first President of the Birmingham Friendly Societies Council.

2. The Aston Union consists of nine parishes—one in the City of Birmingham, comprising one-third of the population of that city, with its varied conditions of employment; one in Aston Manor, with a population of 80,000, the conditions of which are similar to those of Birmingham; two suburban residential districts, the population consisting of middle-class and better-to-do artisans; and five purely agricultural parishes.

3. We have cottage homes for the children, together with homes for "ins and outs" children, so as to keep them from the workhouse. We have joined with the other adjoining unions to provide a home or homes for the mentally defective and sane epileptics away from the workhouse.

4. We have classified the inmates and have given special privileges to the aged. We have cottage accommodation for aged married couples.

5. We have one medical officer outside the workhouse who devotes his whole time to the sick poor. This has been so successful that the principle would be extended as vacancies arise among the medical officers, who at present give only a part of their time to the work.

6. Indoor relief is confined chiefly to the aged and mentally deficient and unemployable. We do not get many able-bodied men, and when we do so we ought to be able to treat them other than in the workhouses. The aged—many of whom have no relations—if obliged to come into the workhouse, and are of known good character, should be accommodated on the cottage home or almshouse principle. They should have their provisions served out so that they could prepare their own food.

7. Young women with illegitimate children should be treated in institutions away from the workhouse. Men who are able, but will not work, should be sent into labour colonies where strict discipline and work would be enforced. Young men and women ought not to be in mixed workhouses. There should be separate workhouses for the sexes.

8. The sick poor ought not to have to enter the workhouse gates. They should be admitted direct to the infirmary, and the word "workhouse" infirmary should be abolished from all infirmaries.

Aston provision for children, epileptics, aged, etc.

Whole time district medical officer.

Classes receiving indoor relief.

Need of separate provision for unmarried mothers and labour colonies for able-bodied men.

Objection to admission to infirmaries through workhouse.

Mr. C. C.
Cooke.

18 Mar. 1907.

Inadequacy of out-relief at Aston and effect of increasing amount of relief.

Birmingham City Aid Society and question of value of cognate societies.

Question of adequacy of supply of voluntary workers and guardians.

The demands upon a guardian's time.

9. Outdoor relief to the deserving poor should be adequate, each case dealt with on its merits and not fixed by a scale. Where relatives can afford to assist, they should be compelled to do so, and the duties of children to their parents should not be lost sight of. Widows with children should have sufficient to enable them to give more time to the up-bringing and care of their children. Grandparents ought not to be liable for the maintenance of their grandchildren unless in specially good circumstances. Men with good characters who have families ought to be assisted with outdoor relief not to exceed a given period, if temporarily out of employment, provided they are householders.

10. The classes of persons applying for relief are chiefly the aged and widows with families. The number of lunatics in the union is increasing.

11. The main causes of pauperism are loss of the bread winner, mental and bodily deficiency, old age, middle age, thriftlessness, change of methods of production, competition and the exodus of the people from the country into the towns.

12. All classes of persons seek election as guardians. We have persons retired from business, business men, working men and ladies. It becomes increasingly difficult to find candidates for the work, who will give the necessary time. This being so, I am in favour of Poor Law work being undertaken by county and borough councils, as there seems no difficulty in finding people willing for election as councillors.

13. Out-relief in this union is administered on understood scales by separate relief committees. We have revision committees who sit weekly to revise the indoor poor. We make special provision in the separation and diet of consumptives, and are considering how best to isolate them and keep them in the open air. The curable we send to seaside sanatoria for treatment, We send blind children to the blind asylum; deaf and dumb to institutions for their treatment and training; improvable mentally-defective children to training homes for that purpose, and fallen girls to Magdalene and other special homes.

14. So few people who are connected with friendly societies come under the purview of the Poor Laws that, as a body, I believe they are not much interested. But they were highly satisfied with the Outdoor Relief Friendly Society Bill, although my experience proves to me that many who could, through the operation of that measure receive out-door relief in addition to their sick pay—which in many cases is permanent—refuse to apply because contact with the guardians means pauperism, and that, in consequence of the teachings of self-reliance which friendly societies inculcate in its members, is repugnant to them. Rather than have to apply to the guardians for assistance the legislature should provide a weekly pension to all those who are members of a trade or friendly society, or have made some provision for themselves in old age, and such pension should be paid through the Post Office.

44977. (Chairman.) I see that you have not only been a Poor Law guardian for a good many years, and taken an active part in the administration of the Poor Law, but you have also occupied important posts in various trade, industrial, and friendly organisations?—That is so.

44978. A great many of the suggestions you make in connection with the Poor Law endorse what has already been expressed by previous witnesses, therefore I will take you first through those points which I think are specially important, and then I will deal with questions outside the Poor Law. As regards women with illegitimate children, do you want further powers of detention over those who are feeble-minded?—Yes.

44979. I see you express a strong opinion about the infirmaries, would you wish to dissociate medical relief from the Poor Law?—Not necessarily. I am suggesting that if persons have to go to the infirmary they should go direct to the infirmary rather than to the workhouse; do you mean rather temporary medical relief?

44980. It has been suggested to us that all medical relief should be dissociated from the Poor Law?—I agree with that.

44981. Do you think that the fact that medical relief, either outdoor or in the infirmary, is associated with the Poor Law is a deterrent which prevents people applying for it?—I think so.

44982. That is your experience?—Yes.

44983. Do you find that view generally held?—Yes.

44984. Should you say that it did tend to prevent any considerable number of persons from applying for medical relief when they ought to?—Yes.

44985. As regards outdoor relief, you would like, I understand, each case to be thoroughly investigated and where relief is given to be adequate?—Yes.

44986. Should you say the present scale in Aston is adequate?—No, it is not adequate.

44987. Do you think that if the scale was increased, and it was associated with thorough investigation there would be more applicants?—I do not think so. I think it would do away with people having to engage in sweating industries to supplement what is already granted.

44988. The fact that a higher weekly allowance would be made, if it was associated with thorough investigation, would not, you think, increase the number of applicants?—Not at all.

44989. Have you any ideas as to whether there should be associated with the Poor Law some organisation of a charitable character, which would deal with cases that are drifting to the Poor Law, and try to put them on their legs?—We have such an organisation as that in Birmingham known as the City Aid Society.

44990. That has not come much into operation yet has it?—No, not yet.

44991. Do you think it would be possible to put that work upon the guardians, or do you think it could be done by a separate organisation?—I think it is better kept separate if they can induce a sufficient number of people to engage in the work, which is very important.

44992. And they require funds too?—Yes; I was connected with the City Aid Society when it was carrying on its operations under another name; I was chairman of one of its committees for five years. We found a difficulty in getting people to give the time to the work and we had a greater difficulty in finding the money.

44993. Have those difficulties been got over at all?—The city has taken the matter up with more enthusiasm just recently, and we hope that those difficulties will be removed.

44994. Going on from that, one naturally comes to the persons who serve as guardians. You say you think it is becoming increasingly difficult to find people who will undertake this work?—Yes.

44995. Your experience, I suppose, is that it is a considerable tax upon your time to do the work properly?—Yes.

44996. What amount of your time a week do you think it takes?—The members of our board have to give one entire day a week if they are not engaged in work outside; it means for myself at least two days a week because I am a member of the joint Poor Law committee for dealing with the feeble-minded and also the distress committee.

44997. The distress committee is, of course, to a certain extent outside the actual work of the Poor Law?—The committee is composed of representatives of the guardians, and I am one of the representatives.

44998. You have not been on any out-relief committee?—Yes, I have.

44999. That takes a considerable time if the work is properly done?—The out-relief work takes one half-day a week.

45000. It is rather difficult to get persons in an industrial community who have got the time to give?—Yes.

45001. You think that difficulty increases?—I think so.

45002. Coming to questions outside the Poor Law, in your last paragraph you say you think that the teaching effect of the friendly societies has been good, it has taught people to rely upon themselves and made them reluctant to apply for Poor Relief?—Yes.

45003. Have you ever thought over the question of old age pensions?—Yes.

Difficulty of obtaining suitable guardians.

Educational effect of friendly societies.

- Mr. C. C. Cooke.*
18 Mar. 1907.
Scheme for old-age pensions to members of friendly societies, etc.
45004. What is your view about them?—My view of the matter is that if a start is to be made of old-age pensions, persons who have already attempted to make provision for themselves in either a trade or friendly society are the persons who should first be considered.
45005. You would make it in some way a contributory scheme?—No.
45006. You would give the preference to them?—I should not say a person who has contributed through his society for an old-age pension, I say any person who has been a member of a trade or friendly society shows by that that there has been an earnest endeavour to do something to meet the difficulties which overtake most people.
45007. You would give them the preference?—Yes.
- Attitude of friendly societies to old-age pensions.
45008. What is the general view of the friendly societies? We were told that in the first instance they were hostile to the idea of old-age national pensions, but then it has been alleged by other witnesses that there has been a considerable change in their attitude of recent years?—I think that is so. I think when the question was first mooted the opinion of the leaders of the friendly society movement was that it would destroy the habits of thrift amongst the people if they knew they were going to be provided for in their old age; they would not be making provision prior to reaching old age, but I think that is an opinion which has evaporated. In 1901 and 1902 we had a conference here in London of representatives of the friendly societies; Mr. Medhurst was chairman of the movement and we represented 4,000,000 of the 8,000,000 friendly society members in the kingdom. The decision we arrived at was to agitate for old-age pensions for all aged members of trade or friendly societies.
45009. That is some years ago?—1902.
45010. Does the resolution you arrived at then still hold good?—I think it is stronger.
- Friendly society permanent old-age sick pay.
45011. It was suggested by some witnesses that the sick pay to old people is a very heavy tax on the friendly societies?—Yes.
45012. That is so, is it not?—That is so. I have been a member of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows for more than thirty years, and we have members in our Lodge that have been on reduced sick pay for eighteen years; one has been on for eighteen years and one for fifteen years.
45013. What age would they be?—We have had them come on for permanent sick pay at fifty-six years of age; one member particularly I have in mind, a striker, who has to cease work earlier than most people.
45014. The temporary sick pay drifts almost into a permanent pension?—That is so.
45015. Is that the tendency rather of certain classes of help to oldish persons connected with friendly societies?—I think that is so, although the rules say there must be specific sickness the members are rather chary of putting that rule into strict operation.
- Attitude of friendly societies to old-age pensions.
45016. As the man gets older?—Yes, and so it becomes an old-age pension.
45017. I suppose that rather influenced the friendly societies in the decision they came to?—Yes, it had a lot to do with it.
45018. The idea is, I suppose, that they would keep people going up to a certain time and then the old-age pension would come in?—Yes.
- Effect of universal scheme of old-age pensions on friendly societies.
45019. Do you think old-age pensions on a big scale would interfere with the development of the friendly societies?—If it became general, if everyone was to receive a pension I should think yes, but if it was a reward for a man having been thrifty, I should say, no.
45020. Anything that would seriously damage and undermine the friendly societies in their movement would, I assume, in your judgment be a very considerable misfortune?—A great misfortune.
- Moral value of friendly societies.
45021. I should imagine from your statement you attach as much importance to the moral effect of the societies as to the material benefit?—Yes.
45022. Therefore, assuming there was any idea of old-age pensions, you would make it rather a fundamental principle that they should not interfere with or undermine the friendly and independent self-supporting institutions?—Yes.
45023. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to your Paragraph 9, Relief said you say that adequate relief accompanied by full inquiries would prevent the effect of out-relief being a supplementation of wages. Would it be possible that any inquiry should be so thorough as to entirely prevent the earning of money?—I do not know that we should prevent the earning of money; if a person can do a little I think he should be encouraged to do it, but not to be engaging in work of a sweating character. I think that a strict investigation probably would make the guardians more chary in continuing relief in a case of that description.
45024. It would tend to prevent consequent low wages being taken?—Yes.
45025. With regard to maintaining the scale of relief Objectives equally the same everywhere, how would you attempt to secure that?—I do not believe in that; I do not believe in relief a scale.
45026. Supposing you have no scale, how will you arrive at equal administration, or even with a scale?—Without a scale it would depend entirely on the facts of the case as it presented itself to the committee; it is so rarely that two cases, or the circumstances of two cases are alike.
45027. Does not that result in very different methods of administration even in the same union by different committees, and still more in different unions?—It may do; Poor Law in different unions it does in the way that it is under different guardians, but if it was understood that each committee would deal with each case on its merits and deal with it accordingly, I do not see why there should be any difficulty at all.
45028. Surely the view that is taken of a case on its merits will vary?—It might to a small extent.
45029. Would you advocate having rules and regulations of some kind to guide the administration?—I would go so far as saying that the amount granted should not exceed so much.
45030. Do you think practical uniformity can be secured on general principles?—With sensible people I should think yes; if a committee were composed of business people rather than of faddists.
45031. As a matter of fact the administration does vary very much between union and union?—Yes.
45032. And also in some unions between committee and committee?—I do not know whether there is very much in that; there may be between union and union, but I do not know why there should be much between committee and committee.
45033. You would think it desirable that the administration should be uniform all over the country?—The circumstances of localities make alterations, and I do not see how it is possible to fit in all things to make the administration equal.
45034. (Chairman.) That is to say you could not apply a money test?—No.
45035. Because the value of labour and the value of money vary?—That is so. Take our own union, for instance, we have five purely agricultural districts, and it is not fair to deal with the people that are living in agricultural districts in the same manner that you would deal with people who are living in a town and have always been used to town life.
45036. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) You could not apply the money test, but you could apply an adequacy test?—Yes.
45037. (Mr. Gardiner.) The real difference is the difference in rent, is it not?—Rent and living.
45038. Does the cost of living vary very much in different parts of your union?—Yes, I should think so; people would have to pay more for living in the town than they would in the country, I should think.
45039. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Food is cheaper in the towns?—I have spent holidays in the country and have not found it so.
45040. (Mr. Booth.) You mentioned one of the reasons why it is difficult to find candidates for the post of guardian; that the work is so inferior and it takes so much time to do it?—Yes.
- Difficulty obtaining candidate for post of guardian and cause difficulty in maintaining candidates post of wardian

causes.

45041. In addition to that is it felt that there is, compared to the county council work, a lack of dignity or interest in the work?—No doubt; you never hear anything about Poor Law guardians except when they are being pulled to pieces by the Press through something that they ought to have done.

45042. If the area of administration was enlarged, would that be likely to add to the dignity of the position?—I do not think so. In our union we have more than one-third of the population of the City of Birmingham, and we have two boroughs besides, one of which is a very aristocratic borough, the borough of Sutton Coldfield, and we have a very fashionable residential district in the parish of Erdington, so we have quite a variety of interests.

45043. Those who are elected simply to do that work would be more likely to take an interest in it and do it well than those who are elected perhaps for other purposes?—With those that do the work there is no doubt it is well done, but there is such a few that do do the work.

45044. You would rather take your chance of that than have those who are elected for the county council?—And borough councils; of course they are a larger body.

45046. The Conference which Mr. Medhurst presided over, was a Conference representing a very large body of friendly societies; was their resolution advocating pensions confined to the members of friendly societies?—Their scheme, which was ultimately embodied in a Bill, did go in that direction; I was a member of the Executive Committee myself, and it was considered simply the commencement of the movement; it was not by any means looked upon as being the beginning and ending of old-age pensions.

45047. In the four years that have passed, has the tendency been in the direction of widening and to make it a general scheme rather than a general friendly society scheme?—I do not think so; I think we realise that it is easier to get between £3,000,000 and £4,000,000 of public money than it is to get £26,000,000.

45048. There was a fear on the part of the friendly societies lest the giving them a privilege of that sort would involve them in interference on the part of the Government with regard to the control of their funds, was there not?—I think that was only an official idea on the part of some of the larger societies, and I do not believe that it applied to the rank and file of the members of these societies.

45049. If the members of the friendly societies had a privilege there would come a question of what friendly societies were to be recognised as good enough to justify that privilege, would there not?—I do not know; if a man has paid into a society he has shown an earnest that he is desirous of doing something towards making some provision. A man that is getting 18s. a week cannot afford to pay the amount that a man getting £2 a week, for instance, can.

45050. But that the society in which he is should be solvent is necessary, is it not, to justify giving it this privilege?—I do not see why. So many things come about in a society to prevent it getting solvent unless it starts at the commencement with very high tables of contributions.

45051. Would not the granting of pensions to members of certain friendly societies be in effect a subsidising of those friendly societies?—I do not like to look at it in that light myself; I rather want to look at it in the light of being a reward to those members who have made an effort to do something for themselves.

45052. In that case would it not be necessary not to limit it to friendly societies, but to recognise any form of thrift?—Yes.

45053. So that you would not wish to limit it to the form of thrift that is represented by friendly societies?—No, a person who has saved a few pounds in the Post Office Savings Bank I look upon as a person who has made some effort.

45054. You would regard effort?—Yes.

45055. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I gather the effect of your proposal would be that there would still be an immense residuum left of those who have been thrifty and who would have nothing whatever to fall back upon; what would you do with those?—We should have to wait until the country could do something for them.

45056. Then I may take it that your objection to the country doing something is a financial one?—Yes.

45057. Not in principle?—Not in principle.

45058. You do not object to a general old-age pension on principle, but simply because of the difficulty of finding the money?—That is it.

45059. You realise on the other hand there would be a good deal of money saved to the country if we had a system of old-age pensions?—I am doubtful about that, if you mean as far as Poor Law expenditure is concerned.

45060. That is what I was thinking about?—I do not think so, there are so few people, my own experiences teaches me, that come under the purview of the Poor Law that could be maintained outside with a pension. In our own union the great majority of the people that we have got are people of a class that if you were to say to them to-day, "You can go out and take your pension of 5s. a week," I do not think we should lose many.

45061. You mean they would prefer an institution?—Many of them are old, they want so much care and attention that they would not be able to get the care and attention necessary outside the workhouse for 5s. a week.

45062. But they would be considerably less expense inside if they had the 5s.; on your basis they would be 5s. less expense?—You are not proposing to give it to the people that are inside the workhouse?

45063. No, but taking your point of view, you say the people would not get this 5s. and be inside as well, so the 5s. is saved somewhere?—There would be those many less people to provide the pensions for, if that is what you are drifting at.

45064. You object to a contributory system?—Yes.

45065. And yet there is something approaching it, if you say that the person who has been thrifty and has in effect been contributing towards something of the kind, is the person who is to receive; where is the objection in principle to a contributory system?—There is no objection in principle, in principle I think it is the proper thing, but I do not think you can ever put it into operation. You have to take that, and on the other hand there are many people who are not in a position to afford to contribute to a pension scheme.

45066. That might be dealt with if the wage was a better regulated one?—Yes.

45067. I am interested in your Paragraph 9, where you say widows with children should have sufficient to enable them to give more time to the up-bringing and care of their children. Does that mean you would not, as a rule, remove children from the parent, but would rather give sufficient to enable the parent to bring the child up in ordinary circumstances?—Yes.

45068. I may take it on the whole you do not like institutions for the young if they can be avoided?—We have cottage homes in connection with our union, and we do a lot of boarding-out. Personally I prefer the boarding-out to the cottage homes as being less of an institution.

45069. You think on the whole if it could be arranged that remaining at home with the mother is the best system of all and giving the mother enough to enable her to bring the children up?—Yes, when the mother is an industrious, sober person, of course.

45070. Do you suffer very much from sweated industries in the Aston district?—Yes, I think so, there is that I suppose in all large centres of industry—home work.

45071. Do you consider that sweated industries are the great feeders of pauperism?—I think so.

45072. (Mr. Bentham.) You refer in Paragraph 5 to a medical officer who gives his whole time to the work, and you say that it has been successful; in what way

- Mr. C. C. Cooke.* do you mean successful?—That the poor have been better looked after.
- 18 Mar. 1907 45073. Have more orders been given for medical relief since this system was adopted?—No.
- Success of whole time district medical officers. 45074. Are the applications for medical relief still made to the relieving officer?—Yes.
45075. Would the whole time officer attend to them in case they went without an order?—If it is an urgent and pressing case the present officer would, but the half-time officer I do not think would. We say the first consideration to a parish medical officer is to attend to the sick and not to shirk going.
45076. Does the whole-time officer go more readily to the poor without an order from the relieving officer than the other medical officers who are paid a salary and are at the same time in general practice?—The man who devotes all his time would be more ready to go than the man who did not devote all his time; the man who devotes all his time would not stand on the rules that he must get an order from the relieving officer.
- Proposal to transfer medical relief to sanitary authority. 45077. In that way more people are treated than would be treated under the old system?—I think so.
45078. With regard to the transference of all sick cases to another authority, what authority had you in mind?—The local authority; the county and borough councils, the sanitary authority if you like or the health authority.
45079. Would you transfer both the outdoor medical relief and also your infirmaries?—Yes.
- Question of payment by patient for medical relief according to ability. 45080. Would you insist on any repayment in any way?—I should think that in any case where repayment could be made repayment should be insisted on.
45081. Does not that involve a certain amount of inquiry into the circumstances of the people?—Yes.
45082. Is that not what people object to to-day; is that not the principal deterrent against applying for medical relief?—It may have something to do with it.
- Need of greater facilities for medical relief and question of payment for it according to ability. 45083. It is the deterrent you want to get rid of, is it not?—I do not know whether it is the deterrent, but what I have in my mind's eye is that I would make it more easy for the people to get medical attendance.
45084. Would you not be driven to the extent of giving it free absolutely if you want it to be more easily accepted?—In the majority of cases I should say, yes.
45085. The minority you would have to select somehow, and you could not get the minority without going through the whole, could you?—That would depend upon how it struck the authority that had the matter in hand when an application was made, I should think.
45086. That means really going into the circumstances of every person unless you give it absolutely free?—Yes.
- Proposal to transfer Poor Law to sanitary authority and its consequences. 45087. Have you found out whether it would clash at all with the duties of guardians when applications are made for relief if the medical part of it was transferred to another authority?—I am advocating in connection with this that all the Poor Law business should be transferred to another authority.
45088. This is to be managed by another authority?—Yes.
45089. That is rather different, is it not, transferring the whole of the Poor Law duties to another body which would be managed by a committee of another body, to transferring the sick part only as a question of public health?—I am looking at the sick cases somewhat as an instalment, that unless the whole of it could be transferred I should prefer to see this done first.
45090. What is your idea of transferring it all to another authority?—Because of the difficulty of finding people to give attention to the work, and in addition to that I think that the Poor Law has had its day; it has got so repugnant to the British people that it wants doing under another name.
45091. You want to make all kinds of relief easier to be got?—No, not easier.
45092. If you take away the deterrent aspect of it, would it not make it easier, would not more people apply for it?—I should not propose to take away the deterrent aspect of the whole of it.
45093. What would be deterrent?—I would make it less difficult for people who want medical treatment for sickness than it is at present.
45094. And so far as the aged and infirm are concerned, would you make it easier for those too?—Yes, I know it is very easy to admit people to some workhouse infirmaries, but some maintain the old regime.
45095. Would you like outdoor relief generally to be easier all round?—No, not easier.
45096. On the question of adequate relief, there is Question of nothing to prevent adequate relief being given now, is adequacy there?—If you can convert your colleagues as to what relief adequate relief is, no.
45097. Then it really resolves itself into a question of opinion as to what amount of relief will meet a case?—I suppose so.
45098. Is that opinion a matter of debate in each case? Scales of —If boards, as the majority of boards, I understand, have relief and done, adopt the scale and they do not go beyond the their effect scale there is an end of the matter.
45099. There is the amount which might be less than the scale which is a matter for consideration, is it not?—In our union the disposition is to give under the scale rather than up to the scale.
45100. From what you say, it is administered on an understood scale?—Yes.
45101. That is to say, there is a scale in the minds of the guardians?—Yes.
45102. They do not exceed it, because they feel that their colleagues would grumble if they did?—Yes.
45103. Would not an advanced scale, a scale above that understood scale, get you out of your difficulty?—Yes.
45104. Then what is your objection to a scale?— Objections To a certain extent my objection to a scale is that there are so very few cases that are similar.
45105. Take widows with children where there are no earnings, they are pretty much the same, are they not?—No, widows with children sometimes have relatives that can afford to assist them, but some have not.
45106. You can generally ascertain what assistance is being given in that way?—Yes.
45107. And take that from the amount of the allowance?—Yes.
45108. And yet ensure that in each case the widow should have sufficient for herself and her children either from the Poor Law or some other source?—Yes.
45109. I take it you do not understand the scale to mean that when a scale is fixed you shall give that amount irrespective of what might be going into the house as a regular thing?—That is the system under which many of these scales are administered, I understand.
45110. That was your objection to a scale, was it?—Yes.
45111. You would not object to making certain in each case that there is a sufficient income to maintain the widow and the children either from the Poor Law or some other source?—Unless the widow could do work that would not take her too much away from the children, I think that should be in view; that is the point I have in my mind.
45112. The amount of relief given in Aston is recognised as being rather low, is it not?—Yes.
45113. What other reason is there besides what you have already mentioned?—I suppose it has always been low.
45114. Has the amount given in the other unions of Birmingham anything to do with it?—The other unions in Birmingham give more; their scale is higher than in the Aston Union, I believe.
45115. One does not affect the other, in your opinion?—No.
45116. (Professor Smart.) In paragraph 11 you give among the main causes of pauperism middle age. What exactly do you mean by that?—I should take a middle-aged person at something between forty and fifty.
45117. Why do you give that as one of the causes of pauperism?—I find in my work on the distress committee many people come along and say they cannot get employment because they are turned forty years of age.

45118. Is that the case in all trades, or certain special trades?—I think that generally prevails in factory life now, that younger and more active people are the people that are sought after.

45119. You put that as low as between forty and fifty?—Yes.

45120. You mentioned a striker a little time ago; you seemed to hint that that was a very exhausting occupation?—Yes.

45121. At what age would a striker become unfit for ordinary work?—If I remember rightly, I think the smiths and strikers are entitled to their superannuation at fifty-five years of age in their trade society.

45122. (Miss Hill.) Strikers earn pretty high wages, do they not?—From 26s. to perhaps 34s. a week.

45123. Not more than that?—I do not think so. I think Mr. Ayles could probably tell you more definitely.

45124. You talk about the young women with illegitimate children being treated in institutions away from the workhouse; have you been able to arrange for that to be done as a rule, have you institutions enough to take them?—We have not, we are just starting a movement among the Birmingham unions now for dealing with these young mothers away from the workhouse.

45125. But still under the Poor Law?—That would be under the control of the joint committee.

45126. Not a charitable institution?—The one that is about to be set up in Birmingham is intended to be partly maintained by the guardians and partly by public subscriptions.

45127. Is it thought it will be easy to get public subscriptions if it is partly supported by the guardians; does the responsibility rest with the guardians or with the charitable committee?—I think the institutions will primarily be run by public subscriptions, and the cases that are sent will have to pay so much per week while they are there.

45128. You think that will be a very marked advantage?—I do.

45129. With regard to old-age pensions, you would much rather look forward, if it were financially possible, to a general scheme of old-age pensions?—Yes.

45130. Yet I think I understood you to say that you thought if it were general it would distinctly discourage the membership of friendly societies?—I said that was the general impression among the leaders of some of the large societies some years ago and Mr. Booth asked me if that was not my opinion.

45131. That is not your opinion?—No, it is not.

45132. You think men would as readily make sacrifices to join friendly societies if they had an old-age pension to look forward to?—I do not see why they should not, because a friendly society payment provides for benefits other than for old age.

45133. You differ from them in thinking it would be discouraging?—Yes.

Classification
in workhouses.

45134. (Mr. Phelps.) I see with regard to persons coming into workhouses you would wish to have a system of classification?—Yes.

45135. Based on character?—As strongly as it is possible to get; it is not of the strongest.

45136. You say people who are known to be of good character, and with regard to out-door relief you restrict it to the deserving poor?—Yes.

45137. Have you sat often on a relief committee?—Yes, for thirteen years.

Capacity of guardians as judges of merit.

45138. Do you find they are good judges of desert?—The guardians themselves?

45139. Yes?—Some have more judgment in the matter than others; as a matter of fact the guardians have to be influenced to a great extent by the reports that their officers bring them.

45140. Do you find that speaking generally one class of society is a good judge of the deserts of another?—I think that is a question I can hardly answer.

45141. Do you think that the poor classes, the working classes in particular, resent very much enquiries of that sort?—Yes, there is no doubt.

45142. Do you think they criticise the judgment passed on them a good deal?—Yes.

45143. Have you any proposal to improve that?—I have not.

45144. Do you think on the whole it would be better if desert was abolished as a test?—No, I do not think so, not for out-relief.

45145. Do you think if boards of guardians contained more Labour members they would be better judges?—No, Working-men more Labour members they would be better judges?—No, guardians and their value.

45146. Why not?—Because I do not think they have all the judgment of the country.

45147. You do not think with regard to their fellow labourers that they would perhaps know more of their opportunities and so forth than people in a different class?—Yes, they may know more, but their judgment may not be as good even if they know more.

45148. Have you sat on a committee with Labour members?—Yes.

45149. Do you find their judgment more or less severe than that of the people of the tradesmen class?—No.

45150. Do you find it more or less severe?—No.

45151. Do you find it the same?—I do not find much difference. I was returned the first time to the Board of Guardians as a Labour member.

45152. And you found on the whole that your judgment coincided pretty well with the other members?—There would not be much difference of opinion as a rule on a good case.

45153. Do you find that the opinion of your officers is generally taken and acted on?—Sometimes, perhaps I should say generally, yes. Attitude of relief committees to relieving officers.

45154. Do you think that confidence in them is stronger or weaker than it was before 1895, we will say?—I do not know that it is any weaker, and I do not know that it is any stronger. I should think it remains much about the same.

45155. (Mr. Gardiner.) You told the Chairman just now you wished to have power to detain feeble-minded girls?—Yes. Need of power to detain feeble-minded 45156. You also want to have power to detain feeble-minded men, do you not?—Yes, I thought I said so.

45157. In regard to the treatment of widows and their children, have you ever thought of the principle of day industrial schools applied to widows' children?—Yes. Applicability of day industrial school system to relief of children of widows.

45158. That the children should be fed there as well?—Yes, but we have not such an institution in Birmingham now.

45159. Do you think that would be a good plan?—I think there is a good deal can be said in its favour.

45160. Or would you favour having the power of giving adequate if not liberal out-relief to widows with children?—I think the two systems might well work together.

45161. To prevent the widow going out to work?—In some cases the widow may do better by going out to work, and with a good day training school the children should be thoroughly well looked after.

45162. Wherever it was possible you would withdraw the widow from the labour market in a sweated industry place like Birmingham?—Yes.

45163. Have you ever thought of the advisability of enlarging the area of the Poor Law administration area make Birmingham and making the city the unit of administration?—If my suggestion came along it would be the city area, because I am suggesting the whole of the area in Birmingham should be dealt with by the city council. Proposal to enlarge the area of the Poor Law administration.

45164. You preferred that to having an enlarged area with much more classification amongst the institutions?—I think so, we have a very large area within the city of Birmingham, which has a population of 600,000 or thereabouts.

45165. Have you much to do with your schools at Erdington?—Yes, I am Chairman of the Cottage Home Committee.

Mr. C. C.
Cooke.

18 Mar. 1907.

- Mr. C. C. Cooke.* 45166. Do you think your guardians make as much use as they should of the adoption of children of unworthy parents?—We do adopt a good many.
- 18 Mar. 1907. 45167. Do you think you adopt enough?—I think, keeping in view that we must keep parental responsibility alive, that we do do as much as we could reasonably be expected to do.
- Use by guardians of power to adopt children. 45168. Have you any system of following up the subsequent careers of the children?—Not after, say, eighteen years of age.
- After-careers of Poor Law children. 45169. Could you give the commission any figures showing the percentage of successes you have?—I could not, that is a matter that we have not dealt with as it should be.
45170. Do you not think it is very important, seeing the various systems that are now being tried?—I do.
- Anthropometry for Poor Law children. 45171. Do you weigh and measure your children?—No.
45172. You could not give us any information as to the results of your treatment?—No.
- Question of condition of Birmingham children. 45173. Have you any views, having regard to your experience of the children that are taken either out of your in-and-out home or the cottages at Erdington of what has been said in your newspapers, that the streets of Birmingham are overrun with ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-educated children; is that true?—It may be rather exaggerated, but there are a large number running about. I do not think they are children that are brought into contact with the Poor Law at all.
45174. Ought they to be dealt with under the Industrial Schools Act, is it a police question and not a Poor Law question?—I think it amounts to that to a very great extent, to a question of the habits of many of the parents in the city in the poor parts.
- Extent of use of Industrial Schools Act. 45175. The Industrial Schools Act gives very great powers?—It does.
45176. Which might in certain cases be used by the guardians?—I do not know to what extent it would arouse public indignation on the part of many of these people.
45177. Do not your Birmingham citizens feel it rather a discredit that these children should be as they are?—That is so, but still we have to remember the rights of parents.
45178. And the duty of the State towards individual children?—Yes.
- Question of compulsory continuation schools for Poor Law children. 45179. Have you any view as to making continuation school attendance compulsory to Poor Law children, either those who have received in or out-relief, or from the cottage homes?—After work age?
45180. Yes, after fourteen?—Continuation schools are not very much taken up in Birmingham, and never have been.
45181. Would you favour making continuance compulsory under certain conditions?—I do not think so.
45182. Why?—I think if a child is sent to school until it is fourteen, if it has to earn its own living that is long enough; if it wants to go to school after that age it will not want to be forced to go.
45183. The same applied before 1870, did it not? Before 1870 the children did not go till they were fourteen.
45184. But I heard it said then if they wanted to go you could not keep them away; you do not think Birmingham would support any proposal of that kind?—I do not think so, because of the feeling on the part of the public.
- Inspection of children boarded-out within the union. 45185. Do you board-out your children outside or inside the union?—Outside and inside.
45186. In regard to the children boarded-out inside the union, what inspection have you?—We have inspection both inside and outside the union.
45187. Inside the union I want?—We have ladies' visiting committees.
45188. Lady members of the board of guardians?—No, we set up a ladies' committee in any locality where there are likely to be boarded-out children.
45189. That is outside the union?—And inside as well.
45190. Is there any method of inspecting this work of this voluntary ladies' committee?—The lady government inspector goes round and visits these children, and the guardians occasionally go round and make an independent inquiry.
45191. That relates to children boarded-out inside the union?—Yes, inside and outside.
45192. Are you sure of that?—I think so.
45193. I do not think the lady inspector does?—We are boarding-out children at Sutton, and the lady inspector visits them.
45194. Sutton is inside the union?—Yes, a matter of eight miles from Birmingham.
45195. She does that by special request I suppose?—I cannot say, I was under the impression that she had the power.
45196. In regard to the number of electors who vote at the board of guardians election, can you give us any figures on that point?—I should think it averages about 10 per cent.
45197. Only 10 per cent vote?—Not more than that, I should think.
45198. There is the same amount of lack of interest manifested with regard to the voting, as there is lack of interest to induce candidates to stand?—Yes.
45199. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to remedying that, if boards of guardians should still exist?—I have not.
45200. You do not think the city guild will help?—No.
45201. You do not think the class you represent are at all concerned?—They are concerned, but there is a difficulty in finding a member who can spare the time to attend to this work, it has to be chiefly done in the day time.
45202. (Mr. Chandler.) With regard to middle age and old age pauperism, it has been frequently asserted that the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897 has largely contributed to that increase. What is your opinion upon that?—I should think it has had something to do with it.
45203. In what way?—That a person is not quite so active or quite so careful as he is getting older.
45204. Before the passing of these Acts young and strong men were invariably preferred by employers?—Yes, but the older men were not sent adrift, I think, to such an extent as they are now.
45205. Do you think in times of slackness that there is a greater desire to get rid of the older men than there used to be?—I think so.
45206. You speak with some experience, I suppose?—I have sat on the Distress Committee since the Distress Committee has been formed in Birmingham, I am chairman of one of the Application Sub-Committees and interview almost all these people personally. Mr. Booth and Mrs. Bosanquet were present at one of our meetings and I think they would say that I have an opportunity of knowing something about many of these people between forty and fifty, by hearing what they have to say.
45207. It is their statements, largely, that you base that statement upon?—We write to the employer and ascertain if their statements are accurate or not, and we receive confidential communications.
45208. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) What reason is there for discharging the persons now that did not exist prior to the Compensation Act?—I do not know that there is any reason, or should be any reason, other than the reason of preference or fancy.
45209. (Mr. Loch.) Would you say that the effect of this Act is to produce a number of men as applicants for relief in some form who, say ten years ago would not have applied?—I think the desire to get younger men does do so.
45210. It is accelerated?—Yes, I think it is.
45211. And that makes a kind of Poor Law relief economic problem?—Yes.

45212. As to pensions or allowances of that kind; these men would be men below the line of any pensions scheme?—Yes.

45213. The question with them would be that period of life when their work ceases owing to whatever the causes may be?—Yes.

45214. Have you any suggestion with regard to that on the basis of the old-age pensions you were suggesting?—I have not; it is a problem that has got to be faced.

45215. Do you think these men are in and out of work a great deal who are, as it were, set aside?—Some of them, some not. We have had men with as long as fifteen or sixteen years characters.

45216. You would not revoke the position of the Workmen's Compensation Act?—No.

45217. These men have no savings?—If they have any savings they are exhausted before they come under our observation. The majority of them are not men connected with any society.

45218. Is your suggestion then, that connection with a society should almost be compulsory?—No.

45219. I wanted to get a suggestion from you, if I could?—I do not know really; it is a subject of such great difficulty that one hardly knows what to say for fear of committing oneself.

45220. Do you think that these men go into small trades on being turned out, and trade themselves in any way?—No.

45221. Have you got figures or notes about any number of them that you can show us?—We discussed the matter at a distress committee a few weeks ago, and we thought the experience had been so brief that we could not give anything definite. We wanted more information before we could give any definite opinion upon the matter.

45222. It would not be possible to go over the ground again from the point of view of ascertaining facts?—No, I think not. We spent last winter in the work and we have spent this winter, and by the time we have spent another winter we shall know more about the subject than we do now.

45223. Are not the two winters sufficient for this purpose?—I do not think so; we want to know to what extent these men come up again for the same amount of assistance.

45224. Have you found them come up again in your two years' experience?—We have had some few.

45225. Not the bulk?—No, not the bulk.

45226. What are the bulk doing?—The experience that confronted them last winter probably did not confront them this winter.

45227. They are back at work, you mean?—Yes, probably at work.

45228. I am only trying to get at the facts. Does not that point to the fact that they are in and out of work a great deal when they once leave the main grooves of work?—Some of them.

45229. I suppose they get, in the period of life for which they work, a relatively high wage?—No, I should not think so. I should think they are the lower-paid class of workmen that the distress committee has to deal with.

45230. And are thrown out in the manner you have just described, possibly in connection with the Compensation Act?—I do not say they are thrown out, I say possibly that may be one cause that throws them out, and it is often stated as a cause.

45231. With regard to the supervision that you exercise over relieving officers, do you yourselves as a committee, or in any other way, see the relieving officers in their work and check it in detail, I mean outside the actual committee, so as to see whether the inquiry is made and so on?—Individual guardians?

45232. Individual guardians, or otherwise, checking the relieving officers' work?—We have a superintendent relieving officer who cross visits the work of the ordinary relieving officer; then it is always open to a guardian to make his own private individual inquiries. I have made many private inquiries myself.

45233. How did it turn out, did you find the relieving officers were justified?—Yes, invariably.

45234. Do you find that you have enough inspection from the Local Government Board, if I may so put it?—We do not have any too much inspection, but I think there is a great deal that we might dispense with the services of the Local Government Board upon.

45235. In what way?—As to dietary, alterations of premises, terminating the appointment of officers, increasing the salary of officers and so on; if you give an officer an increase of £2 a year you have to apply to the Local Government Board for permission.

45236. Do you think it would be well if you could dismiss officers yourselves?—Yes.

45237. You think the present arrangement is unsatisfactory?—Yes.

45238. On what grounds?—It is such a difficulty if officers are not just all they should be to remove them; they have got the Local Government Board to appeal to, and I think the Local Government Board generally upholds the officers.

45239. When you get to a bad year, as you have had lately, do you write to the Local Government Board, or do they in any way help you by showing you what has been done elsewhere in any other way, apart from the main circulars?—Not that I am aware of; they did issue some few years ago a circular when we were in the throes of a very hard winter, suggesting we might engage in road-making and digging; I think we had 10 or 12 inches of frost, and you could not get a spade or a pick into the road.

45240. With regard to the charitable relief work that you refer to in reference to the City Aid Society, does it appear to you that the work they do, as described, would be simply guardians' work upon another basis, or how does it differentiate from that?—I see Sir Hallewell Rogers is here, and I should prefer you to put these questions to him, because he is the head of the City Aid Society in Birmingham. Other than that I should like to say, and I think I ought to say this, that the City Aid Society have been the means of keeping a good many people from coming to the guardians who otherwise would have had to come to the guardians.

45241. With regard to these children in the streets that were referred to, does it not fall on the education authority in some way to deal with the matter?—I should think so.

45242. They are connected with the council of the city now?—Yes.

45243. Why does not the council exert itself in this way?—It has always struck me (I only say this as a layman, because I am not connected with the education committee), that the educationalists only want to get children who they know go regularly to the schools, and children that do not go regularly to the schools do not have the attention paid to them that they ought to have.

45244. Is it because they are too busy, being mixed up with all the other branches of the council's work?—I think it is because the children who are staying away from school so frequently are a lot of trouble, and they do not desire the trouble.

45245. You do not fear if the Poor Law were handed over to the council something of the sort would occur?—I do not think so.

45246. (Chairman.) The attendance officer does not visit the home of the child unless the child is a truant from school?—That is so.

45247. Consequently unless the teacher notices something in the condition of the children in the school they have no knowledge what the home conditions can be?—I think that is so.

45248. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is it not also true that the teachers are not sorry to get rid of the very irregular children?—I should think so.

45249. They come dirty, they are neglected at home, and lower the whole standard of the school?—Yes.

45250. (Mr. Loch.) Therefore this neglect is amongst the class where pauperism is most likely to supervene?—Yes.

- Alleged inaccessibility of medical relief.
- Effect of free medical relief on friendly societies
- Almshouses for the deserving aged.
- Quality of relief to be tempered according to merit of applicant.
45251. With regard to the future Poor Law, whatever it might be, you adhere to the principle of deterrence, I understand; but where would you apply it? You would not apply it, I understand, to medical relief, and you would not apply it to old age relief, by which, I understand, you would relieve and pass all cases in which application was made, irrespective of character?—Certainly not.
45252. Would you explain the position?—So far as the aged are concerned?
45253. First with regard to medical relief, and then the aged?—I think there should not be a lot of routine to get medical relief on the part of the Poor Law.
45254. Is there that now, with regard to Poor Law relief in your union?—Yes, I think so. Here is a typical case; we had a case some time ago cited, that a woman was dying for the want of attention on the part of a medical man, a poor woman who had just been confined; and certain formalities had to be gone through before this relief could be obtained, with the result that the woman died. The opinion was that the woman's life had been sacrificed because there was not the prompt medical attention that there ought to have been.
45255. That you think is typical?—That is a case which has been cited as typical.
45256. Is that your own experience?—I am not saying that that is my experience, but that has been cited as a typical case, and my experience is that there is unnecessary delay.
45257. What control has your own guardians' committee over unnecessary delays, are they all reported to you?—If a person has applied for medical relief, the officer has to report what he has done with such a case at the next meeting of the committee.
45258. Do you find that the fact is as stated, that these cases constantly occur?—Well, that they do occur.
45259. To such an extent that the system should be altered?—To such an extent that there should be more facilities for people getting prompt medical attention.
45260. Would you simply have it provided on application?—Yes.
45261. Would that affect the friendly societies at all?—I do not think so.
45262. Not in the course of time?—I think not.
45263. Because they belong to so different a class?—Yes.
45264. That is to say the relation between the friendly societies and this class is non-existent?—That is so.
45265. And the substitute for the friendly society in this case would be medical State relief?—Yes, medical State relief to people outside the friendly society class.
45266. With regard to the old age people, what would be the change you would make?—With the old age people of good character I should like to give them different treatment from what we are able to give them at the present time. I think they should be housed on the cottage home or almshouse principle; they should have more liberties than they have at the present time.
45267. What deterrent force would there be, would you accept all who came?—No.
45268. What is your limitation?—Will you explain that question, please?
45269. The question was deterrence; you said you would remove the deterrent, almost whatever it was, I understood, both in the case of medical relief and old age relief?—No.
45270. I want to know how you would remove it in the case of old age relief?—I should make it a question of character and good conduct with regard to old age relief, the same as we do now, only to give them something better than we do now.
45271. You would have two systems at work, one for the thrifty would you say?—One for those of known good character.
45272. And one for those not of good character?—Yes.
45273. Two entirely different systems?—Yes, I think the present workhouse is sufficient for the people who have been of a loose and indolent character.
45274. Then as to the able-bodied, have you any scheme?—The able-bodied I should like to see taken away from the workhouse altogether, or put into a workhouse that was a workhouse indeed, and not a home of rest. I think they ought to be put where there is strict supervision and enforced labour.
45275. Have you seen these men at work in any way that you are referring to, able-bodied men under compulsory work?—I have visited some of the labour colonies, and I have not been struck that they are the sort of thing that is wanted.
45276. I want to know whether, having that opinion in your mind, you had possibly some other suggestion; has it not been that when this compulsory work has been applied it has somehow failed to touch?—It may have failed to touch because it has not been properly applied.
45277. What do you suggest to make it properly applied?—I think if a person is sent to a labour colony he should be kept for a certain period, and should not have a week-end off, for instance, he should be kept there and work should be insisted upon. If he is refractory he should be taken before the magistrate, and we should try and induce the magistrates to deal with the case in the same manner that those who were promoting these colonies were.
45278. You would make it a reformatory in fact?—Of a reforming character.
45279. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) In reference to your Distress Committee in Birmingham, have you established labour bureaux?—Yes.
45280. Have they been found to succeed?—We have registered more than 2,000 names, but we do not find work for a very large number.
45281. Are your labour bureaux in communication with other labour bureaux throughout the country?—I think not.
45282. Have you considered whether that would be advisable?—There are so few labour bureaux in the country at the present time; it is in its initial stage, but that is the intention, I suppose.
45283. Have you applied your mind to the question whether it might be a good thing to establish such communication, where such bureaux exist?—I think individually we might say that that is our opinion, but I do not think there has been much attention given to the subject yet.
45284. In Paragraph 13 of your statement you say you make special provision for the reception of consumptives; have you considered whether their treatment is a matter for the Poor Law or for the public health more properly?—For the public health authority.
45285. Do you hand them over to the Public Health authority now?—No.
45286. There is no provision for them?—No, we have to deal with them.
45287. Is that a matter which is under consideration now as to whether the local authority should provide means of treating consumptives?—The local authorities have talked about the matter for some time past, and we are hopeful they are going to do something.
45288. It is the opinion of the board of guardians that the treatment and the isolation of consumptives is a matter for the local authority rather than for them?—That is my opinion, I cannot pledge my board on the matter, it is my own opinion.
45289. In the meantime your board are making such provision as they can for the isolation of consumptives?—Yes.
45290. In the infirmary?—In the infirmary, and with regard to cases which the medical men tell us are of a curable character, in the first stage, we send them to sanatoria.
45291. Have you found that treatment successful?—Yes, sending them away has been successful.
45292. They have been able to resume work, have they, in some cases?—We sent six away some time ago, and four of the six resumed work, one died, and the other absconded. That is the last batch I had anything to do with the investigation of.

45293. (Chairman.) You have been Lord Mayor of Birmingham and you are Chairman of the City Aid Society?—That is so.

45294. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Qualifications.

1. During the period of my Lord Mayoralty of the City of Birmingham, 1902-4, there was exceptional distress, and I summoned the chairmen of the various Mutual Aid Societies in the City of Birmingham together. Some of these bodies were working actively, but others had become dormant through want of funds. I privately raised funds among the chief citizens and distributed these as required to the various bodies, who were that winter able to cope with the distress. It was found from the joint meetings of these societies that we could far more effectively deal with the question of distress if we became one central civic body with branches throughout the city, all working upon the same lines, and through voluntary helpers effectively dealing with those citizens in temporary distress. The outcome of these efforts was the formation of the City of Birmingham Aid Society.

2. In 1904, when there was still greater distress, a Lord Mayor's Fund was opened, and I took an active part in its administration both as Deputy Lord Mayor and as Chairman of the City Aid Committee, to whom the entire distribution of the fund had been entrusted.

3. I enclose herewith a retrospect of the history of this society, by Mr. T. W. Trought, one of the honorary secretaries, and also a pamphlet of the future aims of the society, by Mr. R. H. Best, the chairman of the branch for the Western Division, and who, together with Mr. Cecil Crosskey, the honorary secretary of the society, have, I believe, also been asked to give statements containing their views. I also enclose a copy of the Constitution and Rules of the Society. (For copy of Constitution and Rules see App. No. XXI. (A and B).)

4. I am a Justice of the Peace for the City of Birmingham, Alderman of the City Council, and a member of the Distress Committee of the City Council. I am actively connected with many business concerns in the city which are large employers of labour. I have also been for many years a teacher at a large men's adult school, and therefore constantly come in touch with the needs of the working classes. I may say that the views I express in this statement have been placed before, and are agreed to by, the principal officers of the City Aid Committee.

Charities and Voluntary Relief.

5. The chief charities in the neighbourhood may be divided into three classes:—

(a) Hospitals and kindred institutions.

(b) Institutions having a special and particular field of action only; for instance, the Crippled Children's Union, the Country Holiday Fund for Poor Children, etc.

(c) Societies dealing generally with the relief of distress.

6. (a) and (b) do not call for any special comment, but I should like to state that I consider the ticket system, as adopted by many of the leading hospitals, is very unsatisfactory. It encourages the recipients to become beggars and places the responsibility of the suitability of the patient upon the subscriber, who from want of knowledge is unable to say whether or no the case is a deserving one.

7. With respect to (c), namely, relief societies, the more immediate object of this enquiry, the operations of these societies have been hitherto principally confined to giving help to tide over periods of temporary distress, caused either by sickness, want of work, or other causes. The efforts cannot be said to have been altogether satisfactory, as there has been a tendency on the part of the recipients, once helped, to again seek for aid. Where the cases are not systematically followed up by the societies, it is a question whether the recipients are raised to a better position, with a higher sense of responsibility. The City of Birmingham Aid Society within the last few years has developed and extended its work, with a view to become not merely dispensers of relief, but also an influence to raise the character of the applicant. In the administration of relief there must be careful enquiry and discrimination, and also personal influence. Without this I have found the fact of giving relief in many cases tends rather to lower than to raise.

Sir H. Rogers.

18 Mar. 1907.

8. The effect on the recipients of charity and Poor Law out-relief in each case is a tendency to deteriorate the character, certainly in the case of Poor Law out-relief, and also in the case of voluntary charity, except where, as before mentioned, the assistance is supplemented by personal influence and friendly help.

9. The weak point in the Poor Law methods is the absence of means to classify and discriminate between various applicants. The good citizen is generally treated in the same manner as the waster, in that both are made paupers of the same degree. This has a lowering effect on all. It brings down the good citizen to the level of the vagrant. The man who has led an honest and respectable life, but who through sickness or adversity is forced to seek help from the guardians, should not be placed in the same category as the loafer, the waster and the idler.

10. There is in this city a friendly co-operation between the guardians and the various relief organisations, both through courtesy and an earnest desire on the part of each to help the other. The Poor Law regulations however, prevent real and actual co-operation. There should certainly be close co-operation, and from actual experience I can say there is a great possibility of extension. The Poor Law, the City Council Distress Committee, and the various voluntary societies for relief purposes, such as the City of Birmingham Aid Society, should and must work together; in fact they should co-operate with each other.

11. All help now given as out-relief should be administered by experienced voluntary helpers acting as a society in conjunction with an official body. This is possible, and in this city I consider there would not be the least difficulty.

12. The City of Birmingham Aid Society aims at a complete organisation throughout the city, consisting of a central executive, a branch office in each Parliamentary Division, where records of all cases will be kept by officials and a reliable body of voluntary workers forming the committees in each district. The Society has adopted the same forms as the City Council Distress Committee and is working in close touch and consultation with that committee, having central offices in the same building.

13. The work of the guardians should be confined to:—
(a) A penal settlement or workhouse for idlers, wasters and similar classes.

(b) A home or refuge for good citizens in distress through no real fault of their own (or children requiring help apart from their parents) where such cases cannot be adequately and properly helped in their own homes through voluntary agencies.

14. The latter cases (b) should not be classed as paupers. The funds for this voluntary out-relief should be supplied by:—

(a) The guardians.

(b) Supplemented by voluntary help where possible.

Friendly, etc., Societies.

15. With regard to the question of friendly co-operative and other self-helped societies, I have no experience that would be of assistance to you, except that I generally agree with trades unionism, and in distributing the Lord Mayor's Fund, which amounted to some thousands of pounds, in the winter of 1904-5, the City Aid Society found they did not have applications from members of the trades unions, who look after their own out-of-work cases.

16. I am also in favour of an old age pension scheme, the funds to be provided by:—

(a) The men themselves, deducted from their wages and paid over to the State.

(b) Supplemented by a sum from the employers.

(c) An additional sum provided by the State.

45295. (Chairman.) I gather from your statement that your experience as Lord Mayor of the City of Birmingham when there was exceptional distress was that there was not sufficient co-operation between the Poor Law and the charitable institutions ?—That is so.

45296. And that you therefore worked or brought influence to bear with a view to getting greater co-operation, and the City Aid Society was the result ?—That is so.

45297. It has hardly had time to come into full practical operation, has it ?—It has not. We have only just started our last branch. When I was Lord Mayor of the city there were a great many unemployed men round the Town Hall, which is close to the Council House, and these were increased during the period between one and two by men who were in work, and a great many of the unemployed men I felt quite sure came from other towns, and then they began handing round boxes and trying to get funds in that way. There were mutual aid societies in existence, or had been in existence in various districts of the city, some of which were active and others almost moribund. I called the chairmen of these together, and I asked them if anything could be done, and I found that most of them suffered through want of funds. I thereupon raised a private fund and helped these mutual aid societies, and then we sent a list of offices where these men who were round the Town Hall could apply for help and where their cases would be investigated. We found that out of 500 or 600 men round the Town Hall, only seventeen came to the offices to have their cases investigated. We went on working together with the mutual aid societies, and found that by joining together and exchanging notes it would be much better to form one body with a central controlling executive. Then, having got so far, I could see the difficulty was in raising funds and to distribute these funds through the class of men who were working the mutual aid societies at that time. I felt a very strong point was that the central executive body should have the power to appoint the chairmen of these various branches; and therefore I thought if we were to raise funds from a central office the most important thing was that we should have control over the branch officers. This is a very important point. These branches have been practically formed, and we hope in time we shall have a large society working in our city, which will be joined by all the other various associations. We have the Charity Organisation Society working in Birmingham, but it was working from one small central office, and my feeling is that it has not gained the sympathy of the better class of artisan, and it has not secured that sympathy which I have endeavoured to secure by getting a large number of voluntary helpers. You cannot help the poor as a whole; the better class artisan is the man to know when the applicant is imposing and he will deal with him more strictly. I have hopes that the Charity Organisation Society will join us. I have asked them to do so, but they really turn to me and say, "You are young yet, we do not know whether you will succeed or not, we are a branch of an old organisation which has been working for many years, we will probably join you if the scheme is all right and proves successful"

45298. Was it at the time when there was this aggregation of persons outside the Town Hall endeavouring to collect funds and asking for relief that you raised the fund as Lord Mayor, or subsequently ?—That was the time when the real Lord Mayor's fund was raised. I was Deputy Lord Mayor when the Lord Mayor's fund was raised; there were two funds raised.

45299. You distributed the fund so raised as you have described ?—Yes, as chairman of the City Aid Society.

45300. Did you get any considerable sum? Was it adequate ?—Yes, we have some hundreds of pounds of that fund left now.

45301. The fact of investigation being made antecedent to giving relief immensely reduced these numbers ?—That is so.

45302. I suppose Birmingham is the centre of an enormous manufacturing district, and the tendency is for people in times of distress to drift into Birmingham ?—That is so.

45303. That has been your past experience ?—Yes.

45304. Your opinion based upon your experience, is that charity, unless it is properly administered, tends to the deterioration of character almost equal to that of the Poor Law ?—That is so.

45305. And you are anxious, seeing what has been done, to try and bring your aid society into real co-operation with the Poor Law ?—Yes.

45306. But you think that the regulations of the Poor Law prevent active co-operation ?—Yes.

45307. Will you just enlarge a little upon that ?—I feel that they are so bound down by their regulations that they cannot help us in the way that many of them would like to do. I think it is a pity to have hard and fast rules in dealing with the poor, so much must be left to the discretion of the helper or the officer, and of course the guardians have their special rules; I think the trouble is that they treat all the poor practically in the same way. I think to really help them you want to raise them and the tendency of the present Poor Law is to lower them in really deserving cases.

45308. What has been suggested to us by various witnesses is that one of the defects of our Poor Law as at present constituted is that it is supposed not to be able to help anybody until they become destitute ?—That is so.

45309. Was that present to your mind ?—Yes.

45310. That assisting persons or trying to keep them on their legs before they have fallen is hardly within the scope of the Poor Law. You would like your aid society to do that class of work ?—Yes, we should like to keep the homes up, not let the homes be broken up, that is our anxiety.

45311. In Paragraph 14 you suggest that the funds for the voluntary out-relief should be supplied by the guardians; that is to say that they should put certain sums of money at the disposal, I assume, of the Aid Society ?—That is so.

45312. Has the Aid Society been able to collect any considerable sum ?—Yes, we have got over £1,000 recently; that was got together in about fourteen days; we asked for subscriptions and donations.

45313. Are there many charitable endowments in Birmingham ?—Not of a class that would help us.

45314. Not for the poor ?—Not that would help us in any way.

45315. It has been suggested by various witnesses that it might be possible to organise a charitable committee in connection with the out-relief committees, who should try and secure all the funds that were possible from local and endowed charities, and that they should be, as it were, the advance guard ?—Yes.

45316. There was no suggestion made, or I think yours is almost the first suggestion made, that the guardians should absolutely place sums at the disposal of the Aid Committee ?—We should be doing some of their work, and therefore we ought to have the use of some of their funds. If we are helping the guardians by keeping the people out of the workhouse, then I think they ought to help us with some funds to carry on that work, and that must be far cheaper than the present method.

45317. Do you contemplate any of this help being given on loan ?—No.

45318. If it is public money given to a quasi private body, it could only be distributed, I think, under public regulations ?—Yes.

45319. So that you would practically come back to very much the same difficulty from which we started ?—I think if the matter were placed upon a broader basis it would be better; if the voluntary helper was brought into the Poor Law organisation more it would be beneficial. I do not think this money should be given without control from some central office. I do not want to imply that for a minute.

45320. You would not let these aid societies distribute the money as they liked ?—No, certainly not 45321. You suggest that the work of the guardians should be confined to a penal settlement or workhouse for idlers and a home of refuge for persons of good character ?—Yes.

45322. There is a large intermediate class of persons who are temporarily sick or ill, how would you deal with them, would you take away the medical relief from the Poor Law ?—No, I do not think I should do that entirely. Of course, there are various institutions in Birmingham that help them; there is the general dispensary, for instance, for which we give them tickets to help them ~~side~~ over that time, but, of course, I do not know exactly how the Poor Law medical relief is administered.

Objections to 45323. You do not think the present system in Birmingham satisfactory where it is necessary to get a ticket or a recommend?—No.

45324. You do not like that system?—No, it helps the people to become beggars, I think; they come round from door to door asking for hospital notes, and some of the women are not in a fit state to go round and ask for the various tickets as they have to do very often.

45325. And the right people do not always get them?—That is so.

45326. And, on the other hand, the people who can afford to pay get treated?—That is so very often.

Possibility of 45327. Have you had much to do with the hospitals there? Do you think it would be possible to get them to work in connection with the Poor Law on this point?—I think so, certainly. There is a growing feeling in the hospitals in the city that some such thing should be done. I think the Queen's Hospital, which is one of the largest institutions of the city, have not the ticket system, but the General Hospital, which is the largest, has kept to that system, and they have lately been investigating as to whether it is wise. The difficulty is that their subscriptions fall off if they do not give the subscribers something for them.

45328. It is an inducement to them?—That is so.

45329. What is the hospital that has no tickets, how do they deal with it?—That is the Queen's, and they charge 1s. if the patients can pay, and free if they cannot; there are also some minor hospitals on the same footing, like the Skin Hospital.

45330. Is the Queen's endowed?—I think partially endowed.

Labour 45331. Has your labour bureau been developed at bureau at Birmingham, does it deal with the cases other than those which are known as the unemployed?—I think not. I think it has not been successful so far, because it is a very difficult thing to ask a master man to go there for his men, they are not the class of men he wants.

45332. It has been suggested to us that the labour bureau system ought to be largely developed and put on a proper footing; it ought to be a municipal labour bureau, not merely associated with the lowest class of employee, but all classes of employees, have you ever thought of that subject?—I have not, but surely the trade unions look after the men in their own trades at the present time.

45333. They deal practically with nothing but skilled labour?—That is so.

45334. The evidence before us is that pauperism is mainly confined to the lower stratum of the unskilled labourers who are worse off?—Yes.

45335. You have not thought about that question?—I have not.

45336. Your opinion is, I suppose, that the bureau system in its present state is not of very much use?—It has hardly been working long enough, I think, for it to have had a fair trial; manufacturers in the city have not got to know of it—we have only been working a short time.

45337. It is practically associated with the unemployed?—That is so. The great trouble are the builders' labourers and painters and so forth, who have only a season trade to a large extent.

45338. Do you know if the employers or those connected with seasonal trades have at all made use of the labour bureaux?—Yes, they have.

45339. (Mr. Loch.) What strikes one from the evidence that was given to-day and upon other days is that there is so much said about relief as a kind of remedy for the evils of this life and so little about exertion or thrift and so on. Do you propose in your city aid society to attach any kind of conditions to the relief that is to be given in the direction I suggest?—As to the class of persons?

45340. As to the people in the future providing better for themselves or anything of that kind?—I think you will find I have laid stress upon the personal influence, if you look at Paragraph 7; that is really what the voluntary helpers can do so much better than the paid helpers by really going into the homes and encourage them to adopt habits of thrift and so on.

45341. Would you make relief conditional in any manner, would you say: Here is a young man who comes to us, and we give him relief on the understanding that he joins a friendly society, or what you may think right? and would you see that that was carried out?—We have not had many single cases at present of young men; we have been dealing with homes.

45342. Take a widow with young children who have their lives before them?—They should be urged to habits of thrift.

45343. Have you any evidence to show that the urging has been fruitful, or are you coming into the position of being one more relief society?—Of course, we are young yet in our organisation, but you have churches and you have chapels and the Charity Organisation Society and the various institutions of the City, and my idea was to form them all into one body. We get so much overlapping at the present time, and it is desirable to organise them into one large society. When the voluntary helpers have really seen the difficulty of helping the families, then they will be more willing to come in and be taught, I think at present the Charity Organisation Society want people to be taught before they have had any practical experience. I consider it is more desirable to feel the practical difficulties first before having definite instruction.

45344. They do not feel the need of training?—No.

45345. I think that is the gist of the matter; do you ultimately think that the circle of relief-givers is to increase the relief, or do you take the opposite view, that the circle of relief-givers is rather to decrease the relief, that they support themselves more?—I think the latter.

45346. With regard to the hospitals, have you had much to do with them?—I was chairman of one for some time, but I have not anything actively to do with them at the present time.

45347. I mean in connection with the city aid society?—No, not at the present time, except in getting notes from them and working with them, but I hope in time we shall do.

45348. Would your idea be to include them in your common Board?—Yes, ultimately.

45349. Having some experience in these matters in this way, do you think you find that these various bodies will join together simply for the good of the cause, or do you think that they will not have various views of their own development which will rather prevent their forming part of a common association?—I think they will be willing to join for the cause. Of course, I cannot definitely say they will, because I have not tried them yet.

45350. Here we have in London, for instance, hospitals which it would be very desirable to bring into any co-operative relation on right lines with the Poor Law, but I think it will be admitted it is difficult. What would you suggest if that were the problem in Birmingham; what would you do?—I should think that if we were to have one large society formed and representatives of the various hospitals on it, then we should gradually get a working scheme.

45351. Do you think that they would, as it were, give up their own views and judgment when it came to their taking, for instance, some department of work and leaving other departments to others?—I think they might. The great difficulty in an out-patient hospital at the present time is that the deserving man may not get helped. If you go into an out-patient waiting room you will see one man who is well clothed and you might say he ought not to be there, and you will see a ragged man next to him, and think that he ought to be there. The ragged man may only want a 6d. bottle of medicine, whereas the well dressed man may want skilled help for which he could not pay. I think if we could get some system whereby these cases could be looked into first, it would be a great help.

45352. Practically that covers your proposal in every direction, that is to say better inquiry?—That is to say better inquiry into each case.

Birmingham its finance.

45353. Then as to funds, how do you raise your funds or propose to raise your funds, from the charitable side of the town?—We have gone to well-to-do citizens at the present time.

45354. You have raised money for relief, have you not?—Yes, and for organisation as well.

45355. Your expenses would increase certainly, if you had committees in all parts of Birmingham, Aston and so on?—We do not deal with Aston at the present time; we are Birmingham only. The offices are the chief expense, rent, rates, taxes and so forth. Having got these branch offices we have connected with them representatives of all the philanthropic institutions, and all churches and chapels in that part of the city. We shall insist upon records being kept so that certain cases could be earmarked to certain churches and chapels, and so forth. I think in time the churches and chapels will distribute their funds through a kind of semi-civic organisation like ours.

45356. Is that your ultimate consummation, that is to say that there should be a sort of semi-civic organisation?—That is so.

Proposal for charitable committees to administer rate out-
relief.

45357. Do you propose to rely upon the rates in any sense for money, either for relief or in respect of the expense?—If we were not able to raise sufficient funds to deal with the cases from voluntary help, and we were helping the guardians, I think we ought to have help from the rates—we should be keeping people out of the workhouse.

45358. Unless your type of work is very different from the type of the Poor Law relief work, which I take it is chiefly the granting of small sums of money, would you not be doing, so to speak, in another way what the guardians are doing in theirs?—We should be doing it far more cheaply than they are doing it at the present time; to force a man into the workhouse is not the cheapest way of dealing with the case; there are many widows with families where a few shillings a week would considerably help to keep the home up until the boys could earn their living, and so forth.

Defects of Poor Law
administration.

45359. I think the workhouse is unduly enforced, at any rate in many unions. The difficulty is in dealing with individual cases like the cases of widows and soon. Do you propose to deal with them on another footing from that of the board of guardians, so as to justify a separate organisation, so to speak?—I think we should join with them. Our organisation would be much wider and broader than theirs, and of course they are hampered to a certain extent by the methods in which they have to deal with the various cases.

45360. How do you think they are hampered; what is in your mind particularly with regard to that?—They are hampered by their rules and their officers; the paid officer naturally gets hardened to his work; he cannot help it, whatever his feeling is; whereas I think voluntary helpers from time to time are able to help in the home far more than the paid officers and by timely advice and assistance prevent destitution.

45361. Is that the main issue with you?—Yes.

45362. Are you not liable to the other thing, to find a somewhat unthoughtful sympathy?—Too sympathetic?

45363. Not too sympathetic, but wrongly sympathetic, if I may so put it, which may lead them very far away?—Our organisation deals with the choice of each of the helpers. The central body have really control of the whole thing, and they authorise certain helpers. If we found there was an extr. vagant helper, or that the helpers were not working on the same lines in various parts of the city, we should take steps to make some change.

45364. You are doing that actually now?—Yes.

45365. So you think you are changing your helpers about and get a better sort?—Yes.

45366. (Mrs. Bosanquet). I went to see your offices when I was in Birmingham, and I went through some of the cases; there were certain points that rather puzzled me, about which I thought perhaps you could help me. For instance, the lady who is in charge there told me you never give relief in money, only in kind?—Mostly in kind, but sometimes in money; we have to. I should say the lady in charge has been doing secretarial work, and has not had the actual charge of the cases.

45367. I think she said that was because you could not trust the people who received it?—That is to say to a large extent we give them grocery orders, and coal orders, and so on to help them.

45368. Does that mean the inquiry does not show they are a good sort of people?—I cannot say that, but it is a very much better way of helping them, I think, by giving them orders in kind than giving them money.

45369. You think if you get hold of a really deserving case, an upright man, it is better to distrust him so far?—We do give money, but it is an exception and not the rule.

45370. So I understood. Looking through a large number of these cases it seemed to me the limit of help was 4s. or 5s. a week?—That is so; they go up to 8s., which is the maximum, I think, that was given by the Lord Mayor's Fund, but each separate branch is able to deal with its own people.

45371. That seemed to me to be the average; for instance, I found several cases of man and wife and three children, which were only having 4s. a week in groceries?—Yes.

45372. Would you consider that would keep the home together?—It would help it at all events for the time.

45373. It was said there was no other income on the papers?—I do not know any special case. I have not gone into those special cases that you mention; there may be some reason as to why they were only getting 4s. or 5s. a week. It must be borne in mind that friends, relatives, and neighbours frequently find meals and help in other ways. All the circumstances must be considered.

45374. I took them from the heap. Do you think you might hope to develop a more adequate form of relief than that?—Yes, I think so. Our society is very young at the present time. I trust when these other philanthropic societies of the city come in and join us that we shall be on a much broader basis than we are at the present time. The amounts that have been given have been based, to a large extent, on what we gave through the Lord Mayor's Fund, we had a certain scale there; it varied from 8s. to 2s. 6d.; or something like that. We have some on our books which we are helping far more than that.

45375. I think they told us of one case where you were helping a widow far more than that?—Yes.

45376. Is it possibly on that question of giving more adequate relief that the Charity Organisation Society is standing out?—I do not know what the Charity Organisation Society gives at this present time, whether they have any special scale or not.

45377. What would it take for a man and wife and say three children to live on and keep their rent going?—Do you mean so that he could barely subsist without selling any of his goods?

45378. Yes, and paying his rent?—I should think about 10s. to 15s. a week.

45379. Could he manage on that?—I think so, in a small house.

45380. The rent would be, I suppose, about 3s.?—Yes, about 3s. to 3s. 6d.

45381. For instance, there are some notes I find that I took of a man and wife and four children, no income, 4s. for three weeks?—That is only supposed to help him to tide over the time, in the hope that he will find work in the interval. Some of these men get just a day's work at odd jobs. Then there is the help of the friends and relatives before mentioned. The report of the visitor would guide the committee.

45382. Then "no income" would be a mistake of the inquirer?—Yes, it might be. It might also be the statement of the applicant who often considers casual earnings are not income.

45383. (Miss Hill.) I gather that you think there is quite a distinct work for charity to do independent of that done by the Poor Law?—Yes, I do.

45384. Would you consider that it would be beneficial if it took up such work as this, which is evidently satisfactory and, so to speak, improving to the people?—Yes.

The function

45385. Not the mere repetition of doles?—No, not a mere doling out of money from time to time.

45386. I wonder whether you would feel that it was more important on the whole to get whatever was done to stimulate the energies of the people than to attempt to classify the people as if some were good and some were bad, and you could not enervate the good and could not improve the bad, that the system of relief, whatever it was, should be wholesome and stimulating?—Yes, that is what I feel; it is the personal influence of the voluntary visitors in the home and urging various things that will help the family permanently that I look forward to.

45387. You would hardly think that the mere goodwill on the part of the voluntary helpers would be stimulating unless they had wisdom to judge how the people could be restarted?—Yes.

45388. You want wisdom as well as kindliness?—Yes.

45389. And experience?—Yes, I think in time that will be gained. Of course I think at first some of our helpers may not be exactly the experienced class that we should like, but I think in time they will see the need of getting more experience.

45390. Are you taking any means of putting them under trained leaders or of giving them lectures or classes?—We have not yet, but we shall hope to.

45391. You are not afraid of starting a whole set of other doles, duplicating doles and rather dragging the people down?—No, we are not.

45392. There is that danger, is there not?—There is that danger, but we want the doles to be given from one source only that is the difficulty. The difficulty now is that the clergymen and the ministers and voluntary and philanthropic societies in various parts of the town deal with the sums and some of these people get doles from three or four and they overlap at the present time. If we could get one central agency which should keep a record book of the whole history of every case occurring in that part then I think it would be most helpful to all of them.

45393. If you get people to co-operate you would get rid of the evil of overlapping, but you will not therefore get particularly helpful charity by that?—I think we shall get the best workers from all the various associations.

45394. Have you any groups of leaders trained and ready to act as referees, or whatever you might call them?—Yes, we have an advisory board at the central office to deal with specially difficult cases.

45395. To them as experts they may turn for advice?—Yes, they are experts. Then of course all the chairmen and secretaries of the various branches have been working at this for years. In the City of Birmingham the Charity Organisation Society has some very good trained helpers, and they have been assisting us a good deal, and we hope to join with them in time; that is where I feel that their help will be useful.

45396. Am I right when I gather from what you say about old-age pensions, you would feel it was very important that they should rather crown the efforts of the people than discourage them?—That is so.

45397. Therefore you would be in favour of a contributory scheme?—Certainly.

45398. For the same reason that you feel it dangerous to weaken the sense of responsibility and duty?—That is so.

45399. (Professor Smart.) Is your labour bureau part of the municipal department?—Yes.

45400. Then the distress committee is a separate organisation altogether?—Yes.

45401. I find the two bodies seem to work together?—That is so.

45402. In what way do they co-operate?—They are both under the council. The labour bureau is worked by the distress committee of the council.

45403. The distress committee is under the city council too?—Yes.

45404. What kind of work have you been giving the applicants to do in Birmingham?—On the distress committee we have merely been finding them work, we have not been giving them work to do except in the parks under the Baths and Parks Committee and under the Drainage Board at the sewage farm.

45405. Was that work in the parks set apart as distinctly for charitable purposes?—Practically so. The baths and parks committee are paying certain sums for the work and the distress committee by the voluntary funds that have been subscribed and the Local Government Board grant are making up the work that the baths and parks committee do not feel that they have paid for.

45406. What is the nature of that work, is it work that would otherwise have been done by ordinary employees?—Work that would have been done at a later period; it is not work that would be done in the winter, which is being done at the present time, fresh parks are being laid out.

45407. You are anticipating work which would be done in the future?—Yes.

45408. That is relieving distress in the present at the expense of doing work which would ordinarily be done in the future?—There I agree with you entirely.

45409. What is the wage they give?—The minimum wage in Birmingham is 24s. a week.

45410. For the six days?—For the full six days.

45411. I think you do not allow them to work the full six days?—That is so, we have been working them less.

45412. For what reason; to make the money spin out longer?—To comply with the Act really.

45413. Do you think this work a success?—I do not think it is, because I feel the great trouble is, as you say, doing work now at the expense of work which ought to be done in the future.

45414. I understand that when you cannot find a vacant situation for your candidates at the labour bureau you send them to the distress committee in the meanwhile?—Yes.

45415. Their cases are thoroughly investigated there?—Yes.

45416. And a few of them are consequently put on the parks?—Yes.

45417. Is there any considerable percentage of the applicants who do find work?—No, very few I should say at the present time. I am not an active member, so perhaps I ought not to say.

45418. Is this the first time you have taken up municipal work of this kind, or have you started it at every depression of trade?—No, this is the first time we have taken it up from the council house.

45419. It is the first time the council have taken it up?—Yes.

45420. But some other body I suppose has done so?—Yes, during the time of the Lord Mayor's Fund we found work upon the sewage farm for them, but they paid the full rate then; we do not pay that.

45421. You would take 24s. a week as the full rate?—Yes.

45422. (Mr. Bentham.) The distress committee you refer to is the distress committee under the Unemployed Workmen's Act?—Yes.

45423. Therefore it is a statutory committee?—Yes.

45424. Not under the council as you term it really?—We call it under the council, it is a body belonging to the council I should say perhaps.

45425. It has members of the board of guardians upon it?—That is so.

45426. And also co-opted members?—Yes.

45427. Do you hope to see by means of this City Aid Society the co-ordination of all the charities in Birmingham and see the solution of outdoor relief?—I hope we shall be able to deal with it on the voluntary system through voluntary helpers. The society is working in sympathy and close touch with the distress committee.

45428. Do you think it will be possible with a thorough scheme of all the charities working in harmony one with the other to raise sufficient to give all domiciliary relief without rate aid?—I could not say that that could be done.

Proposed substitution for out-relief of charity with rate contributions

- Sir H. Rogers.*
18 Mar. 1907.
45429. You have not that object in view, I suppose ?
—No, I think that some of the money ought to come from the rates if we are really keeping the deserving poor ; the difficulty is that all the voluntary funds come from a certain class of people, some few people always give, and the men who will not, are let off, whereas if it comes from the rates they are compelled to contribute towards it.
- Proposal to establish machinery for organisation of local charities at expense of rates.
45430. Supposing you had a scheme that would bring together all the charitable agencies and the machinery of such a scheme were paid for out of the rates, would that be as much as you would think it necessary to find from the rates ?—I think so, at first at all events.
45431. Do you think that any assistance of that kind would facilitate the organisation of charities at the present time ?—Certainly.
- Expenses and staff of Birmingham City Aid Society.
45432. Do you not find the working expenses of the City Aid Society are heavy ?—Yes, but we have not had twelve months' working yet, so we cannot exactly tell. There are seven branch offices, of which the rates and taxes have to be paid, and we are working with one officer for every two branches.
45433. One paid officer ?—Yes, and he is supposed to keep up the cases and the records.
45434. Does he make inquiries ?—No.
45435. That means a considerable amount of expense ?—That is so.
- Class of applicants for relief.
45436. (Mr. Lansbury.) Did I understand you that the bulk of the men who get relief are unskilled labourers ?—Yes.
- Question of value of labour bureaux.
45437. Do you think there is ever any difficulty for employers to get unskilled labour when they need it ?—No.
45438. Or for workmen to get unskilled work when there is any unskilled work going ?—No.
45439. So that a labour exchange is really unnecessary for bringing these two together ?—Unless employers of labour could always apply to the one place instead of looking out for their men.
45440. The point I want to put to you is that under present circumstances neither the employer goes without his labour nor the labourer without the work when it is in the city to be done, that they come together without the aid of an exchange ?—In the ordinary course, as far as I know, that is so.
- Question of extent to which organisation of charitable agencies can abolish destitution.
45441. In teaching people habits of thrift and saving and the rest of it, do you think that this really would solve the difficulty that men and women are faced with ?—I think a good many difficulties would be solved by getting the west to the east. If we could get the workers from families living in the west end to go and visit and look at the homes in the east end, a good many problems would be really solved, they would see the conditions under which the poor live and they would be able to help them in various ways and also to deal with various questions when they came up.
45442. The people would still be in need of help from someone ?—That is so.
45443. Under present conditions a number of people are forced for a variety of reasons to rely upon someone ?—That is so, unfortunately.
45444. What you are really trying to do is to organise help for all of them ?—That is so.
45445. You do not put this forward as a remedy for preventing people needing help ?—Not at all.
45446. (Mr. Booth.) There is quite a number of these Local and committees in the district, if I remember rightly it is central or organisation of Birmingham City Aid Society.
45447. Perhaps not all formed yet, but to be formed ?—That is so.
45448. How are they formed ? I think I gathered that they are formed by representatives of the societies that have already been established ?—That is so, the mutual aid societies that were in existence in the various parts of the city.
45449. They appoint the members of the committee ?—Yes.
45450. But you retain a form of central control by the appointment of the chairmen ?—Yes, and the branch officers, they are chosen by the central executive board and we also certify all the helpers from the centre ; their names have to be passed by us at the centre as to whether they are suitable people to help or not.
45451. You also appoint the officers ?—Yes, the three branch officers.
45452. How is the central body appointed ?—We have been appointed by ourselves at the present time, it has grown up. It was appointed at a large meeting at the council house in the first instance in which all the old officers went on, but whether the subscribers in the future will appoint them I am not quite sure, we have not considered the question as to the appointment.
45453. The plan is to retain a very considerable power of central control ?—That is so.
45454. And naturally the societies would hardly submit to that unless they themselves had some voice in the appointment of the central body ?—Yes, so many members are sent up from each branch as representatives of that branch at the present time. The bulk of them are experienced members ; we have four or five Charity Organisation members, university professors and so forth upon our board at the present time.
45455. Are the guardians represented on the central body ?—Yes, I think you will find the representation of the central body stated on the constitution.
45456. I have seen that, but I want to get it on our minutes. Are the guardians also represented on the local committees ?—Yes.
45457. The object, as I understand, is that they should co-operate with voluntary charities in the sense of working together rather than working separately ?—That is so.
45458. There are two ideals, are there not, the one to prevent pauperism and relieve the guardians of those cases that can be treated otherwise ?—Yes.
45459. And the other ideal, which I take to be yours, is joint or common action between the Poor Law and the voluntary charity ?—That is so.
45460. Do you think the joint action between the voluntary body and the Poor Law, with some mingling of their staff, is likely to be successful ?—Yes, I think so.
45461. More successful than the separation ?—Yes. I went round to one of the branches unexpectedly to find them at work, and I found the relieving officer, the Poor Law officer, the Lady Health visitor, and about five or six members of the better working-class men dealing with the cases, showing that we get help from all parts.

Mr. THOMAS OSWALD WILLIAMS, called ; and Examined.

- Mr. T. O. Williams.*
18 Mar. 1907.
45462. (Chairman.) You are chairman of the Aston Board of Guardians ?—I am.
45463. You have for some time been a member of that board ?—Yes, for the last six years.
45464. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief, if you will kindly hand it in ?—Certainly.
- (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)
1. I have been a duly elected guardian for six years, and during that period Chairman of the Finance Committee and Chairman of the Cottage Homes Committee before being elected to the Chairmanship of the Board in April, 1906.
2. The Aston Union comprises some 31,298 acres within the municipal area of the city of Birmingham, the manor of Aston, the townships of Erdington and Sutton Coldfield and the rural districts of Castle Bromwich, Curdworth, Minworth, Water Orton and Wishaw and returns thirty-two members who are elected every three years.
3. The population at the last census was 312,217, and it is computed that this has grown to 350,000 at the present time, of whom 220,000 are in the city of Birmingham.

4. The rateable value of the whole union is £1,338,000, of which sum £800,000 is within the city of Birmingham.

5. The population of the union consists mainly of the working classes who find employment in the various works and factories of Birmingham and Aston, and the ordinary shop-keeping class incident thereto. The greater portion of the city gas works are within the union. The townships of Erdington and Sutton Coldfield are suburban districts, and the rural part of the union is almost wholly agricultural.

6. The loans of the union outstanding at September 29th, 1906, were £139,332, and the inmates of the workhouse for the week ending January 22nd, 1907, were as follows:—

—	Men.	Women.	Children	Total
Workhouse - - -	598	516	55	1,169
Infirmery - - -	226	198	39	463
	824	714	94	1,632

Lunatics - - -	-	-	695	705
Outdoor poor relieved -	-	-	-	1,834
Total on books in receipt of relief -	—	—	—	4,545

7. A census of the inmates of the workhouse was taken by order of the Board in July, 1906, which gave this result:—

Over eighty years - - -	93
„ seventy years - - -	449
„ sixty years - - -	253
From sixteen to sixty years - -	516
Under sixteen years - - -	73
	1,384

And out of this number, whose ages were between sixteen and sixty, 187 were in hospital, 172 were epileptics, ninety-two quite unable to get their own living, eighteen single women, twelve wives of deserters or prisoners.

8. A Revision Committee sit at the union every fortnight and have before them all cases of inmates whom the superintendent relieving officer consider ought to be outside the workhouse, they having recovered from their temporary illness, or for some other cause were admitted to the workhouse. This systematic revision work was adopted some nine months ago and has had a good effect upon certain classes of inmates, and it is believed that by this means the numbers in the house are kept down to a normal level in proportion to the population of the union.

9. There are quarters for old married couples which are now always occupied, although when first erected there was some doubt whether they would be a success.

10. The cell system and stone breaking was brought into use some few years ago when the number of vagrants was excessive, but the stone breaking is not thought to be so necessary, as close working on the land and wood sawing has the desired effect.

11. The vagrants relieved for the week ending January 12th, 1907, were 249, as compared with 304 for the corresponding week of 1906. The numbers of this class of person can, I believe, be kept within reasonable bounds if the guardians will see from time to time that the labour-master keeps them at work and detains them for the full time. Personally, I am in favour of detaining them for seven days in the discretion of the master, especially in cases where he knows that they are habitual tramps. If their visits are more frequent than three times a year take them before the magistrates as rogues and vagabonds.

A genuine searcher for work should be better fed than the ordinary tramp and some means adopted to assist him to get work.

12. The cottage homes system for children is in full working order at Gravelly Hill. Some £50,000 was spent upon land and buildings for nominally 240 children. The expenditure was incurred before I joined the board and I have often enquired why such a large amount was necessary. The only reply I have been able to elicit is that the Local Government Board insisted upon so many things, and the time occupied in getting plans passed delayed the scheme for eighteen months, and then the building trade was abnormally prosperous and a high price contract to build was the result. The homes were quite full eighteen months ago, and on enquiry it was found that a large number of the children were really “ins and outs” and that the cottages were not being used for the class of children for whom they were intended. Witton Hall, which had been used as an industrial school, being in the market, I induced the guardians to purchase and adopt it for the “ins and outs” at a cost of £3,000, and the Local Government Board certified it for 120 children. This purchase did away with the necessity to build more cottage homes; at the same time a strict census of the children eligible to be emigrated to Canada was made, and in the Spring of 1906 some thirty were sent out under the care of Mr Middlemore’s homes and are reported to be all doing well. So far only twenty-six children “ins and outs” are at Witton Hall and the committee have closed two cottages. Why there should be this shrinkage in numbers the committee cannot explain, excepting that it is thought the emigrants and the Witton Hall isolation has acted as a deterrent to this class of person coming into the House with their children for a short time and then leaving only to return again and again.

13. On the question of the respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief, I consider that both are necessary. No poor person should be compelled to seek the shelter of the workhouse if there is any possible means of their remaining outside without danger to themselves and those with whom they live. Once a person has been an inmate all sense of self-independence seems to leave him, and the hopeless side of human nature asserts itself. There is no responsibility, a good bed, plenty of food, although plain, the minimum of work, a little sickness and the infirmery is ready for them. When they are interviewed by the Revision Committee the invariable answer in the majority of cases is, “I do not know where to go and sleep to-night if I go out to look for work, and I have no clothes or boots,” and upon your telling them that some will be found they ask for three days’ leave to look for work, but it means that they intend to get back without having to apply to the committee perhaps a week hence for re-admission. Some will tell you that they are working for their living inside, and do not want to leave, and the officers have in some cases urged that such and such an inmate is useful inside and if all are to be turned out there must be a larger number of officers to do the work. Against this I have steadfastly set my face, and urged the Revision Committee to treat each case on its merits quite irrespective of the utility of the person whilst in the house.

14. The classes of persons who apply for relief may be put under the following descriptions:—

Indoor:—

Aged sick and infirm with friends who are tired of them, and come into the house to die.

The same class without any friends, and unable to look after themselves.

Sick men and women requiring attention in the infirmery (married and single) who are not in any sick club, and have no means of getting proper attention at home.

Consumptive cases, men and women.

Epileptic and feeble-minded.

Lock and itch ward cases.

Remands from the police court.

Ill-treated children whose parents are in prison.

Wives of deserted husbands, and those who are in prison.

Expectant young mothers.

15. The responsibility of relatives to contribute towards the relief of those for whom they are liable cannot be too closely watched, and orders for payment obtained in very instance.

16. Often at the Relief Committees you find sons in receipt of good wages endeavouring to evade contributing towards the support of an aged father and mother, or either, and in the case of lunatics the relatives will resort to any subterfuge to avoid paying a fair sum towards the support of a relative for whom they are liable.

17. It is the custom at the Relief Committees to hear cases of contributory relations, and to make an order upon them which in many instances is a waste of time. No money is paid, none can be recovered until a magistrate's order is obtained. This is expensive to the party liable, but the risk is run. I am of opinion that the order of the committee should be binding in law, in the absence of notice of appeal by the party liable, say, within fourteen days of the order being made, and enforceable as a magistrate's order is under the present law. A speedy and vigorous application of the law to those who are liable to maintain their relations and will not, would be for the benefit of the ratepayer.

18. The causes of pauperism are far too numerous to be dealt with by me except in a general way. In some cases it is hereditary, in others it is the absence of "natural grit" to get on in the world, being without a trade, drink and immorality claim some portion, the old tradesman who has been unfortunate and improvident, and latterly the increasing tendency of masters to employ only young and active men in preference to those who are growing old and slow in their movements.

19. The class of persons seeking election as guardians is a somewhat delicate question. The working classes through their trades union organisation have in the last few years been able to get their representatives elected. There is also the retired tradesman class wanting some occupation, and there is a sprinkling of men who are in active business, but find the work too onerous and exacting if they are to fully do their duty. Personally, as a professional man, I give a whole day a week to Poor Law work, and I have to give more time when attending the Joint Poor Law Committee meetings for the feeble-minded and epileptic. The status of a guardian is not so attractive, and has never been recognised in the same way as a town councillor or even a rural or district councillor. In the former body a member may aspire to become the first magistrate of the city or town, and the chairman of a rural or district council becomes, ipso facto, a county magistrate. Not so in the case of a guardian of a union such as Aston. He may work and labour for the public good, but the honourable position of a magistrate is for members of other public bodies, of quite recent origin as compared to a Poor Law guardian.

20. The administration of relief in the Aston Union is considered to be more economical than either at Birmingham or King's Norton, whose boundaries join with Aston. The general rule is to grant from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. a week and a loaf to an old person as out-relief, and in the case of a widow with children 1s., and a loaf for each child, and whenever possible the widow is expected to maintain one child. No one is forced into the workhouse who can possibly be kept outside. Medical relief and nourishment is given by the relieving officer in all cases where needed by poor persons under the doctor's orders, and it is confirmed by the Relief Committee at their next meeting. The applicant can then attend and show cause why it should be continued or extended.

21. There are five Relief Committees who control their respective portions of the union, and each guardian has a seat on one committee. They choose their own chairman at each meeting, and any question of difference is put to the vote, and the majority decide.

22. In practice the Poor Law is in some instances antiquated and out of date with modern ideas of business methods. There is in many instances far too much "red tape." The confirmation of a £2 increase in the salary of an officer or the appointment of a minor officer, the submission of plans and the general reference to London is, in my opinion, often a needless waste of time and reduces the intelligence of an ordinary business body of men to a level which may have been necessary seventy years ago. If such Local Government Board control is to be continued in the future and there is no relaxation, it will assuredly deteriorate the general tone of boards of guardians in large business centres.

23. The districts of most of the Local Government Board inspectors appear to be far too large for effective inspection and control of the workhouse.

24. The Law of Settlement should be amended so that the work of a clerk to a union should be made less complicated. Much time seems to be consumed in the endeavour to avoid accepting cases alleged to belong to another union.

25. The book-keeping of the workhouse master could be reduced without taking away any efficiency. There appears to be far too much repetition. There should be an entirely separate institution for all feeble-minded and epileptic persons apart from the workhouse, whether they are capable of improvement or not.

26. There should be compulsory classification of all inmates so that the lazy and indolent ones may be thoroughly well supervised and kept apart from the old and infirm who are unable to work.

45465. (Chairman.) You have a strong opinion that if persons once get inside the workhouse they are apt to remain there?—That is so. As I have said in my statement, once you have a person an inmate of the workhouse he seems to lose all self-dependence; the worst side of human nature seems to assert itself, that is they think: "I am here, I have a very small amount of work to do, I have good food and a good bed to lie upon, I have a doctor if I fall sick," and one's experience from the revision committee, in which I take a great interest, is that we have difficulty in getting these men to go out when once they get into the union.

45466. So that you feel some hesitation in sending anyone to the workhouse unless it is a case of bad character or rather a hopeless case, because once there they remain?—I would keep them out on every occasion where it was possible; where I knew they could be looked after in some way I would not have them in the workhouse.

45467. Just reversing that, do the ins-and-outs give you much trouble by constantly discharging themselves?—They give us a good deal of trouble, more particularly in the cottage homes, when they come in with their children and then go out again. I found when I was chairman of the Cottage Homes Committee that the cottage homes were really being much more largely used by the ins-and-outs than they were by the permanent children, hence the scheme which we evolved for dealing with them separately, with the result that we have been able to close, I think, three cottages at the present time whereas we were overcrowded some time ago.

45468. Do you want any extra powers for dealing with these ins-and-outs, the parents?—I do not think you can have any power because they have the right if they are admitted to discharge themselves; all you can do is if you take the children away from them they cannot see them so readily, I think that has a deterrent effect upon the parents.

45469. It has been suggested sometimes that it would have a deterrent influence if you had the power of keeping them in the workhouse and preventing them discharging themselves?—In cases where it is known that the parents are of vicious habits in some instances we have detained the children and allowed the parents to go about their business.

45470. Have the parents claimed the children afterwards?—Not during the time we have had them, they have been quite content, I am sorry to say, in some instances to leave them there; they thought they would be better looked after than by themselves.

45471. You are very satisfied with your cottage home system?—I am not, it is the ideal, but it is a fearfully expensive one, and I think to a large extent it has not done very much good. Of course, in saying that one must bear in mind that it has only been in existence say some seven years, and perhaps what good it may have done may be seen hereafter, but up to now I cannot discover that it has done very much except to help to get children into such a condition that we have been able to emigrate them, or in some cases to board them out.

45472. Do you object to it mainly on account of the expense, or do you think the training is bad?—I do not say I think the training is bad, but I do not think it is good, because after all, although you may call it a cottage home, it is an institution and it is institutional life throughout ; the children come from school and their meals are ready for them, they have a certain amount of work to do, and to school they go again, and then they come home again and their meals are ready, they go to bed at a certain time and they get up at a certain time, it is an institutional life, it is not a natural existence for a child.

45473. What do you prefer?—I much prefer the boarding-out. The children are brought up under more natural conditions in the state of life in which they have been brought up and to which they will have to go, as far as one can judge.

45474. There is a limit to the boarding-out system?—At the present time there is, but I do not think there need be if there were greater latitude given to the boards of guardians.

45475. You think you could find enough suitable foster mothers?—There is no doubt you can find sufficient homes for them if you give more latitude, but there is far too much inspection at the present time. I might give you an instance of a child that was returned to the cottage homes from the foster mother from one of the districts where we are boarding-out. The boy came up to the officer morning after morning crying to the superintendent. I said: "Well, my boy, what is the matter with you?" "I want to go back to my mother," that was the foster mother. I said to that lad: "Come here and tell me why it was you were sent to the cottage homes?" He said: "My mother had not got a shirt for me, I was wearing my nightshirt, my mother was washing my day-shirt, and the inspector came; she found it out and she said I was not to stop there any longer, so she sent me here." That is a case where that child in the ordinary way, according to its conditions in life would have had to put up with that kind of thing, it was not a reason why that child should have been sent back to the cottage home. It was a case, I think, of over-inspection or over-zeal, if you like, on the part of the inspector.

45476. You have no large schools, have you, for children?—The only schools we have at the cottage homes are more really for dots, those that are too young to go to the elementary schools in the district. We have plenty of schools in the district for the children to go to. In fact, last year we had attending the elementary schools 139, and in our own schools we had 35.

45477. Your own school being?—For little children up to say six years of age, we have a mistress for those.

45478. Where is the school?—It is part of the cottage homes, it is a separate building on the site.

45479. You would prefer to develop the boarding-out rather than the scattered homes?—Certainly.

45480. On the double plea, first of economy, and then that the training is better?—Certainly, for the class of children that come under your control, and as a further form of dealing with these children I believe very much in emigration. We have emigrated a good number and shall be emigrating again, I hope, during the season.

45481. Speaking of the persons who seek election on boards of guardians, you find that the status of the guardian is not so attractive as it was before, and is inferior in attractiveness to that of town councillor?—That is my opinion.

45482. What would be your suggestion; do you think the town council should take over the work of the Poor Law guardians?—I do not think so for a moment, speaking from my experience of the Birmingham Town Council I think they have far too much work to do already.

45483. Would you say that the work of a Poor Law guardian is distinct and separate from other work?—Most certainly.

45484. Are you in favour of enlarging the area, would you have one area for the whole of Birmingham?—Undoubtedly from an administrative point of view, I think it would be better if the whole of the city of Birmingham were administered by one Poor Law authority; it is an anomaly that you should have three Poor Law authorities administering in the city of Birmingham, of course it has been growing for some years.

45485. You would get uniformity in that case?—Yes, you would within the city.

45486. At present there is no uniformity, the Aston Union is supposed to be, and is more economical than Birmingham in its out-relief?—That is so, and with regard to the relief of the indoor paupers as well.

45487. It is lower per head?—Yes.

45488. Do you think the out-relief that is given in Aston is adequate?—I think that in some cases it is adequate. In other cases one would like to give them more, but there has been a scale established now for some years past, a recognised scale, a maximum and a minimum, and it has always been a kind of unwritten law that we should adhere to that, but I think in some cases there might be more done in that way.

45489. The supposition rather is, is it not, that there are concealed resources?—That is so, the difficulty which the officers tell us they have to contend with is as to whether they really get to the truth as to the position of the particular applicant for out-relief; there is generally, as they put it, something up their sleeves which you do not know of. It may be that it only takes the form of there being some relative, or they may have some good person who will help them, but they do not tell you everything.

45490. In your relief committees the members representing those localities are not in a majority?—I do not think so. We have, of course, five relief committees and we divide ourselves up according to the districts. I do not think there is any difficulty arises with them.

45491. Do the members who are on the committees represent the localities in which the relief is given?—That is so.

45492. How does that work?—We think it is an advantage; they are more likely to know something of the circumstances of the applicant than if they were in another district.

45493. As regards classification in the workhouse, that, I gather from your statement, you think might be pushed further?—I think so, most certainly.

45494. If you increased the area it would be very much easier, because there would be separate institutions?—That would be so.

45495. With regard to the law of settlement it gives you a great deal of trouble, does it not?—We have every fortnight a paper on settlement work, which is not read to us, but it is there for reference; there is no doubt at all that the two officers which we have, the clerk and the superintendent of the relieving officers, have a good deal of their time taken up in doing nothing else but settlement cases, as to whether they shall take this or that case; it involves an enormous amount of technical details which I do not think are worth the trouble.

45496. You have no working arrangement with the neighbouring parishes, have you?—No.

45497. That would simplify matters?—It would simplify matters, but they each fight for their own to the bitter end.

45498. Do you think you could abolish the law of settlement altogether?—I would like to abolish it, but it is useless, I certainly would abolish it within a certain area of certain unions.

45499. That would necessarily tend to uniformity, would it not?—Yes, I think it would.

45500. Unless there were uniformity, the people would flock to a union where they got better treatment?—Roughly speaking, I would enlarge the area so that if certain people fell within a certain area then they should come within a certain union where they may have applied, there should be no removing them as we have now, people from a few miles outside come to Birmingham and are put into Aston and vice versa, and the same with King's Norton, the three unions being within a very small area.

45501. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) A good deal of that would disappear if the three unions were unified?—It would to a large extent.

45502. (Chairman.) Coming to the vagrants, do you agree with the report which was made some time ago, by which it was proposed to hand them over to the police?—I do not agree with that. I think they are better dealt with as they are. I do not think the ordinary vagrant should be dealt with by the police.

Mr. T. O. Williams. 45503. You would discriminate between the genuine searcher for work and the vagrant ?—I would.

18 Mar. 1907. 45504. How would the genuine searcher for work be able to make good his claim ?—I do not think there is much difficulty when you put him under examination. The professional tramp always has his story ready to hand, and you have only to look at his hands and, if necessary, to look at his face to see whether he is a genuine tramp or not, because a genuine tramp is generally clean, he has taken a bath wherever he has been. The genuine searcher for work, unless he has been on the road only for a short time, you would very soon find out.

45505. You do not think it would be necessary for him to have a dossier with him to show where he had been engaged ?—I think it would be an advantage.

45506. You would treat him differently ?—Altogether differently. I would give him proper food and help him on his journey to look for work and get work.

45507. Would you take him out of the casual ward ?—I would ; I would have a separate place for him.

Aston boarding-out of children and its inspection. 45508. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the boarding-out of children that you speak so forcibly of, are you speaking of boarding-out within the union, or without ?—In and out.

45509. Both ?—Yes.

45510. Is the inspection, as we were told in evidence to-day, the same within the union and without the union in Aston ?—When they are boarded-out within the union, the inspection really comes immediately under the relieving officer of that district, although the lady Local Government Board Inspector has the right of visiting as well ; but generally she restricts her inspection to those outside the union.

45511. She does take some responsibility also for those within the union ?—So far as I know ; it may be that that arises in this way : it so happens that the Hints district, where we have children boarded out, is immediately on the border of our union area ; there is part of Hints Association within the borough of Sutton Coldfield, and the other part is just outside ; that part which is outside does not come within our union, but she certainly does visit those that are on the border of Sutton Coldfield.

45512. I understand that she has no official duty or responsibility connected with those within the union ?—I am afraid I cannot speak positively on that point.

45513. Was the instance you gave us of the child whose shirt was being washed boarded-out within the union ?—That was outside, that was in the Bewdley district.

Comparative merits of boarding-out and cottage homes. 45514. Do you think both systems desirable ?—I do. I think anything which will keep the children away from institutional life is good. The idea of the cottage home is that they shall not think about the workhouse ; but you cannot keep the workhouse from them, but whenever you put them amongst ordinary people, as you do when they are boarded out, they forget they are workhouse children.

Inspection of children boarded within Aston Union. 45515. Have you a lady committee of inspection also within the union ?—On the Sutton Coldfield side, yes. But we have a few children who are not inspected by any committee ; they appear before the guardians so often, and we have a doctor's certificate, and they are also visited by the relieving officer.

Scales of relief and their results. 45516. With regard to out-door relief, as regards the scale there is perhaps some advantage ; you said it had been the custom for a great many years to adopt a maximum and a minimum ?—Yes.

45517. There may be some advantage in there being no doubt about what can be expected ?—Yes, I think so.

45518. That is to say those who apply know before-hand what is the utmost they can expect ?—That is so.

45519. May not that have a good effect on the efforts that will be made to help them by others ?—I think that would have the effect ; they will say : Well, if I go to this Committee I shall get 1s. 6d. a week and a loaf, or I may get 2s. or 2s. 6d. ; they take it as part of the calculation as to how they are going to maintain themselves outside the House.

45520. Therefore it is not always a question of finding out what resources they have, but the actual fact of what resources they have—the friends may help them if they know they will not get more than a certain sum from the guardians ?—I think so.

45521. Who otherwise might withhold that help ?—Yes.

45522. Therefore the knowledge of the certainty of what is the utmost they can expect would perhaps stimulate sources which are not legally responsible but who are interested in the case ?—I should think that would have that effect upon them in some cases.

45523. I see the administration at Aston on the whole is uniform from year to year ?—Yes ; as I say it has been so since I have been on the board ; there is an unwritten law that you shall have a maximum and a minimum.

45524. It has resulted in economy as compared with some of the other unions in the neighbourhood ?—We believe so.

45525. You do not recognise there have been hardships ?—No, we do not ; I do not think there has been any case but what has been treated entirely on its merits.

45526. With regard to the question of settlement if you had enlarged areas, having regard to the responsibility of settlement you would have to have a common purse within those enlarged areas, would you not ?—I think the effect would be that you would get a levelling down, I think, with those that you ought to take and those which you have taken, and vice versa ; the whole thing would come to the same thing, and you would save the labour and the time that is wasted, as I term it, by the clerks.

45527. I can see how you would reduce the number of cases in which you had to prove a different settlement, but for such cases as you still did prove a different settlement for, if you reduced the number of cases by enlarging the area, those enlarged areas must after all work from a common purse, must they not—they must have a common financial responsibility ?—That will be the effect of it ; but as I understand the question, if you know the area as to which you are to accept that as the settlement, the application is either, for example, to Aston or to Birmingham, or to the King's Norton union ; they go to one or the other. It may be that those who come to Aston, as it is now, may belong to King's Norton ; but if you were to keep them at Aston because they come there and are within a certain area, the same thing would also apply to King's Norton, and the same thing would apply to Birmingham ; so I think roughly justice would be done all round.

45528. If they are not within that area then they would be chargeable to the individual union ?—I think outside that you must have them come to some kind of settlement. For example we have cases of people that are removed to us which come from some of the unions in London ; they are sent to us and we could not do otherwise than accept them, and that would be so in the case that I have suggested.

45529. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you think in the three unions the conditions of the people receiving relief are sufficiently similar ?—Yes, I do, sufficiently.

45530. You think that the workhouses in the three are much of a muchness ?—Certainly, as regards Aston and King's Norton, because we have the same class of people—we have a mixture of agricultural as well as the ordinary artisan.

45531. Is the standard much the same in the administration of out-door relief, or is there more extravagance in one than in the other ?—I think at Birmingham they are more liberal than we are at Aston, and the same with King's Norton. I think in Birmingham they give them parcels of grocery as well as money.

45532. With regard to the number of people receiving out-door relief is there any difference ?—I think there is very little. We relieved last week 1,770 persons, as compared with 2,032 twelve months ago, and I believe that Birmingham relieved about the same—about 1,770.

45533. You do not think there would be ground for people choosing between them ?—I do not think so.

45534. You, of course, see in many districts it might be so, the difference in the administration might cause

Scales of relief and their results.

Effect of enlarging the area of settlement.

Question uniformity between Poor Law unions in Birmingham city.

that?—It does exist; there are unions where they give very much larger sums than we give for outside relief.

45535. You see it would be very difficult to extend the principle of settlement with regard to those?—If you make the population the basis of the alteration in the settlement, I think you would find it would work in most all the large towns.

45536. I see that in one of your suggestions you say you think the district of the Local Government Board inspector is too large; what have you in your mind there?—The inspector that we have to deal with, Mr. Nicholas Herbert, has to deal with Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, part of Surrey, Warwickshire, and he has to take in the King's Norton Union. I say that is a larger area than any one man can compass. He makes about one or two visits a year to our union. I say that no man can do his work, considering what he has to do by way of reports to the Local Government Board and that kind of thing; he could not possibly do it.

45537. What is your conception of the work of an inspector?—My idea is that the inspector should come to the union, and that he should not come and make a visit from ward to ward and then go away, but that he should, if necessary, stay a day or two and see some of the detailed administration of the workhouse, and assist the Master by suggestions, and that he should also attend sometimes with the clerk and confer with the relieving officers, and generally take a kind of fatherly interest, if I may so term it, in the work, stimulating those that have to carry out the details.

45538. What effect do you think that would have on visiting committees and their interest?—I think they would welcome it to that extent; they would be very glad indeed to have the experience of the officer.

45539. Do you think there is a danger of their sense of responsibility being weakened?—I do not think it would be for a moment, certainly not in Birmingham; I think we are too self dependent for that.

45540. Have you any views with regard to the training of inspectors; have you thought of that at all?—I have not; I am afraid I do not know sufficiently as to where inspectors come from, except in one instance that I happened to know, where he was mayor of the town in which he resided, and one day he blossomed forth as an inspector of the Local Government Board; I believe before that he had had, so far as I know, no training whatever.

45541. Do you think it would be a good thing if there was more inspection of outdoor relief?—I think that is better done by the permanent officers. I think that the cross visiting by the officers does all that is necessary.

45542. You think that is sufficient?—I think so.

45543. You do not think it would be a good thing if now and then an inspector went round a district?—No, I do not think that would do. If he spent two or three days in one union he could go round for a day or so with the cross visitor, possibly in that way he might do good and learn some of the cases; but generally I should say not; if he had more time to spare than he has got now he could do something of the sort.

45544. You sit on Relief Committees yourself?—Yes.

45545. Do you find the reports of your relieving officers are generally accepted?—In many cases yes, but one cannot get rid of this idea—that the officers begin by considering not what the person wants but whether the case ought not to go without. I am bound to say that they begin the other way about; they do not accept that the person is entitled to relief, but they rather try to see whether they cannot do without it.

45546. That is to say their ambition is to keep down the number as far as possible?—That is so. It has happened once or twice in my experience that we have had to say to the officer: It is not for you to say who shall have relief, but the Committee; it is your duty to bring every case before the Committee, not to put them off and tell them to come again; you should bring them before us, we will decide whether or not they are to be relieved. I am afraid in some cases that does happen amongst relieving officers; they say: It is no good your applying, you will not get anything.

45547. Do you think the authority of relieving officers is increasing or decreasing?—I think in some unions it is increasing.

45548. In your own?—In our own I think we keep it in check.

45549. What sort of class do your relieving officers come from?—We have one who has been a guardian, and of the other four some have done some kind of relief work in a temporary capacity; I think we have one or two like that.

45550. Assistant relieving officers?—Yes, they have got a little experience.

45551. Do you think it would be better if they had had more training?—I think it would be a good thing if they had had a little more training. I think what they want really is to judge more of character, than of the evidence which they have put before them.

45552. Do you think that it is true of officers generally under the Poor Law that they are rather wanting in knowledge?—I do not think I could answer that question, because my experience is limited to Aston.

45553. Take the officials in your workhouse and in your schools, for instance?—I think that generally we have a very good class of officers throughout the union.

45554. Do you think that the basis of the Poor Law service could be improved?—Yes, I think something might be done. I think it would be a good thing if they had to pass an examination, or something of that kind. Amongst themselves they have an association, and they do something, I think, to mutually aid each other. They have a means of disseminating knowledge amongst themselves, which is of advantage; but I think they do not pass an examination or anything of that kind.

45555. Do you think it would be better if there were more mobility among them?—I think it would be better.

45556. Do you see any way of securing that or bringing that about?—I think it could be brought about amongst themselves. I think the Poor Law Officers' Association certainly might do something, if, for instance, they had a charter and they were a recognised association. I think there has been some movement in that direction, and I think it would be an advantage, because then they would be recognised as officers having experience.

45557. How would that facilitate mobility?—I think they would have the advantage of meeting together, and it might be that they would have to face some kind of probationary term before they advanced to a better stage in the Poor Law service. I think that could be brought about.

45558. Do you think it would be a good thing if, for instance, the three unions you are interested in could exchange masters for a time?—No, I should object to that.

45559. Do you think it is a good thing that a master should stay all his time at one large workhouse?—They only stay as long as it suits them. They move on as quickly as they can if there is more salary about.

45560. After a certain age there is not much chance of moving is there?—Then I think in most cases their position becomes so uncomfortable that they resign and take their superannuation.

45561. (Mr. Lansbury.) I understand you are very much in favour of removing children from the Poor Law?—Yes.

45562. Would you be in favour of handing them over entirely to the education authority so as to prevent any risk of contamination by the Poor Law?—To do that you would have to reconstitute the education authority as it now exists, would you not?

45563. Why?—For instance, they have no institutions of any kind except in their schools.

45564. Could they not take over from the Poor Law institutions which were needed, these cottage homes of yours, for instance?—They might be able to do it in that way. That is a new phase of the subject which has never occurred to me before. I am not prepared to say that it would be a good thing, or otherwise.

45565. You are a strong believer in boarding out, are you not?—Yes.

45566. Would there be any objection to the education authority paying the money, either to the foster-mother or to the proper mother of the child?—I do not think there would be any objection to that. I think it would only be a distinction without a difference.

45567. In the one case, I understand, certain of your children come before the guardians occasionally, and then they are inspected by a doctor?—Yes.

45568. Do you not think they are known, in the villages where you board them out, as the "Aston children"?—I think that is not the case in the villages, because they do not come before the doctor in the villages where they are boarded outside the union; it is only within the union where they are examined by a doctor.

45569. But they are inspected outside the union, are they not?—They are inspected outside the union, but I do not think people ever think of them as Poor Law children.

45570. Have you visited them?—I have not done so myself. I have not been on a deputation, but several of the guardians have been, and they go once a year.

45571. You do not know whether it is a fact that when you do go and visit them the people in the village tell you where the Aston children live, for instance, and where the King's Norton children live?—I do not think they know.

45572. If that were so, you can hardly claim that you have removed them from the Poor Law taint, when everybody knows that they are Poor Law children?—You have removed them from the workhouse influence anyhow.

45573. But that is not all that is involved in the taint of pauperism, is it?—I think it is the basis of everything.

Medical staff and facilities for operations in Aston Infirmary.

45574. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been suggested to us that some of the Poor Law infirmaries are rather deficient in the specialist staff, especially for surgical operations; what staff have you got for surgical operations?—We have a resident medical officer and we have an assistant. We have a proper operating room in which the medical officer undertakes all minor operations, and I think in one or two instances he has even attempted major operations. Certainly all minor operations are done efficiently, and we have a doctor who comes in in order to administer the anæsthetics as often as may be required.

45575. What about the major operations?—We do not have many major operations, and I think that with very few exceptions they do not come to us.

45576. But supposing a serious major operation was sent into you, who would do it?—Our medical officer would do it, with such assistance as he might think necessary from outside.

45577. Do you think that quite satisfactory? It has been represented to us that in some cases that is not a satisfactory arrangement?—From experience we have found it very satisfactory; in fact our medical officer has carried out some very serious operations, and the people are alive to-day to tell the tale.

45578. What sort of qualification has he? Is he a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons?—I am afraid I cannot tell you exactly at the present moment what he is, but we thought his qualification was quite sufficient for the purpose for which we appointed him. He has been with us now for some two or three years.

45579. You do not think that for big operations you ought to have some consultants as they have at an ordinary hospital, say?—If the medical officer suggested to us that it would be necessary to have a consultant in a particular case we certainly should welcome the suggestion.

45580. But of course he would not naturally suggest that he was incompetent to do a thing?—He would not suggest that he was incompetent, but I think he would very quickly suggest that it was a case where he would not like to take all the responsibility.

45581. And you are quite satisfied with the arrangement?—We are quite satisfied up to now. We are in this position, that any interesting case or serious case certainly goes to the general hospital. The general hospital in Birmingham or the Queen's Hospital to-day, will take any case which is interesting; but if it is not interesting and it is a Poor Law case, they very quickly send it on to our infirmary.

45582. It might be important, but not interesting?—Medical staff. That is true, but when I say interesting I mean it is interesting from the medical point of view, and I assume that if it is interesting it must be serious.

45583. Do you know whether your medical superintendent who does these operations has the double qualification of surgery and medicine?—I am afraid I cannot tell you accurately, and I should not like to mislead you.

45584. Could you get us his qualification?—Certainly, and I will let your Secretary know, if you like.

45585. (Dr. Downes.) Are you aware that it is obligatory on the medical superintendent to have the double qualification; if not, you may take it from me that it is so?—I think you may take it as a matter of fact that that was thoroughly investigated at the time of his appointment. I do not myself remember exactly what his qualification is, but I think it was sufficient for the purpose. It passed the Local Government Board, and therefore it must have been satisfactory; but I will let you know exactly what it is. (The witness subsequently stated that the qualifications of the two medical officers of Aston Union are as follows:—Dr. Birchall, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., L.F.P.S.G.; Dr. Ruston, M.B., Ch.B. (Aberdeen), D.P.H.)

45586. Do you subscribe to the general hospital?—The board do. We send them 15 guineas a year. They grant us no tickets for it and we have not the right of sending in a case. It is a sort of recognition for casualty cases and that kind of thing.

45587. Your intention is that the more serious cases would ordinarily go to the general hospital for operation?—Yes.

45588. Have you any complaint of the surgical treatment in your infirmary?—None whatever; on the contrary.

45589. In Paragraph 7 of your statement you say you have 172 epileptics in your workhouse; are those of sound mind, or would that number include the unsound?—They are mixed together. There are some who are quite silly, and there are others who are only subject to fits on occasions.

45590. Do you know how many imbeciles you have—approximately?—I do not think, speaking from memory, our imbeciles, all told, men and women, would be more than a third of this total.

45591. Referring to the Local Government Board inspection, what sort of details do you think the inspector should go into in order to assist the master?—I think he could assist him very much in what I should term the general administration; for instance, when he attended our board the other day he pointed out that in his opinion there was far too much liberty given to some of the adults, and that there was too much mixing up amongst the one side of the house and the other. He thought that something might be done in that way to change the aspect of the house, and that the men might be kept more in their quarters. I think it would sometimes stimulate the master to be a little more severe with them than possibly he might be inclined to be at other times.

45592. If he came in too often would he not relieve the master of responsibility?—I should not suggest that he should come too often.

45593. You recognise that there should be a mean in the matter?—Yes, certainly; you must strike a happy medium, of course.

45594. With regard to out door medical relief, in your union do the guardians ever have any review of the outdoor medical relief?—Not of the outdoor medical relief, because it is so constant. You have the relieving officer say: "Mrs. Smith has had a medical order during the week," and it is passed without a question. She may have gone to the doctor and had a bottle of medicine, and there is an end of it.

45595. What check have you on the abuse of your outdoor medical relief?—Nothing but what the officers can control. We do not consider that there is any abuse, I think, in practice. We believe that if poor persons are in want of medical relief they should have it without any difficulty.

45596. Have you ever heard it alleged that the system in your union deters people from coming for medical relief?—I should think it would have the contrary effect.

45597. What would be your ground for thinking the contrary?—The numbers of cases we have every week. If there is any deterrent at all, I should think it would be where the doctor—I have one in my mind—would otherwise say: "This is a case for treatment in the infirmary."

45598. Are your district medical officers whole-time men?—We have one or two, I think it is, who give the whole of their time, but the others have their private practice in addition.

45599. What is your opinion of the whole-time system?—I think the whole-time system is the better of the two; I prefer it myself.

45600. Do you secure the services of the same men for any length of time, or do they come and go?—There has only been one change (and I think that was through superannuation) since I have been a guardian, that is within the last six years. I think it is too profitable for them to change, if they can avoid it.

45601. Do you know whether medical fees are suspended in your union for operations or for midwifery cases?—We pay 10s. for every ordinary confinement case, and we give, I think it is as much as £2 where it is a complicated case.

45602. Do you find that the fees are increasing?—No, I could not say that.

45603. You speak of the book-keeping in the workhouse, and you consider that it could be reduced?—Yes.

45604. Could you give us any suggestions as to the manner in which it could be reduced?—I should not like to do so off-hand, but if you would wish to have that I will make a special point of getting some information on it.

45605. I think you have professional knowledge of book-keeping, have you not?—Yes.

45606. Then personally I should welcome a short memorandum upon that subject if you could give us one?—If it is the wish of the Commission I should be very pleased to do that. What was in my mind was this, that at our cottage homes our superintendent said there was a certain amount of repetition work which he had to do.

45607. (Chairman.) As that is a matter on which you can speak with great authority, I think, we should be much obliged if you could get that information for us?—Thank you; I will undertake to send you a paper. (See Appendix, No. XXII. (A).)

45608. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the system of classification which you favour, it is by character, I understand?—It must be by character.

45609. Is it inside or outside the house?—It must be inside the house. You must know the antecedents of the person you have to deal with, as you have people who practically live inside the house, going out in the summer-time for a month or two and then coming back again.

45610. So the classification would be according to their conduct or according to the reputation that they make by their conduct inside the house?—Yes. I think those who come to the union in the first instance should all go into the first division, and then they would go up into a better division according to their conduct.

45611. Does your whole-time medical officer do the vaccination work, too?—Yes.

45612. He does it all?—He does; and makes a very handsome income out of it.

45613. Does he do the midwifery work?—Yes.

45614. Is he assisted in any way?—No, he does it all himself. He is a most competent person.

45615. Does he do all the midwifery himself?—Yes.

45616. Does he not pay anyone to assist him in taking a case?—I think he pays a medical man to assist him in his vaccination cases. I think he had one year something like 1,400 cases.

45617. But he does not have any one to assist him in midwifery?—Not in midwifery, and I do not think it is necessary, because he can do it all.

45618. Sometimes we have heard of their having paid midwives, and of the officer only being sent for in cases of emergency?—He may have done so, but it would not come under our notice in any way.

45619. I suppose you would object to it if it did?—We should object to it, certainly.

45620. It would be a very serious thing, would it not?—Yes.

45621. But as far as you know it, does not go on?—It does not go on at all as far as I know.

45622. Is there any co-operation between the outdoor medical officer and the indoor medical officer?—None whatever.

45623. So that when a case goes into the infirmary it is diagnosed entirely afresh?—Entirely, except that the medical certificate states the complaint of the person you are going to admit. But I do not think that influences the doctor; he takes the case on its merits.

45624. So the treatment may be entirely reversed?—It might be reversed.

45625. Would you favour your infirmary becoming a medical school?—No, I do not think I should. I should not like the idea that these poor people coming into the house should be the subject of experiments.

45626. You do not think public opinion thus introduced would be an advantage to the institution as a whole?—I do not think it would. I should not like that.

45627. (Dr. Downes.) Would your opinion as to the use of the Poor Law infirmary for educational purposes be modified if the students were restricted to their last year, or to men who had already taken some degree?—Generally speaking I should think it would be a very wrong step to take. I think it would altogether upset the discipline of your infirmary.

45628. (Mr. Gardiner.) And you do not think the poor would get any benefit from it?—I think it would be to the disadvantage of the poor, and I think there would be great prejudice amongst the poor coming into the institution if they thought they were going to be the means of experiments on the part of these people who were having a year's experience.

45629. (Dr. Downes.) What experiment do you think could be carried out?—With every young medical officer it must be more or less a matter of experiment in his work. He must make experiments like everyone else in order to get experience.

45630. But there is a difference between experiment and experience, is there not?—There is a little difference. I am speaking now of the general tendency of public opinion. They would look upon it that the paupers were being experimented upon by the young medical officers.

45631. Does that objection apply to a general medical officer?—It does in some cases.

45632. Within your own knowledge?—Yes, within my own knowledge.

45633. (Mrs. Webb.) Might I ask whether the poor object more to going into a general hospital than they do to coming into your infirmary?—I think that they would prefer to go into the general hospital, because it is not a Poor Law institution.

45634. So they do not object to going into the general hospital?—I do not think so.

45635. In spite of there being students there?—I do not think they do. They think in that case they would go in there, but I think it would be a different thing with the workhouse infirmary. You have a difficulty now in getting some poor people to go into a workhouse infirmary, I think simply because it happens to be a workhouse infirmary.

45636. Because it is under the Poor Law?—Yes.

45637. But you do not have any difficulty in getting them to go into a general hospital where there are students?—We do not have the opportunity. They do that on their own account. It does not come to our cognisance in any way.

45638. (Chairman.) Why should experiments under proper control be more risky in the infirmary than in the general hospital?—I do not think it would be more risky. I am rather speaking of general policy and of the general impression that it would make on poor people and of the dislike that they have for that kind of thing.

45639. Do you think that the sick poor mind their cases being made the subject of special investigation; is it not rather the other way?—I think if a poor person thought he was going to be sent into a school of medicine or a school of surgery—because that would be the effect of the question that was put to me—he would say: “I prefer to bear my sufferings outside; I know the end of that, and I won’t go inside.”

45640. If, after all, the infirmary was only on the same footing as the general hospital, what then would be the objection?—I think there would be an objection from the point of view of the proper control of the infirmary as at present constituted.

45641. Of course if the idea was started that because a person was a poor person therefore treatment would be attempted on him which would not be attempted on the well-to-do, then I could understand that it would be natural; but would not the prejudice be more from the rumours that had started, than from anything they had actually known?—Unfortunately, poor people judge more or less from prejudice; that is one’s experience. There is a prejudice against the workhouse, there is a prejudice against the infirmary—though you may call it an infirmary, or what you will, they still have the idea that it is the workhouse; and if, in addition to that, you are going to call in young students who are known to be getting their experience, you will find it will increase the prejudice and the poor people will suffer in consequence. That is my impression.

45642. (Mr. Benthams.) Are you on the committee of the general hospital in Birmingham?—No, I have nothing to do with the general hospital.

45643. Therefore you have really no knowledge whether these people have a prejudice against going into the general hospital or not?—No, I have not, except that I know from reputation that where there are cases which require very careful operation they are able to get into the general hospital; but, on the other hand, if a case is in the general hospital and it turns out that it is a Poor Law case, they as quickly as possible remove that case to the Poor Law institution.

45644. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think you said you emigrate a great many of your children?—Yes, we do.

45645. At what age do you do that?—I think the Local Government Board say we can go down to as low as five—between five and fourteen; but we think five rather too young, and we generally send them from about eight up to thirteen.

45646. By what means do you do that—through what agency?—We have emigrated some through Dr. Barnardo’s agency, but latterly we have done so through the homes of Mr. Middlemore.

45647. Is that a Birmingham institution?—Yes, it is an institution for waifs and strays.

45648. Do they report to you on the children?—We pay a fee to the Local Government Board of, I think it is, £1 5s. for three years, and we have a report twice a year from the Dominion Government inspectors. The reports on our children have been remarkably good.

45649. You have not had to bring any children back, have you?—Not one.

45650. With regard to the boarded-out children, what would be the procedure of the inspector if she wanted a child removed?—She gives notice to the Committee that a particular home will not be recognised and that the child must be removed from the custody of that particular mother.

45651. Can it be brought back and sent to the cottage homes without the guardians’ knowledge?—I think the effect of it is that on the disapproval of the lady inspector of a particular home the only thing to do is to send the child back, unless we are able to find another home to remove the child to. If the Committee can find another home they send it there, but it is sometimes difficult to get the child removed from one mother to another, and so it is better for it to come back to the cottage home.

45652. Do you think there is a scarcity of boarding-out homes?—There is in some cases, outside the union.

45653. The inspector might perhaps have been able to say something more than the boy did about it?—Possibly so. I told you exactly what the boy told me, because he came crying to the superintendent and said, “I want to go back to my mother.” It is astonishing what affection these children who are boarded-out have for their foster-parents.

45654. (Mr. Chandler.) I see you have eighty-five Boarding children boarded-out in private homes in your union, allowances according to Paragraph 6 of your Statement?—There Aston Union are eighty-two at the present time.

45655. What is the amount per week paid by your board for those children?—4s. per week and 10s. per quarter for clothing, which I think is quite insufficient.

45656. You stated in answer to the Chairman that provided there was less inspection and more money allowed there would be no difficulty in finding private homes for the remainder of your children, which I see number 231 in your Cottage Homes?—Yes. I should like you to be quite clear as regards that. We are restricted by the Local Government Board to boarding-out certain classes of children; there are some we are not allowed to board-out.

45657. You followed up that point by giving us an illustration of a child who had been removed because his foster-mother was washing his only shirt; and you said you did not think that was a sufficient reason for taking the child away?—I do not think so.

45658. Do you not think that if the strict inspection and the strict regulations were removed there would be a serious danger that these children would be ill-treated, because as a fact the foster-parents do not take them out of love for the children but do take them more with the idea of getting a little money out of them, which it would be very difficult to get out of the 4s. even?—I do not think that that applies at all. My impression is that the people who take these children take them because they want children. They have not any of their own in most cases. What I intended to convey was that the particular form of inspection which takes place, in my opinion, is unnecessary. Inspection is necessary, but not that particular form. For instance, I should think it was very unnecessary for a lady inspector to take a child and strip it. I should say that was quite unnecessary, but it has been done.

45659. (Mr. Loch.) Why do you think it is so unnecessary?—You can judge sufficiently by the looks of a child as to whether it has been properly nurtured and cared for, without stripping it. I think it is an interference to strip it; the mother would resent that kind of thing, and then you get a difficulty at once as to taking these children.

45660. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The inspector might find clear signs of the child having been beaten if she stripped it?—A good beating does not hurt a child.

45661. That is a matter of opinion?—It never hurt me, and I have had many a thrashing.

45662. (Mr. Loch.) In your 13th paragraph you point out how little the workhouse acts as a deterrent. You say there is no responsibility, but there is a good bed, plenty of food, a minimum of work, and so on. Granted the evil, what is your suggestion?—The only suggestion is classification. What I may call the ne’er-do-weel class, which I am referring to in Paragraph 13, should be put into altogether a different part of the workhouse to the others. They should be treated somewhat in the way that I would treat the tramps. They ought to be cut getting work, and if you have to maintain them I would make their life as hard as possible.

45663. Why cannot you do that now?—There are difficulties in our union at the present time. We are very much over-crowded I might say, just now, and there would be a difficulty in doing it.

45664. This evil is not of yesterday; it is a standing evil; supposing you had the problem before you now, labour what would you do?—I think that I would like to have an altogether different institution, away from the general workhouse. I would have a place for these ne’er-do-wells, and keep them by themselves; in other words, I think I would really have a labour colony.

45665. You would propose for yourselves and other unions in the neighbourhood to have a place to which all that class should be sent?—Yes.

45666. Apart from those that you can call ne’er-do-weels, are there not a great many who are unmistakably lazy?—Those are ne’er-do-weels.

45667. Would you send all those who did not work to that institution?—Yes, all of them.

45668. Would you invite them to hard labour as it were, in order to get rid of them?—Yes.

45669. And then they would support themselves?—I think they ought to support themselves.

45670. Practically it is a better adaptation of the workhouse that you want?—That is so. I would have more elasticity in that respect, and I would have power to detain those people for a certain time.

45671. But you would combine that with labour a colony?—I would.

45672. Only you would want an alteration in the Orders?—Yes.

45673. Is there anything else you would want an alteration in the Orders for to carry out your plans?—I do not think so.

45674. Would you be prepared to offer the House in all these cases?—Yes.

Question as to wives of able-bodied.

45675. What about the wives?—In our union we do not have very much difficulty about them. In many cases the men that we have are without wives; they are either widowers or they are bachelors. In some cases the wives would come in, I think, but not very many. The men that I refer to that come before the revision committee are generally single men.

Objection to 45676. Then with regard to the control of Poor Law relief, you are not in favour of having the matter handed over to the municipality?—No.

Inferior status of
guardians.

45677. Yet I take it from Paragraph 19 of your Statement that you are not quite satisfied with the present state of things, for you say "The status of a guardian is not so attractive" and so on?—Yes, that is so.

45678. Again, have you any suggestion to make by way of improvement?—Do you mean improvement in the class of people seeking election?

Proposal to increase prestige of guardians by decreasing
Local Government Board control of details.

45679. Yes, in the direction that you want obviously for your purposes?—I think if it were known that the guardians had as much liberty to conduct the affairs of the union as a town council have to conduct the affairs of the city or of the town, you would raise the status of your guardians and they would take more interest in the work.

45680. Do you mean that the central body should be more advisory than absolute; is that a fair way of interpreting what you say?—No; I think it should be more administrative in its own capacity and less controlled by the Local Government Board.

45681. Then your central body would be more advisory than controlling; would that be the effect of it?—I am afraid I do not gather what you mean by the central body.

45682. By the central body I mean the Local Government Board?—I think they should not interfere in all details of administration, but should leave those to the discretion of the guardians when duly elected by the people. The guardians have to raise the rates and they should have the spending of them.

45683. Supposing that under that arrangement very great abuses arose, we will say that the number relieved was so remarkable as to call public attention to it, what would your position be and what would you then desire as far as the Local Government Board are concerned?—They would have the same means as they have now of dissolving the board if it was found to be necessary.

45684. You would leave them with that power?—Yes.

45685. And the power of having an official inquiry?—Yes.

45686 (Sir Samuel Provis.) Are you aware that the Local Government Board have no power of dissolving a board of guardians?—They can certainly order an inquiry, as has been done in a recent case.

45687. (Mr. Loch.) Does not your position really lead to this, almost, that you would abolish the orders?—To a very large extent, yes, I would.

Inferior status of guardians and reasons therefor.

45688. Do you think that by giving greater freedom in this sense people would think it better worth while to act?—You would raise the status of your boards of guardians. The guardians as a body are looked upon as a very inferior kind of men; they are looked upon as oppressors of the poor.

45689. Is it not almost very likely that that is due to another cause, namely, possibly because they are dealing with the very difficult problem of settlement in individual cases, in regard to which there is a constant prejudice arising?—I do not think so.

45690. I attended an out-relief committee, and I saw that certain cases got 2s. 3s. or 4s., and possibly many others may get less; very likely the question may largely depend upon points of detail which are hardly before the committee; do you not find that there is ill-feeling arising out of that?—No, I have not found it so.

45691. Have you ever thought whether any different system of franchise, as it were, could be adopted in the case of the election to boards of guardians by which each class could be represented, or by which different house-rates could be adopted, so that you could get a mixed board in that way?—I have not thought of that. That is rather in the days gone by—I think never to return.

45692. You think there is no possibility of adopting any middle system?—I think not—not now. We have gone so far forward with democracy that I think we must go on now.

45693. Have you ever thought of any other still more narrow scheme; do you think it is at all possible to have a commission of two or three to manage the relief work?—No, I should think that would be wrong. You would then be putting patronage to a large extent into the hands of a few people.

45694. And they could not be trusted with it?—There would certainly be the suspicion, if there was nothing else, that it was patronage.

45695. Then on the whole your remedy is simply that one of enlarging the liberties and otherwise leaving the matter as it stands?—Yes. For instance, it cannot be necessary when a board have before them the recommendation that a certain officer should have an advance of £3 or £4 per year, that you should grant that, subject to its going for sanction to the Local Government Board—a central institution that absolutely knows nothing of the circumstances except what is conveyed to them. These kind of things are absurd on the face of them to an ordinary business man.

45696. One sees that shillings and 2s. are sometimes given in outdoor relief when, we presume sometimes, that the whole of the evidence on which that gift is made is not before the board; otherwise obviously 2s. would not suffice. Do you think the giving of these 2s. makes very much difference? Supposing they were withdrawn, would much evil happen?—I think in some cases then you would find the poor person coming into the house. I think the 2s. is just the difference between keeping them out and their coming in; it is something by which they can get along; it helps them out.

45697. Have you ever thought whether the inquiry can be made more effective? I was on one of your relief committees, as you know, and these questions suggest themselves to me. Could the inquiry system be so improved as to suggest some plan of help rather than merely a gift of money?—I do not think so with the class of people we have. I do not think much could be done in that way. I think the effect would be possibly that you would have more officers, and less relief given to the poor.

45698. But then your relief would not be, as it is now, almost invariably—a small dole—would it?—I think the effect would be that possibly we might say that that person ought to be inside the house.

45699. Rightly or wrongly, do you mean?—I think that would be the effect of it.

45700. Does it not occur to you that in some of those cases it is rather pitiable to leave the people just as they are with 2s. or 3s., and that it might be possible otherwise to pull them through, and bring them back to self-support?—In many cases, with the aged, I do not think you could bring them back to self-support. In the case

Question as to effect of in-

Mr. T. O. Williams.
18 Mar. 1907. of widows who are left with, we will say, two or three, children, the help you can give them by way of money and bread ensures two things—house rent and some food—and then, with their own assistance, they are able to do the rest.

45701. Do you think it covers the house rent?—It would in the case of a widow, say, with four children. She would have for example 4s. and four loaves, which would roughly cover the rent.

45702. Have you ever worked on the lines of a broad inquiry, and trying to help on some set plan as you go along?—No, we have not in this union.

45703. You have not worked on any Charity Organisation Committee where you have seen that method employed?—No, we have not.

Question of examinations for Poor Law officers.
45704. In reference to the examinations and so on, you referred to the Poor Law Officers' Association; do you think it would be a good or a bad system by which the association itself should be the examiner?—I think the examination should be conducted outside; I think it would be better done in that way. Of course retired Poor Law officers might undertake that work, but generally I think that it should not be done by themselves. I am thinking now particularly of what happens in my own institute of chartered accountants. I think we have those who examine on some subjects who are members of the institute, but on other subjects the examiners are outside the institute.

45705. If the Poor Law Officers' Association really became stronger than it is in the public eyes, something similar would have to be done, would it not?—I think so, certainly.

Scales of relief and their effects.
45706. About the scale, you are intending to go on with it, I think?—At present, yes.

45707. But not as a permanent arrangement?—That depends on how much we are to increase the rates. We have to work to the rates.

45708. I am referring to your previous answers. It is not a question in your mind as to whether it is a good system or not, but whether you should put more money on each step of the scale?—It is whether it would increase the rates. We must have regard to the class of people from whom we draw these rates. In many cases they are very poor people themselves.

45709. It seems to me that you admit the position that you are guided in your administration of relief, not by what one may call the needs of the case but by your money scale?—We have to judge the case upon its merits as far as we are able to, having regard to the fact that we never give more than so much.

Question of co-operation between voluntary hospitals and Poor Law.
45710. You have no suggestion to make by which the hospitals could co-operate more closely with the work-houses than they do, have you?—I do not think myself for a moment that the hospitals would co-operate. My impression is that the medical profession would object very strongly.

45711. If you found that they did not would you be in favour of it, I mean would you be in favour of the same class receiving outdoor relief that are receiving outdoor medical relief?—I think certainly something might be done in that direction. Some kind of co-operation might be brought about, but I am not prepared to say off-hand what form it should take. I am afraid there would be practical difficulties in what you have suggested.

45712. Primâ facie you see no reason why there should not be more co-operation between the two bodies?—That is so. The difficulty would possibly arise more from prejudice than from anything else, the one being supported by voluntary contributions and the other being supported by the Poor Law.

Alleged over-zeal of boarding-out inspector.
45713. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) I should like to ask you something about the procedure with regard to the case of the boarded-out child of which you told us. The child came back to the cottage homes crying and desiring you to take him back to his mother; did that follow upon a report by the lady inspector?—Yes.

45714. Were the board of guardians consulted in the first place?—No.

45715. The lady inspector's word was taken, then?—Alleged. The lady inspector reported to the committee that that was not a desirable home for the child, and they, having no other home for it at the time, simply returned it to the cottage home.

45716. Had the committee or the board of guardians no power in the matter when the lady inspector reported in that way?—I think not. It was a home which was condemned, as far as I know, by the lady inspector, and that was an end to the case. The child was removed.

45717. It was not a case of a report by the lady inspector being submitted to the board of guardians for their observations?—No. We knew nothing about it. The child simply came back.

45718. (Sir Samuel Provis.) This, I take it, was the action of the committee themselves upon the suggestion of the lady inspector?—Of course. They had not another home and the child had to come back. The cottage home was the best place for the child.

45719. It was not a compulsory action on the part of the inspector, but it was on her report to the committee, and the committee taking action upon that, that it was done, was it not, at least that is what I imagine would be the case?—Yes, it was so.

45720. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) My point was rather whether the board of guardians had any voice in the matter?—They had no voice. Possibly the report would be, "You must take this child away," and the child was at the cottage home before we could take any action.

45721. And it remained there?—It remained in the cottage home.

45722. Had you no power to send it back to the foster-mother after inquiry and investigation?—We should not like to put the committee into a difficulty, because they are a voluntary agency outside our board. That was the end of the case; we were bound to take the child back to the home.

45723. I see from your paragraph 6 that you have eighty-five children boarded out; how many do you board with one foster mother, if there is any limit?—I think the limit is two, and those must be brother and sister or two brothers. Details of boarding-out of children in Aston.

45724. Do you board them out as a rule in the neighbourhood of the union?—No. There was a meeting of the Boarding-out Committee last Friday. There were fifteen of the Hints Committee—that is within the union (that happens to be on the borders of Sutton Coldfield) and with the same committee, but beyond the union, nine; at Bewdley we have forty-three, and at Stone we have five. That would be seventy-two altogether.

45725. Do you regard it as essential that when you board them out you must board them out within a certain accessible distance from your union?—We do regard that as essential, but of course we have had, to some extent, to be guided by the Ladies' Committee that we can get together to work it. It is rather difficult to get them, but then we are fortunate in having the assistance of Mrs. Tangye in the Bewdley district, and so we have been able to find homes for the large number of our children.

45726. On principle do you see any objection to their being boarded out at a distance from the union?—I think from the point of view of the welfare of the children they are better away from the union. The less they are accessible to any of their friends the better it is for the children. Question of advisability of boarding out children at a distance from their union.

45727. Would you approve of their being boarded out at some distance from the union?—Yes.

45728. Where they would not be accessible to the parents?—Yes. But where they are orphans, I do not see why they should not be boarded out within the union.

45729. Within the union of course the inspection is different to what it is outside the union?—Yes. Inspection children boarded-out within the union.

45730. Do you think that is desirable? Do you see any reason for the inspection being different within the unions from what it is without?—Within the union they come before the relieving officer. He has to visit once in three months and make a report to the board or to the relief committee. They have also to be presented to the doctor so that he may certify that they are in good health. Then occasionally we ask for them to come up to the union.

45731. Do you consider that it would be desirable in the case where you board them outside the union, some distance off, that communication should be made to the Poor Law authorities of that union, in order that their eyes may be upon the children who are there?—I think that that, in some cases, would be an advantage; I think it might guard against any abuse.

45732. Then if the children were being ill-treated or abused in any way, that would be certain to come before your notice?—Yes; but I think if any child was ill-treated under any conditions it would be sure to come before the Poor Law authorities in some form or other.

45733. (Sir Samuel Provis.) To take that point a little further, do you think that if one board of guardians had children boarded in their union from another board of guardians, they would look upon them in the same kind of way that they would if they were their own children?—I think they would do what was necessary. There is a continuity of interest, I think, in that regard amongst them.

45734. It has not generally been found quite so in the case of non-resident relief, has it?—We do not find any difficulty with non-resident relief. We accept all cases and we never question them.

45735. Unless you had some systematic arrangement as to the inspection of the boarded-out children, a case of ill-treatment might go on for some time without being called to the notice of boards of guardians, might it not?—Of course there should be some kind of inspection, say once in every three months, during the time for which the relief would run.

45736. Has not there been a feeling that it is not desirable that Poor Law officers should be brought in contact with the children boarded-out beyond the union, one of the objects being to keep them apart from the Poor Law?—Then you must rely upon your voluntary committee to take up these cases.

45737. And the Government inspection?—Yes; but the less the Government inspection, and the more you have of your voluntary agencies, the better.

45738. Are you aware that before this Government inspection took place instances of ill-treatment occurred, and that was the reason why it was instituted?—In some cases that might have been so, but I think they were isolated cases.

45739. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether it was so?—I do not know.

45740. This Government inspection is comparatively modern, is it not?—Yes; the inspector has not been appointed very long.

45741. But you are not aware yourself of the circumstances attending the appointment?—No, I am not aware of the circumstances.

45742. Taking another point you have suggested, namely, that a guardian is not recognised in the same way as a rural district councillor is, have you in mind the fact that the chairman of a board of guardians is not made a magistrate, and the chairman of a rural district council is?—Yes.

45743. Do you think that the arrangement under which the chairman of a district council is made a magistrate has a good effect upon the personnel of a rural district council? Do better men become rural district councillors on that account?—I think so.

45744. Rural district councillors are, ipso facto, guardians, are they not?—Yes.

45745. Do you find that the rural district councillors who are guardians are, generally speaking, a better set of men than the ones who represent the urban parishes?—Yes, I think they are, taking them as a whole.

45746. Do you mean a better class in themselves, or men who give more time, and so forth?—They seem to be men who have rather more leisure. I do not say that they attend to the guardians' work as well as they attend to the rural district councillors' work, but they certainly seem to be men of more leisure.

45747. Do you think there is a difference in the amount of attention that is given by urban and by rural guardians to the work of boards of guardians?—We have five rural district councillors who are guardians, and I think that two of those have, during the last twelve months, come sufficiently often to avoid the office being vacated. They have attended the rural district meetings and looked after that part of their work, but they said "We have got some other engagement" when it came to our work.

45748. Do you think the arrangement has worked well under which rural district councillors are ex officio guardians? You remember, I have no doubt, that before 1894 it was the other way on?—Yes, it was so. I am not certain that it has had quite the effect that it was intended to have. I think it would be better if they were separated.

45749. Now let us take the question of the submission of plans to the Local Government Board. You suggested, if I rightly understood you, that the plans of institutions should not be referred to the Local Government Board?—They should not be referred to them in the detail in which they have to be referred now. I think when once an architect has put in a set of plans which has passed the board, they should be sufficient for Local Government Board purposes, and that they should not interfere with the details as they have done in our union. For example, when the cottage homes were being built, they insisted—I forget the name of the gentleman who was the architect at the Local Government Board office then—upon a form of bath, for example, which I think is an abomination, but he would have no other. It is not a bath at all; it is a square tub. He said, "You must not have a bath, because the children will drown themselves." The consequence is that we to-day are in the position that we cannot bath all the children, as no big child can get into the thing at all. He insisted upon it, and would not pass the plans otherwise.

45750. You would say, would you not, that the plans of institutions ought to be approved by the Local Government Board?—In the first instance—yes. There are certain regulations which are recognised now amongst the architects who do Poor Law work—for instance, that they must have certain dimensions and certain contents. That is quite sufficient; but beyond that I think the Local Government Board should not interfere. If they are to interfere, then they should be more prompt in their action, and they should not allow plans to lie on their shelves to be forgotten for two or three months at a time.

45751. Sometimes it is found, I believe, that the guardians let them remain two or three months on their shelves?—In this case I am referring to the guardians did not. They asked the Board over and over again to return them, but they took no notice, and when they did return them, returned them in a disgraceful fashion.

45752. I do not know anything about the particular case?—I have the particulars of this case in my mind. They did not even return the plans in the case in which they were sent. The plans came back all crumpled in the post, although they were sent to the Board in a hard case and properly rolled up.

45753. Still dealing with the point of the plans, it follows, does it not, that if the Local Government Board are to give their approval to the plans, they must consider what points it is necessary for them to look into?—I do not think it is necessary for them to look into the points. Once they have had the plans before them showing the general idea of what is to be built, that is quite sufficient.

45754. But still these buildings would be carried out by means of borrowed money, would they not?—Certainly.

45755. Is it not the fact that the details should be looked into so that it may be ascertained that future ratepayers are not to be called upon to pay for something or other which could not be thoroughly approved?—I think you may trust the guardians not to spend too much.

45756. That may be the very thing to watch; it may be desirable to spend more?—I do not think that they should be taught to spend more by a central institution in London.

45757. Not even if the plans are not satisfactory?—No, because the central institution do not lend them the money.

Mr. T. O. Williams. The money is borrowed in the district ; at least they have it back in the district.

18 Mar. 1907. 45758. Not even if the plans are unsatisfactory ?—
If the plans are unsatisfactory the Local Government Board have the opportunity of pointing that out on the first sketch plans.

Question of approval by Local Government Board of plans for Poor Law buildings.

45759. Are you not aware that the same system applies, not merely to the guardians, but to other authorities who borrow money for the purpose of carrying out buildings ?—That is so, but that does not make it any the better.

45760. What I am suggesting is that it may be found necessary, in order to secure proper buildings being carried out, that there should be an investigation ?—I do not know that it is necessary ; I am bound to say that any properly constituted body as far as my experience, goes, if they want to put up a particular building, take the proper methods to see that their money is properly laid out and I do not think that they want the grandmotherly assistance of the Local Government Board beyond a certain point.

45761. You would agree, would you not, that boards of guardians may differ in this respect, and that where you may get a competent board of guardians representing one union, it would not necessarily follow that those of another union less competent would be able to present as good a set of plans as the first union ?—I think that in these days all the guardians of large centres who have to spend large sums of money are quite competent to carry out their own views.

45762. Even although they are not spending their own money, but the money of the ratepayers ?—I think so ; I think public opinion is sufficiently directed to their proceedings to put a proper check upon their expenditure.

45763. Therefore you would say that, even although they were spending the money of future ratepayers, they should be uncontrolled ?—They should be under restricted control in the way which I have pointed out.

45764. But not in detail ?—Not in detail.

Emigration of Aston Poor Law children.

45765. (Miss Hill.) About the children that you have emigrated to Canada ; did I understand you to say that not all of those who were selected to be emigrated were really sent off ?—In some cases friends—it may be an uncle or an aunt, or some distant relation—said, “No, I should not like this child to be emigrated, and I will take it myself,” and, where the guardians were satisfied that the child was going to be properly taken care of, we allowed the child to go to its friends.

45766. Did that happen in several cases ?—Yes, it did.

45767. Thus showing that there were relations able to support them if they felt inclined to do it ?—That is so.

45768. Though perhaps not those who were legally liable ?—That is so. It is a strange thing, but one's experience of those who live in the cottage homes is, oddly enough, that when the children are able to earn a little money there is always a friend coming forward to look after them, but when they cannot earn anything they have not a friend in the world.

45769. Were some of those who were not emigrated to Canada, but who were taken charge of by relations, young children who would not be of any value for earning money ?—In some cases they were small children.

Alleged over-zeal of boarding-out inspector.

45770. With regard to this unhappy child who was returning to the cottage home, is it not a fact that 10s. a quarter is allowed for clothing your boarded-out children ?—Yes.

45771. And that is supposed to be spent on clothes ?—It is for clothing and medical attendance.

45772. Possibly the inspector felt that the money had not been spent on clothes and there may have been other reasons, may there not ?—There may have been.

45773. One does not think that an inspector would Alleged very readily send a child back ?—I have given the facts as over-zeal given to me by the child. I am not for one moment boarding-t saying that that inspector did not do anything but what inspector she was entitled to do. I only give you the facts that were given to me.

45774. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the inspection of Question these boarded-out children, I gather that you do not need of think that it is a matter of importance if marks of beating inspection should be found by stripping the child ?—Of course there are marks and marks. If the child had been ill-used be- boarded-o children. yond a certain point that is a different thing ; but a mere weal across a child's back from having had a blow given with the cane, properly administered, has not done that child any harm.

45775. Do you think that the signs of ill-treatment and of cruelty would necessarily be found by an inspector if the children had not been stripped ?—Yes, I think it would be seen in the general conduct of the child without stripping it.

45776. Carrying that one point further, if they saw something in the general appearance of the child that made them suspicious would you think it was desirable then to strip the child ?—Most certainly.

45777. Would that not be making it a more difficult and a more objectionable operation ? I have heard that where the foster-mothers are well-intentioned they welcome the inspection of the children ; they are proud of the children, and they welcome it. It is rather a matter of the tact of the lady-inspector as to how she does it ; but clearly if she may strip and must strip the child if she is suspicious then every time she strips the child that is a slur on the foster-mother ?—That is so.

45778. Whereas if it is done as a matter of course, and done, you may say, sympathetically, then it is quite possible that the foster-mothers, so far from objecting to it, would welcome that thorough inspection, as it would show that they were doing their work well ?—It might be so in some cases, but I think if I were a foster-mother I should resent it if I were doing my duty.

45779. Does not the question of clothing also come in ; that is to say, is it not necessary to know whether the child is properly clothed ?—Certainly ; but on the other hand I think that you must not draw a hard line here ; 4s. a week does not maintain the child, and you are not giving them all that they are entitled to for the maintenance of the child. Therefore there must be some little latitude allowed. Nominally 10s. is given for the clothing, but one knows it goes in the ordinary way in the household expenses.

45780. I am not at all judging as to what should be recognised as necessary ; I am merely pointing out that careful examination is requisite in order to find out what is done ?—Careful examination is certainly necessary if you have any idea that the child has been misused ; I quite agree with that.

45781. (Mr. Lock.) Do you think that the evidence Effect of which you gave to Miss Hill just now does not show that publication the inquiries are insufficient—that is to say, relations are by guardia found as soon as the children are likely to be useful, or of intentio directly you threaten to send the children away ?—It is the fact that relations do come forward then. to emigrat children.

45782. Therefore has not the previous inquiry been insufficient ?—We believe that the inquiry which is made previous to emigrating children has a beneficial effect upon their numbers, because it reduces their numbers and brings forth friends which we otherwise should not find.

45783. That shows that the original inquiry was not so strict, does it not ?—The circumstances might have altered. The people who came forward a year or so afterwards perhaps were not in the same position to maintain the children at the time that they allowed them to go to the cottage homes.

Mr. WALTER HENRY AYLES, called; and Examined.

45784. (Chairman.) You are a member of the board of guardians of the Aston Union, I understand?—Yes.

45785. How long have you held that position?—For twelve months.

45786. I think you have prepared for us a full statement of your views?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I am qualified to answer:—

(a) As a student of economics.

(b) As a trade union official, who has lived for some years in a Birmingham slum, and at present works in a factory.

(c) As a guardian of the poor.

(d) As a lecturer on social science and ethics.

2. The area administered by the Aston guardians is partly urban and partly rural. I have no special knowledge of the rural portion. The urban part is situated in Birmingham and Aston. The industries are those mainly connected with hardware and the factoring of commodities used by all large communities. Trade, in the bulk, is more regular than in most large towns, owing to the variety of manufactures. Taking our industrial system as it is, workmen have as many opportunities for obtaining work in Birmingham and Aston as anywhere. Yet we have a long list of unemployed men and women, comparatively few of whom are reached by the City Distress Committee. The majority are willing to work, some are unwilling—for they long ago gave up in despair the struggle against adverse circumstances and have become idle and hopeless—and some are scamps.

3. Labour is mobile, and very few remain for many years with the same firm. Those who do remain are generally skilled mechanics. The greater part of labour is semi-skilled and can be interchangeably adapted to the many various branches of the hardware trades. A cycle firm may have no cycles to make and a motor firm is busy. The semi-skilled machinists are discharged by the cycle maker and some are employed by the motor maker. Some may go to add to the never-failing number of broken men and women. There is a large amount of female labour in factories. Women workers include both married and single. There is a large body of self-respecting men and women in the hardware, building, and other trades, but I find that these are the most regularly employed of the skilled and semi-skilled. The very poor are those who are irregularly employed and therefore imperfectly housed and nourished, and consequently are lacking in power of concentration, will and enjoyment. Above these two classes, socially, is a strong body of the lower middle class, composed of highly skilled men and women in factory and office, e.g., foremen, managers, tradesmen, etc., who are the mainstay of churches, chapels, and some philanthropic institutions. The hospitals, however, are largely supported by the manual workers. The housing accommodation for the three classes is unsatisfactory, the houses being built to rent and not to use. This presses very heavily on the poor, who are driven into the narrow streets and small closely packed houses of which latter they can often rent but a portion for a shilling or two per week. One set of offices has often to accommodate a row of these houses. There are many of these streets in St. Mary's, St. Bartholomew's, Nechells, Sparkbrook, Bordesley, Duddeston, Deritend and Aston.

4. Overcrowding is very prevalent. Disease and vice are most rampant there. The people have nothing else to occupy their attention, but work. My experience has taught me to look there for the homes of most of our phthisical patients in the infirmary. Most of the underpaid female and child labourers live in these houses. Many are insanitary and the pan system still holds, though this is being gradually altered. In the enlargement of the towns of Birmingham and Aston there is no plan, system or organisation. Everything is chaotic and go as you please. In the distribution of labour it is get what you can, how you can, and where you can. A man or woman, discharged, embarks on an unknown sea unless they are in a trade union, in which case there are many others ready to help them into other berths.

For these people there are few pleasures. These are supplied by parks and bands in summer (inaccessible to most slum dwellers)—football matches, which are beyond their means; the public-house, the last refuge of the despairing, the hopeless and the discontented; the art gallery the—brightest spot for many an artisan, and the gallery of the music halls—within the reach of most.

5. There are few educational facilities of which they can take advantage. They have but little desire for religion or education, for they are either too busy in looking after their first life to be able to think of a second, or too despondent of making anything of life at all; and so many are attracted by the first brightly lit bar and give play to the first unruly impulse that appeals to them. These help to fill our infirmaries and lock wards.

6. I know of no experiments in administration at Aston beyond placing the inmates on the and in preference to the stone cells. This is in every way beneficial.

7. As to the merits of indoor and outdoor relief, I think all relief is bad. The idea is that something is given for necessities which is not earned, and to which the recipient is not entitled by right. I know of no case where relief—indoor or outdoor—has not detrimentally affected the character of the recipient. It subtly extracts the sturdy independence, and the conditions under which it is given are humiliating.

8. Outdoor relief is never adequate and but aggravates the need by partially satisfying it. There is no standard to apply to applicants, but everything is left to the members of the committee. They may give relief one week to one kind of applicant and refuse it the following week to another of exactly the same kind. It depends entirely on the humour, mood, feeling, of the guardians. There is generally a stipulated amount of relief given and this is of little use, though very acceptable on the principle that every little helps. The bread given is the badge of pauperism, and is as unmistakable in the neighbourhoods where it is distributed as a flag. The people who need relief most do not get it. The temporarily unemployed who are without cash have to sell their home at a loss before they can obtain relief. This plays havoc with their will, desire to persevere, and their self-respect. After a repetition, they give up in despair. In our union the children of a deserted wife, even though she is earning 12s. per week to keep herself, cannot be relieved outside the house (owing to a resolution on the books). She stays outside, and the result is the impoverishment of the children, whom we shall probably have to receive as inmates when they are adults. Old people are impoverished ethically by having to submit to enquiries consequent upon an application for relief. Without exception they feel the indignity of receiving it.

9. Indoor relief is worse than outdoor. Inmates of workhouses are treated simply as possessing bodies. Both food and work are monotonous. There are no educational facilities and but few chances of enjoyment. Aston workhouse is a vast aggregation of men and women kept separately. The result of it all is that the workhouse is a moral cesspool. Scandal is the main food for conversation and the men and women become increasingly more like animals.

We have a chaplain and a Roman Catholic instructor, but the inmates having no knowledge of a good first life have little desire for the second. Their work is oftentimes a farce. Workhouses do not fulfil the proper functions for which they were built and are mainly the unhappy abiding places of the aged, the imbecile, and the idle. Inmates do work which is sometimes the equivalent in value to the damage they do, e.g., they will sweep and scrub the steps in such a way as to stop up the perforated tops of the heating apparatus beneath. They will stoke up the fires for the boilers and waste half the coal by ignorant and careless stoking. As an engineer I am keenly alive to the wastefulness of casual stokers. To have sufficient overseers would be vastly expensive.

10. It is impossible to adequately classify inmates. An elaborate establishment would be required costing an amount in building and administration far in excess of its use. The workhouse is the home of pessimism, and no

- Mr. W. H. Ayles.*
 18 Mar. 1907. Variability in amount of contributions recovered from liable relatives
- inmate retains any hope after the first few days. It never reforms, it always confirms. In the case of an imbecile old man or sick person, having relatives outside, such relatives are asked to contribute towards their keep. As in out-relief, there is no standard. I have known a man, earning 23s. per week, be asked to pay 9s. weekly towards the keep of his wife in the infirmary. And the following week a single man getting 24s. per week asked to pay 2s. 6d. towards the maintenance of his parent. The single man was young, the married man greyheaded and homeless, living in lodgings at 4s. 6d. per week.
 This is termed judging each case on its merits.
- Class of persons applying for relief.
- 11 The classes of persons applying for relief are :—
 (a) Widows with children whose husbands have been self-respecting.
 (b) Deserted wives and widows without their bad husbands.
 (c) Old men and women, self-respecting and careful for the most part.
 (d) Tramps and scamps who have been respectable.
 (e) Tramps and scamps whose fathers were the same.
 (f) Men whose condition of life and labour have led them to discontent, despair, and enfeeblement of body, and who have therefore given way to drink, idleness, and worse.
 These come from the two lower classes before mentioned.
- Causes of pauperism.
12. When we come to the causes of pauperism we must differentiate between primary and secondary. My experience leads me to the belief that pauperism is caused by :
 (a) Bad breeding. Mothers working in factories under conditions which give the embryo no chance, or work at the washtub, mangling, which injures them internally. The child when born is neglected and ill-fed. Its education is meagre and it is sent to work much too early, at a task beyond its strength, and ultimately it becomes decrepit in body and mind.
 (b) Irregular employment and low wages are the causes of the unthrifty habits of many of the workers. The poor and the pauperised are the most unthrifty but the most benevolent. They will share their last penny with others.
 (c) Living in slums, having a body needing a stimulus which should be given by pure air, good food and plenty of house room, many give way to drink, which accentuates but does not cause their poverty. It is secondary.
 (d) Many who are in receipt of relief are also in receipt of wages. Many women are out-workers. At carding buttons they are paid 2s. 9d. to 4s. 2d. per 100 gross, thereby earning 1½d. per hour. Fixing curtain hooks to pins is paid for at the rate of 2s. 6d. per cwt. By working from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. they can earn 5s. per week. Hook and eye work is paid for at the same rate. Employers say that they cannot pay more owing to competition. Sometimes it is home and sometimes foreign. The result is the same in both cases.
- Upbringing.
- Casual work and low wages.
- Slums and bad housing.
- Sweated industries.
- Existing social and industrial system the ultimate cause of pauperism.
- Status and qualification of guardians.
13. The ultimate cause of all pauperism is :—
 (a) The ownership of the means of production, distribution and exchange by private individuals who are compelled by the nature of the case to get as large a private profit as possible.
 (b) The lack of organisation in industry, education, national and local government, causes physical and mental and moral diseases which the best minds and the vast resources of science fail to cure.
14. As a rule the class of persons seeking election as guardians are of the middle classes and socially are very good fellows.
 They have as a rule no knowledge of economic conditions and but little of local government or the principles of administration.
 They are entirely at the mercy of the officials, viz., the clerk or relieving officer, for their details of administration, and the party paper for their policy, if it happens to have one.
- They are sometimes—rarely—able, well-informed business men who find it impossible to give adequate time to the work. As a rule they have no enthusiasm for the work and view the inmate or person seeking relief as of an entirely different class to themselves who desire to be kept by the ratepayers.
 They do very little careful visiting.
 Sometimes they are young and inexperienced, but enthusiastic, and may or may not become useful public servants.
15. The best available men rarely become guardians because :
 (a) There is no great honour attached to guardianship.
 (b) They generally meet during the day, when many business and working men cannot possibly attend.
 (c) Because there is no hopefulness in the work, and unless one has suffered and but barely escaped the abyss it is hard to keep up a perennial enthusiasm.
16. There are exceptions to the foregoing, and it is through the efforts of these, together with the fine men on the official staff, that the utter maladministration of this most difficult section of local government is prevented.
17. With regard to our methods of administration, Scale of old people are generally given 2s. and a loaf. We have relief commenced in one district giving 2s. 6d. without the badge. Widows are given for their children, 1s. and a loaf for each under fourteen.
 Deserted wives are given the house test.
 Relatives responsible are compelled to pay what the guardians think they can afford, whether they can do so or not.
18. The question of reform of the Poor Law is essentially economic. There should be no need for relief. Industry should be organised. Education should be so graduated that round men should be placed in round holes, and there should be a hole for every man. I believe that the present state of anarchy in commerce, industry, education, and government can be cured by the nation, socially owning what they socially use. Until that is done we must have the needy with us.
19. Immediate practical reforms, which I think could be enacted are :—
 (a) That no administrator shall be allowed to hold two public positions, e.g., councillor and guardian or councillor and Member of Parliament. Experience has proved that no man has time for both.
 (b) They shall be compelled to give so much of their time to their work and be paid for it.
 They should give concise annual reports of their work, signed by the clerk and auditors, and published by the city authorities.
 (c) All old men and women who can look after themselves should be given an adequate pension, which they could obtain weekly at the nearest post office. On no account should they be brought within the jurisdiction of the Poor Law. It is too heartbreaking and cruel.
 (d) Old men and women who need nurses to keep them clean, etc., but not doctors, should be placed in communities in the suburbs of towns with a recreation hall near by in which they could converse and have some pleasures. Their houses to be small and cosy, and a small but efficient staff of nurses to attend to their needs. This would be a national luxury which we can well afford, and which would be a credit to humanity.
 (e) (i.) Able-bodied men should be placed in labour colonies and trained in up-to-date agriculture; (ii.) Municipal or State workshops controlled by business men with practical knowledge of the work done, and not by men who have influence at headquarters.
- This will absorb to some extent the, at present, irreducible minimum of the unemployed.
- (f) The unemployable should be isolated. Incapacity when due to neglect, idleness, or self-indulgence, is as infectious (morally) as smallpox. They should be placed in natural and beautiful surroundings and given, not taskmasters to keep them moving at the bottom of the abyss, but teachers to show them the way, and help them to climb out. If they die in the attempt no healthy worker is injured thereby.

I would point out that under any circumstances the people in Sections (d), (e) (i.), (e) (ii.), and (f) have to be maintained and are maintained now with no hope of reform, benefit to themselves, or credit to us.

(g) Out-relief should be larger than at present in cases of widows with children, wives who have been deserted, etc. At present mothers are compelled to go out to work and are told to do so by the guardians, when they should be looking after and properly rearing their children.

(h) There should be a well-organised system of labour bureaux to which employer and employee should regularly go in case of need. The temporarily unemployed should be able to pass from town to town in search of work assisted by them, with food and travelling expenses. Relief should be granted to their families when absent, and if unsuccessful after a given period he should be drafted either to a State factory or a labour colony.

(i) All the foregoing should be controlled by committees appointed by the town or county authority, which should also be the sanitary authority.

(j) Poor Law infirmaries should be entirely separated from any kind of workhouse. I know of many cases which have been transferred from the infirmary to the workhouse that would never have gone had they not been infected by the workhouse inmates. No inmate of a workhouse should be allowed to do any work in, nor go near, an infirmary. As workers they are wasteful and given to partiality, and their influence is exceedingly bad. There should in fact be a co-ordination of all surgical, medical, and nursing help for the poor. We have abominable cases of bedsores sent from the philanthropic hospitals to our infirmary that can hardly be cured.

(k) There should be more efficient inspection. Inspectors come once a year or so, spend a few hours in a place that it takes more than a day simply to walk over. This is playing at inspection.

(l) There should also be lady inspectors, who are trained nurses, for all hospitals.

(m) I would recommend that the admirable memorandum issued by the Scottish Local Government Board for the examination and certification of trained sick nurses be adopted by the English Local Government Board. There should also be standardisation of training and examination. Registration. Testimonials should be given by superintendent nurses and medical officers, and not by guardians or councillors.

(n) There should be visiting medical officers. These would raise the standard of discipline and treatment.

(o) Regular and paid help would be cheapest ultimately.

(p) Systematic examination of phthisical patients made compulsory and the records preserved. These also should be under the control of the sanitary authority.

(q) Ad hoc bodies are necessarily narrowed in their scope, and others become entirely inefficient. One example which occurs to me is of a widow with children; the eldest won a scholarship, but was sent by her mother to work. When we asked her why, she said she had no money to buy the necessary books and could not afford to keep her at school. Here was the need for a maintenance scholarship, but we could not pass it over to an education committee. In its absence a fine national asset was thrown away.

(r) There should be greater unity in local government. All the needs and activities of localities are intimately inter-related and should be controlled by one central body.

(s) Children should be kept in cottage homes and placed under the education department of the same authority. This is by far the best method under present conditions.

(t) The law of settlement should be entirely repealed, as it is most expensive and of little use.

(u) Under these conditions the most expensive work of boards of guardians would be avoided, and they themselves would not be needed.

45787. (Chairman.) Some of the questions you deal with in that statement are clearly outside our reference. I think the best way of dealing with it will be to take the suggestions you make at the end of Paragraph 19, and I think in that way we shall cover the substance. But before going to that paragraph I should like to ask you a question about mothers working in factories; would you prohibit young mothers working in factories?—How can you while the children have to be fed?

45788. I am asking you to assume that you had your own way. You object to it altogether, as you say it produces a bad effect in subsequent generations; I ask, therefore, would you stop them from working?—Yes; only in our present system I should not do so, for the simple reason that you cannot do so, seeing that the children have to be fed. But in a properly organised system of society I should certainly prohibit any mother who should be breeding her children, looking after and training her children, from working in a factory.

45789. Assuming you did that, what would you do with the husband; would you subsidise the husband?—No. Under the system of society that I have mentioned, the husband would be paid proper wages so that he could keep himself, his wife and his children.

45790. Now coming to your scheme of reform, I see you would not allow any person to hold two public posts?—That is so.

45791. And taking, for instance, the Poor Law guardians, you would make a man give a certain portion of his time to the work, and you would pay him for it?—That is so.

45792. Would you have him popularly elected?—Yes.

45793. Would you diminish the number of guardians or would you keep them practically as they are now?—I should reorganise the areas for which they are elected at the present time, and then I think we could do with at least half of what we have.

45794. But they would practically be all paid?—I think so.

45795. You are not very well satisfied with the class of person who now comes forward as a guardian?—That is so.

45796. They have not much knowledge you think, and well-to-do business men find it impossible to give their time to the work; you would have the same difficulty, would you not, if they were paid?—I think that is hardly a fair statement of what I said and what I have written. They have not much knowledge of economic conditions or of local government administration, but they may have plenty of knowledge in other directions—I do not know. So far as the work for them to do is concerned, the average Poor Law guardian has very little knowledge of economic conditions, of local government problems, or of administration; but we have some men, very able men, who have a knowledge of the conditions of government and also business ability and who have well-informed minds. But I find that they are generally so busy with their own businesses, or with perhaps other philanthropic affairs in which they are engaged, that they cannot give as much time to the work as they would like to do, consequently it is unsatisfactory to themselves, having regard to the way that things are administered. It is by those men who give of the best of their time and ability (together with the permanent officials), that the utter mal-administration of the Poor Law is averted. I find that a very small percentage of the guardians do their work properly, and it is the small percentage that we have to look to for proper administration.

45797. That is just my point; how, under your system, would you get a larger percentage of persons who would do the work.—If you pay them for their work they would

As you have seen, I recommend that they should give in a report every year, signed by the clerk and by the auditors, as to the work which they have done—a concise report of which should be posted about just as we post public notices at the present time, only perhaps a little more widely. People would then see what they had done, and if they were satisfied with them they would re-elect them, and if they were not they would sack them.

45798. Do you think you would change, so to say, the character and class of Poor Law guardians if you paid them?—I do not say that, but I say you would get your work done better.

Proposed examination for guardians. 45799. Please stick to what you have said. You say a small proportion of the Poor Law guardians are not properly qualified?—Yes.

45800. How are you going to get a large proportion properly qualified?—In this way: I would have Poor Law guardians, and the members of all public bodies, pass a preliminary examination and answer certain questions before they are allowed to become candidates; otherwise you would have no guarantee that your local government was going to be properly carried out.

Proposed old age pension scheme at age of fifty-five. 45801. That would be as regards the administration. Now, according to (c), you would wish that all men and women who could not look after themselves should be given an adequate pension which is not to be brought within the jurisdiction of the Poor Law. At what age would you take the old men and old women to be qualified?—Roughly speaking, I think that we ought at the present time, under present economic conditions, to give the pension to them at fifty-five, for I find that after fifty-five men have very great difficulty in getting work, or in getting work which is suitable to them. Unfortunately, old men are given degrading work. Under a different system of society work would be given to them which they could do, and which they could do well and which they would be happy in doing. I think that fifty-five at the present time is the age when these men should have old-age pensions given to them.

45802. And the women too?—Yes, the women too rather.

45803. What is your idea of an adequate pension?—Supposing two were living together, an adequate pension, I take it, would be about 10s. a week each. If a man were living separately, I think 15s. should be given to him.

Proposed village colonies for infirm aged inmates of workhouses.

45804. The old men and the old women who were not capable of looking after themselves are to be placed in communities in the suburbs of the town, I see, according to (d)?—I believe that that should be done. As you know, there are a lot of old men and old women in our infirmaries and workhouses at the present time who have very little the matter with them, with the exception that they are quite enfeebled. These men and women cannot really look after themselves properly and they want keeping clean. That is the reason why they are sent to us. They are destitute in other directions as well, and they are sent to us to keep clean and to keep generally. I think that if a system of almshouses, not of the same styles that we see, but if a system of almshouses was instituted in our suburbs, small houses but cosy, with little gardens surrounding them, and a recreation hall where these men and women could go and talk over old times, where they could have a common kitchen and get their meals from that kitchen and, within limits, could have what they feel they can eat—I think that that would be, as I have said, a thing that we could well afford, being a rich nation, and would be a credit to us and would be a tribute to our humanity. As it is, as I have mentioned, we have to keep these men now in the workhouse at an expense of between 6s. and 7s. a week, perhaps more sometimes, and when they have to go into the infirm wards or into the infirmary it comes to 9s. and 9s. 6d. a week, and we give them practically no pleasure whatever. Under those circumstances the ultimate cost would be but very little more, and the evening-time of their lives would be brighter, and they would feel, with Browning that the best was yet to be.

45805. Would you put them into these alms-houses or communities?—Yes, but I would call them colonies, rather.

45806. These old people would then cost rather more than what they do at present, would they not?—I take it they would cost about 10s. a week; it could be done for that.

45807. Then you say in (e) that able-bodied men should be placed in labour colonies, and trained in up-to-date agriculture?—Yes. Labour colonies for the able-bodied.

45808. Would you put any test on them?—An able-bodied man before he went to a labour colony—and I am dealing with the time of transition between now and the better system of society—should exhaust all the resources of industry as it is now, and should be given the chance of going the whole round and assisted to go the whole round in order to get employment. If he cannot get work, then he should be drafted to a labour colony and there set to work, or he should be drafted elsewhere, as my second recommendation in (e) states.

45809. That is, to municipal or State workshops?—Yes. Municipal workshops for the able-bodied, as their effect on private employe.

45810. How would you pay the man at a municipal or State workshop; would you pay him by food, or at the current rate of wage outside?—Certainly, if he does the work he should be paid.

45811. If that is so, what inducement would anybody have to seek work outside?—He would have this inducement, that supposing he went to the State-controlled workshop he would find there, to a large extent, though perhaps there would be a little more air, practically the same conditions existing, because these State workshops would not be nurseries for idle men, but would be shops placed under the administration of men who were administrators. If they were engineering factories, for instance, they would be men who had been engineers and who knew engineering and who could dispose of men and could administer a large factory and these factories should be large.

45812. If the conditions were practically the same as those of private employ, why should a man seek private employ?—Would you not have a large number of persons on your hands?—I think I see your idea. I think that while we have private enterprise, private enterprise is going to get as much money as it can, and therefore, I think, that they will work as hard as they can to keep workmen with them. But I also believe that having established State workshops, if so be we find that we have more men than we know we can do with, then we can do what private enterprisers can do, that is, extend our premises.

45813. Still, you would have competition between your workshops and private enterprise, but I suppose you would not mind if that was fatal to private enterprise, as it would practically put into your hands a very large proportion of the able-bodied people of this country?—I think myself, so far as private enterprise is concerned, that it would be competition which ultimately would eliminate competition which is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

45814. It would eliminate it by the State becoming the main employer?—Yes, the State socially owning what the State socially uses.

45815. Going on with your plans, we now come to the unemployable; would you send those to farms, or would you isolate them?—I would isolate them. Isolation and æsthetic education of the unemployable.

45816. Would you put them through a stricter test, or make their conditions less pleasant than the conditions of those who were working in the municipal workshops or the labour colonies?—Not a bit of it; I would make them better. This is the idea when you are dealing with the unemployable. An unemployable man is a man who is not to be treated simply as if he had a body, he also has a mind. Unemployableness is a disease of the mind even more than of the body. An unemployable man, I think, needs treatment just as a fever patient needs it, or as a man suffering from any contagious disease. Unemployableness is a contagious disease which is catching oftentimes, especially if the unemployable man remains in a slum. Therefore I would place him in these isolated labour colonies, and I would surround him with beautiful surroundings to appeal to his æsthetic sense. I would give him not taskmasters to keep him moving about and working as far as he was able, but teachers who would teach him the way to work. I would also educate his mind so that he would understand his relationship to others and the duties of citizenship. I think that these men want to be taught rather than want to be treated either by the doctor or by the psychologist and also by the industrial captain. I think what we want to do is not to keep these men down, but to teach them the way to get out of their conditions, and then, as I have said, if they die in the attempt that is being made to reform them they do not infect anyone else. I will give you my experience. As I have said, I have lived in slums. My first twenty years—or nineteen and a half years—were spent in the south-west of London in the Wandsworth Road district, and I have spent three and a half years in the Birmingham slums. This is what I find happens with the unemployable there. The unemployable is generally up fairly early in the morning; he does not always lie in bed, but he looks out for the public-houses. A labouring man who has been sleeping all night in a very small house and in a very small room where his wife and perhaps two or three children are sleeping, gets up; he has a headache and he does not feel up to work. He sees these men lounging about the public-houses, and he thinks to himself: "These men seem to get on all right. I do not see why I should not. I will go in and have a nip." He goes in and has some beer or some other stimulant, and perhaps he does not go to work. That is one of the ways in which your unemployables are made. If you remove those unemployables from your midst the chances are that the men whom you have remaining with you will have a better chance of sticking to their work, and using their will-power, as far as it has been left to them, to maintain their own independence.

45817. Then you would deliberately make the conditions of the unemployable better than those of the employed in order to reform them?—Just in the same way as I would make the conditions of a sick person or of a convalescent person better than those of a healthy person.

45818. Coming now to (g) I see you would give larger out-relief than at present to widows with children and wives who have been deserted, so as to enable the mother to avoid going to work, and to enable her to look after her children at home?—You are quite right, I would do that. I may say here I do not generally consider the ratepayers when I am considering a question of principle and a question of what is good for the country. I think that any cost which is entailed at the present time so far as the children of widows are concerned, would be money well spent, for those children will ultimately themselves be ratepayers and will help to maintain the country. The idea against giving large out-relief is just this—that others will also come on you for that relief when they see that it is to be obtained; but men will not die so that their widows may get extra out-relief for their children and therefore that argument cannot apply just here. I would give the widows extra out-relief, and if necessary I would give them extra children to look after who are orphans; or I would bring the widows, if they are well informed, and able, into our cottage homes with their own children to be looked after. So far as my experience goes—and I may say that my experience does not extend simply over the period of time that I have been a Poor Law guardian, but that it has extended over eleven years—I find that adopted children oftentimes are as well looked after as children that have been born to the home.

45819. Have you ever gone into the expense that would be entailed under these headings that I have taken you through?—Do you mean the expense so far as the unemployable and suchlike matters are concerned?

45820. You would pay the guardians to begin with; and then you would give a pension of 10s. per week to everybody over fifty-five. I am not quite sure what that pension would amount to, but I think that that alone would cost nearly £100,000,000 a year. Then you have made various other proposals. What would be the amount that you would thus put on the rates, or would you make it a national charge?—In the first place you are not going to do this all at once, and no responsible administrator, nor anyone who has any knowledge of local government or government of any kind, would think of making drastic changes such as I have recommended here all at once. These things would go on one at a time. For instance I would make a start with old-age pensions, even if I started with men over eighty or over ninety; I would make that start and I would make it progressive and let it come down and be increased. So far as the old men who need nurses to keep them clean, etc., are concerned, I would also put all those as quickly as possible into the colonies that we want to build; but I would build one or two colonies tentatively so as to find out how the thing worked and what was the best method of building them and looking after them.

45821. Would you do any of this work at the expense of the ratepayers, or would it be done at the expense of the nation?—These men are the units of society, and have helped to make up the units of society; society, I believe, has made them what they are to a very large extent—90 per cent. of them—and I believe society is responsible for looking after them.

45822. Old-age pensions you would naturally expect to be defrayed from the national exchequer, but taking these other cases, the money must come either from the rates or from the national exchequer, must it not?—Yes.

45823. Would you put these other charges on to the rates, or would you make them come out of the national exchequer?—If you are going to have these changes made and if you adopt my recommendations later on, as I put it these things will not necessarily be under a local body, that is to say, a body strictly local, so far as even a borough council is concerned. When we have a decent system of government, the labour colonies would perhaps be under provincial boards, and we should thus have a provincial tax then. We should do away with rates, which are only taxes in another form. There would be a provincial tax out of which the expenses would come for the keeping of these colonies. But at the present time I believe that, tentatively, the national exchequer should bear the cost mainly of the colonies that we should build, because they would be tentative.

45824. If you put a charge on the national exchequer those who represent the national exchequer would probably have to administer it; they could not give the money and let local people do what they like with it, could they?—I do not see any reason why they should not delegate their powers and give grants, the same as they give grants at the present time for various things—Education, for instance.

45825. Now we come to labour bureaux; I see that you would have a regular organised system of labour bureaux?—That is so. I believe at the present time we do not organise, in fact unfortunately the main characteristic of things in England—of government especially as well as of industry—is the lack of organisation. I would well organise labour bureaux. I would establish them in every town, and I would see that everybody knew that there was a labour bureau there, and that it was there not simply for the scamps, but for the genuine unemployed. I would have notices placed up in all factories and in all throughfares and sent out to all employers. A notice like that posted up for a few months would satisfy the need of advertisement and give the information; and after the first six months it would be a tradition which would not need advertising. I would have a bureau so organised that an employer would go there for labour and a workman would go there to get employment. I should also have these bureaux linked up; and I would further still have a number of central bureaux all over the country which were always in touch—a clearing house of labour, if you like—so that men could be drafted from one part of the country to another.

45826. I think you would make these bureaux refer to all classes of labour?—Yes, absolutely.

45827. And you would facilitate persons in search of work?—Yes.

45828. Would you give them a dossier? Would you give them some registration paper to show that they had been working?—I think that the Swiss system of giving them a book is a good one, and I would give it to them here.

Proposed abolition of Poor Law guardians.

Proposed payment of local administrators.

Proposed amalgamation of offices of relieving officer and sanitary inspector.

Dissociation of medical relief from the Poor Law.

Bad effect of workhouse life on the inmates.

Evils of pauper help in Poor Law infirmaries.

Bad effect of workhouse life on the inmates.

Bed sore cases sent from voluntary hospitals to Poor Law infirmaries, and alleged understaffing of voluntary hospitals.

45829. You suggest in (i) that all this should be controlled by the town or county authority; I understood you were going to keep the Poor Law work as it is now, but do you propose to hand it over?—I do not propose to keep the Poor Law guardians. If you take away from them their able-bodied, if you take away from them their unemployable, if you take away from them the sick, and if you take away from them the children, I think that you can easily put over the assessment and other duties to other local bodies, and then they will have no work to do, but they will simply swell the ranks of the unemployed.

45830. The Poor Law bodies would?—Yes, the guardians will.

45831. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Then why would you pay them?—I would pay the local administrators, who would not necessarily be the Poor Law guardians. The local administrators, I hope, will be later on councillors—not that I think there is any merit in that; but I think ambition does play a little part in public life.

45832. (Mr. Bentham.) Who would hear the applications for relief—I want to say what I say in a very short way. Out-relief at the present time is in the hands of the guardians, and applications are made to the relieving officers. Under a properly constituted system of society I think that would not be needed; but at the present time we have two sets of officers looking after the poor especially. We have the relieving officer who looks after the man in the house, and who does not have to pass an examination; and we have the health officer, who looks after the house and who does have to pass an examination. I would economise in this direction by having one man to look after both house and inmate, rather than having, as at the present time, two men looking the one after the house and the other after the inmate. I think the system we have at the present time of one man looking after the house and of another man looking after the inmate of the house is most wasteful; and certainly it seems to me not wise to have a better qualified man to look after the house while the man who is not perhaps so well qualified is put to look after the one for whom the house is built.

45833. (Chairman.) Passing on to the next subject, I see that you would separate the Poor Law infirmary altogether from the Poor Law?—Entirely.

45834. I see you have a very bad opinion of the effect of the workhouse upon those who are in it?—I have a strong opinion on that.

45835. You think it knocks out their spirit of independence?—Rather.

45836. You say that you think that people who have passed through the infirmary have got infected by the workhouse inmates in the infirmary, and have gone to the workhouse?—Yes. My experience has been that the men who go over to clean, and the women who go over to clean in the infirmary and do the various duties there, washing it and such like—cannot help but get in contact with the inmates in the infirmary. I have known in our own infirmary men who had never been in the workhouse and who perhaps never would have gone into the workhouse, have got in contact with these men and have been infected with the workhouse microbe, and when they have come out of the infirmary, they have been transferred into the workhouse. Again, the conditions at the present time existing in our infirmary are these: We are absolutely full up in the infirmary, and when a man comes into the institution and wants accommodation in the infirmary, when he becomes convalescent, whether he has been in the workhouse before or not, we have to transfer him to the workhouse, perhaps to one of the infirm wards there where he can sleep, or at any rate where he does come in contact with the inmates of the workhouse. My opinion and my experience is that when once a man goes into the workhouse, there is no hope for him except he has special treatment, physically oftentimes, always psychologically, to get him out of the conditions into which he drifts.

45837. You say in your statement that there have been some very bad cases of bed sores sent from the hospitals to the infirmary?—That is so. I do not want to specify the hospitals, but I want to say this, that if they have a bad case which is going to be a long case there, and which perhaps is no credit in their curing, they will send it along to the infirmary. Then again, charity-supported hospitals, so far as my experience goes—and I have been an inmate of both for a time (for six weeks) and also for accidents—are never efficiently staffed, and never well looked after. I will give you an experience I had a few weeks ago. I had a piece of steel get into my eye while I was working my machine. I went to the hospital to have it taken out. The room was simply packed with people there being attended to by the doctors. The doctors and nurses were running about and I suppose more or less off their heads for the time being, the work was so heavy. I was planted down in a chair, which I did not mind as I understood the feelings that were agitating them at the time. After about half-an-hour of waiting, in intense pain, the doctor came to me, "What's up?" I told him I had a piece in my eye and I leant back. He had a look at it and put some drops in. Then he went away again for another half-an-hour. He came back again, looked, took a piece out of my eye and went away without saying a word; he simply had not time. I stopped there for about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, and as he did not come again I went to him and said, "Is it finished; I have a good deal of pain?" "Oh, sit down." I sat down; he had a look, "All right." I said "Good-day," and came away. I say that sort of thing ought not to exist.

45838. That was as an out-patient, I suppose?—Yes, as an out-patient.

45839. Assuming your experience is unfortunate, is it not rather hard to generalise as much as you have done?—I know it is general, because I have been in several hospitals. I was also an out-patient for some time at a hospital after I had been in for six weeks owing to a football accident. I found exactly the same thing. It is invariably the same. I also was for eighteen months going to a hospital in London for my eyes, and I found that practically the same things existed there—sometimes worse, sometimes better, and not always the same.

45840. Bed-sores, you know, are a great reflection on the nursing?—Yes.

45841. You say you have had some cases of abominable bed-sores?—We had a case sent to us that you could put your hand into the bed-sore.

45842. Was a representation made by the board of guardians to the hospital?—I do not know where the representations were made to or whether there were any made or not. I only know this, that it was unavoidable. What I mean to say is that they cannot have more nurses, and they cannot have a different staff than what they can afford. They are in debt as it is, and I suppose things will go on as they are while these hospitals are supported by charity.

45843. Was no action taken by the guardians or by the infirmary committee in these cases?—No action was taken, so far as I know officially. I am on the infirmary committee and I find this generally, that it is better to let these things go and do your best with them when you get them. I think it is less costly, and I think it avoids a good deal of acrimony perhaps that does take place sometimes.

45844. What is the infirmary committee for if it does not represent a case of this kind?—The infirmary committee has to administer the infirmary, to look after it, and to see that the sick poor are looked after properly.

45845. But here is a case where a person has not been properly looked after?—It is like this—if a man has a bed-sore, you do not know and you cannot tell as to whose fault it is. We know it is the fault of bad nursing, but we do not exactly know whose fault it is ultimately. For my own part, I should never bother with a lot of correspondence between general hospitals and infirmaries. I do not know whether you gentlemen round the table know it, but there is a good deal of jealousy between the rival authorities in this matter. That is well known all over the country, and I think the less friction you have the better. You will not alter it.

45846. Then you wish to have much more efficient inspection and you would like to see the appointment of lady inspectors?—Yes. At the present time in our infirmary, we have an inspector coming round perhaps once in six months or once in twelve months and he will spend perhaps half a day inspecting part of the hospital, and then go away and not inspect the rest. That has happened several times at our own place. For my own part, I think that we have not enough inspectors. I think that the inspectors are over worked. They do their work well and they do their best. I do not think we have enough lady inspectors, who are trained nurses, and who should go over our hospitals; I think we ought to have more of them. There is always a certain amount of reserve with a male inspector going round and examining and inspecting; there must be always.

Bed sore cases sent from voluntary hospitals, Poor Law infirmaries, and alleged understaffing of voluntary hospitals.

Need of more Government inspection of infirmaries, and proposal for lady inspectors.

45847. As regards phthisis, you would make notification compulsory?—I would make it notifiable.

45848. And you would compel the patients to undergo treatment?—Yes.

45849. You would take care of their wives and children in the meantime?—Yes, certainly, supposing, of course, they needed it.

45850. You do not like an ad hoc elected authority?—No.

45851. Why not?—B. cause local government is one thing and not many things. By saying "local government is one thing," what I mean is that all the departments connected with local government are interdependent and not isolated. You cannot isolate one part of local government. For instance, you cannot isolate the treatment of the poor apart from the sanitary arrangements of the district; and you cannot isolate the condition of the poor, and especially the condition of those who are poor through drink secondarily—apart from the control, to a large extent, of the public houses. That is certainly at the present time under the magistrates, yet the local authority has a great deal of influence in that direction; but the guardians have nothing whatever to do with it. I give you an instance in my statement of the way in which we could have done a lot of good, had the Poor Law work been part of the work of the local authority. We had a woman coming to us for relief. She had been coming for some time. One of her children was fourteen years of age and she had won a scholarship; she was fourteen, but the mother had sent her to work. We asked her "Why?" She said "Simply because I cannot afford in the first place to keep her away from work, and in the second place because I cannot afford to buy books." If that be so, and if the Poor Law work as we have it at the present time was in the hands of the local authority, and men went round on their various committees as they should go round, we should have men on the Poor Law committee who had also been on the education committee, and immediately they would say: "Here is a chance for a maintenance scholarship which the child ought to have." Then in turn—even supposing they had not been on the education committee—when they go on the education committee they would say: "Look here, in educating these children, some of their parents cannot afford to keep them at school; we had a certain case on the Poor Law committee a short time ago;" and it would suggest itself to them that there should be a proper system of maintenance scholarships such as you have in London.

45852. Why do you propose a little later on to hand the children who are kept in the cottage homes over to the education authority?—Because the education authority knows most about children.

45853. It is practically an ad hoc authority. There is a special education committee, is there not?—Local government ultimately will be government by committees which will have, to a large extent, executive power. The education committee is ultimately under the control of the central authority at the present time. When they have to give a certain amount of their time to the work and, at the same time, remain a representative body, they will be able to take a wholesale survey from a Government standpoint of the whole of the work of the various committees. The Poor Law will ultimately be, I hope, in the hands of committees which will be changed every so often—at all events a percentage will be changed every so often—so as to maintain continuity.

45854. Will you take the children away entirely?—Yes.

45855. And you would naturally repeal the Law of Settlement?—Yes.

45856. You have put before us a very big programme. You have told us you were for some time in London, but would you tell us a little what your experience is, because this scheme is a very big one. What has been your practical experience of local government?—I may say that, as you know, some men can get through more work than others within a given time. Since I have been a Poor Law guardian it has taken up practically the whole of my time apart from the time I have to spend getting my living, and I have simply lived in it. I have done a good deal of visiting, and I have watched my colleagues. I have also paid visits to the Poor Law institutions at Coventry, Warwick, Wolverhampton and elsewhere when lecturing. I have come into contact with Poor Law guardians in those places, and I have compared notes. I have also based my opinions upon the experience that I had when I was living amongst these conditions. I was living, as I said, three-and-a-half years in a Birmingham slum—in Highgate—that is one of the worst districts, which at the present time I have to help to administer; and for nineteen-and-a-half years I was in the Wandsworth Road district in London. I find this, and you will find that the work here mainly has to do with these people: My experience is that fundamentally the adequate treatment of these men is not going to be relief as met by out-relief, because relief, I have always felt, always degrades, when given to a man or a woman, supposing they are able to earn their living, or supposing they have had a chance at some time or another of earning their living. In the case of children it is altogether different, for children naturally, until they come to years when they are able to work are always looked upon as being kept. Therefore I say these men do not want relief; they want work, and the sooner they are given work the better. So far as local government work is concerned I have been, I may say, intimately acquainted with that work for a long time. My brother is a borough councillor in London, and was on the old vestry. I have not only worked with him and gone over the whole thing with him, but I have gone over the whole thing in Birmingham, especially when I have been studying up the case for lectures, and also for the local council and the Parliamentary elections. I have also done some little lecturing on this subject besides the twelve months' experience I have had. I may say that the twelve months' experience that I have had has modified in some cases the views which I had formed previously, but that I have been confirmed in the principles that I hold that local government will have to be taken out of the hands of ad hoc bodies and properly organised, and that men who must be employed, if you like elected by the people, must be employed to set the whole of their faculties for a certain period of their time in administering the laws of the area that they are supposed to administer.

45857. You have only been a Poor Law guardian for twelve months?—That is so; and twelve months before that I fought an election and lost. But I may say that my Poor Law experience started eleven years ago when I began preaching in workhouses.

45858. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you contemplate that the local body which you think should administer local government generally and which would be paid, should consist of members who will give their whole time to that duty?—Not necessarily; they might give a portion of their time. Business men could do this, but working men could not do it, and they would have perhaps to be maintained by their trade unions, even as I am paid for the time I lose on the Aston Board by my trade union at the present time. A man getting £2 a week cannot afford to lose any money whatever, in fact he cannot afford to save.

45859. Would you contemplate that the pay of the members should be sufficient to keep them?—I think the payment of the members should be equal in all cases.

45860. The same in all cases, do you mean?—Yes, and that a man should be compelled to give up a certain portion of his time. If we pay a man we have a hold upon him; if we do not pay him he can do as he likes. Unfortunately if you leave it to their own sweet will, and have a board of thirty members, you will get perhaps six who do the work. Of the sixty members on the Warwick Board perhaps you will get ten to do the work.

45861. The Chairman asked you whether you had formed any estimate of the cost of your scheme, and you justly replied that it would not come into effect all at once?—That is so.

Mr. W. H. Ayles.

Futility of remedial treatment for adults.

Proposed payment of members of local authorities.

Mr. W. H. Ayles.

18 Mar. 1907.

Question of cost of State workshops, old age pensions; payment of members of local authorities, etc.

45862. Supposing it did come into force, not all at once, but ultimately, have you formed any estimate of what would be the cost?—At the present time you have your State services, such as the Post Office, and the local State services, such as tramways and such like which bring you in a profit; so rather you would be helped than hindered in that way so far as expense is concerned. The profit you would get from the State workshops properly administered would go to keep the unemployable colonies, and also the colonies, on the outskirts of the suburbs, for old men. Together they would help to keep up the labour bureaux and pay for travelling expenses, etc. We get from our Post Office at the present time over £3,000,000 and we certainly will make a very good thing out of the trams and other organisations. I do not think that the State factories which I am advocating here should be governed on the same principle upon which State factories are governed at the present time. I find this—a man is placed over an engineering factory, and I do not want to be too particular here, who has a knowledge of engineering in some directions which is to his benefit, and I do not blame him for that—you cannot—but who has not any knowledge of engineering proper; he has not been through a training; even though he has been through the Army training for the Army engineers, that is not sufficient, for in the examination of the Army for engineers—I know this from members of my own society who are in the Army or have been in—he can pay a man to do the work for him, which is examined as his own work. I say that is no training, and that you want a man who has been an engineer and who has passed through a practical training and who is also a good administrator. I certainly think that under those circumstances you would find that these State workshops would pay. For instance, if we own our trams we could also make our trams.

45863. As a matter of pounds, shillings and pence have you formed any view as to what these things would cost?—No, I simply have not. I have not got any figures worked out. As you know, it is impossible for a man who is at work all day to do everything.

45864. (Mr. Bentham.) In the suggested reforms which you give in paragraph 19, you head them as “practical reforms;” Do you mean that your suggestions which follow under that heading are all practical suggestions?—Yes, and can be started at once, though not completed at once. Ultimately we should not want this sort of thing; we should not want any reforms. We really have to pay for our own lack of forethought in organising in the past.

45865. You have laid particular emphasis upon the advisability of labour bureaux; is that practicable at present?—I think so. You have the nucleus at the present time in the distress committees. The scope of the distress committees should be enlarged somewhat, but you have at all events the nucleus there. I certainly think that by linking these up and putting them on a proper basis, that is, by making them part of your local government, you would form a centre whereby employment could be asked for and obtained.

45866. Under the Unemployed Workmen's Act there is provision made which is optional, I believe, for the establishment of labour bureaux?—Yes.

45867. These labour bureaux have not been established in most large towns because of the very strong opposition on the part of the trades unions; therefore in view of the present opposition of trade unionism is it a practical reform to insist by Act of Parliament upon universal labour bureaux under municipal authority?—Yes. I am, as you have seen, a trade union official; and from experience I say that, supposing you were putting in the safeguard that no employer who has a dispute with his workmen can come on to these bureaux for workmen in times of dispute if—you will make that one safeguard. I think you will find the opinion of trade unionists is that not only are labour bureaux practicable, but they would welcome them. And so far as I am concerned and my colleagues in Birmingham are concerned, we would work with them.

45868. If you had universal labour bureaux on that system any man who is not a trade unionist would be equally welcome to register his name, I suppose?—Yes.

45869. And then the employers who are seeking men would be equally entitled to select men who are not trade unionists?—That is so.

45870. And the officials of the bureaux would not be entitled to give preference to trade unionists?—That is so.

45871. Then the trade unionist would really be putting himself in an inferior position to that which he is in to-day?—No.

45872. Do not trade unions to-day have their own labour bureaux, and do not people who want competent workmen usually go to them for their men?—Yes. At the present we have our registrars, but do you not see that the best of the workmen, the cream of the workmen, are in the trade unions, and you cannot do without them, whether you get them through a labour bureau or not? We are quite willing, I am confident, to allow an employer to go to a labour bureau to get the best men he can there, and he will want the best men.

45873. If that is so, will you tell us why the trade unions object to labour bureaux now?—They do not, so far as the engineers are concerned.

45874. Are you a member of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers?—Yes, I am district secretary for the Birmingham district. We do not object at all; we would welcome it, with those safeguards.

45875. Are you speaking locally now or generally?—I am speaking with full information locally, and with transmitted information nationally, so far as our society is concerned.

45876. Supposing you had municipal workshops, they would come under the head of practical reforms, would they?—Yes.

45877. And they would be established in a small way, and men who would not find work through the labour bureaux would naturally make application to the municipal workshop for employment?—If you will notice I have put here that the men would be sent to the municipal or State workshops in the first place.

45878. By whom?—They would be sent there when they have gone the whole round and cannot get employment. They would be sent by the local authorities.

45879. Against their will?—I say they have either got to go there or to the labour colony, or to go without. They can take their preference as to whether they go to the State workshop where they can maintain their skill, or whether they go to the labour colony supposing they are unskilled.

45880. Let us follow the man now. He wants to have his preference; he cannot find a situation through the labour bureaux; and he wants work; he makes application to be taken in at the municipal workshop at the ordinary rate of wages which you propose; and they would be bound to take him on, I presume?—If they had room for him to do it in.

45881. Would the system admit of saying that you had not room? What would become of him? If you had municipal workshops, the object of them is to absorb all these men, is it not?—To ultimately absorb them; but, of course, you could not absorb them until you had a complete system. You would only absorb a few at first naturally, but you would absorb a few, and in that way you would make a start.

45882. I think you said you could go on building if you had not room for them?—Gradually you would extend; as the experiment you were trying proved more or less successful you would go on extending.

45883. What is there in the way of extension immediately if there are more applicants than you have room for? The State has plenty of money, so what is there to prevent extension?—The same thing would happen here as happens in every business. A business cannot extend straight away; I mean to say a private company cannot extend straight away in many directions, simply because their present administrative staff cannot administer a lot of buildings and must grow into and must organise the industry, and the shops that they are building. In the same way the local administrations would have to grow into this work, and it would have to come gradually.

45884. The only thing that would stand in its way would be the want of competent men to manage it; is that what you mean?—No. You would get the competent men to manage it even as we get competent men to manage our tramways at the present time. What I think would be needed is this: In the first place you have got to get the money and you do not want to come on the rates too heavily at once, else you will only stultify industry. But you want to get money first, and you must get that from the profits and use that profit for extensions. In the second place you must extend gradually, so that the local administrators would all be able to grasp the administration of the affairs that they have to look after.

45885. Would you agree then that you would not extend unless you can show a profit eventually on what you have already effected?—I would not agree to it unless you lumped together the whole of your municipal services and showed a profit on the whole. If you can show a profit on the whole of the municipal services, trams, gas and everything else, I would not relieve the rates with those profits, but would put them by for the extension of the municipal concerns.

45886. Then you would go on developing the municipal workshop where men were working at a loss because other departments of the municipality were working at a profit; is that what you mean?—Private companies are content to work for two years sometimes at a loss in order to have an ultimate gain. What is done with private companies I would do with municipal bodies and I would judge a municipal body by the same standard as a private company which pays its men decent wages, works them under decent conditions and hours. I should have one standard for the two and not two standards.

45887. You still agree in principle that it would be the duty of a municipal authority or whatever authority had charge of these shops to provide employment for every man who is competent and could not find it for himself?—Yes.

45888. With the ultimate idea that it would absorb all these men and I would gradually take up into municipal control all industry?—Into municipal and State control; or it may be under a different form of local government—provincial control.

45889. Of course that is a matter of detail. If men had that option then there would be no need for trade unions?—That is because you do not understand trade unionism, I think. Trade unions at the present time have one function, but you know that the function of trade unions to-day is not altogether the same function that existed, say, in 1799, when the anti-combination laws were passed; and the functions in the future of trade unions will not be the same functions as at present.

45890. Your system under this heading of "practical reforms" would really change the principle of trade unionism, would it not; that is, as trade unionism is understood to-day it would no longer be necessary—that is my point?—Trade unionism so far as unemployed benefit is concerned would have no existence.

45891. It would disappear?—But the moral teaching that trade unions are at the present time instilling in their members would be still as necessary then.

45892. For what object would it be necessary then?—Trade unions are teaching men their relationship one to another. They invariably in their branches address one another as brother this or brother that, hence a new relationship is being built up amongst the men, and they are realising now something which is a step still further, and that is that if the man who is in the trade union is a brother the man who is outside the trade union is also a brother, only a little less fortunate in that he does not agree with them in the principles that they hold. This is the reason why trade unions are considered to be at the present time the greatest moral force in the country.

45893. In that way, how would trade unions differ from their position to-day?—To-day they give out-of-work payment to men, I understand, and they get the advantage of being on the list when trade union men are wanted, and they have the advantage of getting early situations, is that not so?—Yes.

45894. Then as trade unions are understood to-day they would be no longer necessary?—Yes. Trade unions at the present day are being resorted to by employers to engage workmen to do their work. In the future trade unions will be the greatest force in the industrial development of those particular trades that the trade unions help to administer.

45895. You are against giving State relief in any form, I rather gather?—State relief to men and women—not to children; I think the children should be looked after.

Mr. W. H.
Ayles.
18 Mar. 1907.

45896. And those who are infirm and sick?—Yes. Those who can work for themselves should work; those who cannot work either should be taught to work or educated, if they are children, or should be cared for physically or mentally.

Children,
the infirm,
and the sick the only proper objects for
relief.

45897. If I understand your recommendations for paid guardians, you would have them undergo some examination; is that prior to submitting themselves for election?—Yes, rather—before they could become candidates. At the present time the party officials go round asking men if they are prepared to stand at the next election, that is if they want to fight; and if the best man will not fight they get the next best man, and all that sort of thing. Men will say: "I cannot afford the time." I may say this from my own personal experience: in my own trade union and in Bordesley, for which I sit, there are a dozen men that I could name straight away who are far better men than I am for Poor Law work, but they cannot get away from their work, and therefore, the twelfth or the thirteenth best—myself—has to do the work.

Proposed payment and examination of guardians.

45898. What would be your examining body?—I would have certain questions that they should answer.

45899. Who should put those questions?—I certainly think the education authority should have that in their power.

45900. Then there should be classes set up by the education authority, which is the municipal authority, for the candidates for the municipality itself?—A proper education would teach citizenship and local government, as well as history and geography and a knowledge of other countries. In Birmingham now through the work of the educational association we are teaching men and women citizenship, local government, the conditions of labour, economics and such like.

45901. (Mr. Lansbury.) The main part of the argument in your statement is for the purpose of showing the uselessness of the Poor Law as a means of remedying poverty and distress generally, is it not?—Yes. It is entirely useless. According to statistics you still have the same number, although perhaps they are shaken up a little differently, as you had sixty years ago.

Futility of the Poor Law as a means of remedying distress.

45902. And therefore you think that when the question of money comes in, you can point to the fearful waste of money with no good effect that is going on expenditure under the Poor Law at the present time?—Yes.

45903. And you would set that against any cost that may be incurred in undertaking your schemes?—Yes, rather. I think it would simply be an investment which would pay ultimately.

45904. At the present moment there are some hundreds of thousands of pounds spent on what is called able-bodied pauperism, which leaves the problem in your judgment very much worse than before the money was spent?—Very much worse, and only confirms and never reforms.

45905. We heard this morning, as you heard, too, from Sir Hallewell Rogers that, with even the present propositions and the present methods of dealing with the unemployed through distress committees, the best thing that can be done there is equally bad, because it simply anticipates work which ought to be done in the future by regular men?—I think that on the one hand it is a moral sedative to public sentiment and on the other hand I simply think it is a palliative; and while it is expedient to do these things I do not think it is right in principle.

45906. You were rather wanting to point to the hopelessness of the present methods, I think?—Yes.

45907. With regard to the widows with children, I understood you to say that you could not see why some of these widows should not be in charge of cottage homes with orphan and deserted children as well as their own?—Yes, I said that.

Question of cost of transferring Poor
Law children

authorities.

45908. If they all went to the education department, that does not necessarily mean that it is going to cost

Mr. W. H. Ayles. 11—
18 Mar. 1907. more money, does it?—No. I know that in some unions cottage homes, for instance, cost a lot of money; but in our union they do not cost, with establishment charges, sinking fund and all, above 8s. per head.

45909. Anyhow the money is being spent now, and you are simply asking that it shall be spent in a different way without the terms "pauperism", or "Poor Law" coming in at all?—Yes.

Need of country colonies for the infirm aged, and cost of such colonies.

45910. Taking the aged, you are asking that there should be decent means of lodging them outside the towns; is it not the fact that the setting up of these buildings inside the towns lands the ratepayers with enormous capital charges, and although the paying back is spread over a number of years it is very much heavier than building places in the country?—Yes, it is far heavier and not at all so satisfactory. Even though you had the same homes as you had, with almost the same surroundings as far as you could, and perhaps the addition of the smoke, yet at the same time you would not get the same effect that you would have in the country or on the outskirts.

45911. So there again you have at present got a big outlay which, in your judgment, is not being wisely spent, which can be set against whatever outlay there would be in treating these people in the country?—I think you could sell expensive sites which you have in the towns and buy less expensive sites and build with perhaps less ultimate cost out of the payment that you would get for the town sites; perhaps you could not only do that but buy the land to build the little colony on for the same money, and then that would land you into no more expense. I take that as a general statement.

45912. Do you not think that in the country many of these old people who now eat their lives out in idleness in the workhouse would potter about a garden and probably grow some of the food that they require for their sustenance?—Yes. I know a man who is sixty years of age, that at fifty-two was rendered incapable of work owing to the conditions under which he worked. Fortunately he has five sons, who help him to keep all right on his feet. He has worked very hard and saved a little besides. As soon as his little money had gone, if they were not there, he would have come on the rates. At the present time he is living on the outskirts where he has some fowls and some rabbits, and just when he is able he looks after those and makes a little money from them and also makes a few mats and such like. The same thing would happen.

Miss ISABEL HAYWARD, called; and Examined.

Miss I. Hayward. 8 Mar. 1907. 45919. (Chairman.) You are relief visitor to the King's Norton Union?—Yes, that is so.

45920. How long have you held that post?—Since July, 1904.

45921. Two and a half years, then?—Yes.

45922. You have prepared a short statement for us of your duties, which you are willing to put in?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1 My duties are prescribed as follows:—

(a) To visit periodically all widows in receipt of out-relief and to supply a detailed report of such cases, describing income from all sources, condition of the house, and the feeding and clothing of children, etc.

(b) To visit periodically all aged and deserving poor recommended, or receiving the higher scale of relief, and to report on their home, conditions, and surroundings.

(c) To enquire into the antecedents of persons admitted to the workhouse and marked for report by the Revision Sub-Committee.

(d) Excepting cases of emergency, to investigate applications for admission to the maternity wards of the infirmary.

(e) To compile and keep indices of the Application and Report Book kept by the relieving officers.

(f) To assist when required in the removal of female paupers transferred from this to other unions.

45913. It would not necessarily follow that there would have to be a great cost?—No.

45914. The same with the people for whom you want pensions; is it not the fact that a considerable sum of money is spent even now on administration, which if the pensions were paid through the Post Office merely as a matter of right, could be set against the cost of the pensions?—Yes, that is so. Of course those who are in receipt of out-door relief, would cost a little more than at present. You could give them pensions with the exception of those who are perhaps receiving outdoor relief—a pension of anything up to 7s. or 8s. or even 9s. a week sometimes, according to the cost of the union—and no additional expense would be incurred in that way. Even in the case of out-relief you would still have the amount to pay in out-relief plus the expense of not only paying it but also of looking up these people and looking up their sons and everybody else as well—you would have the officials and all that to pay for.

45915. Does not the same thing apply in regard to the Poor Law infirmaries? There you are simply asking that instead of a person who needs medical treatment being classed as a pauper, he should have that treatment given him through another authority, and apart altogether from the degrading influence of the present Poor Law?—I think they ought to be able to go to an infirmary or to a hospital, as it would be called, and claim it. Besides which, if the sanitary authority, or whatever local authority it was that kept up these institutions, had these medical relieving hospitals better distributed, then cases would be looked after which at the present time have no access to hospitals, and then there would be a great saving in life in every way.

45916. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the unemployable, your proposal is in the nature of a cure?—Yes; it is no good touching them otherwise.

45917. Would they be detained in the institution at which this cure would be attempted?—I would treat them as a fever patient. You would compulsorily detain the fever or infectious-diseased patient, and therefore you would detain these; they are psychologically diseased.

45918. Then they would be detained until cured?—Yes.

(g) To act as inspector under the Infant Life Protection Act, 1879, or any amending Act.

(h) To perform such other duties as the Local Government Board or guardians may from time to time prescribe, and to act generally under the instructions of the clerk to the Board.

2. As to Cases of Widows.—These visits materially assist the guardians and relieving officers, particularly in doubtful cases. It sometimes happens that a widow has a lodger or even two, of whom she does not acquaint the relieving officer. This is only found out by inspecting the bedrooms. If the beds or rooms are dirty this is reported. On a second visit I generally find the condition of the house improved.

3. As to Visits to the Aged Poor.—The old people often benefit by these visits; if the relief is found to be inadequate a report is made to the guardians, who re-consider the case. Some old people strongly object to the workhouse, and the conditions under which they live are unsatisfactory; these are sometimes remedied through visiting, and the old people made more comfortable.

4. As to Maternity Cases.—Before an applicant is given an Order for the workhouse she is visited at her home or lodgings; by this a more truthful report as to the history of the case is obtained. This information is furnished to a voluntary society which undertakes the after-care of these girls.

5. As to Infant Life Protection Act.—The supervision of one-child cases, in my opinion, would have good results.

45923. (Chairman.) I see your duties are, amongst other things, periodically to visit all widows in receipt of out-relief and to report on the condition of the house and the feeding and clothing of the children. What has been your experience during the two and a half years of your periodical visits? Have you had to report many cases where the houses were unclean or the children neglected?—Very many cases where the house was very unclean and where the people were unclean also. I report that to the guardians. Very often the people are asked to come to the committee, and they are told that if they do not bring about different conditions of the house their relief will be taken away from them or reconsidered. Then I go again and try to talk to them and tell them how to do these sort of things; and very often it has fruit.

45924. Then the admonition of the committee is effective?—Yes, very often.

45927. Were there any of those whose relief was knocked off?—Yes, but not on account of the dirty condition of the house. It was on account of the income coming into the house. I found about half-a-dozen cases where over £2 a week was coming into the house. The relieving officer could not find it out, because they were lodgers. It was only on my inspecting the bedrooms that I found out how these people occupy the beds.

45928. Can we take it, then, that the result of your inspecting these houses was that you detected certain fraudulent statements?—That is so.

45929. But on the other hand no woman has lost her relief for keeping an untidy house, because your admonitions or representations have been effective?—That is so. We do not stop the relief; I generally manage to bring it about in a different way. If it is a very dirty house and the woman seems very obstinate, then I bring her before the committee.

45930. As I understand your methods, they so far have been effective that the women have improved, so that in no case has the relief been knocked off?—I do not remember one case.

45931. Coming to the children, I suppose some of these widows have a certain number of children who are attending school?—Yes, and some are working.

45932. What is the condition of those children? Are they as a rule, do you think, properly looked after and properly fed?—Yes, as a rule. I have not had very many cases where the children have been underfed or not properly clothed.

45933. Then there were a few cases of that kind?—Only a few.

45934. What did you do in those cases?—I think I have rather taken that on myself, and have advised the woman how to go about. I have gone in at different times to see the meals, and of course I have generally surveyed the house and helped the woman with my own personal views.

45935. There is the difficulty, I suppose, in certain cases of widows who work, that they are out of the house at the time their children ought to be at school?—That is so. I frequently find women employing children—simple little drudges—in the house?

45936. Their own children?—Yes.

45937. In order to help them?—In order to help them clean the house.

45938. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would those children be of school age?—Yes, they are.

45939. (Chairman.) It has been suggested in certain quarters that children whose mothers are in receipt of out-relief are not properly fed, but your general experience does not point to that?—No.

45940. How many cases do you think you have visited—roughly; just give a guess?—I am afraid I could not tell you.

45941. Some hundreds?—Yes.

45942. Are you the only lady relief visitor of King's Norton?—I am the only one.

Miss I.
Hayward.

45943. Is the whole district under you?—Yes, the whole union. I should think I have visited between 150 and 200 widows, but I have not reported on all.

18 Mar. 1907.

45944. You have only reported where necessary?—Where the guardians have asked me to do so.

45945. The relief in King's Norton is low compared with other unions; did you see signs of its inadequacy at all in the conditions of the house or the nature of the food the children had?—My own personal idea is to give more out-relief to widows. They seem to have to work very hard and to be out all the time; therefore I cannot expect them to keep their houses as they should.

45946. Have you ever represented that to the committee?—Yes, I have done so.

45948. You also visit the aged and deserving poor, do you not?—Yes.

45949. Has their general condition been satisfactory, or have there been many cases where you have had to report that the house was unfit, and you have thought they were unable to take care of themselves?—In several cases I have reported where the house has been dirty and the old person has not been able to look after him or herself, and therefore they have very often gone into the infirmary.

45950. Do they come out again?—Yes, they come out again and somebody generally turns up to take them into their own home. Another thing, I very often find an old woman sleeping with children. That is rectified by my telling them I cannot allow it, or the guardians cannot allow it, and that if it continues they must come to the committee. I explain it to them. Then I often find that the old people occupy a bed to themselves, if not a bedroom, and that is rather better for them.

45951. Why do you inquire into the antecedents of the persons admitted to the workhouse; is that in order to report on their character?—Sometimes the relieving visitor as to officers are unable to get the names of all the sons. I very often find there is a son capable of helping.

45952. Is not the union a very large one for one lady relief visitor?—It is a large one, but, of course, being a new position, we hardly knew how it was going to work.

45953. How many cases can you manage in a week?—In one district I might manage five or six in a day.

45954. It depends on the distance, of course?—That is exactly it.

45955. Do you go out into the rural part of King's Norton at all?—Not so much.

45956. I see you investigate applications for admission to the maternity ward of the infirmary; I assume those applications are generally from unmarried women, are they not?—Yes, certainly.

45957. You act as inspector under the Infant Life Protection Act of 1879; have you much work under that Act?—No, I have not been able to go into that very much. I find that I cannot, with my other duties, do that as I should do it. To find out these children I should have to make a house-to-house visitation, and that, of course, my other duties do not allow.

45958. Is infant mortality high in your union?—I do not think it is so very high.

45959. There is no milk depôt there, is there?—I do not think there is in our union.

45960. The sanitary authority has put up nothing of that kind?—No, I think not in our union.

45961. Is there any committee of ladies who deal with the maternity cases afterwards?—Yes, our lady guardians see these women after they are in the workhouse.

in a very bad state or when it is very crowded. We work together very well like that. They also advise me of the old people who are receiving a very small amount of relief.
I find that very beneficial in more ways than one.

relief.
45967. You do not find any reluctance?—No. I think it is the thin end of the wedge. If they have a finger-ache they want to go to the doctor, that is my experience. Of course I am quite new to the work.
- Question of 45968. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you consider there is much sufficiency of suffering in your district for lack of proper medical attenmedical tion?—No, I do not think so—speaking personally, of relief in course.
King's
Norton.
45969. (Dr. Downes.) What previous experience had you before you took up this post?—I was a teacher first in this union, the King's Norton Union, and then for three and a half years in North Kensington.
45970. Under the board of education?—Yes.
45971. Have you had any nursing experience, or anything of that sort?—No, I have not.
- Duty of 45972. (Mr. Gardiner.) I did not quite understand lady cross- what you said to the Chairman about the children's visitor as to clothing; if you find the clothing is not adequate, do you children of report it to the guardians?—Yes, I do that.
- widows 45973. The same with the bed clothes and that kind of relief, the guardians give it to them.

- Advantages 45974. It is for you rather to see that they spend it on of the cottage what is actually necessary in the way of clothes?—Yes.
home system Another thing I recommend is that one or two of the for children. children shall be taken into cottage homes, when the case presents itself.
45975. Do you think that is a good thing as a general principle?—Yes, I do think so, because it is very often the youngest one who gets neglected.
45976. You do not think it permanently breaks the tie between the mother and the child?—No, I do not think so at all.
45977. And you do not think the child fails to learn unselfishness?—No, I have not proved that.
45978. You have been at this for how long?—For two and a half years.
45979. You have got no case paper system have you,
at King's Norton?—Yes.
45980. But you spend some time upon the Application and Report Book, do you not?—That is the Relief Order Book.
- Need of more 45981. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Would you like the widows to adequate have enough relief to enable them to stay at home?—
relief for Yes, I am a great advocate for that, but I do think that the widows with women who stay at home ought to do a little work as well; children I do not say that they ought to have sufficient relief to keep their children and themselves without work at home.
45982. It would not be very good for the homes to have box-making and things like that at home, would it?—I do not mean work like that. I mean laundry work or sewing. I do not mean any factory work; the children come in for so much of that.
45983. Why is it you are able to find out more than the Value of my relieving officers can?—I can hardly explain that, but my cross-visit reports prove that I am able to do so. It is perhaps that in eliciting
I talk to the women rather more. At any rate, I seem informatio to get the information, and it is quite correct. from paup.
45984. And you do not find that they mind it when you invite them to tell you about themselves?—They do not mind it a bit. I have never had any resentment shown at all.
45985. That is really through the way the thing is put to them, I suppose?—I do not know, but I have never met with any hard words at all.
45986. Do you go anywhere besides to the women Nature of themselves? Do you go to the neighbours or to the enquiries relations?—I do not go to the neighbours; I think that is made by bad. I generally make my inquiries from the shop-lady cross-keepers, or from the landlady or someone like that, but visitor.
not from the neighbours—I do not think that is fair.
45987. Do you ever go to where they lived before?—
Yes, but only in bad cases. They must be very bad before I go into their past history.
45988. Is it part of your work to see the sons and daughters, and see whether they can help?—No, that is turned over to the relieving officer. In the case of an old woman, I generally go to her daughter and talk to her and ask her if she can clean the house for her mother.
Very often she does come in once or twice a week and scrub the floor, whereas before it used to be just swept up.
45989. You find really that you can make yourself a friend to the people?—That is my aim, more than to be treated as an official.
45990. (Mr. Lock.) Have you found that the people Question o think it a great hardship to accept medical Poor Law deterrence relief?—According to my experience, no. medical relief.
45991. Do you think that would apply largely to the sort of people you are dealing with, or does it apply to the people who are accustomed to look at pauperism and Poor Law as a thing naturally before them?—I would say of the better class, no; of the lower class, yes.
45992. That is to say, the better class resent it?—Yes, but the poorer class do not mind it a bit.
45993. Do you think the better class are suffering by reason of not applying so easily for medical relief?—I cannot answer that.
45994. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you find that people go readily into your infirmary?—I am afraid I cannot answer that very well.
45995. (Chairman.) What exactly were you previously to being a relief visitor?—I was teacher in an elementary school in the King's Norton union for eleven years, and in London (North Kensington) for three and a half years.
45996. Then you got in that way indirectly to know a good deal about the parents through the children, I suppose?—I had left the place for a number of years before I went back to King's Norton. I last taught in North Kensington. During that time I used to do a lot of visiting among my own children and recommend them for clothes and food that was given away. That was a little experience for me when I took up this work.
45997. You got your experience in that way?—Yes.

EIGHTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 19th March, 1907.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. ARTHUR WAYNE, called; and Examined.

45998. (Chairman.) How long have you been Superintendent of the Aston Union Cottage Homes?—About eight years.

45999. Therefore you have been there from their commencement?—Yes.

46000. We will take the statement you have prepared as your evidence in chief if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. This union consists of Aston (mainly in the City of Birmingham), Aston Manor, the suburban districts of Erdington and Sutton Coldfield, and the rural districts of Castle Bromwich, Curdworth, Minworth, Water Orton and Wishaw.

2. Practically the whole of the pauperism of this union is in Aston, or Aston Manor.

3. The Aston and Aston Manor population consists principally of small shopkeepers and working men.

4. There is a very large number of ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-fed children, about the streets, in the concert halls, growing up unskilled in labour.

5. The manufacturers and people of substance live in the suburban districts of the union.

6. Work is varied and plentiful. Wages are good. Cost of living is moderately low.

7. The following table compiled in 1901 may be useful:—

Causes of pauperism.
8. Besides intemperance, old age, illness, or accident, the causes of pauperism are:—
(a) Thriftlessness. The workman's savings in the Post Office Bank might be subsidised, to encourage thrift.
(b) Trades Unions and Workmen's Compensation Act.
(c) Improvident marriages.
(d) The number of men not skilled in any trade.
(e) The growing idea in the minds of the people that relief is a kind of old age pension.
(f) Unwillingness on the part of sons and daughters to be saddled with the trouble and expense of maintaining their aged parents.
(g) Illegitimacy.

9. The persons seeking election as guardians in this union (and the remarks apply equally to Birmingham) are generally:—
(a) Retired tradesmen.
(b) Labour representatives.
(c) Professional men.
(d) Ladies.
10. As far as I can judge, the Birmingham and Aston Boards are somewhat ideally constituted, the majority being men who are now sufficiently well off to be able to devote their time to the work of the board, without desiring any reward or consideration for their services, but who have in the past known the burden of the rates.
11. On the other hand there is a large minority of working men representatives who appear to desire the welfare of the people under their charge without respect to the cost, and this minority is sufficiently strong to keep the board progressive.

Suggested Reforms in the Poor Law.

12. The Tramp Question :—

(a) My colleague, Mr. Lloyd, Master of the Aston Union Workhouse and I have had a considerable amount of conversation on this question. We find a large number of men of all ages are wandering about the country, unable or, more probably, unwilling to settle down to work.

(b) I suggest that all men between the ages of twenty and forty-five, who, being in good health, and not bona fide working men seeking employment, are unable to support themselves, or are without fixed abode, should be compulsorily enlisted for a term of years in the Army: that during their term they should be taught some trade, and at the end of their military service they should be assisted to emigrate or to find work: failing which they must return to the Army.

(c) All tramp wards to be abolished, and any men over forty-five years found wandering, unless in search of work as above, be treated in penal settle-ments.

(d) I am also of opinion that the Army is the proper means of dealing with the unskilled out-of-works, on the general principle that every man shall be compelled to serve his country in some useful capacity.

13. Children :—

(a) Children of unfit parents should be taken charge of by the guardians.

(b) In my experience guardians are generally too anxious to get rid of the expense of maintenance of the children, and put pressure on the parents to take their children out, when there can be no other prospect but future pauperism before them.

(c) Children under the care of the guardians should be instructed in handicrafts, and the apprenticing of boys to tradesmen should be encouraged.

(d) "The streets of our city are overrun with ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-educated children" (Birmingham Daily Mail, January 28th, 1907).

All children should be compelled by law to attend evening schools (after leaving the elementary schools), where various trades should be taught, as well as instruction in morality, etc.

At present the children appear to spend their evenings running the streets or attending music halls.

(e) All children of parent or parents known to be leading immoral lives should be emigrated.

The Cottage Homes System.

14. The Aston Union cottage homes consist of :—

Fourteen cottages, each accommodating sixteen children.

Two cottages, each accommodating twelve children.

Lodge or probationary home accommodating sixteen children.

Infirmary accommodating twenty-four children.

Superintendent's house.

Infants' school and chapel.

Swimming bath.

Workshops, laundry, etc.

The total accommodation, exclusive of probationary home and infirmary, is 254.

15. The guardians have recently acquired Witton Hall for the accommodation of children who are frequently in and out.

16. The children, excepting infants, attend the council schools in the neighbourhood.

The elder girls are trained for domestic service.

The boys are instructed in carpentering and painting.

17. The guardians adopt the policy of boarding out and of emigrating such children as are available. The children who are dealt with in the cottage homes are therefore to a large extent of the ins-and-outs class.

18. The following figures will give some idea of the extent of the changes of children during one year, 1906 :—

	Number of children	Number of children
Number of children in the homes, January 1st, 1906	269	dealt with in
" " " admitted during the year	344	Aston union
" " " discharged during the year	382	in one year.
" " " in homes, January 1st, 1907	231

19. Of the 382 children discharged :—

Twenty-four were sent to service.

Twenty-six were sent to Canada.

Six were boarded out.

20. After nearly twenty years' experience of cottage homes work I am convinced that the system is excellent, that the training the children receive fits them for after life, that there are few failures, and that many do really well.

21. I would suggest the following points :—

(a) Girls when of suitable age should be thoroughly trained for domestic service.

(b) Boys should be instructed in some handicraft or be apprenticed to a tradesman, or be trained for the Army, or be sent to sea, according to their physical and mental capacity, with or without the consent of the parents.

(c) Cottage homes should as far as possible be established in suburban districts rather than in the country.

(d) Children should attend the public elementary schools.

(e) It would be advantageous in many cases to deal with children away from their own union. It is a common experience for children who have been trained and sent out to service and who are doing well, to be interfered with by relatives or friends who show themselves eager to take to the children as soon as they become wage earners. Most of the failures among our children are brought about by this cause.

(f) All children should be removed from workhouse life.

22. If the Poor Law system could be nationalised or, at least, that portion dealing with the education of the children, all children under the care of guardians might be placed in cottage homes centres. It would doubtless be advantageous in many instances for guardians to be able to send children to a distant home rather than to maintain their children in the union in which their relatives reside.

46001. (Chairman.) Each of your cottage homes accommodates sixteen children?—Yes.

46002. Do you find that one mother can look after sixteen children?—Quite well.

46003. There have been no complaints?—None at all.

46004. I suppose they are assisted by the elder children?—Yes, the children practically do the work. We have had as many as twenty children in these homes; we were overcrowded some two years ago and my officers did not complain of twenty children being in the homes.

46005. Are the sexes separated?—Yes.

46006. The children go to an elementary school, I suppose?—Yes.

46007. How do they do there, pretty well?—I have no complaints.

46008. I suppose they hardly hold their own with the children outside, they are more backward?—They do, they seem to hold their own fairly well; their educational attainments are not so high as the other children's, but they frequently gain prizes. A number of our children have taken prizes at the elementary school, and the schoolmaster speaks very well of them.

46009. You get rid of them at the age of sixteen?—Yes, or somewhat before.

46010. Am I right in assuming that during those eight years 382 children have passed through?—That is in one year, that is the number of children admitted during last year. We have had about 2,500 children through in the eight years.

46011. A good many of those 382 children who were discharged I suppose were children whose parents were ins-and-outs?—There would be a considerable number.

46012. What proportion would have gone through the whole course. I want to find out what proportion of those who have been through the whole course when they leave get into situations. I see twenty-six went to Canada and twenty-four were sent to service; what happened to the others?—There were 344 children admitted during the year, 382 were discharged, so that to a very large extent it is a floating population, and the great bulk of the children would not go through the whole course. Many of the children are only there for a few days, so that we can hope to do very little with those. The children who stay in a number of years would be instructed in a trade, or in the case of the girls in domestic work, but I think I can answer your question best by saying that during the eight years we have sent out eighty-five children to service; that would give an average of about ten or eleven a year.

46013. And the boys?—That is boys and girls.

After-careers of poor law children. 46014. Do you follow up the careers of the boys and girls who leave your school?—Yes, I can tell you what has become of them, if you would like to know.

46015. If you can shortly summarise it, it would be interesting?—We have sent out eighty-five children during the time I have been at the Aston Cottage Homes, and of those eighty-five the matron and I personally know of sixty-four who are doing well. There are eight that we cannot say are doing well, twelve we have lost sight of, and one has died.

Proportion of permanent children in Aston cottage homes. 46016. Of the number of children at the school you seem to have a very large proportion whose training and tuition is much broken by their parents' interference?—That is so.

46017. What proportion would that constitute? would it constitute half. Would you say that half the children were able to go through a course of four or five years' training?—It is a very small number that really pass through the full training. As I point out by my numbers, practically the whole is a floating population. We have 250 children permanently in the homes, but those 250 children are constantly changing, as may be seen from the fact that 344 were admitted and 382 discharged in this particular year, and each year is about on the same proportion.

46018. How many of those 382 that were discharged would be about fourteen years of age, to put it in that way. Taking those two sets of figures, 344 coming in and 382 going out, that does not convey very much, if it is a floating population it only means you take in so many and so many go out of the school in the course of the year? What we want to get is the effect that the training has had on those who have been there long enough to be affected by it?—The number who would undergo the training?

46019. Yes?—We have about twenty-six children in training, boys and girls constantly.

46020. The great mass of the children who go there do not go through a thorough system of training?—No, they are out before we can train them.

46021. The object therefore of these cottage homes to a certain extent, is nullified by the action of the parents?—That is so.

Need of power of detention of in-and-out children. 46022. Have you ever discussed the advisability or possibility of having powers of detention?—That is a thing that I think is greatly needed, particularly in the case of children of parents who are continually coming in and out. We get numbers of children who remain in the homes for a month or two and then their parents will take them out and stay out a month or two and bring them back again. That happens again and again. I have instances of children who have been in eight or ten times with intervals between. Their education is thoroughly broken up. Some children know very little indeed, their education is absolutely neglected.

46023. What would be your idea of the sort of powers of detention that you would like, or which would be necessary?—I think that all tramp children should be detained, and I should like to see the children of parents who are known to be shifty detained until they have had a sufficient training.

Adoption of children by Aston Guardians. 46024. I suppose there are a certain number of children whom the guardians have adopted?—Yes.

46025. They go right through the whole system?—They do sometimes.

46026. What prevents them?—The object the guardians have in view in adopting children is to enable such children to be boarded out. It follows that these children do not go right through our system. In some instances the children are allowed to get back under their parents' control.

Mr. A. Wayne.

19 Mar. 1907.

46027. What do you mean by the guardians adopting the policy of boarding out and emigrating such children as are available. I understand emigrating, but as to boarding out, do they take them away from these cottage homes?—In the boarding-out system, that is placing children out in homes in the country, the permanent children, the orphans and the deserted, are sent away. Practically the guardians retain in their homes the ins-and-outs class of children.

Boarding out by Aston Guardians of permanent children.

Class of children in Aston Cottage Homes.

46028. That accounts for the limited time that some of these children are there?—Yes, all the permanent children are taken away from us practically.

46029. In your opinion, does not that very much counteract the object of these cottage homes?—In my opinion it does.

46030. Have you any children who are members of a large family, whose mother is a widow and who are taken away from their mother because she is unable to support children. them?—No, I do not think so.

46031. You have not any?—Very few.

46032. That is not a method of relief to which your guardians have recourse?—No.

46033. To sum it up, really you cannot test the efficacy of this system when the training is so perpetually testing broken into by the in-and-out parents taking their children away?—I can only speak as to the success of those that we have trained. The difficulty of the scheme seems to be that after you have trained a boy (this refers to boys not to girls) you have to get him into sufficient wage-earning to find him altogether in lodgings, food and clothing, and there are so few openings for boys to take places where they live in; we have been able to secure one or two places for carpenter boys, and we have actually managed to start them at 10s. a week, and the masters have been pleased and satisfied that the boys have been able to earn that much from the first, but in order to do that it is quite necessary that we should keep those boys until they are sixteen, we cannot do it under.

Difficulty of testing success of cottage-home system.

Need of Guardians maintaining boys until 16.

46034. That is to say the guardians should keep them?—Yes.

46035. You have no home or house belonging to the guardians at which boys whilst earning wages, but unable entirely to support themselves, are lodged?—We have not, the Roman Catholics have a home of that description in Birmingham.

46036. I daresay you have heard there are those homes in other unions?—Yes.

46037. That is very much what you would like to see?—Yes.

Need of poor law working-boys homes.

46038. It is the critical period, I suppose, just those two years?—Very.

46039. And the boys want watching, and a certain amount of help?—Yes.

46040. What trades do you teach them as a rule?—Carpentering, painting and gardening.

Training and employment of poor law boys.

46041. (Mr. Chandler.) Is that the only trade you teach your boys?—That is all.

46042. Have you industrial trainers in carpentering?—Yes, carpentering, painting, paperhanging and gardening.

46043. Are you able to keep a sufficient number under those trainers to get grants?—Only the carpenters.

46044. Do you find that painting and gardening are suitable employments for finding occupations?—I think painting is, and gardening is too, because you have to bear in mind that we get so many children that it would be impossible to bring up as carpenters, which is a skilled trade; we do get some rather feeble-minded children who could be trained for gardening that you could not train to be a carpenter or even a painter.

46045. You have no difficulty in finding them employment?—No, no difficulty in finding them places.

Mr. A. 46046. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) At what age do the girls Wayne. leave you?—They are supposed to leave at fifteen and a half.

19 Mar. 1907.

46047. Have they any time given up specially for training as domestic servants?—The older girls as far as practicable pass through my own house; we give them six months' training under the matron's care.

46048. In all branches of domestic work?—All branches.

46049. Who finds them places?—We have no difficulty, we get so many applications from the residents.

46050. Those would not all be suitable, would they?—
Inquiries are made.

46051. Who is responsible for that?—The matron; she reports to the guardians, and the guardians decide whether the girls are to go.

46052. Do you send them to little generals' places where there are no other servants?—Some of them, yes.

46053. What wage do you begin with?—Half-a-crown is the lowest, and I do not think we have had more than 3s.

46054. Do you make any stipulation as to the raising of the wages after a time and holidays?—We do not find that necessary, the girls generally want to look after themselves pretty quickly; after they have been out twelve months they see that they get their wages put up

46055. Does anyone visit them?—Yes, the matron visits them, and they are also visited by the Girls' Friendly Society people.

46056. Are you in touch with the Girls' Friendly Society?—Yes, my wife is a member of the Girls' Friendly
Society

46057. Do they all become members?—All of them,

46058. Do you know any cases where the girls have come back into the workhouse?—We have had two cases of girls coming back into the workhouse, one was a decidedly feeble-minded girl, and the other was a girl who had got back to her relatives.

46059. Do you know what has become of them now?—
We have got them places again; they are now going on fairly satisfactorily.

46060. (Mr. Gardiner.) In Paragraph 13 (d) of your statement you quote a statement from the Birmingham Daily Mail. Are those children Poor Law children or not?
—Not.

46061. You make that quotation in order to call attention to the way in which the School Attendance Acts are enforced, or the Industrial School Act?—Yes.

46062. You think there is a great deal of pauper population thus created?—I think so, that the children about the streets are not sufficiently looked after. I think that the school authorities might do a great deal more than they do in seeing that the children are properly clothed and properly cleansed, not in the school but in the homes.
I really feel that there are many many cases of distress that the school authorities might come across that they could report to the relief authorities and see that relief was given.

46063. That means you want closer co-operation between the local education authority and the board of guardians?—Yes.

46064. With regard to Paragraph 13 (a), I understand your board does adopt children?—They do.

46065. And then they rescind the resolution?—Sometimes.

46066. Can you give us any instance of what has happened in consequence of rescinding the adoption resolution?—Children are adopted at one meeting of a committee and at the next board meeting I shall find an order to discharge them to their parents; there seems to be an overlapping of the work of the committees, the relief committee will order a man to come and take his children out who have been adopted by my committee; the guardians seem rather to prefer that the children should go than that they should be kept.

46067. From your point of view they are really providing paupers in the future by this system?—Exactly 46068. (Mr. Phelps.) Can a committee adopt children?

—It has to be sanctioned by the board at the next meeting.

46069. Do you mean the board does not confirm their resolution adopting?—The board had confirmed their resolution, but at the next board meeting there was another resolution that the children should be sent away.

46070. (Mr. Gardiner.) With regard to Paragraph 13 (d) again, you want to have compulsory attendance to continuation schools?—Yes.

46071. From your knowledge of the feeling of the board, do you think there is any chance in your neighbourhood of getting support to such a proposal?—It wants to be made compulsory.

46072. Do you think a proposal to make such attendance compulsory would receive any measure of support in your neighbourhood?—I have not thought of that; I could not say

46073. It does not seem to harmonise with the present policy of the guardians?—I do not think it should be a matter for the guardians to decide, but the school authorities.

46074. But the guardians represent public opinion?—
I do not know about that.

46075. With regard to Paragraph 16, do you think painting is a good trade to bring up boys to, seeing it is so seasonal?—It seems to be a very good trade.

46076. You do not find your boys are frequently out of work in the slack season?—I have not found that so.

46077. (Dr. Downes.) Where was your previous experience, I see you have had twenty years' experience?—
Marston Green Cottage Homes, Birmingham.

46078. How long have the Aston Cottage Homes been in operation?—About eight years.

46079. Do you find the construction and equipment of those homes satisfactory for teaching?—Excellent.

46080. You have no complaint to make?—None at all.

46081. What do you think of the numbers in the cottages, have you anything to suggest with regard to that, whether they are satisfactory or whether you would alter it?—I think that the sixteen children are managed very nicely; there were thirty at the Marston Green Homes.

46082. Which do you prefer, a smaller number or the larger number?—Decidedly the smaller number.

46083. Does it make any difference from the point of view of expense of working, have you measured that?— I do not think it does, because although it takes one or two more officers for the number of children, yet at Marston Green a large number of children are kept to an advanced age to help to do the work, whereas we are able to get rid of them as soon as ever they are available for service.

46084. As to the detention, do I understand you would like to see some powers of adoption of the children who are taken in and out?—Yes.

46085. What would you do with the parents of those children, would you take any action in regard to them?—
I have not any sympathy with the parents in the matter.

46086. Might they not ride away gaily and leave the children in charge of the other people?—I do not think so, I think they want the children very badly when they become wage-earners; if they could not have them then that would be sufficient punishment.

46087. Would you care to see any direct punishment for parents who so neglect their children as to drag them in and out of the workhouse, somewhat as in the case of cruelty to children?—It is my opinion that they should be punished.

46088. You think there might be a moral cruelty as well as direct cruelty?—Yes.

46089. With regard to tramp children, would there not be a difficulty with regard to the settlement of those children, would the guardians care to adopt other people's children in that way?—The law of settlement seems to stand in the way of a good many things; I do not see why it should be considered.

46090. Have you noticed the number of tramp children who come under the Poor Law in the return?—I have not, I could not say what proportion would be tramp
children.

46091. It is very small on a single date?—It is not large.

admission of children to the workhouse and cottage homes. 46092. (Mr. Bentham.) Where are the children admitted?—At the workhouse.

46093. Is a special ward set apart for them?—No, they are transferred to the cottage homes immediately after the doctor has examined them.

46094. Do they often stay in for a night?—Only where there might be some danger that there is infection.

46095. And if they stay in, where are they placed in the workhouse?—In the receiving ward.

46096. Are adults admitted into the same receiving ward?—Yes.

46097. Where are remand children sent to; do the guardians take charge of them?—We get very few remand children; they are sent to the homes.

adoption and rescinding of adoption of children by guardians. 46098. Could you tell us how many children the guardians have adopted altogether under the 1899 Act?—I could not.

46099. Is it a common practice to give them back again?—Not a common practice.

46100. It is an exceptional case you have mentioned? Exceptional cases.

proposed migration of children of vicious parents. 46101. In one paragraph you recommend that children of immoral parents should be emigrated?—Yes.

46102. What is the object of that?—To save the children from immoral lives.

46103. That is to prevent their ever getting back again to their parents?—Yes.

46104. Most of the children who are adopted would be children of that class, would they not?—No, most of the children that are adopted are orphans or children who have been deserted by both parents.

46105. But that is not under the Act of 1899 where children are taken from their parents because of the mode of life and the habits of the parents?—Many children are adopted but the guardians avail themselves very little indeed of the clause which deals with children of vicious parentage. My point of view is that these are the children who are most in need of the guardians' protection.

46106. You really do not know whether they have adopted any under that Act?—I could not say that they have.

46107. You rather agree with the cottage homes system, I understand, from your statement?—Yes, I do.

advantage of suburban cottage homes. 46108. But you suggest that they should be rather in a suburban district of the union than in the country?—Yes.

46109. What is your reason for that?—I have had experience of both, I find the children that are sent from a town into the country get rather stolid, slow and sleepy, and that they do not observe and learn from their country surroundings as you might expect.

objections to country cottage homes. 46110. It is too isolated for them?—They are too isolated; then again if they are put out into the country they do not seem to be able to go to the ordinary schools, the public schools. I think that that is the great feature of our present homes, that the children mix with children of another class.

46111. What percentage of children from your home will there be in the schools which they attend at present?—We send our children to four different schools, so it is not very large, one school would probably have twenty per cent. of our children, but that is the largest proportion.

46112. You really feel that the cottage home plan in the country is too much of an isolated institutional system?—I do.

46113. Have you thought about the scattered home system at all?—Yes.

objections to scattered homes. 46114. Have you any opinion upon it?—Yes, I do not agree with the scattered home principle at all.

46115. You approve of the cottage homes?—I do.

429—IV.

46116. When boys are ready to go to situations, can you always find them situations without a premium and without a weekly allowance?—We have given no premium as yet. At the present time we have one boy that it is decided shall have a premium paid, but that is on account of his being a cripple. Mr. A. Wayne. 19 Mar. 1907.

46117. Is any weekly allowance made to boys in situations?—None at all. Situations for poor law boys.

46118. You have managed to get them all out so far?—Yes.

46119. (Mr. Lansbury.) I notice you say the trade unions and the Workmen's Compensation Act are responsible for pauperism. Can you tell us exactly what you mean by that?—I think trade unions are responsible for pauperism to some extent, because we find that workmen who may not be quick, the class of people that we have to deal with in the workhouse, are somewhat dull and slow and cannot work as well as an ordinary workman, and in times of slackness of trade they have to go to the wall. Alleged responsibility of trades unions for pauperism.

46120. Would you suggest that the men who are quick and active and alert should be displaced for the purpose of putting to work those who are not?—I do not suggest that.

46121. How are the trade unions responsible?—If the men are not allowed to work and earn what they can earn, they have to fall out of employment.

46122. Do you suggest that the more efficient should give place to those who are less efficient?—I think they should be allowed to earn as much as they could.

46123. And so displace the efficient?—Not to displace anybody.

46124. Do you suggest there is some work going undone which these less efficient men could do?—I think so.

46125. You think there are employers who are wanting men in periods of depression and cannot get them?—I think there is work for every man.

46126. You could not give us any evidence of that?—I am afraid not.

46127. It is merely an opinion?—That is merely an opinion.

46128. About the Workmen's Compensation Act, have you any evidence that that has created paupers?—I have no evidence, I came to that conclusion through my conversation with my colleague, Mr. Lloyd, who is the master of the house, and it seems to us that that has a great deal to do with this pauperism. Workmen's Compensation Act as a cause of pauperism.

46129. You have not any evidence?—We only have the evidence of men, somewhat aged men, who cannot get employment, many aged men the masters will not employ, they tell them they are too old, they are not careful enough, they are afraid they would injure themselves.

46130. Have you any evidence as to the number of those?—I could not say, it is hardly my department.

46131. You make the statement here, and I want to know on what you base it; it is merely a conversation between you and the master of the workhouse?—Yes.

46132. Is that the same with regard to illegitimacy?—No. Illegitimacy as a cause of pauperism.

46133. What is the proportion of children under the charge of the Aston guardians that are illegitimate?—I should think I have fifty illegitimate children.

46134. Out of how many?—Out of my 250.

46135. You make a suggestion here that men between twenty and forty-five in good health and not bona fide workmen should be compelled to enlist. Can you give us any figures to show how many of the men in Aston workhouse are really able-bodied?—There are no able-bodied. Absence of able-bodied in Aston workhouse.

46136. In the sense that a man could enlist?—There are no able-bodied in the Aston workhouse.

46137. There are none?—No.

46138. Can you give us any information as to those whom you are referring to here?—I was referring particularly to tramps. Proposed compulsory enlistment for able-bodied tramps.

- Mr. A. Wayne. 46139. Have you any evidence as to how many of these are able-bodied?—I have no direct evidence, I can only speak from observation. I find there are about 300 tramps a week passing through the Aston workhouse, and I see them daily; there appears to be a great many of them that are strong active men.
- Old soldiers becoming tramps. 46140. Have you any opinion as to how many of them are old soldiers, discharged for various reasons?—I have not any information, I know many of them are old soldiers.
- Army enlistment for the unemployed. 46141. Later on you make a suggestion for the unskilled out-of-works, that they should go to the Army; is that married men you are speaking of there?—If they will not work.
46142. It is not a question of will not work, I understand they are unskilled out-of-works. Do you suggest that the people who are out of work are people who will not work?—Not at all, my meaning is in case a man will not work he should be made to work.
- Number of poor law children apprenticed in Aston union. 46143. By going into the Army. Now about apprenticing children. Do you apprentice all your boys at Aston?—We have apprenticed a few only.
46144. Could you tell me the number you have apprenticed?—I should say nine.
46145. In how long a time?—Since I have been at the homes, eight years,
- Training and employment of poor law boys. 46146. What do you do with the rest of them?—We have sent boys out as carpenters.
46147. Boys you have trained yourself?—Yes.
46148. They would not be carpenters full blown, would they; what age would you send them out?—About sixteen.
46149. Do you suggest they are complete carpenters by then?—They are sufficiently trained to get the money that is paid them; I said just now that they got 10s. a week.
46150. The point I want to make is that there are plenty of skilled people unemployed now; I suppose you are aware of that, even although you think there is work for everybody; in the trades unions in the skilled trades, there is a percentage of people out of work?—I cannot say, it may be so, I do not know.
- Proposed emigration for children of vicious parents. 46151. As to emigrating the children of immoral parents, can you give us the percentage of those?—I have not kept records of these, I had no idea these questions would ever be useful, so I did not keep a record, but cases are frequently arising.
- Training of poor law girls for service. 46152. (Mr. Phelps.) When the girls are leaving to go to service, do they go straight from the homes into service?—Yes.
46153. You have not anything in the way of a home where they would be trained specially for service?—Only in the matron's house.
46154. That accommodates what?—We take two or three at a time.
46155. Do you think there is room for a home for training girls?—I do not.
46156. You do not think there are enough girls to make it worth while?—No.
- Supervision of poor law girls first in service. 46157. When girls are sent into places, what supervision have you of them?—They are visited by the matron and the Girls' Friendly Society; they are all made members of the Girls' Friendly Society.
46158. Is the Girls' Friendly Society strong in Birmingham?—Very strong.
46159. They have a good supply of visitors?—Yes.
46160. You are quite happy about the way the girls are looked after?—Quite.
- Communication between Poor Law and poor law boys first out to work. 46161. With regard to the boys, supposing that you put a boy out, when the boys leave you, you say they go to work in this way and in that way, you keep up some communication with them?—Yes.
46162. You correspond with them?—Yes.
46163. Do they ever come back for a holiday?—They frequently come to visit us.
46164. Are you allowed to put them up for a night?—Yes, a week sometimes.
46165. What is the guardians' rule about that?—The Attitude of Guardians rather like the children to come back. towards ex-poor law children.
46166. There is a day in the year is there not, when prizes are given away and they come in them?—Yes, we have a little outing once a year to Sutton, to the Park, and all the old scholars are invited; the guardians like to see them there.
46167. Supposing that a boy leaves you and goes to a place, and he falls out of his place within two years, would he come back to you to start again?—If he were not over eighteen we should take him back.
46168. You mean you would take him back as an inmate?—Just for a time, while we found him another place.
46169. But not if he was over eighteen?—No.
46170. Is there a rule on that subject?—I suppose the general rule, that we must not have children over eighteen, that is the limit?
46171. They are then entered again and passed through the books as being inmates?—Yes, and would be reported to the guardians.
46172. They do not come back to you so to speak as a natural home to which they return in the absence of employment?—They would come back naturally as to their home.
46173. Do you know at all what proportion of the children who come into the hands of the guardians, come to you, and what proportion are emigrated or boarded out?—All the children come to me, and they are emigrated or boarded out afterwards.
- Proportion of Aston poor law children boarded-out and emigrated. 46174. That is to say they come to you first; how long do they stay before they are distributed?—The children that are boarded out and that are emigrated are the permanent children; in the case of emigration they would be with me any time during the year until the next batch were sent. They send children once a year, and such children as pass the doctor would be emigrated, and the others if they do not pass the doctor become permanent children; we have a few, unless they manage to be boarded out.
46175. Last year you admitted during the year 344 children?—Yes.
46176. What sort of proportion of those would be emigrated?—We emigrated twenty-six in that year.
46177. What sort of proportion would be boarded out?—Six were boarded out.
46178. The 382 children discharged would include the children who had served their full time and were going out into places and so forth?—Yes.
46179. Therefore of the whole number who joined you, the 344, thirty-two were not left permanently in the home; is that really what it comes to?—I do not quite follow you.
46180. Do you think you could get us some figures out with regard to that?—Would you mind repeating your point, I do not quite gather what you want.
46181. Of the children who come to you in the course of the year what proportion are left with you, what proportion are boarded out, and what proportion are emigrated?—Of the whole of the children admitted during one year?
46182. Yes when I say the whole of the children admitted, I do not mean the whole of the admissions, but the whole of the individuals admitted. I do not want a child counted ten times over who has come in and out; taking the children who actually join you in the year, what proportion are emigrated, and what proportion are boarded out?—You want to know the proportion of children that we have had under our charge who are boarded out, and how many are emigrated.
46183. Yes, if you will put that in?—I will certainly. (See Appendix No. XXIII. (A).)
46184. (Mr. Booth.) The word "permanent" that you have just made use of may be a cause of confusion. I think you used the word "permanent" to mean the class of children over whom the guardians have a control, did you not?—Yes.
46185. In whatever way they exercise it?—Yes.

46186. Whereas we have rather been using the term 'permanent' as meaning those who were permanently in your institution, which evidently is a different thing. The children who are boarded out are some of the most permanent from the point of view of the guardians?—Those are the permanents.

46187. But it was rather meant from the point of view of your homes?—I mean children who would be boarded out, or sent to Canada would be permanent.

46188. The thing we are trying to get at is how many children you have so permanently under your control as to influence their lives. The permanency which passes them on to other methods of treatment is outside that view?—Yes.

46189. It is that point of view which I think we want the statistics for, what effect the institution has over the children, and how many of them have remained permanently under that influence?—I think I can answer that question fairly accurately. I think this will meet your point, that of the children to-day in the homes 60 per cent. will be what I should call permanent children.

46190. Under the permanent influence of the homes?—Yes, those 60 per cent. are permanent children as far as I know, whether the guardians will send them away to Canada next year or not, I do not know, or board them out.

46191. (Mr. Phelps.) How should you distribute the 40 per cent.?—Floating population.

46192. (Mr. Booth.) That is the ins-and-outs class?—Yes.

46193. Now with regard to the recently acquired premises at Witton Hall, that is quite recent?—Yes, quite recent.

46194. It is possible with an institution of that sort to relieve yourself entirely of the 40 per cent. you have just spoken of?—That was the intention of the guardians.

46195. Do you approve of that?—Yes.

46196. Is the accommodation at Witton Hall sufficient to accommodate the whole of the ins-and-outs class?—I think so.

46197. How are they selected? Do you wait and see whether they are ins-and-outs?—There is some difficulty there, but we know so many of the children are ins-and-outs and have been in and out previously, we know they will be in and out again directly and we get a large number of the children whose parents are convicted who we know will only be in for a month or two months.

46198. It is as to those children, whom we may call the Witton Hall children, if the guardians had the right to take them from the parents, to adopt them by compulsion, you think the parents would rather dislike to lose them than wish to lose them?—I do.

46199. Are the boarded-out children boarded out within the union or outside?—Outside.

46200. Those boarded-out children either have no parents or the connection is to be broken entirely?—Yes.

46201. The Witton Hall figures will entirely alter the complexion of the figures as to the permanents in your institution?—We take them together as one institution.

46202. If your institution is relieved of those who could be sent to Witton Hall, there would be a much larger proportion of those I have called permanent, in fact, they would all be permanent in a sense?—Exactly.

46203. With regard to the ages, are all ages from infants upwards equally liable to be in and out?—Probably not quite, I think that more children of thirteen or fourteen years of age are taken in and out.

46204. The little ones are more permanent?—Yes.

46205. Do you separate them in the homes according to whether they are more permanent or not?—We had not done so until we had Witton Hall, now we separate them by that means.

46206. Otherwise you filled up whatever vacancies there were?—We have been obliged to do so.

46207. Are they mixed as to ages in the Homes?—Yes.

46208. And as to sexes?—No.

46209. And ins-and-outs mixed with all the rest?—Yes.

46210. Is the object of preferring the boarding out because it is cheaper or are there other reasons?—I think the guardians think it is cheaper. I think it is dearer.

46211. Is it because they think in certain cases they are more suitably treated in that way?—I do not think so. The boarding-out system was taken up by the guardians long enough before the cottage homes system was commenced and they do not seem to commence to drop it. I rather fancy that they are afraid that pauperism will extend to such an extent in Aston that it is necessary to carry on the boarding-out system to save bricks and mortar.

46212. Is it with a view to economy?—In the building, I think.

46213. When you speak of few failures in Paragraph 20, you refer, I suppose, only to those who have been completely through the course?—Yes.

46214. Why do you object to the scattered homes system?—I do not think there is sufficient supervision, and I object to children, boys and girls, being brought up together in the same home.

46215. Have you had experience of it?—I know they are bad enough when they are kept apart.

46216. Have you had experience of the scattered homes system?—I have heard a good deal about it, I know nothing practically.

46217. (Chairman.) Has there been a change in policy as regards boarding out and emigrating children in the last few years?—Yes, the emigration is a change of policy.

46218. Am I right in assuming that one set of guardians built these schools with a view of making them cottage homes and another set of guardians have developed the emigration system since the homes have been built?—Yes.

The Rev. FREDERIC LEWIS DONALDSON, called; and Examined.

46219. (Chairman.) You are Vicar of St. Mark's, Leicester?—I am.

46220. You have been good enough to prepare a statement which we will take as your evidence in chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. 1884-6, Assistant Curate of St. Nicholas Cole, Abbey, E.C.; 1886-9 (jointly), Assistant Curate of St. Peter's, Piccadilly Circus, and St. Philip's, Regent Street; 1889-1895, Assistant Curate of St. John's, Hammersmith, W.; 1895-6, Rector of Nailstone, Leicestershire; 1896-1907, Vicar of St. Mark's, Leicester.

EXPERIENCE.

2. Twenty-two years' intimate contact with the poor, a thorough knowledge of them and their life; in London, provinces, and the country, e.g.:—

(1) In the City of London, among the poor of St. Bartholomew's-the-Great, in which parish I worked while nominally curate of St. Nicholas Cole Abbey.

(2) Among the poor of the back of Regent Street, London, and St. Peter's, Piccadilly Circus, W.

(3) Among the West London poor at Hammersmith.

(4) For two years in a Leicestershire village.

(5) For ten years in the large working class and poor parish of St. Mark's, Leicester, population of 15,000 souls.

OPERATIONS AND EFFECTS OF CHIEF CHARITIES IN LEICESTER.

3. The local ancient "charities," such as those of Sutton or St. Margaret's, or Trinity Hospital, are carefully administered so far as my knowledge goes, but their operations are of a most limited kind, and do not touch anything beyond the merest fringe of even deserving cases.

Limited local charities in Leicester.

Rev. F. L.
Donaldson.

THE RESPECTIVE EFFECT ON THE RECIPIENTS OF CHARITY AND POOR-LAW OUT-RELIEF.

(a) Charity.

19 Mar. 1907.

Infinitesimal amount of charity in Leicester and consequent small demoralising effect thereof.

4. The charity of the town is, as a rule, carefully done, but it is small compared with the mass of normal poverty, and small also compared with even abnormal poverty. The parochial clergy of the Church of England all have a "poor fund" in connection with their work. Yet the amount we administer is trifling compared with the numberless deserving cases we know. In my case, priest-in-charge of 15,000 to 16,000 souls, the largest purely working class parish in Leicester, I have under 15s. a week to give away to the poor.

5. In my opinion, after twenty years' work in parishes of this kind, the "demoralising effects" of "charity" talked about is positively very small. While, on the other hand, the amounts given away are scarcely ever enough to "set people on their feet." They can only as a rule soften the asperities of affliction.

(b) Poor Law Relief.

Necessity of poor law relief.

6. This is absolutely essential. Any undue restriction of it would be cruelty. "Careful administration" should mean careful administration and not merely "saving the rates."

Need of more adequate out-relief.

7. My experience indicates that much more outdoor relief is needed to save homes at times of crisis. Homes are often lost and Poor Law expenses ultimately increased, by a parsimonious outdoor relief.

Value of out-relief.

8. I conclude by: (1) testifying to the general truth that outdoor relief has saved many homes, and prevented many broken hearts (I suppose this latter should be a consideration?); and (2) by saying that though unwisely administered it may harm certain recipients, yet this is an argument for careful administration rather than for restriction. For carefully administered out-door relief is a most precious boon to the deserving poor at times of crisis; and to the sick and aged poor at all times

A Criticism of Poor Law Methods.

Lack of kindliness in poor law methods.

9. It is not sufficiently humane, by which word I do not mean careless, but kindly, courteous and considerate. The poor are not treated well :—

Alleged harsh manners of Guardians, officers, and nurses to paupers.

(a) At the "board" they are often spoken to harshly, rudely, sometimes brutally.

(b) The officers, visiting and at institutions, are often rough and uncivil, and even, not infrequently, harsh in manner and method. There are exceptions (many), but the general tone is "inimical" to the poor.

(c) The workhouse and its infirmaries nurses are often unkind and even brutal to the sick and aged poor. In numberless ways, which could scarcely be tabulated, the poor are treated not as the guests in the guest-house of the community, but as quasi-prisoners. I could give many instances of this. Yet if I visit the workhouse or its infirmary the nurses appear kindness itself. Only the poor know the facts.

Lack of discrimination in poor law methods.

10. It is not sufficiently intelligent. The administration of the Poor Law takes place without knowing the poor—the inner life of the poor is unknown territory to most of the (a) guardians; (b) officers.

When our parishioners "come under" the Poor Law, this fact—want of "intelligence" in the Poor Law—at once emerges. The people are treated by a "process" which does not know their history, heredity, struggles, pains and tragedies.

Co-operation between Charity and the Poor Law.

Question of extending co-operation between charity and poor law.

11. I am not sanguine of the probability of extending any co-operation now existing. But if cases of poor relief could be officially notified to the parochial clergy and other social workers, much good might result.

Possibility of substituting Charity for Out-relief.

Impossibility of substituting charity for out-relief.

12. I regard this as impossible. The uncertain nature of "charity" renders it, as the base from which treatment of poverty is to proceed, altogether too insecure.

At the best, "charity" can only be regarded as supplementary to that community effort which is represented by the "Poor Law relief."

Friendly Societies.

13. It is not possible to provide for old age pensions by friendly societies. It by no means follows that the poor, outside friendly societies, have made no effort to "help themselves." In very many—nay, innumerable—cases people are too poor to be able to enter friendly societies. Yet they may be struggling all their lives to earn a livelihood. On what ground can these be ignored in any national pension scheme?

14. It is my deliberate judgment that any national pension scheme must be independent of all existing corporations.

Unemployment.

15. Numbers, etc.—These you will secure from the Numbers Distress Committee. Up to December last 2,061 Leicester men had registered, affecting (say) 7,000 souls, out of a population of 220,000. But the Distress Committee figures do not represent the whole facts.

Note.—Many men will not register. Many of my parishioners, out of work, especially of the "better sort," will not go near the Distress Committee :—

(1) Because they detest ("dislike" is too mild a term) "investigation."

(2) Because the Distress Committee have done so little to help the workless.

16. Overtime—There is a great deal of this in Leicester, mainly periodic, but some is chronic.

Causes of Unemployment.

17. The main causes of unemployment are :—

(a) New machinery in boot and shoe and hosiery trades.

(b) Decay of village life in Leicestershire; decay of agriculture in Leicestershire.

(c) Employment of women and girls, and of lads in lieu of men.

(d) The overwork of many causes the worklessness of some.

Unemployment—Its Effects.

18. The unemployed of one decade are the "unemployable" of another. The workless citizen rapidly becomes degenerate by the intense strain: (a) upon physique; upon (b) upon character. His position taken from him, his prestige destroyed, his manhood insulted (as he deems it) by "investigation" and the labour "test," his physique weakened by want of nourishment, he tends rapidly to become the ne'er-do-well, and degenerates into the "wastrel."

19. Chronic unemployment breaks up many homes.

20. Injures women and children, and indirectly affects maternity and infantile mortality.

21. Increases crime.

22. Tends to weaken the religious and spiritual feelings.

Unemployment—Remedies

23. Temporary.—Work should be provided by municipalities to all willing to work at a fixed wage, determinable every year.

To this end :—

(a) The municipality to have greater powers to secure land.

(b) Farm colonies to be established.

(c) Money to be found by taxation of ground values, aided by Government grants from Imperial Exchequer.

(d) Permanent.—Afforestation should be seriously undertaken in England; and other works, which, though remunerative ultimately, are beyond private scope, should be undertaken by Government.

(e) Trade unions should be assisted by Government in providing for their own members.

(f) Reforms of rural life, involving reform of land laws

(g) Abolition of child labour.

(h) Raising of school age.

(i) Restriction of women labour, and of married women in particular.

(j) Restriction of the hours of labour in many trades.

(k) Thousands are now over-worked, while thousands are unemployed.

(l) Abolition of sweated labour and reform of the "sweated industries."

(m) A "living" wage to be paid to men and women.

(n) Some emigration encouraged.

Impossibility of providing old-age pensions by friendly societies.

Extent of overtime work in Leicester.

19 Mar. 1907.

Alleged harsh conduct of Guardians and poor law officers to the poor.

24. The results of the Unemployed Workmen's Act are wholly inadequate; and will remain so while voluntary subscriptions for working expenses remain as the condition upon which national help depends.

46221. (Chairman.) From your statement I gather that you have had many years' experience of the poor in various parts of England, but you have never been a Poor Law guardian?—That is so.

46222. I will first deal with the question of charity, there is very little endowed charity apparently in Leicester?—Very little.

46223. How is it that you have so small a sum to give away as 15s. a week in so large a parish?—The segregation of classes, by which well-to-do middle class people are segregated into a suburb the other side of the centre of the town, living practically without knowledge of the poor except in certain instances.

46224. I suppose your parish consists mainly of poor people?—Entirely working class and very poor.

46225. To take this test, out of the 15,000 or 16,000 people there would be very few who had a servant?—I should think outside the main road shopkeepers, some of whom keep a little girl servant, not more than three people, the doctor, myself and another.

46226. Is it in the centre of Leicester?—It is part of the real town of Leicester, it is well in, ten minutes from the actual centre.

46227. Surrounded by buildings on all sides?—Absolutely.

46228. It strikes me as a small sum, because that particular class, although they may be poor, are very generous. Perhaps you do not appeal to them?—They are generous in church, but the upkeep of the parochial organisations takes all their offerings; they have none to give away over that to the poor fund.

46229. After the upkeep of your parochial organisations, you have only 15s. ?—Yes.

46230. I meant they were generous in the broad sense?—They are exceedingly kind to one another, but that does not touch my finances.

46231. You do not think that charity demoralises, but investigation should precede, should it not, the granting of money in charity?—Certainly.

46232. Assuming that there were endowed charities and assuming they were carelessly conducted, their effect might be just as demoralising as maladministration of the Poor Law?—Quite, but may I say I think they are very carefully done; that is, I find that if a case I recommend is lucky enough to be chosen they are the best as a rule.

46233. Are there any endowed charities in Leicester?—Yes.

46234. Considerable?—Not in proportion to the poverty.

46235. As regards the Poor Law, you are rather a severe critic of the methods and officers of the Poor Law?—Yes.

46236. You agree with a careful administration?—Decidedly.

46237. But what I understand you to mean is that each case should be judged on its merits, and that merely saving the rates should not be the one consideration?—Yes.

46238. With regard to out-door relief, you are generally in favour of it?—Yes.

46239. It has been suggested to us by various witnesses that where out-door relief is very lax, or lax, there is a tendency not to investigate, and to give a small sum all round. There are others again who hold that the investigation should be thorough, and where the relief is given the relief should be adequate?—I am in favour of the second decidedly.

46240. Investigation and adequacy?—Yes.

46241. You make some rather serious reflections on the manner in which the Poor Law is administered?—Yes.

46242. Are your observations based on your own personal knowledge or is it rather hearsay?—They are based upon what one may call the general experience of twenty years' residence amongst the poor; a case will be sent up to the board—I am not, of course, present at the board, I have never been a Poor Law guardian, but I receive the results of that afterwards through the mission sister, or through the poor themselves, and that has been going on now for twenty years, so I get a general impression that the board is in many cases apt to look upon the person before them as "a case" rather than as a person.

46243. Are complaints made to you by individuals as to the manner in which they have been treated?—Yes, there have been frequently in the course of my life.

46244. You have worked a great deal amongst the poor and the destitute; there, of course, always will be and must necessarily be under such circumstances a certain amount of imposture; would you say that the people who complain to you were respectable reliable people, or were they people who were rather, to use a vulgar expression, apt to try it on?—Decidedly, I think it is the honest and honourable poor who frequently complain; the impostors, of course, would be known to us who live amongst the people; as a rule they would be known.

46245. What is your idea of the functions of a Poor Law official, a Poor Law guardian? Do you look upon the funds at their disposal as a great sort of charity upon which they can draw as much as they like, or do you regard them rather as trustees who have to administer a fund and upon whom the obligation of careful investigation is imposed before they can make any charge on that fund?—I regard them as trustees of the funds of the township, but also as our representatives to take care of our poor. I do not think one destroys the other, they should act in a double function, on the one side as trustees of the funds decidedly, but on the other hand as guardians of the poor, we commit our trust to them.

46246. There is an expression which you use in your statement which it seemed to me perhaps might indicate what your point was on the subject. You say the poor are treated not in the guest chamber of the community. The guest in a guest chamber hardly describes, does it, the position of a person who applies for relief?—I am speaking there, of course, of those who are inside.

46247. So I understand?—There I think there should be, except in the case of that hopeless set to which the last witness was referring, the regular tramp, an element of the town receiving guests who no longer are able to provide for themselves. I take that view.

46248. Of course, the idea of hospitality is that the guest should have something better, if possible, than the host. You would hardly lay that down. The principle which underlies the Poor Law is that the lot of him who comes to the Poor Law for assistance should not be better than the lot of him who can support himself?—I would not lay that down. I think it would be straining my term perhaps to mean more than I meant it to convey, but I think there should be a decidedly greater element of good feeling towards the poor than there is in most poor-house systems.

46249. The relieving officers and others, I assume, think that they must make their methods to a certain extent deterrent, but you would imply that they go too far?—It depends vastly upon the individual, in the case of the relieving officer, for instance, although I say there are many exceptions, you do decidedly get men whose manner becomes "after years of work of that kind" harsh, and what you termed deterrent, which is fearfully painful to the deserving poor.

46250. Would you go so far as to say that in your parish there was a general feeling that the poor were harshly treated?—Oh, yes, a most emphatic and deep feeling, the measure of which I think is scarcely known except by those who live and work amongst them.

46251. How does this feeling exhibit itself, in conversation with you?—Yes, it covers the whole of my manhood practically now, it exists in the form of the most pitiable struggles unto the very last shred before they will accept or seek for any connection with the Poor Law. That is the bulk of the poor. There are, of course, people who are habituated to it, but they are in a small minority.

Rev. F. L. Donaldson.

46252. In Leicester you would say there is a resolute struggle made by the more respectable poor to avoid applying to or in any way coming upon the poor rates for relief?—Decidedly, to a point which is my constant amazement.

Alleged harsh treatment of the sick in Leicester Infirmary.

46253. You seem to think that in the infirmaries the sick are not properly treated?—I say that, yes. There are very many cases where, having awkward customers to deal with and there being no separation in our Poor Law system at present between these two great classes, the methods necessary for the very worst sort of people are more or less apt to be applied to the others, and that causes, of course, exceeding great pain and sorrow.

46254. Do you know any workhouses or infirmaries well. Do you know Leicester workhouse well?—Yes, I have known them all more or less since I have been ordained.

Lack of classification in Leicester Workhouse.

46255. There is very little classification in Leicester?—Very little, and you get, of course, the mixing up of these people, and the officers no doubt at times have to receive very bad language and perhaps are tempted to return it, but when they apply that to people who are of a different sort altogether, it becomes a tragedy.

46256. I assume that you would agree that classification might be pushed very much further?—Very much.

46257. On the other hand, I think perhaps you would not deny that there was too much laxity in the workhouse with regard to the able-bodied?—I have read so, but that is not my experience.

46258. You are a constant visitor there?—I go there and to the infirmary.

Alleged harsh treatment of the sick in Leicester Infirmary

46259. With regard to the infirmary, do you think that in consequence of the want of classification of people of good character and bad character, the treatment of the respectable poor is harsh?—Frequently, that is, a habit is set up in the officials which is sometimes very painful indeed to the better class of which we are now speaking.

46260. Would you apply that to the infirmary at Leicester?—You mean the Poor Law infirmary?

46261. Yes?—I should say there is frequently very harsh treatment on the part of the nurses which never comes to the ears of the responsible head officials.

46262. I should have thought that the infirmary at Leicester was very well managed?—It is exceedingly, but it belongs to the "nature of the beast," as we used to say at school. I mean the fact that there is this mixing up of people does create in the officials, as I have said before, a method and a manner towards their patients which I do not think is justified in the case of the larger part of the poor.

46263. Let us come to the question of the infirmary; surely if you had any personal knowledge that any nurse or any set of individuals were treating the sick harshly, it would be your business to report it to the matron?—It is exceedingly difficult, the harshness might be made more harsh afterwards. If it were something criminal, something very serious, then no doubt it would be. But there are these innumerable small things which constitute daily life, in regard to which it is better to be silent although you may grieve that it goes on.

46264. You make a very definite charge here, that the nurses are often unkind and even brutal to the sick and aged poor?—May I give instances?

46265. Yes, I think you had better?—Take this one, an aged person is in the bath, they are not allowed to get out until the nurse returns, she may be called away, perhaps she does not come back for a long time, the aged person is then roughly and harshly spoken to if, having remained in the bath much longer than perhaps she ought to do, she ventures to get out, and is pushed back into it with a manner and method that I say is inhumane, but it is not a great criminal offence for which I can move the town of Leicester to take action, or do more than request the Mission Sister from whom I get the information to mention it if she can get an opportunity. I give that as an illustration.

46266. You did not see the woman pushed back?—No, but when a thing is repeated on and off through twenty years to one, these little things constantly recurring, one gets a general impression and it is the general impression that I give in my evidence.

46267. There is a reason for old people not being allowed to get out of the baths?—Decidedly.

Alleged harsh treatment of the sick in Leicester Infirmary.

46268. You would hardly say that harsh language or a pushing of a person having a bath would constitute what you would call brutal treatment?—I should say in the case of an old person of sensibility of life and feeling I should stick to the term, decidedly.

46269. Passing on, you are not sanguine of any co-operation between charity and the Poor Law being made effective?—No.

Difficulty to co-operation between charity and the poor law.

46270. Why not?—Because we are all so divided into our several circles, church, nonconformist, secularist, and the official law, and because it has been tried and tried over and over again.

46271. I will admit the difficulty with regard to the religious charities, but surely it would be possible to secure co-ordination and co-operation amongst the secular charities?—Yes, that might be, it would have to be almost by law I think, but still that might be.

46272. Assuming you are right in your contention that there is a roughness or even brutality in Poor Law methods, surely the great object should be to try and combine it with methods and with a system which would be kinder and more gentle, such as charity?—Yes.

46273. You raise this objection because you think from your experience as a clergyman and so on that there would be great difficulty in getting religious charities to combine?—Yes, I think the combination would work perhaps for a time and then die out again.

46274. Outside that you do not see any great difficulty?—No, I thought the question meant the religious organisations and those sort of things.

Industrial changes a cause of unemployment in Leicester.

46275. As regards unemployment, Leicester has been through a considerable industrial change, if not revolution, in the shape of the introduction of machinery into the boot factories?—Yes.

46276. Is that, in your judgment, the main cause of the recent distress?—A large contributing cause.

46277. Have you many of the men who were displaced in your parish?—Yes, our fair proportion.

Age of the unemployed.

46278. Would they be elderly men?—No, not necessarily.

46279. Is it a short life trade, the boot trade?—It is, and they would tend to be men towards the older age for the obvious reason that the employers prefer the younger men; but still the younger men are amongst them.

46280. You have taken a great interest in this question, have you not?—A very great interest.

Unadaptability of modern workmen.

46281. It is alleged that the men get such specialists in their particular trade, or branch of a trade, that it is very difficult for them after a certain time of life to turn their hands profitably to anything else. Is that your experience?—Yes.

46282. Left to their own resources they feel helpless and drift without a strong influence to assist them?—Yes, if that influence were there in some public form they might make very useful citizens in other directions, but with their profession taken from them and left as they are, mainly to themselves, now they do drift downwards.

Depression in building trades a cause of unemployment.

46283. Is there any other peculiar industrial cause which has contributed to the distress; it has been alleged that the building trade is one?—Yes, that is one in Leicester and I believe in other places. I certainly have men out of my own parish who have tramped into Lancashire in the building trade.

46284. The building trade is very active sometimes, and there has been a contraction?—Yes, that is so.

46285. Has not the result in one sense been beneficial to Leicester, that there is a larger number of houses now which are unoccupied and which can be obtained for a lower rental than before?—Many of them are empty.

46286. Has that brought down the general price of lodging or housing in Leicester?—Yes, it has tended a little in that direction for we are overbuilt on the outskirts.

46287. Is the tendency of the population to go out?—The new tramway scheme will tend in that direction now.

46288. I suppose you would agree that irregularity of employment is a great social evil?—Very serious indeed.

46289. Would you say employment in Leicester is less regular now than it was?—I can only speak for ten years, but I should not say so.

46290. Has any considerable proportion of those who were displaced by machinery got work now?—The majority have not.

46291. I suppose a certain number have been taken back into the factories now that they are re-organised; a certain number have gone back to work, who were temporarily displaced?—A certain number, but the mass of men displaced by machinery are still out—the latest is the new clicking machine.

46292. It has been alleged that the methods of relief adopted in Leicester were such as to attract people from outside, and that even during the worst periods of the distress in Leicester people flocked in, so much that a large proportion of the persons who applied to the distress committee were persons of less than three years' residence in Leicester. Have you ever heard that statement?—Yes, I have heard it, but it is false, it is inaccurate.

46293. There are the figures of the persons who applied?—The figures I have from the distress committee do not bear that out.

46294. I do not want to involve you in a mass of figures, but have you a statement there that you could give us?—I lectured on the subject and went to a distress committee official in December and got out the figures bearing upon that.

46295. Have you the figures there?—Yes, I have them here. Of the 2,061 registered when I called for the figures at the end of last year 194 had been in Leicester over two years, 151 over three, 138 over four and 1,324 over five, and the others many years; practically proving that they were nearly all citizens of Leicester.

46296. 350 would be within the three year term?—Yes, they would be.

46297. I think the figures that we had were of the year previous and I think the proportions was larger?—My own experience would be that the mass of these men are men of our own town, there is an element, no doubt, of the others.

46298. Would you say your parish is about the poorest in Leicester?—It is the largest purely working class parish in the town and contains on the town side of it the doss-houses of Leicester.

46299. (Mr. Bentham.) Were those statements as to the number of years residence verified by investigation or were they the statements of the applicants?—I am not able to answer that.

46300. (Chairman.) Now we come to what is perhaps the most practical part of your evidence, namely, the suggested remedies. Would you wish the Poor Law to be continued to be administered by a specially elected body or would you transfer it to the council?—Transfer it decidedly.

46301. Have you any views on medical relief? Would you dissociate medical relief from the Poor Law?—Yes, I would.

46302. And make it free?—Yes.

46303. Or would you charge according to a man's ability?—No.

46304. You would make it practically free?—Yes, I would on communal grounds.

46305. You would like to give work to all who are willing to work at a fixed wage determinable every year, this work to be provided by the municipalities?—Yes.

46306. Would you put the people who got work from municipalities on the same footing as regards wages as those who were getting private employment?—I would rather put it the other way, that I strongly object to a sweated wage being paid by the town.

46307. Unless you make the conditions more onerous you would compete with private employment?—It may be necessary to lean somewhat in that direction for the present until other developments take place in the industrial structure of society, yes.

46308. I think we must confine our remedies to the existing system?—Quite so. It might be better to err on the side of caution there decidedly, but not to sweat the men who got on the labour test or any other test.

46309. As regards the funds, you would apply local taxation of ground rents and other things, the proceeds of which I assume would be disbursed by the local authorities and you would give local grants from the Imperial Exchequer?—Yes, that is to say that the rates could not bear the strain, but that new sources of taxation become absolutely necessary.

46310. But you would not give a locality the power of spending money out of the public exchequer?—Not without public supervision.

46311. I think your other suggestions are those with which we are more or less familiar. I should like to ask you this general question: You have been working now amongst the poor for over twenty years?—Yes.

46312. Mainly in poor districts in London and these poor districts?—Entirely.

46313. What should you say is the condition of the classes amongst whom you have worked, is it better or worse than it was, in your judgment, say twenty years ago. I will begin first with the skilled labour?—I cannot say it is better, I cannot say that I think it is very much worse.

46314. I am thinking of skilled labour?—Yes.

46315. I now come to the unskilled labour, and taking the upper stratum of the unskilled labour and the lower, to divide them into two, would you say the conditions of the upper stratum of unskilled labour was worse than it was twenty years ago?—No, I do not think I should.

46316. Then the lower stratum?—That seems to me to be rather worse, but it is a thing I can only give a general impression about, for instance, the sweated industries in my parish.

46317. Do you think irregular and seasonal employment is on the increase?—I think the sweated industries are worse.

46318. Supposing you were an autocrat, how would you try to stop the sweated industries?—I should certainly insist on the responsibility of the employer who puts out this work.

46319. You would prohibit the people working below a certain wage?—Yes, decidedly.

46320. Have you ever thought out what the effect would be, would it be to deprive people of work which they now get, do you think?—Not necessarily.

46321. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been tried in Australia, has it not?—Yes. Some of the sweated work in my parish is given out by some of the greatest firms in Leicester.

46322. (Chairman.) What form does the sweated work take?—Sewing up the ends of gloves and seaming the finger sides; they are carted in batches to the poor in my parish to be sewn up by a sweated woman; I have some figures on that with me.

46323. You say that gloves is one; what is the pay for making gloves?—I can tell you exactly: Gloves stitched right through, 2½d., 3d. and 3½d. per dozen, according to the different sort of glove.

46324. What does "stitched right through" mean?—The ends taken up and completely done and finished off ready for wear and the finger sides seamed.

46325. Have you any idea how long each will take?—I have it all here: Works four hours (this is a case out of my parish), working hard to make one dozen, rate about ¾d. an hour, total result, twelve hours for a day, three dozen, 7½d. for twelve hours' work.

46326. Going into details, are they provided with cotton?—Needles to be found but not wool.

46327. And cotton?—Wool is found. The pay works out at 7½d., 9d. and 9½d., according to the gloves, for a day's work, an average of three farthings an hour. Then football jerseys 8d. a dozen, less than ¾d. each; work six hours steadily and only earns 8d., that is for a twelve hours day, 1s. 4d. per day, or 8s. per week, needles to be found. There are scores of these sweated people in my parish.

46328. Does the practice prevail in Leicester of the large wholesale houses putting out a good deal of this work?—Yes, great firms.

46329. I suppose there are very few boots put out now?—Boots are sweated too. Boot and shoe work: average working day eleven hours, could earn 9s. 6d. per week in full work; eleven hours a day for six days; from 1s. 9d. to 2s. 9d. per dozen. Rent 6s. 6d. per week. This woman has a husband who has been ill five months in consumption, and has three children under seven to keep.

46330. (Mrs. Webb.) Does she get out-door relief?—No.

46331. (Chairman) Is that a process which has been superseded by the machinery, do you know?—Yes; but this goes on still in Leicester, but it is only just to say I am not up in all the details of all the trade.

46332. In your parish, there is to the best of your belief and knowledge, a great deal of these sweated industries?—An enormous amount.

46333. Do you find much difference as regards the estimation in which the Poor Law is held between those among whom you worked in London and those whom you work among in Leicester?—No.

46334. It is much the same?—Much the same.

46335. Would you say there was an equal reluctance in both communities?—An absolute loathing of the Poor Law.

46336. And a reluctance to come for relief?—A reluctance even up to death. Many would rather die.

46337. (Mr. Phelps.) You have been both in the country and in the town?—I was two years a country rector.

46338. Do you in Leicester meet many countrymen?—Decidedly.

46339. Are they often people who require relief?—Yes, in old age especially.

46340. The immigration of the people into Leicester does come under your notice?—Decidedly, and it came under my notice as a country rector near Leicester. I was 15 miles out.

46341. The emigration in one case and the immigration in the other are both within your knowledge?—Yes.

46342. How do the countrymen suit themselves to go into towns, do they go into factories?—They do not as a rule at first.

46343. What trades do they follow, or what calling?—As a rule it happens like this, the people get something in Leicester, bringing their children with them, and the children go to the factories. I met one case like this of a middle-aged man and I asked him what he came for, he is not a parishioner, he came in with his wife and children, the children still going to school, but the children will go into the Leicester factories a few years later.

46344. In old age would a man like that be supported by his children?—In some cases, not in all.

46345. Do you find family feeling is strong among the poor in your parish?—It is strong sometimes.

46346. Do you find children ready to support their parents in old age?—Yes, but in the majority of the cases it is infinitely hard. It would be perhaps most inconvenient domestically.

46347. They have not room in the house for an old person?—No, and the attendance is so difficult.

46348. Do most of your parishioners marry early?—We marry very largely at the parish church of St. Marks, and the average is not low; it surprised me. The average would be twenty, I mean not sixteen, seventeen and eighteen.

46349. Up to the age of twenty-three would a man live at home with his parents, or would he lodge?—He would live at home as a lodger, paying so much a week.

46350. That is to say in the average case the joint earnings would be a different thing to the earnings of the head of the family?—Decidedly.

46351. Do you find amongst your parishioners that married women go out to work very much?—Very much.

46352. Increasingly so?—Yes.

46353. You do not think it is more difficult to get work for widows, because so many married women go out to work?—I should not say there had been much change in the ten years I have been in Leicester.

46354. Do you see any greater tendency on the part of men to live on their wives' earnings?—Yes, and I see no breaking up of the tradition that the married women shall go to work.

46355. It is not decreasing?—No, it is not decreasing; I should say on the whole it is increasing, but I am not prepared with definite evidence.

46356. A little increasing?—Yes, slowly increasing.

46357. And the kind of work would be factory work or charring?—Factory work. The figures are given by Dr. Newman in his book and my daily experience would show that they are about right.

46358. Have you any criticism to make on the effect on the homes of the people where the women go out to work?—Very grave criticism, it is the wreck and ruin of the home life decidedly.

46359. Would you strongly deprecate it in the case of people you were interested in?—Deeply.

46360. And in the case of widows too?—No, not so much; do you mean widows with children?

46361. Yes?—Yes, quite as much. It means that the home must be and is neglected, I should mention it as one of the greatest evils that parochially we have to deal with.

46362. Have you ever thought of the suggestion that there should be schools at which the children of widows who go out to work should be taught and fed during the day?—Crèches and that kind of thing?

46363. Yes?—I was asked to start one and declined the responsibility.

46364. On what ground?—That I did not want to encourage the breaking up of home life.

46365. The children would go home to sleep?—Yes, but still it makes it easier for the mother to do what I consider she should not do, go to the factory.

46366. Have you much bad housing in Leicester?—No. We have slums, but it is not what I should call comparable with Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester or any of those places.

46367. You say that the amount of charity is very small, but is there not much indiscriminate charity and giving away in Leicester?—No, not comparable to the daily enormous poverty that exists in Leicester; I mean that you may be met in the streets of Leicester and begged from, and if you are weak you may give perhaps without enquiry and so on, but what is it to the enormous amount of daily poverty that exists amongst the people?

46368. You were in the parish just off Regent Street at one time?—Yes.

46369. Was there not a great deal of indiscriminate charity there?—Not amongst the normal population living there; amongst the cadgers who slept there or stayed a few weeks, yes.

46370. You were not constantly coming across cases of that?—No, the normal population at the back of Regent Street in my day were arduous hard-working people, and I believe are still.

46371. And taking St. Bartholomew's the Great, there again what kind of population had you?—Very poverty-stricken at the back of the hospital.

46372. Was there much endowed charity there?—I think there was some ancient charity, but not enough in any way to demoralise.

46373. Were there occasional incursions from the West End to get that charity?—I never knew them there.

46374. You did not come across them?—No.

46375. Do you think it is a good thing that the administration of charity should be in the hands of the clergy?—Do you mean our own, or public.

charity.

46376. Your own ?—The alms of the faithful ?

46377. Yes ?—Decidedly, so far as that goes. We must have a reserve in case of emergency, that is all ; I mean I should not wish to undertake, even if you gave me the money, the administration of national charity or of municipal charity ; which do you mean ?

46378. Do you think that the giving of alms should be connected with or dissociated from pastoral work ?—I should regard it as fatal if I had nothing to back up what I said in words of comfort.

46379. It strengthens your position as clergy to have some charity ?—Yes, but if you say should we undertake beyond that, I agree with you and say "no."

46380. (Mr. Lansbury.) Are there many boys and girls employed in the boot factories now with the new machines ?—Yes, as "feeders," &c.

46381. Is that increasing ?—That is certainly increasing.

46382. What becomes of them as they get older ?—They come on at the machines, sometimes the girls get married, and leave for a time and then go back.

46383. And the boys ?—The boys very often go on to some department in the factory but not always.

46384. Is there room for the boys to go on and get sufficient wages as men ?—The tendency is for the boys to go on and oust the men.

46385. Oust the older men ?—Yes.

46386. And then in turn to be ousted by other younger men ?—Yes.

46387. Is that sort of thing increasing in Leicester ?—I should say it is not decreasing, and I should feel that it is increasing, but I have no statistics to back up my evidence with.

46388. The sort of training that the boys and girls get in a factory, the work that they have to do, is that work which they are called upon to exercise much brain power over ?—No.

46389. It is really taking care of automatic machinery, is it not ?—It is, and you are not called upon to exercise much mental power, but you are called upon to exercise a vast amount of nerve power, watchfulness of the eye, quickness of the hand, and the strain on many of my girl parishioners is so terrible, that in a few weeks, or a few months at the outside you can see across the road the difference in the girl.

46390. There is not very much to develop a boy or girl physically or mentally ?—There is everything to put too great a strain on an immature physique.

46391. Your idea about the Poor Law is that because everybody connected with it officially considers it their business to make it deterrent, that that produces an atmosphere in the infirmary or the workhouse which is very hurtful to the feelings of decent people ?—That is what I say, precisely.

46392. It is just that which prevents people coming to it except as a last resort ?—Exactly.

46393. You feel that that is a sort of atmosphere that has to be got rid of if we are to humanely deal with the poor ?—Exactly.

46394. Would you be in favour of taking children entirely from the Poor Law ?—Yes, I should be.

46395. You were asked just now whether you had thought of children being boarded-out in the daytime, and going home to their mothers at night. I understand that you would rather that the mother should be paid an allowance to take care of the children herself ?—I did not say that.

46396. I understand that you want to preserve home life ?—Yes.

46397. I put it to you that the best way to preserve home life is to board the child out with its mother ?—I quite agree.

46398. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to that last point about boarding-out children with the mother, I assume you would give them the full boarding-out allowance of 4s. a week ?—I had not considered the precise sum I should pay them.

429—IV.

46399. The difference between boarding-out and outdoor relief to widows is in one case the widow gets 1s. or 1s. 6d. per head, and in the other case the foster parent is getting 4s. a week ; you wish to assimilate boarding-out with the mother to the ordinary boarding-out ?—Yes.

Rev. F. L. Donaldson.

Relief of widows with children.

46400. Assuming we want to do that, the practical difficulty which has been suggested to us is that women in a certain class of slum property with all the temptations of that life, if you give her say 16s. a week for four children, you might even deteriorate her own character by enabling her to live in comparative leisure and subjecting her to the gossip and the street life, and that that is a real practical difficulty however good our intention may be about it ?—There always will be practical difficulties in everything.

46401. Does that appear to you at all as a difficulty in that particular policy ?—No, not a final difficulty.

46402. You would not discriminate with a less satisfactory mother, and say at any rate with that mother though she might be allowed to keep her children for the night, it would be desirable to send the children to some school in the nature of an industrial school ?—I think we must reserve the right to say that.

46403. From your experience as a parish priest you do not find that would be a real difficulty, giving too much leisure to women of a certain type ?—If she had not been a factory woman but accustomed to domestic life, and reasonably engaged in keeping it, it would take her all her time to do so. I do not see that there would be a difficulty ; at any rate we might build up a class of that kind, it has not been tried, but my feeling would be that the present system is so bad that we want to alter it.

46404. Have you had much experience in your parish Effect of these cases of women with children who are allowed inadequate 1s. or 1s. 6d. a week ?—Yes, I have known those cases.

46405. Have you noticed the effect on the children of that sort of insufficient relief ?—The effect is taking sweated labour, and she has that and the Poor Law relief, and they eke out a miserable existence.

relief of widows with children and condition of out-relief children.

46406. And you think the child is insufficiently fed in consequence ?—I think it is.

46407. With regard to boys and girls between four-teen and twenty-one, have you ever thought about a half-time arrangement by which half the time might be occupied in technical instruction or domestic instruction, and half the time only to profitable employment ?—You mean the morning or the evening ?

46408. Yes, supposing you had the half-time system from fourteen to twenty-one, or fourteen to eighteen, so that the employer only had thirty hours a week of the children's time, and the rest of the time was taken in physical training ?—I think there would be practical difficulties from the employers' point of view in half-time work of that kind.

46409. They have had it in Lancashire with regard to an earlier age ?—Yes, I have read of that.

46410. Do you think that if you had that compulsory, so that the employers had no choice, that would be satisfactory from your point of view ?—I would far rather raise the school age altogether.

46411. You cannot raise it to eighteen or twenty ?—No, but by degrees.

46412. Is it not possible to have a half-way house between taking the whole time and that ?—Yes, it would be better on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread.

46413. With regard to what you say about the infirm-aries, do you find the same prejudice and the same consciousness of harshness with regard to the municipal fever hospitals ?—No.

Question of deterrence of sanitary authority hospitals.

46414. There is nothing of that sort ?—Practically nothing.

46415. Is there any feeling among the poor that they are harshly treated in the municipal hospitals ?—No, practically none, now and again you might get a particular nurse who is a little harsh, but generally speaking the atmosphere is different.

- Rev. F. L. Donaldson.* 19 Mar. 1907. 46416. It is a different principle?—That is it. As Mr. Lansbury suggested in his question, “deterrence” pervades the whole thing and every official in the ordinary poor law.
- Deterrence of poor law and its causes. 46417. It is not the official’s fault, it is the atmosphere?—No, it is not the official’s fault, he becomes the creature of a system.
46418. Supposing you had schools run on the principle of deterring children coming to them, would you get the same harshness in the teachers?—You would.
- Need of more medical assistance and inspection. 46419. With regard to the medical assistance of the poor, would you regard free medical attendance and free medical inspection as a kind of Education Act with regard to the habits?—That is what I am longing for.
46420. Do you really think in your experience there is a deficiency of proper medical hygienic advice?—I think it is something colossal.
46421. Could you tell us anything about it?—Yes. The general lowness of physique, the general ignorance on the subject, the neglect of complaints in their initiatory stages is nearly universal.
- Effect of free medical relief and inspection on conduct of people, and parental responsibility. 46422. Supposing you had free medical attendance on the same basis as education, do you think that by giving this free medical advice and hygienic advice, you would lessen or increase the sense of obligation on the part of the individual to remain well?—I think it would be developed in the town as part of our public spirit, and public life in which they would share.
46423. To be well?—To be well.
46424. So that you might create a new obligation?—A new obligation and a new sense of responsibility, though not quite of the same kind.
46425. With regard to the women with infants, do you think you would increase their sense of obligation to keep the infants alive by giving free milk?—Undoubtedly, by showing how the community regard it.
46426. You would put free medical assistance and free medical inspection and hygienic advice on the same basis as education?—I would decidedly.
- Adult labour supplanted by juvenile. 46427. (Professor Smart.) Are you quite sure as to what you said about boys in the boot trade, that practically there were not sufficient openings for the boys in the skilled work afterwards? For instance, in Leeds I am informed the practice is, with regard to these large automatic machines, that one boy attends four machines, and I am told the natural course is that the boy grows up to be a skilled worker at that machine; there is no such thing as employing boys at an early age and turning them off at an early age, in fact, I was told that the boot trade was one rather fine exception in the problem of boy labour. You do not know anything definite on that?—No, not sufficiently definitely, but I would like to say this, if I may, that the boy does constantly take the place of the man in my own actual experience in the parish; that is, men are constantly losing work and boys are getting it always.
- Increasing difficulty of employment for the middle-aged and causes. 46428. You mean the man is dropping out at an earlier age?—Yes.
46429. But not beyond the ordinary age of fifty-five?—Yes, earlier than that, forty and forty-five.
46430. For what reason?—Because of the pressure of young life, which is taken in preference to the old. Men of forty-five dye their moustaches and their hair.
46431. That is not the problem of boy labour exactly?—I feel that, it is rather our lad labour.
46432. That is not what we technically call the trouble of boy labour now, but rather that a boy is dismissed while he is still a boy?—There is a certain amount of that, but I am not able to give details.
- Socialism the natural result of provision of work by municipalities. 46433. You speak of municipalities giving work to all willing to work. Have you any experience of the difficulty municipalities hitherto have had in finding work to give?—Yes, we have in Leicester.
46434. Do you see anything of it but a Socialistic scheme of the municipalities becoming employers in all sorts of trades?—It practically leads to Socialism.
- Definition of sweated labour. 46435. What do you mean by sweated labour exactly, I wish to get a definition if I can?—Labour upon which, however hard you work, you cannot sustain an ordered, decent life in comfort and in health.
46436. It has no connection with the kind of employment: you simply mean a low wage employment?—Yes, sweated in my parish I should say that, not so much unhealthy in labour, itself, there is nothing unhealthy in stitching gloves.
46437. You do not mean home work particularly?—I do mean home work.
46438. That is the particular variety of it?—The sweated industries in my parish are home work; I do not say the factories are sweated, although my standard would be above that of most factories. I think some of the factories sweat their girls.
46439. Are you prepared to abolish home work?—I am prepared to gradually abolish it; it could not be abolished by an Act of Parliament at once without doing home-work a good deal of harm.
46440. Is not the whole of what you call sweated labour due to the residual competition of labour with labour and machinery?—This work cannot all be done by machinery, its causes. I believe.
46441. If not as regards gloves, at least as regards a great many things, the same work is being done by machinery and the reason of the low wage is that?—Yes, that is so, but “glove seaming” cannot yet be done by machinery.
46442. Do not you think that applies generally?—Yes, but not always, there is work which I believe is not done by machinery; work is sent out to be finished in certain directions which is not done by machinery.
46443. The only reason why machinery is not introduced is because the low wage work is so plentiful?—Yes, in certain cases.
46444. You speak of the “money to be found” by taxation of ground values—extra money you mean. You are, of course, aware that the authorities in Parliament values just now say that taxation of ground values would not tap any great new source, but would for the most part simply re-distribute taxation: it is not looked upon as a very large source of new taxation, but of re-distribution?—I confess I had looked upon it as an additional source and I am not quite convinced it is not so.
46445. I am only quoting from Mr. Ure?—I would get at other sources of taxation for those funds rather than that the thing should not be done.
46446. Do you know anything about afforestation?—Do I personally?
46447. Yes?—Only by what I have met with in my lecturing engagements and so on.
46448. Have you any idea whether it is remunerative or not?—It is remunerative in Germany.
46449. You have evidence of that?—I have authorities which I consult in my library.
46450. As private enterprises?—State enterprise.
46451. Is the bulk of the work there done by skilled labour or unskilled labour?—That I am not able to say.
46452. (Miss Hill.) In Paragraph 15, you speak of the men who do not apply to the distress committee, because they detest investigation, do you intend to suggest that you would abolish investigation?—I think that in the case of men who are practically unable to find work the test should be their willingness to work, to take the work offered by the municipality. I do not believe the provision of work for the men should be the result of investigation into what is called character.
46453. You are assuming, first of all, I suppose that the work is unlimited, that you have an unlimited supply of work?—Yes, I am assuming that.
46454. You would hardly suggest that a person who had just thrown up his work because he was drunk or would not get up in the morning, would have the same claim so long as the work was limited, would you?—Certainly not.
46455. You would be hopeful of being able to help a man as much to put him on an independent footing with no investigation as with it?—I would.
46456. You do not think there are other questions growing out of the unemployment which have to be dealt with, other than the giving of work by the municipality. I will take such a thing as migration or emigration, or various things of that kind?—Yes, that is growing up, certainly.

46457. You do not think there is a need of investigation in order to make your help thorough?—I think in my evidence to another questioner I said investigation was desirable in all questions of charity but all depends upon the spirit.

46458. You do not suggest here that because the people detest it it should be abolished?—No, I do not mean that; I mean two things, first, the small number of skilled men thrown out by machinery who register with the distress committee, when we know there is a much larger number thrown out, shows that the majority of these men, the best workmen, will not submit to what they call the inquisitorial nature of the distress committee's questions.

46459. Have you not to bring investigation to bear before you know they are the skilled men thrown out through not fault of their own?—Not necessarily; you may know 300 men are thrown out by the introduction of machinery who, up to that point, were worthy of employment by their firm; if out of those 300 only fifty have registered we have to account for the fact that 250 will not, or have not, done it.

46460. Until the investigation, you do not know what these men are, do you?—But we do, we know them locally and personally.

46461. That is not very often the case with distress committees, is it, the members of distress committees do not, as a rule, know the men who apply to them personally?—We are fellow citizens, we confer with one another; I tell of many in my parish of the type I am considering now, the very best men who have not gone near the distress committee, who remain still out of work.

46462. In Paragraph 18 you say "his manhood is insulted by investigation." Do you really think if any of us were in distress to-morrow it would be insulting for whoever was thinking of helping us to ask questions about who we were, what we were, and how we had been living, and what we had done?—I should not, but am I not there putting the point of the men?

46463. I want to know whether you think it is insulting to manhood if one who is applying to be helped by his neighbours were asked something about himself?—It may be unreasonable, but it is natural.

46464. Do you intend to suggest that investigation should be abandoned?—No. But that it should be conducted as if to find out the good rather than evil.

46465. (Dr. Downes.) Does your statement as to nurses in infirmaries being often unkind and even brutal to the sick apply to the infirmary at North Evington?—In my evidence I am asked to give all I can give, the result of my experience, and I give it.

46466. I ask you which it applies to?—I am not prepared to say it applies to North Evington.

46467. What does it apply to?—It applies to the experience that I have had with the poor from themselves or from the mission sisters, who, being professional workers, work in my parish, from the evidence of the poor who have endured these things.

46468. But where have they endured them?—In the various places to which they have been.

46469. Would you specify those?—I do not think it is fair to ask me to do so. I record the general experience of 22 years.

46470. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think you have seen a great deal of the women working at these home industries?—Yes.

46471. Do many of them get their earnings supplemented in any way?—I believe there are certain cases in which the Poor Law guardians give them assistance.

46472. Would that be widows with children only?—Yes, with children.

46473. They do not give it to single women?—No, I think not.

question of quacy of wages of single women.

46474. Would you say that the single women earn less than enough to live healthily?—Yes, decidedly, they earn less than enough to live upon at a very low computation of what life is.

46475. Have you ever come across any attempt to get the women away from these low class industries, or have you taken share in any attempt?—No, I have not, not any organised attempt.

46476. There is always domestic service open to girls, if they will go, which may be better?—As a rule these women I am referring to are not young women. Rev. F. L. Donaldson.

46477. But they begin young in the factories, I suppose?—Are you speaking of the factories? 19 Mar. 1907.

46478. I was thinking rather of the factories?—Yes, in the factories they begin quite young, that is true; there is domestic service, but the disposition of the poor is set against domestic service. Attitude of poor toward domestic service.

46479. Would you consider that the factory life is in any way a good one for the girls; a satisfactory life?—It is harmful, inasmuch as it begins too early; assuming that they have to earn an economic livelihood they begin too young, they have no girlhood. They leave school, as you know, at fourteen, and they go into the factory then or at fifteen. They have no girlhood, by that I mean girlhood between fifteen and eighteen, which is so valuable. Effect of factory life on girls

46480. Do you think anything could be done in connection with the schools to catch these girls as they are leaving, and get them to better kinds of work?—I think the only way would be to raise the school age gradually, and to infuse into the curriculum an entirely different training and teaching. Proposal to raise the school age for girls, etc

46481. What would you have that in, in domestic work?—Yes, domestic and other things.

46482. Do you think the girls leave school at all fitted for domestic life?—Utterly unfit. Inadequacy of existing education of girls.

46483. Are there any classes outside the school which attempt to train them for domestic life?—Not worth speaking of, and then leaving like that, and living amongst the factory population, the whole tendency is to go into the factory.

46484. It would be possible, supposing we kept them at school till fifteen in that last year to give them domestic tasks?—Yes, and to begin earlier, instead of teaching them decimals, to teach them other things.

46485. I suppose no attempt has ever been made to utilise the Sunday schools?—Never in that way.

46486. Would it be a good thing, do you think?—It would be impracticable. The time already given to direct religious teaching is so small that you could not impinge upon it.

46487. Can you tell us about how far the children suffer from the ignorance of the women on these points?—I can only say too much, it is one of the great tragedies of modern life, they suffer daily and hourly from the ignorance of their mothers and foster mothers and the little girls who nurse them. I attribute infantile mortality very largely to the absence of the mothers in the factories; 25 per cent. of all the women in Leicester in the factories are married women. Infant mortality and its connection with the ignorance of mothers and foster-mothers 46488. Are they mostly women with young children?—They very frequently are, the exact statistics I have not with me. Evils of mothers working in factories.

46489. Would the man and woman be working in the same factory, husband and wife?—No, not necessarily; sometimes it may happen, but it is accidental.

46490. Do they put the children out to nurse when they go out to the factory, or what is the arrangement?—An old woman next door will take care of it, or say she will.

46491. Are there any creches or nurseries?—No, there are none in my part of the town.

46492. Is any school feeding done in Leicester?—We did some by voluntary subscription last winter and the winter before. Effect of school feeding of children in encouraging mothers to go out to work.

46493. Do you think it encourages the mothers to go out to work if they know the children will be fed at school?—I think it may act in that direction; I think it would be an additional element.

46494. I suppose what one would rather wish would be to throw the pressure in the other direction, for them to stay at home?—Precisely, only you then involve the question of maintenance, you cannot bring pressure to keep women at home, unless you face the question of their maintenance. Difficulties as to preventing wives from going out to work.

46495. These are married women I presume, and their husbands I take it would primarily maintain them?—

Rev. F. L. Donaldson.
19 Mar. 1907.
Need of increasing school age and improving education of girls.

Yes, it is the evil I think that married women, some of whose husbands can afford, but the majority of whose husbands can barely afford, for their wives to be at home, should work in factories; that is to say, that one result of bringing pressure upon the married women must be to bring pressure to raise the wages of their husbands.

46496. Taking the question of the women's work and the low payment all round and the ill-cared for children, would you agree with me that one direction, which would be the most hopeful direction, is to educate the girls better?—An exceeding hopeful direction, that would do a great deal of good, and altering the curriculum even now and adding to that a higher school age.

46497. What school age would you like to suggest?—You must go step by step, must you not? The next step would be fifteen, and the next sixteen, until you reached eighteen.

46498. Would you go as high as eighteen?—Gradually, though not as immediate politics; they are not women until they are eighteen.

The applicability of day industrial school system to relief of widows with children.

46499. (Mr. Loch.) Have you seen a day industrial school at work?—I have seen the boys in our own schools doing industrial work.

46500. You have not seen a day industrial school?—No. Do you mean have I gone over one?

46501. No, I meant have you seen a day industrial school in the way of having studied it and knowing about it?—No, but I have been over one.

46502. I was not sure from your answers whether you think the system would be good in relation to certain difficult cases in which the father and mother were away from home?—To have centres of that kind, do you mean?

46503. To have a day industrial school centre?—I think it would do good certainly, it would be admirable.

Question of developing religious charities.

46504. With regard to religious charities, do you not think it possible that there should be a large number of well managed religious charities taking their place in the ordinary administration of relief, as may sometimes be found, I think, possibly more in continental countries than in England?—That we might have co-operation?

46505. That the religious feeling would create larger institutions of that type than we find in England?—It is possible, but as I have said in my printed statement, it comes to such a small amount really, that it is not a large factor in the situation, but I agree with you it is a possible development.

Paucity of almshouses in hands of religious bodies.

46506. There are no large homes for the aged, or very few in the hands of religious bodies?—In the sense of hostels.

46507. Yes?—No, and the one we have in Leicester they propose to abolish.

46508. Lately there has been in one of the dioceses an inquiry made as to the amount of the endowments which there is in the several parishes, that is the Winchester Diocese; that has shown that there is a good deal of local interest in these sometimes in rural and sometimes in semi-urban parishes, and that the interest might be possibly made available in connection with the outdoor relief, or apart from outdoor relief in these parishes. Do you see any objection to that system, as it were, so far as it is strong enough, displacing the outdoor relief?—Using the old endowments, you mean?

46509. And whatever voluntary sources there may be also?—No, I do not. I think if you are to have it, it would be well to organise it.

46510. I thought your statement about the charities was a little absolute. I thought that practically this showed that there was a considerable fund in different quarters, connected with endowments and worked as a rule very often in connection with the churches, which was available and could be treated at any rate as a potential income?—It could be developed somewhat. The direction I meant to give evidence in is this: that it is not adequate in any sense to the industrial poverty with which we are pressed on all sides now and have been so long as I can remember, and although it may be good, and would be better done under your idea, yet it only touches at the most a tithe of the normal poverty which is around us always and which is the result of industrial causes.

46511. Does it not strike you that with all the command of the rates which we have in addition to all that voluntary and endowed money, we do not seem to have made, even with the use of these large sums of money which have been spent of late years, a great difference in the poverty?—I quite agree, I do not think we have, it is easily explained, because what is given away by the rates is just enough to soften the struggle for livelihood and, even when it is kind and generous, it just keeps them going and that is all.

46512. Do you think still more from that source would make any difference?—I think that sometimes guardians err on the side of harshness; in certain cases I have known where outdoor relief would really have done definite good and perhaps saved a home, where on technical grounds, or grounds which I have consider insufficient, it has been declined. I think a little extension of outdoor relief in these directions would do positive good, but, of course, the pressure of industrial poverty cannot be met even by outdoor relief, it is created faster than outdoor relief can meet it.

46513. It is presumably due to causes which outdoor relief would hardly touch?—Certainly, it is due to industrial causes.

Miss EVELYN CARRYER, called; and Examined.

Miss E. Carryer.
19 Mar. 1907.

46514. (Chairman.) You are a Member of the Leicester Board of Guardians?—I am.

46515. How long have you been a member of that board?—Three years next April.

46516. You have prepared a Statement which I think fully expresses your views; we will treat that as your evidence-in-chief if you will kindly hand it in, then I should like to supplement it by a few questions?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

SOCIAL CONDITIONS.

Betting, drinking and prostitution in Leicester.

1. A large racecourse attracts thousands of bettors and gamblers six or seven times in the year, and keeps alive the spirit of betting among the working classes.

"Bookies" are brought before the Bench at regular intervals to be fined the usual £5. They are "taken up" in turns. Between turns, they openly take bets, with personal safety from police. (Rev. Thompson, Victoria Road Church, personally tested this fact.)

Besides the ubiquitous public-house (about 800 including licensed grocers), there are several "long-pull" drink-shops, which are a danger to the very poorest people. (Mr. Foulds, Relieving Officer, has reported several cases to us.)

2. Prostitution rife. A child living in Green Street, complained to me of noisy nights. Mr. Foulds, Relieving Officer, declares Green Street unfit for any child to live in, because there are prostitutes in almost (probably every) house. This street is a sample of many.

3. There are plenty of good schools of all grades. But I object to the Wyggeston School being supported out of the fund left by Wyggeston for the purpose of a hospital for old people. The fund is used for both purposes instead of exclusively for the aged.

4. Homes for Fallen Girls.—St. Mary's Refuge, The Newark; The Home, Stoneygate Road.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS.

5. Staple Trades.—Boots and shoes, and hosiery. To my knowledge these trades have been wretchedly bad for five years, but particularly bad two and a half years ending September, 1906, when a marked improvement manifested itself. The workers were, and still are crippled by the introduction of machinery. Hundreds of skilled men have been dismissed. Workmen are displaced also by women. Men and women displaced by the adolescent. Adults, especially women, accept low payment in order to compete with youth—

6. Trained domestic servants very scarce. I would like to compel every girl to receive at least twelve months' training before deciding upon her calling. Domesticity is deteriorating, resulting in miserable homes and untrained motherhood.

PECULIARITIES OR EXPERIMENTS IN POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION.

7. The following experiments in Poor Law Administration have been adopted by the Leicester Board of Guardians :—

(a) Appointment (on twelve months' trial) of Lady Assistant Relieving Officer.—She submitted an excellent report of her twelve months' work to the Board, February 5th, 1907, and has since been placed on the staff permanently by the unanimous vote of the board.

(b) Children.—No child over two years admitted to the workhouse (except lock-ward cases). They are dealt with in receiving and other homes right away from the workhouse.

Establishment of Receiving Home, 132, High Cross Street ; Scattered Home for Boys, Dorothy Road ; Scattered Home for Girls, Halstead Street. "Exmouth."—Several boys sent to the training ship with satisfactory results.

Children, two to five, a problem. Nursery Home to be discussed by the full board, February 12th.

(c) Abolition of oakum-picking, also of stone-breaking for inmates, except for refractory cases.

(d) Adoption of case-papers for inmates—satisfactory.

(e) Fresh admissions for maternity wards dealt with by ladies' sub-committee, not by men guardians.

(f) Labour-test men employed on the land, an excellent preparation for emigrants to Canada, and consumptives. (See the Gilroes Farm and Infirmary grounds.)

(g) Labour-test for single men. (See printed regulations.*)

THE RESPECTIVE MERITS OF INDOOR AND OUTDOOR RELIEF.

8. Indoor Relief. (Adults. Workhouse).—Apart from sick.—I consider that indoor relief should be reserved for applicants not bearing reputable characters, and the able-bodied of these should be given hard work and the plainest diet in full portion.

It should also be granted to those reputable persons who are absolutely unable to be adequately cared for outside, such as the aged and infirm, without suitable shelter, in a Home of Rest.

In my opinion, aggregation is unnatural, and no matter how thorough may be the classification, the reputable deteriorate when housed with the less reputable ; and the disreputable are influenced by those worse than themselves. Seldom vice versa. I object to herding.

9. Outdoor Relief.—Should be granted in preference to indoor relief, whenever possible, but as a privilege to applicants of good reputation ; abuse of it should be heavily penalised. It prevents destruction of home-life. Gives opportunity for seeking employment. Should not be subsidy to underpaid work. Small shopkeepers and small property landlords (who, in Leicester are stated to be the greatest sufferers as ratepayers) are those most benefited by the money expended in outdoor relief, whereas in-door relief benefits those tradesmen who contract for large amounts. Opportunities galore for guardians and officers to encourage good home-life, cleanliness, steadiness, suitable healthy houses, wholesome natural living generally.

* For copy of regulations for the administration of out-relief in Leicester see paper handed in by The Hon. Gerald Walsh—Appendix No. XVIII. (F) to the First Volume of the Minutes of Evidence (p. 376).

THE CLASSES OF PERSONS APPLYING FOR RELIEF.

10. The following are the classes of persons applying for relief :—

Aged. Prematurely decrepit. Workers displaced by youth or by machinery. Unintelligent. Potential consumptives, frequently labelled "naturally idle." "Such as no member of the Board would engage in general work except out of pity." Casual labourers. Large numbers of temporary male inmates declaring themselves "single." Men and women who cannot resist drink. Respectable struggling widows of consumptives, etc., with families. Men minus settlement. Small-pensioned soldiers. Families whose bread-winner is the mother apply during confinement. Deserted women with families.

CAUSES OF PAUPERISM.

11. The following are the chief causes of pauperism :—

(a) Bad trade and consequent unemployment.

(b) Abnormal price of raw material in staple trades, causing manufacturers to withhold "stocking," in hopes of cheaper wool and leather.

(c) Introduction of labour-saving machinery.

(d) Employment of children under sixteen (I should like to say under eighteen years of age).

A trade union secretary tells me that about 40 per cent. of female labour in Leicester is the labour of children. Miss B., a shoe-hand, tells me she entered a factory at the age of thirteen, her only work was to line the tops of boots. She earned 4s. 6d. per week, at exactly the same work, and as quickly or quicker, and as competently—thanks to wonderful small machine, as adults who were paid by piece-work. She earned 4s. 6d. per week, they earned 4s. 6d. per day. Her work became so monotonous that she left it. She is now forewoman. Sub-division of labour gives the young a chance of entering factories. This under-training and over-straining of youth is a great cause of pauperism.

(e) "Bookies."

(f) Drink.

(g) Inaccessibility of land.

(h) Over-building in prosperous times.

12. I object to Leicester standing in the unenviable position in the official return re relief of being the highest but one among provincial unions.

Mistakes in the granting of relief may have been made, owing to inexperience on the part of new guardians, to the non- or irregular attendance of guardians on relief committees, to the uncontrolled sympathy of guardians who have experienced want themselves. But industrial conditions have been the chief cause of the tremendous wave of pauperism :—

(a) Manufacturers refusing to buy raw material because of high price.

(b) About one-third workers employed. (This I found to be the case when I visited some fifty factories.)

(c) Return of men after the Boer War, just when work was scarce for all.

(d) The employment of youth at low payment ; and the consequent displacement of adults.

(e) The introduction of labour-saving machinery.

Genuine distress has been terrible, and on the whole, Advantages Leicester guardians have done their duty in occupying of Leicester this disagreeable position in the official return. guardians' policy as to relief.

Rates have stepped in where manufacturers failed. I firmly believe the board's policy has saved the parish from bread riots, robbery, and worse.

THE CLASS OF PERSONS SEEKING ELECTION AS GUARDIANS.

13. Anelection is imminent ; only four persons adopted at present. To judge by past boards, they are likely to be (a) small tradesmen, respected, some of them retired. These are generally elderly intelligent persons, not particularly well educated ; practical ; too ready to "follow" ; too ready to build. Some of them a little too much inclined to keep to out-of-date methods. (b) Workers, overflowing with practical new methods and reforms, which hang on deeper principles than perhaps Poor Law guardians are expected to even consider. (c) Six women.

14. The union, whose area consists of 8,580 statute acres (census, 1901), with an estimated population in 1905 of 228,132, is divided into six districts. The six relieving officers (one to each district) all acting under the clerk to the guardians. There is also an assistant clerk. These, with the lady-assistant relieving officer and six clerical assistants are installed at headquarters, the Poor Law offices. Also the registrars and that superfluous officer, the public vaccinator. Each district has its medical officer.

Need of adequate out-relief.

18. The six out-relief committees meet weekly, Tuesday mornings. The six labour-test committees meet weekly, Tuesday evenings.

During my first year on No. VI. Committee (of above), I confess I felt at sea, and had to trust to the relieving officer and to those guardians who knew the applicants, for guidance as to the granting of relief. But from the very first to this moment I fully agree with granting adequate relief, if any. I consider it is cruel to grant 2s. 6d. to an aged person, no one can live decently on that amount; yet this was the usual amount previously granted, in an ordinary relief room. The committee on which I serve refuse outdoor relief to all persons of known drinking or other unsatisfactory habits, or living under unsatisfactory conditions. Now that we are more experienced we are gradually weeding out men from the labour test who have deteriorated to such a degree that apparently they have become almost content with the low relief they earn on the test.* The maximum amount a man with wife and six or more children can earn with six days on the test is 14s. All the single men applying for test have been so "talked to" by our appointed chairman, that most of them have found work elsewhere.

19. The following are the rules which have been adopted with regard to relief to able-bodied single men.

Resolved, at a meeting of the guardians held on October 3rd, 1905 :—

"That in the event of any unmarried, able-bodied man applying for relief through the labour test, each relief committee shall deal with every case strictly upon its merits, always provided—

(1) That the applicant is of good character and has resided continuously within the parish for a period of not less than twelve months.

(2) That no relief be given without an adequate task being imposed, or for more than four days per week, unless the applicant is living apart from his relatives. But in no case shall any application be entertained from a man residing in any registered lodging-house or licensed premises.

(3) That no relief be given for a longer period than four weeks, and that at least two weeks must elapse before any further application can be considered from any single able-bodied man who has already received such relief.

(4) That the scale of pay be 1s. 3d. per day, to be distributed half in money and half in kind.

20. I append the latest statistics as to the number of persons in receipt of relief and their cost (see Appendix No. XXIV. (A)).

REFORMS IN THE LAW AND PRACTICE SUGGESTED BY EXPERIENCE.

21. Reform in the Law :—

(a) Re Settlement. Where a person has no settlement according to the three-years-continuous-living-in-one-parish law, the birthplace to be the settlement; or failing proof of that, the parish where the person has resided longest within the last three

Proposed reforms as to settlement.

* See Appendix No. XXIII. (A).

years. Our House Committee often pushes tramps on to the road when they are neither fit (in my estimation) nor desirable persons to be on the road. We positively increase vagrancy (by which I mean tramps) by refusing to admit them into the workhouse for more than a few days' rest.

(b) Power of detention in the case of consumptives, feeble-minded, drinkers, etc.

(c) Abolition of women's tramp wards.

(d) Re Franchise. Citizenship not to be forfeited on receipt of outdoor relief, nor on entering Poor Law Infirmary, nor when misfortune or age is the sole cause of pauperism.

(e) Police Court Children. It should be illegal to admit them into any of our institutions. They have had pernicious influence in our Receiving Home.

(f) Re Officers. Guardians should be ineligible for posts under the board until six months after resignation as guardian.

(g) Stone-breaking. If this be compulsory by law rid the law of this task, also oakum-picking. They are only suitable for temporary punishment (even prison authorities are urged to impose more useful tasks).

(h) Temporary Relief. Alteration of the law enabling the destitute to claim relief while refusing indoor relief. The relieving officer has been compelled to give temporary relief after the guardians have given an order for the house.

22. Reform in Practice :—

(a) Wherever a union is large enough, a woman relieving officer should be placed on the staff and be authorised not only to investigate and to visit applicants in maternity cases (indoor and outdoor) but to receive all such applications. This is distinctly a woman's department.

(b) No child above two years of age to be admitted to a workhouse, but be dealt with in another "Home." Children belong to the state, they should be trained in the way they should go by the guardians when the parents fail in this duty: the workhouse is the way not to go.

(c) Strict classification necessary in the case of able-bodied young women.

(d) Medical Cross Visitor for every few counties. Too many of our outdoor maternity cases are operative.

(e) Suitable occupation and instruction for sick children and for the feeble-minded and imbecile adults in our care should be insisted upon. So-called "sick" children with probably a touch of ringworm, etc., lose so much time which can never be made up (The matron of our infirmary recommends this).

(f) Homes for children, whether cottages in a Cottage Homes colony, or scattered homes, not to contain more than ten children. One foster-mother cannot thoroughly "mother" more than ten children herself. More than ten children in one cottage destroy homelike life, family life, so essential for children. Institutional life most unnatural, and groups of children of more than ten in a group tend towards institutionalism, which means unnatural life for children.

(g) Labour colonies for systematic training on the land, as preparation for emigration, appeal to my reason, but I have not studied the matter thoroughly.

23. I have objections :—

(a) To competition with local trades, such as our firewood trade.

(b) To the suggestion to transfer the Vagrancy Department to the police. Uniformity of action can surely be enforced without such a drastic change.

(c) To compulsory vaccination.

(d) To workhouses without land on which the able-bodied may be put to work.

46517. (Chairman.) You said that there is a great deal of youthful labour in Leicester; is there a chance of advancement of that labour in the way of wages, or does it remain at a fixed standard, or are the workers discharged when they become adults?—I think there is a chance of advancement.

46518. You quote the case of a Miss B., she had been advanced?—No.

46519. It was when she went to a different firm, was it?—She was not advanced I understand as long as she was there.

46520. Complaints have been made that there is a certain class of youthful labour in which the boys or the girls early in life receive certain wages which seem high to them, but at which they remain until they become adults, and then they are discharged; that is not the class of labour you are alluding to here?—I believe that is so in some firms.

46521. You were talking of the boot trade, were you not, in this paragraph?—Yes, this is the boot trade; I do not know much of the boot trade, I was thinking about the hosiery trade in particular.

46522. In the hosiery trade if they come in young there is a prospect of advancement?—I should say so. One firm I am thinking of employs a great many that look like little girls—I have seen them streaming out of the factory; they look like a school of little girls—so that practically half the work people in that firm are children.

46523. Are they kept on when they arrive at a certain age, or are they discharged, do you know?—I cannot say.

46524. Coming to Paragraph 21 of your statement, you there enumerate the changes or reforms which you would like to see; you would very much curtail the disputes concerning settlement?—Yes.

46525. You say we positively increase vagrancy by refusing to admit tramps into the workhouse; you think that the casual ward increases vagrancy?—Yes, I think a great many men are on the road that enter a tramp ward that would refuse to come into a workhouse.

46526. Though the ward is rougher and harder than the workhouse?—Yes.

46527. You would wish for greater power of detention in the case of consumptives, feeble-minded, and drinkers. Would you wish to make the notification of phthisis compulsory? Have you thought about that at all?—Yes, I have thought about it, but I would not care for it to be compulsory.

46528. If they come into the house or the infirmary, you would keep them, assuming there was a likelihood of their being able to be cured within a limited time, I suppose?—Yes.

46529. Feeble-minded girls you would keep in, who have had children and so on?—Those who cannot be kept under proper control outside.

46530. You are opposed to the franchise being forfeited in connection with the Poor Law, that is when misfortune is the cause of pauperism. That would necessitate an inquiry, would it not?—I am afraid it would. Some of the applicants for indoor-relief are certainly on a par with the criminal class, and the franchise is taken from criminals rightly.

46531. You are not in favour then of allowing everyone who receives Poor Law relief to retain the franchise, but you would try and discriminate?—That is so.

46532. Then you refer to police court children, are there many of them? Do you come across the evil effect of admitting them into the institutions?—Yes, we have had three or four rather recently in our receiving home, and their influence has been pernicious.

46533. You take charge of these children while the parents are in prison, is that it?—They are chiefly remand cases.

46534. They go back to the parents after a time?—They are young offenders.

46535. They are sent to you in the receiving home, but they do not remain with you?—No, they are sent on to the industrial schools.

46536. You think their contact with the other children in the receiving home is bad?—Yes.

46537. You say as to the officers, guardians should be ineligible for posts under the board until six months after resignation as guardians. Have there been cases within your knowledge where guardians have come forward for posts under the board?—While guardians, yes, two cases.

46538. You think that ought to be stopped. I suppose perhaps you would rather not say anything about that?—I do not know that I have any objection to the two particular cases, but it might attract some people to apply for election as guardians with a view to taking posts. I think there is that temptation.

46539. I assume it puts the guardians who have to vote in rather an invidious position?—That is so.

46540. Stone-breaking I think we need not trouble you about because we have already had evidence upon that. In regard to temporary relief, I understand you would propose to alter the law so that persons claiming relief should not be able to prescribe the sort of relief they want, is that what you mean?—We have had cases where we felt we could not grant outdoor relief, but they have declined to go indoors.

46541. Therefore you are practically compelled, or the relieving officer is, to give them out-relief?—Yes, in the form of temporary relief any way.

46542. In these cases really the individual applicants are able almost by refusing the workhouse to obtain the form of relief they want?—Yes.

46543. You would stop that?—Yes, such applicants defy the officers and the guardians.

46544. And instead of relief being conditional upon what the guardians wish it is made conditional upon what the man or woman insists upon?—Yes, we have not had many cases; I should say about half a dozen.

46545. In administrative practice have you any lady officials under the Leicester Board of Guardians such as relieving officers?—Yes, one on out-relief.

46546. How is that worked?—She is the assistant relieving officer.

46547. Has it worked well?—It works excellently, we have had a very good report for the twelve months.

46548. What does she do, does she look after the children of people in receipt of out-relief?—She visits the widows on out-relief periodically, visits and investigates all outdoor maternity cases, and also those applying for the maternity ward.

46549. It has some times been alleged that the children of widows on out-relief are not properly nurtured or looked after, it would be her business to inquire into that sort of case?—Yes, she has done so.

46550. And the result has been satisfactory?—Great improvement has been made in several homes that she has visited in consequence of her visiting.

46551. I presume she would report if homes were dirty?—That is part of her duty, to report every case.

46552. Has the result of the reports been effective; have they brushed up their homes and so forth?—Yes, there has been a great improvement I believe in all cases.

46553. And that has been accomplished without striking off the relief?—Yes.

46554. Under pressure or advice?—That is so.

46555. I assume therefore you would like to increase the number of lady officers?—Yes, as cross-visitors, with authority detailed in Par. 22 (a).

46556. You object to any child over two years of age going into the workhouse at all?—I think I would like to modify that by saying three years. I think it is rather too soon to part a child from, shall I say a suitable mother, under three years.

46557. Then 22 (c), the classification of the able-bodied young women; what was the idea of suggesting stricter classification?—Because unsatisfactory characters so far in our workhouses have been mixed with the others, and their influence has been pernicious also.

46558. I suppose a certain proportion of the able-bodied young women are of unsatisfactory character?—Yes, most of them.

46559. You would try to prevent contact between them?—There have been several cases of young able-bodied women, servants who have not been able to get a situation and having nowhere to go, no home to go to in the town, who have been obliged to come to the workhouse; they have mixed with these girls and have been perniciously influenced, and have turned out wrong in consequence.

46560. I thought in Leicester that there was a great demand for domestic servants?—First-class servants, yes, but there are domestic servants and domestic servants, most of the servants in the town I suppose have homes or friends, but there are these cases; we have no servants' home in the town.

46561. They just come in temporarily?—Yes.

46562. You would wish to have a medical cross-visitor, because you say too many of the outdoor maternity cases are operative. What does that mean exactly?—I suppose the explanation would be that so many of these mothers have to work in factories and to sit at machines in certain positions which are not good for them, and the consequence is that in their time of trouble there has to be an operation.

46563. It necessitates an operation?—Yes, I can quite understand there would be a certain percentage, but I think there are too many. Of course there is an extra fee, and very often a second medical attendant is called in, and there may be a temptation to gain experience and fees when unnecessary.

46564. How would a medical cross-visitor affect that?—I do not know how it would work, but it wants some extra supervision in my estimation.

46565. To advise and supervise you think might be good?—Yes.

46566. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do I understand you think that the medical cross-visitors would find out cases which have been operated upon which should not have been operated upon?—If they were qualified, yes.

46567. (Chairman.) You would like some suitable occupation to be given to children who are segregated who really are not ill, but find it difficult to make up the time of their segregation?—Yes, the majority of them never make up the time.

46568. They are backward to start with?—Yes, and the time they lose is never made up.

46569. Do you visit the homes for the children?—The cottage homes and the scattered homes, yes.

46570. Which system do you think is the most satisfactory?—I think we need all systems; the scattered homes and the boarding-out and the cottage homes colony, but of the three, if we had one only, I should advocate the scattered homes.

46571. Is boarding-out satisfactory as far as you know?—I am not on the boarding-out committee, but I believe it is satisfactory.

46572. They are boarded-out outside the union, I suppose?—A few.

46573. There are some boarded-out inside?—I think there are 35. I am not clear upon that point. I am not on the boarding-out committee.

46574. Coming to the scattered homes, you put the limit of the work the foster-mother can do to be ten children?—Yes, without assistance.

46575. Are you on the scattered homes committee?—Yes.

46576. Do the foster-mothers complain at all of the work they have to do?—Not at all.

46577. You think they can manage ten children?—Easily.

46578. To your personal knowledge has there been much objection to work done by the guardians on account of its competing with local trade?—We have had with non-complaints lately from the firewood firms, it has ruined two or three.

46579. That is really the only work that the guardians do?—In Leicester, yes, that and stone-breaking, besides farming.

46580. (Mr. Phelps.) You have strong views, I notice, with regard to the effect of the racecourse and betting?—Yes.

46581. Have you particular cases in your mind of persons who have come to pauperism by that?—We have had several cases on our relief committee.

46582. What kind of cases, where did they start so to speak?—When the applicant applied to the Relief Committee for relief and we found that he was a bettor and he had come to grief through that.

46585. You say in paragraph 9 with regard to outdoor relief that it gives great opportunities for encouraging good home life and cleanliness. Does your board of guardians do anything under that head?—Yes, several times we have only given relief on condition that there is an improvement in the cleanliness of the home, and in other cases we have granted relief on condition that applicants removed from one neighbourhood to another.

46586. Does the relieving officer see to that or the guardians of the parish?—The relieving officer.

46587. Do the guardians themselves ever undertake that kind of work?—Occasionally.

46589. That is the work of the committee, not of the Board?—We instruct the relieving officer to report to the Relief Committee.

46590. Has the town council taken action do you know?—I do not know if it is the fact, but I believe it has been done.

46591. Do you apply that to your committee in the case of phthisical applicants?—I do not think we report those cases.

at-relief to 46592. Do you refuse to give relief into a house where there is a phthisical patient?—Not always, sometimes we give relief on condition that they move to a more suitable neighbourhood for the consumptive patient; so netimes we refuse to grant relief unless the patient goes into our infirmary.

46593. Do you find it is a difficult thing to persuade them to do that?—Very difficult sometimes.

46594. On what ground?—They object to leave home; they like the small comforts of home.

46595. Is that generally an objection on the part of the patient or his wife?—The husband as a rule.

46596. In Leicester is phthisis a disease which is reported?—Consumption is reported voluntarily I believe.

46597. Do you happen to know whether it is to a large extent?—I think so. I do not know for a fact, but I believe it is.

46598. What class of persons are those which you refer to in paragraph 13 which are adopted by the board?—There is a new board about to be formed.

46599. You say that only four persons have been adopted at present?—This was before the adoption, this was at an earlier date; there were only four persons adopted at that time, there are 105 now.

46600. With regard to the relief committees you say each member selects on which relief committee he will sit. Are the members of the committee generally the persons who represent the district with which the relief committee deals?—As a rule.

46601. Do the committees rotate?—No.

46602. Do you think on the whole that works well?—I think rotating would be a better plan.

46603. You would be in favour of rotating?—Yes.

46604. Why do you urge the abolition of women's tramp wards in parargaph 21 (c)?—I think it is because I wish to do away with women on the road altogether.

46605. What would you substitute for them?—Women's lodging houses; I should like the municipality to provide women's lodging houses.

46606. You do not mean you would take them into the body of the house as inmates when they come on the tramp?—I should not object to doing that, I do not think there is any great fear of infection.

46607. You would deal with them in that way; do you have many women in your tramp wards, do you know?—I do not know how many, I have no record of the number.

429—IV.

46608. In Paragraph 22 (a) you say there ought to be a woman relieving officer to receive all such applications, that is applications in maternity cases; you feel strongly about that?—Most strongly.

46609. You have experience of evils resulting from the present system?—The relieving officer is all right but I think the pres.nt method tends to harden the applicant.

46610. You think that would be less if the application were made to a woman?—Yes.

46111. With regard to the competition with local trades as to which the chairman asked you, have you any substitutes to suggest?—I have a list here of what I call sweated trades, I think those might be adopted.

46612. By the workhouse?—Yes.

46613. Firewood-chopping is not a sweated trade, you would say?—No.

46614. What would you have your workhouse inmates do?—Tack-box making, sack-making, I see no objection to boot repairing for the labour test men, paper-bag making, strawberry box-making, mousetrap-making, tin and wood label-making, moneybox-making, bristle-sorting, feather-stripping for quill pens and tooth picks, string baskets, soldiers' straps, peaks for soldiers' caps, toys, and tailoring repairs.

46615. In all those there is a good deal of sweating in your district?—Yes, in some of them.

46616. We must cut out the repairs of boots and clothes, I think it is difficult to do that in a workhouse?—It is done in the workhouse for the inmates.

46617. We could hardly take in repairs from the outside?—I thought perhaps the labour test men might do that for all paupers outside.

46618. With regard to your own workhouse, do you think that you would find much labour that you could employ in those callings, take mat-making for instance. Is mat-making a thing which people would take up readily?—I do not think I mentioned mat-making, did I?

46619. Well, take tack-box-making?—I think that would be easily learned, I should say so.

46620. Do you think you have many people in the House who could be employed in that way?—Yes, I think so.

46621. Men or women?—Both.

46622. Do you think that that would be a profitable form of industry in the House, you would sell the produce, I suppose?—I cannot say whether it would be profitable.

46623. Do you think you would get a market?—I think it would be a pleasant and suitable occupation, and we should not be injuring any outside firms, that is the idea, I suppose.

46624. Supposing your system were adopted, and it answered, and that you stopped a good deal of sweated work in these industries, what do you imagine the people who you turned out of those industries would do?—There is that to be met, of course.

46625. Have you any view about how they would be absorbed?—No, I have not considered that question.

46626. I suppose you have a good deal of female employment in Leicester, have you not?—Yes, I think it is about 60 per cent.

46627. Have you the Brabazon system in your workhouse?—Yes.

46628. How do you get rid of the proceeds of that?—We have a sale once a year.

46629. Do you find that system works well?—It works excellently.

46630. (Chairman.) With regard to that idea of employing in the workhouse these sweated trades, was the idea that you would abolish the sweated trades or raise the wages?—No, my idea is not to interfere with the firms who do not sweat.

46631. Not to interfere with the firms who you thought were giving legitimate employment?—Yes.

46632. You propose to interfere with these others?—Yes, I think they deserve to be interfered with.

46633. The idea is ingenious, but how would you operate it; if you paid them more, you would have to 19 Mar. 1907. sell your things at a loss, or perhaps you would not pay them at all?—No. I should certainly pay them suitable wages as on the labour test system; it is the labour test we employ for the wood-chopping.

- Proposal to make pauper labour compete with sweated industries.
46634. (Mr. Booth.) Are they not subsistence wages, they have not to do with the product?—No, it is so much a day.
46635. (Mr. Loch.) In these last few years in which you have had such trouble in Leicester, have you had enough help, do you think, in the way of advice from the Local Government Board inspector?—I am afraid I cannot answer that.
46636. Do you ever have a scrutiny of the inner working of your method of enquiry in cases in connection with your Relief Committees?—Frequently.
46637. By any official outside your own body?—No.
46638. With regard to these rules mentioned in Paragraph 19, you passed new resolutions about the relief to able-bodied single men; would not the Orders of the Local Government Board have sufficed?—Single men are not employed, are they, under the Local Government Board regulations?
46639. Single men would come to the labour test like everyone else?—They were not eligible for our labour test till we passed this resolution.
46640. That was the object of it?—Yes.
46641. Did you refer these people, if they were unsatisfactory at the labour test, to the workhouse?—No.
46642. Did you find that these rules answered as they stand?—Yes, very well indeed, but we have very few single men on the test.
46643. It was rather a special arrangement?—The rule was an experiment.
46644. In Paragraph 18 you say, "The committee on which I serve refuse outdoor relief to all persons of known drinking or other unsatisfactory habits, or living under unsatisfactory conditions. Now that we are more experienced we are gradually weeding out men from the labour test who have deteriorated to such a degree that apparently they have become almost content with the low relief they earn on the test." Is that process going on now?—We are weeding them out.
46645. What does weeding out mean? What do you do with them?—We give them warning that in a fortnight they must come off.
46646. And then they go?—Then they go.
46647. Is there any reason to think they could not have gone several weeks before if you had thought of it before?—This is the season of the year when we think they can find work.
46648. Do you look forward to this kind of thing recurring, having this kind of labour test year after year?—Yes, I suppose the men will apply again in the autumn.
46649. Does this refer to a large number of men, does it run into 200 or 300?—The number on the labour list?
46650. Yes; I see according to your appendix it is 254?—Yes, it is about that now.
46651. This is a running continuous number?—Yes, it is about that now.
46652. The statements that have been made this afternoon would seem to show that there is a large number of men pushed out of employment, say, at forty or forty-five. Do you find that these men come to you at that age or thereabout?—Yes, at one time there were eighty men on the labour test under thirty.
46653. That was quite exceptional?—Those two or three winters I should say were all exceptional.
46654. So far as your previous experience goes that would be exceptional?—I have only been on the board three years, but I believe they were all exceptional.
46655. What seems serious, is it not, is that there should be an increase of men of that age from forty upwards, who would be for practically part of the year dependent normally on the rates. Is that what you anticipate now?—I hope they are becoming gradually absorbed.
46656. That is to say they are emigrating?—They find other work in the town.
46657. You have not worked that out at all in detail?—They have been displaced by machinery most of those that have been turned out at that age of thirty, forty, and forty-five.
46658. The evidence we have had just now is that things are almost as bad now as they were; do you think that is so if they are becoming absorbed?—I think they are booming absorbed gradually; they are going off the labour test in my committee room.
46659. So you take it for granted that is what the result is?—Yes.
46660. Do you think that more could be done by any alliance between yourself and persons outside who would take more care of individual cases than the guardians can now do, and so get results similar to those your cross-visitor gets?—We do get assistance more or less from the Charity Organisation Society and the Police Aided Clothing Society. They investigated cases for us, is that what you mean?
46661. I was thinking that if your idea was to have good methods of treating the individual cases, you would want assistance of that kind outside?—Yes.
46662. And if that grew to any large extent that should be a way of preventing a certain amount of pauperism?—Yes, we have a Health Society recently established in Leicester, and we hope it will prevent a certain amount of pauperism, through ill-health in any event.
46663. You refer cases to these various agencies that you are dealing with?—That is so.
46664. The cases in many instances must be such as could be helped more in that kind of way?—I think we send them to the Charity Organisation Society more than any other society for help.
46665. But it is not the usage of the board to think of that side of the question?—I think on our committee we do so frequently.
46666. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think I remember that some of the people in your workhouse when we visited were engaged in playing cards; is that recognised?—Yes, I believe it is permitted in the workhouse.
46667. Does that lead to gambling?—Not that I am aware of.
46668. You do not think it would be likely to do so with these sporting characters you have coming in?—They have no money to gamble with, have they?
46669. Do you ever visit in the nursery of the workhouse?—Yes.
46670. Have you been there when the babies and the little children were put to sleep after the mid-day meal?—Yes.
46671. Could you describe to us the method in which they are put to sleep?—Do you mean the infants?
46672. I mean the children from one or two, possibly you have not seen that?—I do not think I have seen those put to sleep, I have seen the babies.
46673. (Dr. Downes.) What was the result of the discussion at the board with regard to the children from two to five, which was to take place on February the 12th?—That is as to the nursery home; it is postponed, the matter is adjourned.
46674. You have another board coming on perhaps? Yes, the matter has been adjourned for three months.
46675. What is your suggestion for the solution of the problem?—I should like to separate them in homes; my ideal system, I think, would be cottage homes for children from two to five years of age, and for each of the cottage homes to contain not more than ten children, their ages varying from two to fourteen.
46676. They would be too young to go into a school?—Yes, but that is more like home; in every home almost there is a child too young for school.
46677. You have a difficulty with children suffering from ringworm. Is there any instruction given to those children at the present time?—I believe not.
46678. Or to any of the sick children who are able to attend classes?—I believe not.
46679. Have the guardians considered that?—Yes, I did make a suggestion, but it was not agreed to.

Leicester.

46681. Is there any special treatment available in Leicester for cases of ringworm?—Not that I am aware of.

46682. Not at any of the general hospitals or infirm-aries?—No, I am not aware of anywhere specially.

46683. Nowhere where you could send the children?—
No.

jection to 46684. What is your objection to the proposal to unsferring transfer vagrants to the police?—Because poverty is not grants to criminality.
the police.

46685. You think the police are confined to dealing with criminals?—Yes.

46686. Have you ever seen them regulating the traffic in London?—Of course. I think if casuals were handed over to the police they would certainly be looked upon as more or less unsatisfactory characters.

46687. Are you aware they were formerly under the police?—I hope we shall not go back to that practice.

eeding out 46688. (Miss Hill.) I see in the note to Appendix A. (See unsatis- App. No. XXIV. (A.)) of your Statement you have thirty-factory cases nine people taken from the out-relief and fifty-six from out-relief the labour test, between March 31st, 1906, and February d labour 9th, of this year; is that so?—That is correct, that is rd relief from our relief committee only.
Leicester.

46689. I was going to ask you whether the other relief committees were following the same system?—
I have not the slightest idea.

46690. This has been I suppose by means of a sort of call over, you have gone through the cases to see which could be sent out?—Yes, we instructed the relieving officer to draw up a list of what he considered unsatisfactory cases, and then we investigated them.

46691. It has been the unsatisfactory cases you have taken out, has it?—Yes, drinking and so on.

46692. You thought they might be thrown on their own resources?—Yes, if we have these unsatisfactory cases among our other labour test men they have a bad influence over them.

46693. It has not been the best cases you have been able to float into more satisfactory circumstances, but those whom you thought by cutting off the help you would throw on their own resources, is that it?—The guardians individually try to find work for the better cases outside.
one guardian I know has found work for 100 cases.

46694. These ninety-five as a rule are not those?—
No.

46695. These are the ones that you think you may venture to throw on their own resources now that the spring has come?—Either that, or that they should be dealt with in the house.

46696. You give them the alternative of the house?—
Certainly.

46697. Have any of them accepted that?—Only about three, I believe.

46698. In that case the house test has answered, so to speak?—Yes.

46699. You think it has proved that the people can get on?—It looks like it. Of course we take a suitable time of the year, it depends upon the man's trade, it is no use turning a bricklayer off in the frost, for instance.

46700. (Mr. Lansbury.) There is no question about making a profit out of any of the occupations that you are proposing, is there?—I hope not.

46701. That does not enter into the Brabazon scheme at all, does it?—No.

46702. Neither does it come in with the stone-breaking or oakum-picking?—No. With any profits made by the Brabazon Society they purchase pianos.

46703. But even so, they pay no cost, do they, for labour; the work is given?—No, the work is not paid for, the inmates give the work.

46704. You want to keep the children away from the workhouse influence I take it?—Yes, I should like them to be dealt with by some other body altogether, the education authority.

46705. Do you think it would be better that they should be dealt with by the Education Authority, like other children?—Infinitely better.

46706. (Chairman.) You are a member and ex-Chairman of the Board of Guardians at Leicester?—Yes.

46707. And you are also a town councillor?—Yes.

46708. You have prepared a written statement which we will treat as your evidence-in-chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. For the past three years I have been a member of the Leicester Town Council. For the past twelve years a member of the Board of Guardians, in which I have filled the following offices:—

For two years Chairman of the Board.

For one year Vice-Chairman.

For eight years Chairman of the Assessment Committee.

For five years Chairman of the Infirmary Committee.

For three years Chairman of one of the Relief Committees.

For two years Chairman of the first Labour-test Committee.

In addition to the above I acted as chairman of the committee for arranging for the old people's treat at the time of the Coronation.

I was also for many years a member of the St. Margaret's Select Vestry, a body who have the administration of the Parish Piece Charity.

I am also a director of the Leicester Permanent Building Society, and on the board of management of the Leicester Savings Bank.

Further than that I may say I have attended many Poor Law Conferences, both in London and the North Midland District, and on the occasion of the holding of the last conference in Leicester, some twelve months ago, I acted as chairman to the conference.

Notes as to the Administration of the Poor Law in Leicester.

*Mr. A.
Kemp.*

2. Social and industrial conditions would compare 19 Mar. 1907.
favourably with most other towns of similar size. The trades carried on are numerous and varied. Hosiery, boots and shoes, cigars, clothing, engineering, machinery building, manufacturing chemists, printing and book-binding, wool spinning, together with various branches of building trades. Town clean and healthy. Rates now 7s. 6d., not abnormally high when compared with other manufacturing towns, but have gradually increased during recent years. This, however, does not affect the working classes, as all rates on cottage property are paid by the landlord, and cottage property (owing to over-building, more especially on the outskirts of the town) is now letting cheaper than for many years, many hundreds of cottages being empty at the present time at all rents from 2s. 6d. per week upwards.

Social and industrial conditions in Leicester.

3. The pressure of increasing rates, low rents and empties is felt most by the large number of small shopkeepers who pay rates direct and by the small property owners, many of whom are the thrifty working-classes who have invested their savings in buying a few cottages and are dependent on the rents for their income.

Burden of the rates on lower middle classes.

4. The respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief is of course a very vexed question. My own opinion is that so far as this union is concerned outdoor relief has been obtained far too easily in recent years, and that many members of relief committees have allowed sentiment to override their judgment and given outdoor relief to applicants on many occasions when in some instances they would have been better in the House, and in others and more frequent cases when indoor relief would have been refused by the applicant and nothing more heard of the case.

Respective merits of out-relief.

- Mr. A. Kemp.*
19 Mar. 1907.
Classes of persons seeking relief.
- Leicester scale of relief to the able-bodied and its effects.
- Causes of pauperism.
- Machinery.
- Migration of industries.
- Trade union minimum wages.
- Lax Poor Law relief.
- Class of persons becoming guardians.
- Particulars as to administration of relief in Leicester, staff of relieving officers and question of its adequacy.
- Proposal to transfer the Poor Law to Sanitary Authority.
- Difficulty of finding suitable guardians.
5. While of course a large number of those applying for relief are sixty, sixty-five and seventy years of age, it is a regrettable fact that in addition to a large number of young widows with families who frequently have to come to the guardians within a few weeks of their widowhood, there are a large number of able-bodied men who are unable to find work, or who do not show any great desire to find regular employment, but who, if they can get four or five days per week on the labour-test appear to be satisfied with this so long as the guardians will allow this to continue. The scale of pay, considering the hours of work and the loss of time through bad weather, of this class is of a liberal nature, varying from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 4d. per day, and in my opinion this kind of relief ought to be regarded by the board as of a temporary nature only.
6. As to the cause of pauperism, in addition to the universal one of intemperance and lack of thrift displayed by many of the working-classes, there is very little doubt that there are local reasons which aggravate the position here. These may be put down to the following causes :—
- (a) The introduction during recent years of labour-saving machinery in both the shoe and hosiery trades, whereby the output of manufactured goods is much increased, and at the same time the number of workpeople required is considerably reduced.
- (b) The removal by many manufacturers of either the whole or part of their machinery into the country districts, where expenses such as rent, rates, etc., are lower, where cheaper labour is to be obtained, and where manufacturers are not so hampered by the trades union officials.
- (c) The fixing of a minimum wage in the shoe trade, which has compelled manufacturers to dispense with the services of many men, who might otherwise be employed, but who are not worth the minimum wage. This can be seen by the large proportion of those from time to time on the labour-test who are shoe operatives, many of whom would be dear to any manufacturer at anything like 28s. per week.
- (d) The ease with which Poor Law relief has lately been obtained, and the oft-repeated counsel of some of the leaders of the Labour parties to the unemployed to go to the guardians.
7. As to the class of persons seeking election as guardians, without wishing to draw class distinctions, and while admitting the sincerity and usefulness of some of those who were elected to the board nearly three years ago, as representatives of the Labour party, I think it is generally admitted that the present board is one of the weakest that Leicester has known for many years. Several members have had relatives actually in receipt of relief whilst they are on the board, while others have openly expressed the opinion that the amount of rates is not of the slightest consequence.
8. Relief is administered by the board being divided into six committees, who sit simultaneously every Tuesday morning, the majority of the members sitting in the committees which deal with the district they represent. The staff consists of six relieving officers and recently three assistants have been appointed, whose time is mainly occupied with clerical work. Many members of the board are of the opinion that we are still understaffed and that it is a physical impossibility for some of the relieving officers to make such thorough investigations into the cases as is desirable. In my opinion a superintendent relieving officer or cross visitor would be of the utmost service.
9. The reform above all others I would suggest is that the Poor Law work should be taken over by the borough council with power to co-opt on similar lines to the education authority. With a strong committee, and the help of others who take a special interest in this work, I cannot but think the work would be better done, and that the interests of the poor would not suffer in the smallest degree. The difficulty of finding a sufficient number of suitable candidates for the town council and board of guardians is so great that many who are not suitable have perforce to be accepted. This difficulty has been more than ever borne in upon me during the past few weeks in endeavouring to find candidates for the next guardians' election which takes place in April. Failing this alteration
- in the law, I think it is a great mistake for the whole of the board to go out of office at the same time, as is the practice here. The re-election of one-third of the board every year would be far better, and any change in policy or administration would be more gradual.
46709. (Chairman.) You have been twelve years a member of the Board of Guardians of Leicester?—I have.
46710. You have held various positions during that time and you were for five years Chairman of the Infirmary Committee?—That is so, that is from the commencement of the scheme, or rather from the commencement of the building of the infirmary.
46711. You have a new infirmary building; how long has it been opened?—A year-and-a-half.
46712. Have you a good committee?—Yes.
46713. Is the infirmary full?—The men's side is practically full.
46714. Have you ever heard any complaints that the inmates are not properly treated in the infirmary?—Only one or two trifling complaints which would not stand investigation at all.
46715. Have complaints increased at all of recent years or are those one or two you have mentioned the only things that have come to your knowledge?—That is all that have come to my knowledge.
46716. The matron has a very high reputation, has she not?—She has.
46717. With regard to your nurses, would you say they were a good staff?—I should say we were efficiently staffed.
46718. You have a permanent medical officer?—We have two assistant resident medical, and a consulting visiting officer.
46719. For operations?—Yes, and for keeping general watch over the medical treatment of the patients; he comes up most days.
46720. Have you seen any indication of reluctance on the part of the poor to make use of the infirmary?—Not at all; there is no doubt a great many have come to us since the infirmary has been opened, who would not have come to the guardians before.
46721. That is on account of the increased buildings and better appliances?—Yes, and the better treatment we are able to give them than we were in the infirmary when it was a portion of the workhouse.
46722. Leicester has passed through a considerable industrial crisis during the last three years?—That is so.
46723. That has considerably affected the administration of the Poor Law guardians?—Yes, that has affected it.
46724. Your relief generally has gone up a great deal?—A very great deal.
46725. And also there has been a Distress Committee established?—There has.
46726. Are the causes passing away, do you think, that caused this crisis?—To a large extent I should decrease of say they are; the displacement of labour that has taken place is very much greater, so far as one is able to judge, than any displacement that can take place in the future.
46727. Are you conversant with the boot trade at all?—Not to a very great extent.
46728. Is the amount of labour now employed less than it was a few years ago owing to the introduction of new machines?—I believe it is in some branches of the trade.
46729. I assume that there is a difficulty amongst a good many of those who were displaced in getting employment on account of their age, and on account of their being specialists?—Yes, partly so.
46730. Were there any other causes contributing, do you think, to this distress in Leicester?—Do you mean other than bad trade generally, or other than the boot trade.
46731. Other than the boot trade?—Trade has not been good generally. The building trade has been very bad the last few years; Leicester has been considerably overbuilt, and trade being bad the building trade has suffered very acutely indeed.
- Advantage of system of retirement for Guardians thirds.
- Leicester Poor Law Infirmary and question of treatment of patients therein.
- Question of deterrence of patients of Leicester Poor Law Infirmary.
- Increase of relief at Leicester and causes thereof.
- Prospect of industrial crisis at Leicester.
- Unemployed boot operatives and question of their chances of re-employment.
- Causes of distress in Leicester.

46732. You are a various trade town?—Yes, we are very fortunate in that respect.

46733. Hosiery, I suppose, is the next great staple industry?—Yes, that is the next staple trade.

46734. There has been a good deal of attention drawn locally to the administration of the Poor Law in Leicester, and at the last election there was a special effort made, was there not, by one political party, to increase their numbers on the board?—Three years ago, yes, that was the Labour Party.

46735. They have since then been in a strong position on the board?—Yes, very much so.

46736. What is the result of their being in this position, have the rates gone up and out-relief gone up?—My own opinion is that the result of it has been that there has been a very great increase in the relief in consequence of that; people have been encouraged to come to the guardians by members of the board.

46737. You, I think, imply in your statement that you think relief in various cases has been given unnecessarily, and without proper investigation?—I feel quite certain of it. We have evidence of it recently in surcharges which have been made on our relieving officers.

46739. You say that, on the present Board, there are several members who have relatives in receipt of relief?—That is so. I believe there are at least half a dozen members of the present Board whose relations either are at the present time, or have been, in receipt of relief in one form or another during the life of the present Board.

46741. Do you agree with that?—I strongly object to it, I have strongly urged on more than one occasion the advisability of the rotation of the committees.

46742. I suppose some may say that this last election brought in not only fresh members but altogether fresh ideas as to what should regulate the administration of the Poor Law?—Yes.

46743. One of the complaints before made was that the outdoor relief was not adequate, is that not so?—That was the complaint that was made.

46744. What have you to say on that?—I should say that cases could have been found where the relief was not adequate, but as a general statement I should say it was not correct.

46745. Have the proceedings of the Board attracted much attention, are they canvassed much in Leicester?—By a certain section, or I might say they are generally.

46746. Are periodical public meetings called reviewing the proceedings of the board of guardians?—No, they are not.

46747. The tendency of the modern idea is opposed to the increase of the officers, preferring that whatever money is spent should go to relief?—Yes.

46748. What has been the result—are your cases properly investigated?—No, I think there is a great deal to be desired, more thorough investigation. I think it is a physical impossibility for our relieving officers to do anything like the work they are called upon to do.

46749. Where that is the case I assume that the investigation by the committee is necessarily inadequate?—Yes.

46750. Does that cause much complaint that relief is given without proper investigation?—There is a certain amount of complaint about that.

46751. In Leicester have you much difficulty in getting the class of person whom you think is desirable to stand as a candidate for the board of guardians?—Yes, a very great difficulty indeed. I have been trying in the last two or three months to obtain candidates, knowing there would be many vacancies to fill up. I myself have asked at least thirty people to become candidates.

46752. Have you been successful?—Only in a very few cases.

thereof.

46753. What is the objection, is the discharge of the duties now very much criticised?—There are many objections, one is that the personnel of the Board has very much deteriorated, and there is a certain class of people who do not care to be mixed up with the representatives who are there; and then there is the length of time which is taken up, many of the meetings are unduly and unnecessarily prolonged.

Proposed transfer of Poor Law to the town council.

46754. I notice that there seems to be almost a consensus of opinion amongst the guardians who have written papers for us that the duties should be transferred to the town council?—Yes.

46755. You hold that view?—I do very strongly indeed.

46756. Do you hold that view because you think that the town council can better administer the Poor Law than a board of guardians, or do you hold it because the present position of the guardians is an unpleasant one, and you do not think a more satisfactory state of things can prevail unless the town council undertakes the duty?—I do not think that you would get so satisfactory a state of things as you would if the town council were to take it over. There is a difficulty in a town like Leicester in getting a sufficient number of suitable men to come forward to fill the whole of the offices both on the council and on the guardians; you want above 100 representatives.

46757. What is your board?—Our board is forty-eight and the town council is sixty-four.

46758. You have had a long experience as a Poor Law guardian, the work is quite a different class of work to anything that the town council do?—Yes, of course it would be a separate committee of the town council. I take it it is no more different from the work of the town council than the work of the Education Committee is from the work the town council did before the education work was handed over to them.

46759. Is not the work of the guardians more judicial, and does it not require careful investigation into the cases, which requires training and experience?—I do not see why you would not get that just as well with a committee of the council as you do with the guardians, in fact I think you would get it better, because I would certainly co-opt on to any committee that is formed from the town council, and co-opt suitable people.

Character of Leicester
Distress
Committee.

46760. Do you consider the Distress Committee was satisfactorily worked?—I believe so. I was not a member of the Distress Committee, but I believe it was satisfactorily worked as far as could be. Of course the class of men they have to deal with makes it very difficult to expect satisfactory results.

Effect of trades unions' minimum wage on unemployment.

46761. Is there anything peculiar in the industries of Leicester with regard to the employees, is juvenile labour superceding adult labour?—I should not think it is more than in other towns. In my opinion one great reason for the men being short of employment at forty or forty-five is the trade unions insisting upon a minimum wage; in the shoe trade as soon as a youth begins to get to be twenty or twenty-one he has to have the full wages.

46762. As soon as he gets to be twenty-one?—I am not sure that it is not twenty, it is twenty or twenty-one.

46763. That might prevent young people coming on, their inability to earn the full wage; but the allegation, whether it is true or not, is that it is rather the other end?—It is the crowding in at the bottom that crowds the older men out at the top, the young men who come in at the bottom are more handy and able to get through the work better, and they crowd the men out at the top.

46764. That is because the young men cannot be employed except at this rate?—Yes, a manufacturer, when he knows he has to pay a minimum wage, for his own existence is obliged to get the most skilful people he can for that money.

46765. Do you think this is at all an operative cause in depriving a man at a certain time of life of employment?—The minimum wage question?

46766. Yes?—Yes, I do.

46767. Has the Workmen's Compensation Act, in your judgment, reduced the age at which men in the old days could get work?—I do not think so. I have not heard that it has.

46768. As regards the future, do you think that Leicester has got through the worst, or do you think that these difficulties which you have had to encounter in the last few years are likely to crop up again?—I am afraid the outlook is not very much brighter at present. I should not like you to think we are quite so black as we are painted throughout the country.

46769. It has been depicted to us that there has been exceptional distress or lack of employment in proportion to the population in Leicester?—There has been exceptional distress, but not to the extent that some people have made out. We have been advertised as much as possible by the unemployed march to London and things of that sort, they have made us look much worse than we really are. The unemployed are so thoroughly well organised with us that they are always in the front.

46770. The number of people in receipt of relief is diminishing?—Just recently.

46771. Do you think you have got to the end of the immediate displacements of labour by new machinery in the boot factories?—I should think we have practically done.

46772. Are you a manufacturer?—Yes, I am in the hosiery trade.

46773. You have had these twelve years' experience as a Poor Law guardian, is it not rather an industrial difficulty that there must from time to time be changes in the machinery?—That is so, there must be, it is inevitable.

46774. Otherwise you cannot hold your own?—Yes, a shoe manufacturer, or so far as it goes, a hosiery manufacturer, now-a-days cannot hold his own unless he has up-to-date machinery.

46775. Take this change in the boot factories, I assume that although it has displaced a certain amount of labour, it has put the boot industry for the time being on a satisfactory footing so far as competition is concerned?—I believe so.

46776. If this periodical displacement of labour takes place, and it seems to me unfortunately almost certain it must, do you think the machinery of the Poor Law is adequate to deal with it?—Under the existing Poor Laws?

46777. Yes?—I think it could be considerably improved.

46778. For dealing with this particular class?—I take it that this will come in amongst other reforms that this Commission will report on. This will be one phase that you will not lose sight of.

46779. In your experience as a manufacturer has the same sort of thing occurred?—No, not within my experience. We had a similar experience in the hosiery trade, although not quite to such a marked extent, as they have had in the shoe trade.

46780. As competition increases it seems almost inevitable these displacements, though they may be small, will be more frequent?—Yes.

46781.—Have you any idea how the Poor Law could be supplemented to deal with this sort of case?—I am afraid it is beyond me.

46782. Have you any charity organisation working in accord with your Board?—We work with the Charity Organisation Society to a certain extent.

46783. Are there many charities, either endowed or voluntary, in Leicester?—Yes, we have a few charities there, there is the Wyggeston Hospital and the Trinity Hospital Charity, St. Margaret's Parish Church Charity besides several smaller ones.

46784. (Mr. Booth.) Does the Leicester Town Council in its control of education co-opt members?—Yes.

46785. And get people who are specially interested in the subject?—Yes.

46786. What proportion of co-opted members are there?—There are twenty-one members on the Education Committee and nine co-opted members.

46787. Making thirty in all?—Yes, on the Education Committee.

46788. When candidates put forward for election to the town council do they aim in any particular direction, do they stand specially with regard to education or with regard to any special subject?—No, not specially.

46789. They are not voted upon as representing that particular thing?—No.

46790. How are the committees finally selected, by agreement amongst themselves?—Yes, each member at the annual meeting of the council puts his name down for the committees which he would like to serve on, a limited number of committees, I think it is four committees, and if there are no more nominations than there are places on the committee he is elected as a matter of course, but if there are more nominations an arrangement is made, or if not, it has to be voted upon as to who is to retire.

46791. With regard to the Education Committee, did it involve an increase in the number of councillors?—No.

46792. If you were to add on the Poor Law work would it involve an increase?—No, I do not think so, I think with advantage some of the committees of the town council could be reduced in number.

46793. The number on each committee?—Yes.

46794. Have you been a town councillor?—Yes, I am on the town council now.

46795. How does the work which you have to do on that compare with the work which you have to do as a guardian?—That depends entirely on the committees one selects. I have selected the lighter committees on the town council, knowing I was a member of the Poor Law guardians as well; I have had to give a great deal of time during the last two or three years to the infirmary of the guardians, and that has taken my time.

46796. What proportion of your time do these public duties take up?—I could not tell you.

46797. A very large proportion?—Some weeks it has taken a large proportion and a great deal of evening time.

46798. So that you are actually doing both kinds of work now?—I am giving up the guardians now; I am retiring from the guardians next month. I may say I only remained on the guardians this present term of three years, after I was elected to the council, because the infirmary was just in the middle of building, and I was asked to stay on and see that through, so that that has been my work principally on the guardians during the last three years.

46799. (Mr. Nunn.) Do you think that the town council would attract a better class of men than the guardians would?—Yes, I think it would.

46800. Did you try to get any member of the Charity Organisation Society on your board when you were going round looking for candidates?—I do not think so.

46801. You did not ask any of them to stand?—No.

46802. Are there any members of that society on your board?—I am not sure, the committee of the Charity Organisation Society is only a small committee, only about a dozen; I do not think they are on, but I am not sure.

46803. Your idea of carrying over the functions of the board of guardians to the town council does not involve any diminution of the influence of the Local Government Board upon the administration of Poor Law relief?—Certainly not.

46804. You would have a statutory committee who would be as much under the influence of the Local Government Board as the board of guardians now is?—Yes I would.

46805. You spoke of a minimum wage among the boot-makers. May I ask how that is arrived at?—That was settled at a conference of the employers and employes, I think it is 28s. or 30s., I am not sure, it is not the same in every branch of the trade, but it was arrived at by a Joint Committee.

46806. Was that composed of representatives of organised unions of masters and men?—Yes.

46807. Not a special conference?—No; I think I might say pretty well all the shoe operatives are members of trades unions in Leicester.

46808. And the masters?—There is a Masters' Federation as well.

46809. Do they meet periodically?—Yes.

46810. And the minimum wage is fixed at their conference?—No; that minimum wage is fixed, they meet periodically for anything that may turn up in the way of disputes and that sort of thing.

46811. How long has that minimum wage been the minimum wage; you say it was some years ago that it was fixed?—I am afraid I cannot tell you how long.

46812. It has persisted through whatever fluctuations of trade have occurred since then?—Yes.

46813. (Miss Hill.) You consider the duties pretty onerous both on the town council and the guardians they make great claims on people's time?—Yes, they do, if a member is to do his duty.

46814. If the duties of the guardians were performed by the town council there would be further claims upon their time, except for the members that they co-opted, I gather?—Not necessarily so, because as I have said the members on the committees of the council could be reduced and that would leave some free to attend to the work of the Poor Law.

46815. And you think that the duties of the guardians do not demand a considerable number of people to do all the personal work which grows out of them; you do not think that the guardians having to do with people, and not with drains and roads, require a different kind of people to see to their work?—I do not see why they should; it is not the number of people, it is whether you get the right people.

46816. Have the guardians themselves used their powers of co-option?—No.

46817. I suppose the difficulty of getting the guardians is not wholly that people will not stand, but that they will not be elected; is that not so? Miss Carryer told me just now she did not expect to get on at all.—A good many people would be pleased if they were as sure to get on as Miss Carryer. Of course, with 108 candidates in the field, and only forty-eight to be elected, a great many will not get in.

46818. It is not the difficulty of finding the number to stand, but the right people?—That is so.

46819. You do not see any reason for separating the very different class of work which has been done by the guardians from that which has been done by the town Council?—I do not.

46820. (Chairman.) The elections are generally fought on political grounds?—Yes, they are.

46821. And in municipal elections also, I suppose?—It is inevitable, it is the only organisation you have; one is obliged to fight them on political lines.

46822. (Dr. Downes.) You say you have only received a few complaints with regard to your infirmary, and those do not bear investigation?—That is so.

46823. From what source did those complaints come?—I have had one or two from patients themselves given to me when I have been round, and other complaints have been brought to the committee by members of the committee, but not investigated by them before they brought them to the committee.

46824. What is the machinery of your board for investigating any complaints?—If it were a complaint of the the infirmary the infirmary committee would deal with it, if it was anything of a serious nature they would appoint a sub-committee to enquire into it.

46825. The infirmary is under a matron, I think?—That is so.

46826. You find that a satisfactory arrangement?—Yes.

46827. You have in addition to the resident medical officers, you have told us, a visiting medical officer?—Yes.

46828. Is the infirmary open to the visitation of the guardians at any time?—Yes, and full use is made of that, I can assure you.

46829. Are friends of the inmates allowed to visit?—Every Saturday afternoon.

46830. Ministers of religion?—Yes, Established Church, Non-conformist, and Catholic.

46831. If there were any repeated acts of brutality to the sick is it likely that the public would not become aware of that?—Of course they would, the next day probably.

46832. Would the Leicester public be likely to stand such treatment of their sick?—Certainly not, neither would the Committee for a moment, nor the matron.

46833. The guardians are elected by a democratic election?—Yes.

46834. The electors could make their feelings known at the elections?—Yes.

46835. Could you suggest any more effectual check on official harshness?—I do not admit there is any harshness.

46836. I know you do not, but could you suggest any further check than the machinery you have?—No, I could not.

46837. Is it not the fact that so far from there being any reluctance to come in, you have actually applications to come in as paying patients?—We have had some.

46838. In the event of any transference of your duties to the town council I gather that you would favour their being carried out by a statutory committee?—Certainly.

46839. Should you be in favour of the representation of charitable or other interests on a committee of that sort?—Yes, I think so; they would be some of the members that I should co-opt certainly.

46840. To represent the various interests?—Yes.

46841. With reference to the necessity for manufacturers bringing their machinery up to date that of course is due to competition?—Yes.

46842. Is that competition a home competition chiefly, or a foreign competition?—It is chiefly a home competition in the shoe and hosiery trades.

46843. (Mr. Gardiner.) I have heard it stated that at frequent intervals meetings are held in the market place at Leicester at which the proceedings of the Board of Guardians at its preceding meeting have been discussed publicly?—That is so, by the Labour Party.

46844. Therefore that might result in the action of a particular guardian, say in refusing out-relief, being held up to criticism?—It very likely would be, his name would be given without any hesitation to the public.

46845. Therefore in a time of stress and pressure such as that through which you have passed, there might be very real danger of that particular guardian suffering from his windows being broken and so on?—I should not like to say it would go so far as that, but he would be a marked man.

46846. (Chairman.) Names are given?—Yes.

46847. According to how they vote?—Yes, it is done over and over again.

46848. Have guardians been subjected to personal inconvenience and molestation in consequence?—I do not know that they have; some of us are not looked upon with any very great satisfaction by the Labour Party, some of us who are independent in our action.

46849. (Mr. Gardiner.) And that perhaps leads to some extent to the difficulty of your getting candidates, does it?—I have no doubt it does.

46850. A married man, say with a family, naturally objects to a visit from a deputation from a market place meeting?—Do not misunderstand me, there have been no deputations from market place meetings to any individual guardian. I do not think anything like that would be likely to happen.

46851. Why do you find it so difficult to get guardians to stand of the stamp you would like to see?—I think, as I said to the Chairman, so many people say they will not be mixed up with it, the thing has got down to such a low pitch that people will not be mixed up in it: my own friends have told me over and over again, not one but dozens of them, that they cannot think how I stand it, having regard to the amount of abuse that I have from time to time.

46852. I have also been told that part of the difficulty in Leicester in these changing industries has been due to unauthorised strikes, that is strikes not authorised by the union, is that so?—There are a certain number of small unauthorised strikes from time to time in the shoe

I do not think that has accentuated the position at all ; they are only small things at the finish ; but there is a tendency on the part of some of those who are Trade Unionists, if a thing does not please them, to throw their tools down and come out of the factory and declare a strike, although that is against the rules of the Federation entirely.
46853. In this very difficult time through which you as a guardian have been passing, have you received the help that you would have liked from the inspectors of the Local Government Board ?—Yes, I think so.
46854. They have given you all the help you could reasonably expect, both as regards difficulties as they arise and also, if I may put it in this way, in training inexperienced guardians ?—I cannot say that they have had anything to do with training inexperienced guardians, because they are not there sufficiently to do that ; they have always been glad to give us their advice whenever we have asked for it.
46855. Do you think your work would have been lessened had they been able to give you more time ?—I do not think so.
46856. I am assuming that a great many members who have been put on by the Labour Party desire to do what is best for the poor and not merely to carry out a particular political programme ?—You are making a very large assumption there.
46857. At any rate I have heard that elsewhere ; what I meant was rather supposing the Local Government Board inspector had been able to give you more time, you might have got better work out of your new guardians ?—I do not think so.
46858. You think they came simply to carry out a particular policy with a political intent ?—Yes.
46859. (Chairman.) At these meetings that are held, the names of guardians are mentioned, are the names of officers, say the relieving officers, mentioned ?—I am afraid I could not tell you that, I have never heard it myself, so I should not like to say. I should be surprised if it is not so.
46860. Have the relieving officers at all had to ask for the protection of the board of guardians, or have they complained at all that their duties are carried on now at personal inconvenience to themselves ?—I have never heard that.
46861. As far as you know the names of officials of the institutions have not been mentioned ?—As far as I know.
46862. (Mr. Phelps.) I gather from you that the administration of relief is a very delicate and difficult work in Leicester ?—Very difficult indeed.
46863. You would rather see it transferred to the Town Council ?—Yes.
46864. Do you think in your experience that it is a duty that can be trusted to a democratically elected body ?—I think it would be better if it were not.
46865. You would be glad to see somebody in the way of a stipendiary administrator ?—Of course so much depends on whether you get the right man, everything depends on that, but I do not think people who are not direct ratepayers themselves are the people to have the giving away of other people's money.
46866. Are the majority of the small ratepayers in Leicester ratepayers, or do their landlords compound ?—No, the landlords pay the rates, they pay them with the rents.
46867. Do you think it would be a good thing if composition were abolished ?—I do, but it is impracticable. I have been on a sub-committee of our Finance Committee of the Town Council and we have been going into that matter. I had reluctantly to give way and admit it was impracticable.
46868. You think it would be better if it could be managed in any way ?—Yes.
46869. I suppose a good many manufacturing concerns are now joint stock companies ?—Not many with us.
46870. At any rate we have a large number of joint stock industrial concerns in various towns ?—Yes.
46871. Have you ever gone into the question of whether they could be represented in any way on boards of guardians ?—I have not.
46872. Or on any rate spending body ?—I have not gone into the question at all.
46873. Do you think it would be a good thing if some thing of that sort could be done ?—It is rather a difficult question to answer off-hand.
46874. Take for instance the railways, they must be large ratepayers in Leicester ?—Yes, they are very large ratepayers.
46875. And have no representation on any board ?—Not as a railway company.
46876. There may be casual shareholders who live in Leicester and that would be all ?—Yes.
46877. You would not like to express an opinion whether that would be desirable ?—No ; of course it would lead on at once, if a railway company is entitled to be represented, well the shoe trade is entitled, and then we may get on to some other trade, and you have never finished.
46878. You knew the old system of election before 1895 ?—Yes.
46879. Do you think that was a better system ?—No, certainly not.
46880. You do not think the results of that were any better ?—No, when owner's papers were delivered altogether and it was a question of who could get hold of them first and fill them up.
46881. On that ground at any rate you think the change was a good one ?—Yes.
46882. Do you look forward hopefully with regard to present class of guardians ; do you think you see an improvement ?—No, unfortunately not ; the more important Parties, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party have had to get candidates at any price at the finish ; we have had to bring forward men whose expenses have had to be paid because we could not get the class of men we wanted to get.
46883. What creates public opinion in Poor Law matters in a town like Leicester, is it the Press or the public speakers or what ?—I do not know I am sure ; all those things would contribute to it very largely.
46884. Does the Press take an active part in Poor Law matters ?—Yes.
46885. Particular papers ?—We have only one daily paper.
46886. Does that take a strong line ?—Not very.
46887. Between out-door and in-door relief, for instance ?—Yes, but like many other papers they sit on the fence and offend no one, so you get it very weak, at the finish.
46888. With regard to efficiency of administration, do they generally urge that institutions should be up-to-date, and so forth ?—Yes.
46889. Public opinion is healthy from that point of view ?—Yes, but with a certain class there is always an outcry against all official expense, people who do not know that it is inevitable.
46890. Do you find that the salaries of officers is a question upon which people express themselves ?—Yes.
46891. Is there a tendency to cut down salaries of officers ?—Yes, of the more highly paid officials.
46892. Do you find that acts prejudicially in your choice ?—I should say, yes.
46893. Do you find that the confidence of the board is given freely to the officers and they are supported by the board ?—They are not supported by the board.
46894. Not ?—Not at all. I have a list here of case after case which has been reported by the relieving officer as unfit for out-door relief, where the committees have granted out-door relief in opposition to the wishes of the officers.
46895. Are the officers feeling that a great deal ?—They are feeling it a great deal.
46896. Will you put that list in ?—Certainly. (See Appendix No. XXV. (A.)) interference with poor law officers by individual guardians.

46897. (Chairman.) Is there any interference by individual guardians with officers in the discharge of their duties?—Yes.

46898. Both in the institutions and otherwise?—Yes. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the institutions about the manner in which some members of the board go about among the inmates, and make all sorts of enquiries as to officials behind the backs of the officials. Of course that leads to unpleasantness, and in many cases the unsupported testimony of an inmate is taken altogether against the word of an official by some of the members of the board.

46899. (Mr. Phelps.) Under the existing law, a guardian has access to the workhouse at any time practically?—Yes.

46900. That is an alteration that was made not many years ago, I think?—Yes.

Attitude of guardians towards control of poor law officers by Local Government
Board.

46901. Does the board object to the Local Government Board control of their officers?—Not the more thoughtful section of the board.

46902. You have not had complaints made about that?—No.

46903. (Chairman.) You were Chairman of the Distress Committee, were you not?—No, I was Chairman of the Old-Age Treat Committee at the time of the Coronation, the Mayor's Committee of the town, that is all.

46904. I think it was reported to us that the Distress Committee established a certain test which it could impose on those applying for relief, and that as the distress got greater they made the test lighter. Do you recollect if that was so?—Do you mean the Distress Committee of the Corporation?

Unsatisfactory results of work found for the unemployed
at Leicester.

46905. Yes?—I never heard of that. I might say with reference to finding work for the unemployed, both those who have come to the guardians and the Distress Committee, that I have had something to do with that, and the result has been very unsatisfactory indeed. I have found men work, and although they have declared they would do anything they could to keep it, the results have been most unsatisfactory. I got a lot of the men away to the Derwent works, our new water works there, and out of the dozen or so I sent at my own expense, only three or four of them kept the work. We sent men also on to other work which I was instrumental in getting for them under the corporation, and the results were very unsatisfactory. I could give you the figures as to the numbers who were sent and the numbers who were kept on the job.

Kemp.

at Leicester.

46906. If you will kindly do that it will be useful?—I will hand them in. (See Appendix XXV. (B.))

46907. (Mr. Gardiner.) Does that give the trades the men pursued before they came to the Distress Committee?—I am afraid not. When I had an opportunity of sending some of these men to the Derwent, I went up to our infirmary where we had some of the unemployed at work on the land, and told the foreman there who was superintending them that I wanted a dozen suitable men picked out and I would send some of them to the Derwent, and he got some ten or a dozen men there, and I went to them and told them what I wanted, and three or four of them at once backed out and said they did not care about the work.

46908. (Chairman.) These were labourers?—Yes. I sent three, paid their fares down, and they never went to the work at all; they simply went to the nearest public-house when they got to Grindleford, one man sold his boots, they stopped there till they had spent the money and then walked back.

46909. (Mr. Booth.) Without boots?—He had an old pair he managed to pick up, in which he came home, but he had a good pair when he went. These are things that are so discouraging when you are trying to deal with the unemployed.

46910. (Mr. Gardiner.) With regard to the agricultural experiment, have you any figures?—Yes.

46911. May we have them as well?—Would you like the result, the loss?

46912. The total number employed and the result?—I can give you the figures of both the guardians' and the corporation work as well.

46913. And any result you have had from that?—Yes, and the number of thousands of pound we have lost. (See Appendix No. XXV. (C) and (D.))

Mr. FRANCIS WILLIAM ISLIP, called ; and Examined.

46914. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Leicester board of guardians?—I am.

46915. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief if you will hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

I. I have been a Guardian for fifteen years, and I have been Chairman of the House or Visiting Committee, Chairman of Finance Committee, Chairman of Assessment Committee, of various Relief Committees, and Chairman of the Board.

Industrial
conditions in Leicester and causes of increased use of machinery

2. The two chief industries of Leicester are the hosiery trade in all its branches, and the shoe trade. The hosiery trade employs young women mostly in the factories, and some men in the warehouse work with women. The boot and shoe trade employs both men and women in the manufacture, men for working the heavy and expensive machines for lasting, riveting, etc., and women for eye-letting, flowering, etc. The use of machinery has increased tremendously in this trade during the last few years, principally from two causes:—

I. The severe competition from abroad; and

II. From the demands of the trade unions, which are very strong in Leicester, for a minimum wage.

Effect of trades union minimum wage on unemployment, etc.

No. II., again, has had the effect of throwing out of work many scores of men who were too old or slow to earn the minimum wage demanded, of 28s. per week, and who have thus been compelled to apply to the guardians for relief and work.

These are the chief causes why we have had such large numbers applying for work on the labour-test, and why our numbers have increased in a much larger proportion than other towns of similar size.

3. We have made several experiments in administration during the past three years.

Mr. F. W.
Islip.

19 Mar. 1907.

(a) We have opened a wood yard away from the workhouse, where we have sent from sixty to 120 men, being the lame and others physically unfit to work on the land, to saw, chop and bundle fire-wood, at which work we have incurred a great loss, year by year, and have practically shut up all the private firewood dealers in the borough.

(b) We have also 48 acres of heavy land a mile out of the town, where we have employed the able-bodied men in digging, planting, manuring, and attending to vegetables, tomatoes, etc. Here we have also incurred a very considerable loss.

(c) We have opened a receiving home for children before they are sent either to the Countesthorpe Cottage Homes (where there is room for about 240 children), and two scattered homes in the town, one for boys, and the other for girls, which, I believe, are considered successful so far.

4. Both indoor and outdoor relief are necessary in the present state of things—indoor relief for the aged, infirm, and feeble-minded, especially for disabled and-out-able old people who have no friends, or whose friends decline to give them lodgings; out-door relief in cases where sons or daughters will have the old people, but who are too poor or have large families, and cannot support them altogether.

Classes
very suitable for disagree-in-and-out relief respectively.

5. Great care ought to be taken, and I think sufficient care in our parish is not taken, to give relief only in cases where the united earnings of the family demand that relief should be given to supplement the earnings.

6. We are too lavish in helping deserted women with children, and, as a consequence, we have a great many such cases on our books.

Need to consider united earnings of family before granting
relief.

Out-relief to deserted wives and its effects.

Need of weekly payment of pensions.
Effect of Local Government Act (1894) on status of Guardians.
Increase of pauperism at Leicester.
Lax out-relief at Leicester.
Need of more relieving officers at Leicester.
Direct payment of rates should be a qualification for the office of guardian.
Proposed annual retirement of Boards of Guardians by thirds.
Proposed transfer of poor law to the town council.
Unsatisfactory state of poor law administration in Leicester.
Difficulty in obtaining suitable guardians.
Lavish relief to deserted wives and its effect.
7. We have a good deal of trouble with pensioners, who, as soon as quarter day comes, take their discharge from the house, and in a fortnight or three weeks' time are back again utterly destitute. We all wish the Government could see their way to pay these men fortnightly or, better still, weekly.
8. The class of persons who seek election as guardians has distinctly become lower since I first became a guardian. I am now referring to candidates of all parties, and not to the Labour candidates only. And it has all come about since the abolition of the property qualification for guardians.
9. Our numbers of indoor and outdoor paupers have increased during the last ten years by leaps and bounds, until we stand at the head of the list of unions in the country but one, with the largest increase in numbers and the highest cost per head of population of the four county towns in the North Midland district.
10. Our present guardians are governed too much by sentiment, and give out-relief in cases where they only ought to give an order for the House. In other cases, where the united income is, or ought to be, sufficient to maintain the family, and in cases where the children can, but decline to, maintain their parents.
11. We have lately increased the number of our relieving officers from four to six, but the numbers on relief have again exceeded the proportion they can properly look after and investigate, and the board has repeatedly refused to increase the number again, or to appoint a superintendent officer.
12. It is most difficult to suggest any reforms which would adequately meet the situation, but I may perhaps give a hint or two :—
- (a) Make everybody pay their own rates, weekly houses included (if possible). Any way, every candidate for guardians or council should do so, and any candidate who did not, should be disqualified to be nominated.
- (b) One-third of the guardians should be elected every year, as for the town council, and not, as now, all come out every third year. The change would be more gradual, and the new members would be fewer, and so learn their duties better and quicker from the older guardians.
- (c) Or, better still, abolish the office altogether, and hand over the duties to the town council, who will perhaps do it better (cannot do it worse), especially if they left the administration of the relief to the officials, who would certainly do it better.
46916. (Chairman.) You have very succinctly stated your views in your statement. Do you agree generally with the evidence that has been given by Mr. Kemp?—Yes, nearly in everything.
46917. From your point of view the state of affairs is very unsatisfactory as regards the administration of poor relief in Leicester now?—Very indeed.
46918. And disheartening for those who have been interested in the old system and who wish to maintain a good system of Poor Law administration?—Entirely.
46919. You agree with him in thinking the present state of things deters competent men from coming forward?—Yes, we have found it so.
46920. The relief committees, in your judgment, do not thoroughly investigate the cases, for instance they are too lavish in helping deserted women with children?—That is so.
46921. Is your view that that encourages the husbands to desert their wives?—Yes, we find it does very much indeed, especially just at the time the wife is likely to be confined the men go away knowing perfectly well that their homes will be kept together for them while they are away, and as soon as the trouble is over the men come back.
46922. There is a good deal of collusion you think between the two?—Yes, in that way, I do not think there is any actual collusion except that in a good many cases the women know the men are going away just at that time. I do not think the men send their wives any money when they are away.
46923. Do you think the state of things through which you have passed is at all likely to occur again, that there will be another period of distress of at all similar dimensions?—I do not see any reason to believe otherwise, because at the present time trade is very active. If we had a time of great depression of trade in Leicester, I think the number would increase, because we have been, by our action in giving work to the unemployed, keeping the men in Leicester instead of enticing them to go to other towns for work.
46924. You were on the distress committee, were you not?—No, I declined to go on.
46925. Is it true the scale of relief was raised?—Yes.
46926. What was the effect?—The effect was largely increased numbers applied; you mean for the labour test?—Effect of increasing scale of relief in labour yard.
46927. Yes?—I pointed out at the time that any increase in either out-relief or in the labour test scale would have that result.
46928. Have you any figures to show that people were brought in from outside in consequence of the scale going up?—No, I do not think so.
46929. It only affected the number of people in the locality who came for relief?—Yes, I have heard it said that people came from outside, but I do not think that was to any appreciable extent except the natural immigration of labourers from the country to the town which which is always taking place.
46930. Do you agree with the preceding witness that individual members of the board of guardians now interfere with officers in the discharge of their duty?—Yes, very frequently. I have found complaints prevail from some of the officers about the action of certain members of the board who have interfered with their duties to a very large extent.
46931. And such interference you think is bad for administration and discipline?—Yes.
46932. Are you on the workhouse committee?—I am not on the house committee now, I have not been this last three years.
46933. There seem to be a good many able-bodied men in the Leicester workhouse?—Yes. It is difficult to know what to do with them, because the present board will not allow them to break stones or pick oakum, or do anything but chop wood, and as their task is very light they are quite content to remain where they are. May I say also that until about six or seven years ago we were able to buy railway sleepers and wagon sides from the railway company which were of much harder wood to split than the wood we are having now, which is pit props; they are made of pine, consequently, not having increased the number of pieces that the men have to chop in a day, their work is very much lighter than it used to be because the wood is easier to split.
46934. You would say that the able-bodied people in the workhouse are not given or put through an adequate test at present?—No, most of the men are finished their day's work by about two o'clock; from two till half-past.
46935. It is in consequence of this unsatisfactory state of things you think it would be better to get rid of the Board of Guardians and hand the duties over to the town council?—Yes, I do decidedly.
46936. Is that rather a council of despair, that you do not think that you would be able to do anything with the present personnel of the guardians or do you think that the town council would do the work better?—It is partly that, I think, and partly the difficulty of finding men who are willing to come to take part in the work of such a board as we have at present. Those of us who have spoken our minds freely on a good many of these matters have been dreadfully abused both in public and in the board-room.
46937. It is made unpleasant for you, I suppose?—Yes, very; I have been called a liar, a welsher, and a sharper, and I do not know what, in the board-room; it is not very pleasant, I have got used to it, I do not mind it now.
46938. Is the language improving, or do you think it is as bad as ever?—I do not think it can be worse.
- Prospects recurring periods of distress in Leicester.
Effect of increasing scale of relief in labour yard.
Interference by individual Leicester Guardians with poor officers.
Able-bodied men in Leicester workhouse and question of their employment.
Proposal to transfer poor law to the town council.

46939. Failing the transfer of the duties to the council, you would like to have a system by which one-third of the guardians retired each year?—It would be a very much better system than the present one. I have a list of new candidates for guardians with me, and I find out of forty-eight old guardians there are only twenty-seven standing, and several of those will not get on again, so that it practically means more than half of the guardians will be new members. If they follow their own ideas they will very likely go wrong, and on the other hand they may take the advice of the officials, and it is not always advisable that way.

46940. You think one remedy would be to make everybody pay their rates, but that is a very difficult matter?—I think every guardian at any rate, or every candidate should be ineligible for election unless he paid his own rates.

46941. What is the practice in Leicester, below what assessment does the landlord pay the rates?—There is not any scale now. We have had houses paying as high as £17 and £18 a year, the landlords are letting the houses now weekly and paying the rates. Our scale on the assessment committee only goes as high as 9s. a week, I think it is, but we have to make exceptions in many cases now that houses that used to be let quarterly are let weekly in consequence of the difficulty of letting houses. We had a case only last week, or the week before, where a house that was let at £35 a year is now let at 18s. a week.

46942. Have you any idea what led to the Labour Party so asserting themselves, was it in consequence of any action taken by the friendly societies as regards outdoor relief, or was it any general dissatisfaction in the town as regards the way the outdoor relief was administered?—I think it was the way the labouring classes were told that outdoor relief was administered in the past that has led to an increased number being put on.

46943. Did the guardians who came in recently as a rule promise more outdoor relief?—Yes.

46944. That was the inducement to vote, I suppose?—Yes.

46945. Do you think before they came in that the old scale of relief was adequate?—No, I do not think it was in all cases.

46946. So that there was some justification for agitation?—Yes.

46947. You are not aware that the friendly societies complained at all did they?—No.

46948. I suppose a very small proportion of the electorate vote at these guardian elections?—Very small.

46949. Have you any idea whether it would be as much as 30 per cent.?—More than that, at the last election three years ago there was something over 40 per cent.; I do not know quite what.

46950. (Mr. Chandler.) Is the minimum wage in the hosiery and the boot industries that minimum wage of 28s. you refer to?—No, only the shoe industry.

46951. You rather feel that the establishment of that minimum wage has been the cause of an increased number of applicants for relief to the guardians?—Yes, there is no doubt about it.

46952. Do you not think there would be some danger if the minimum were removed, in the face of this keen competition you refer to, of the men being reduced almost to the starvation point?—I do not know that a minimum wage need be altogether abolished if the trades unions would allow older men to work for a lesser wage. They say in theory that they are allowed to, but they have to go before the trade union and get a ticket to permit them to work at less, and I understand from some of the men who applied that it is the most difficult job in the world, it is almost impossible to get a ticket from the trade union.

46953. Of course the regulation of that arrangement would be very desirable; would it not?—Yes. May I say that in consequence of the difficulty of the men getting these tickets, I believe the numbers in the trades unions are decreasing in Leicester now.

46954. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do you know whether any of the guardians have relations inmates of the workhouse?—I do not know whether there are any at the present time; there have been, I know, two cases where they have had relations in the workhouse, and the guardians have been on the house committee, managing the house.

46955. That might make difficulty with the master, perhaps?—Yes. I do not know that it did, but our master is a very genial man, he can work with anybody almost.

46956. (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you ever thought of any system whereby Government grants might be altered so as to enable the Local Government Board to exercise increased control?—No, I have not; I do not know that the Local Government Board requires increased control.

46957. A great many things have gone on which you do not approve of?—But we have very often gone contrary to the direct orders of the Local Government Board.

46958. If the Local Government Board could cut off a grant if you disobeyed the orders, that would act as a check?—Yes, that would be a good thing.

46959. (Dr. Downes.) Have the guardians appointed any of their relatives as officers?—Only in two cases; I think one of the guardians had a niece an assistant at the workhouse.

46960. Do you train your probationers at the infirmary for trained nurses?—Yes.

46961. Have you found any tendency amongst the guardians to put their relatives on there?—I think there have been one or two applicants come from the guardians, but I do not think they have been appointed.

46962. Does the matron select the candidates there?—The matron generally gives us her opinion, which is the best one, and I think we generally follow it.

46963. She has the controlling voice?—Yes.

46964. (Professor Smart.) Your wood yard has practically shut up all the private fire-wood dealers in the borough; has the board of guardians paid any attention to the complaint on the part of the private firewood dealers?—It has been brought to the attention of the board, but they have always laughed at it.

46965. And still go on?—Yes.

46966. Do they admit that it has shut up the other yards?—Yes.

46967. With regard to that 48 acres of heavy land you have, is that for test work entirely?—Yes.

46968. You use it as a test?—Yes.

46969. Is it successful as a test?—Fairly so; it is very difficult to set a man a task on land; he does practically what he likes under supervision, of course.

46970. To that extent it is not a test at all?—It is not a test of the actual amount of work.

46971. It does not get rid of any undesirable characters, men who could do better outside, does it?—No.

46972. The introduction of machinery into the hosiery trade is not a new thing, of course?—No.

46973. The hosiery trade has not passed of recent years from a hand industry to be a machine industry, as the shoe industry has?—Not in such a short time as the shoe industry; it has done since I can remember, but not so quickly as the boot industry has done.

46974. Why do we not hear so much about the introduction of machinery into the hosiery trade, is it not very like the introduction of machinery into every trade?—I should think it is.

46975. There is nothing peculiar about it, as there is about the boot trade?—No.

46976. (Mr. Booth.) You have two kinds of test work at Leicester, this 48 acres of stiff land for spade work, and also the wood yard?—Yes.

46977. Do you select the cases as being suitable for one test or the other test?—Yes.

46978. What would be the qualification which would lead you to choose the wood yard?—A man in infirm health, who is not able to walk the distance that it is to the land; I do not know that there is anything else.

46979. The others are the more robust?—Yes, the stronger men.

46980. I went to the 48 acres place, it is quite a long way away?—Yes.

19 Mar. 1907.
Test work for able-bodied paupers at Leicester.
Educational effect of agricultural work for able-bodied paupers.
46981. How many miles is it to walk?—It is a mile from the outside of the borough; it is three miles or more from the other side of the town.
46982. So that that walking to and fro every day is a certain amount of deterrent?—Yes, I should say so.
46983. But you have men there who hang on, and who have accepted that mode of earning their living for months and months, if not years?—Yes, in several cases for over two years we have had them on.
46984. Has the work there proved educational?—Yes, I think it has to a certain extent, some of the men who have got interested in the work are turning out fairly skilled gardeners, and are very fond of the work on the land, and would be able to manage a small garden themselves.
46985. They take an interest in the work, so that although it has been very expensive, it has educated them to a certain extent?—Yes.
46986. Are they fit for emigration?—I think so, some of the best of them.
46987. Have any been emigrated?—Yes.
46988. There is an effort made to pass them on to self-supporting industry?—I am afraid not, except in the way of emigration; we have had one or two applications there for assistant gardeners, and I think the men that we have been able to send to that employment have been fairly successful.
46989. In the first instance, it has been rather hard work getting the ground into order?—Yes.
46990. Gradually, when that was done, the bulk of the work would become more interesting?—That is so.
46991. (Professor Smart.) Do these men live in the workhouse?—No, they live at home.
46992. (Mr. Booth.) They live at home and get wages, not in respect of the work they have done, but in respect of the number of children that have to be supported; that is it, is it not?—That is so.
46993. Do you imagine that there will be a constant supply of those who seek relief in this way?—Yes, I look forward to a constant supply in the way we treat them at the present time.
46994. You look forward with apprehension?—Yes, if trade gets bad in Leicester, I do not know what we shall do with them, if we treat them as we are doing now.
46995. But the provision of so large a piece of ground would look as if it was deliberately expected and intended that there should be always an object for it?—Yes, the evil is we have not enough ground now to employ all the men properly that we have to send up there.
46996. Are you increasing the value of the land?—Yes.
46997. Have you counted that in estimating how much loss there has been made on it?—No, I think not, not in the valuation.
46998. It is an interesting experiment from that point of view?—Yes, we are paying a high rent for it, and we are putting a great deal of manure and labour into it in the hope of eventually making it almost pay its way; I do not think it ever will.
47999. It is not freehold?—No, it belongs to the corporation.
47000. The guardians have taken it from the Corporation?—Yes.
47001. And they have a short tenure?—Yes.
47002. Are they improving the corporation's property?—As a matter of fact, we have only a very short tenure; it is next to the cemetery, and we had notice from the town clerk only about three months ago, that possibly they might require it.
47003. Have you anything further you would like to add to your statement, if so, we shall be very pleased to hear it?—I have one or two little things that I should like to mention. With regard to Paragraph 2, I should like to add that as a result of the action of the trades unions with regard to minimum wages, many manufacturers have moved a part, or in some cases, all of their machinery into the country, where wages are lower, and rates are less and land is cheaper, thus increasing again the number out of employment in the town and increasing the number of empty houses. I believe there are twenty-
- one villages in which manufacturers had built factories in Leicestershire.
47004. Do you mean that they have hitherto been employing men in the factories that are now left behind, and new labour is found in the villages?—I should say that it acts in both ways; some of the men are taken with the factories, a good many of the men are left behind, and fresh men are taken on in the country.
47005. Is the new labour that is obtained in the country also union labour?—No. Then as to Paragraph 3, besides the work that I have put down as having been done in the last three years, I think it has been mentioned, we have increased the pay and lessened the hours of the test men, and Saturday afternoon has also been allowed as a holiday, which they were not allowed before, so increasing the attraction of the labour test in that way. I am strongly of opinion that the task of stone-breaking should not have been discontinued for able-bodied men, for the following reasons: First, it is a task they dislike, and therefore they are more likely to desire other kinds of work and seek for it. Secondly, it is easily seen if a man does his task or if he shirks it. This is impossible on the land, where you have a large number of men, besides which, in frosty, very wet, or snowy weather the men cannot work on the land, and they sit in the shed, around the fire, smoking and talking and further confirming the habits of laziness which many of them have already acquired. As to Paragraph 6, the relief of deserted women, we have at the present time in receipt of outdoor relief twenty-four women with sixty-three dependent children; that is taken from the books last week. The numbers vary, of course, but, as I said before, a great many of the men, shoe operatives principally, go away just before their wives are confined, and we keep the house over their heads for them to come back to. As to Paragraph 7, I should like to say pensioners have been a trouble all the time. When I say pensioners, I mean Army Reserve men, and any men who, after having served a time in Government employ, receive a quarterly payment of some sort. I do not mean only pensioners, but all that class of men; they have been a trouble all the time I have been on the board; we have had numberless communications to and from the War Office over particular cases in order to find out how much the pension is, and to be able to stop a certain part of it, having it paid direct to our relieving officer, and then handing the pensioner the balance. I have the particulars of some who are on relief now, eight or ten of them, in the house, and others who just go out before their pension day for two or three weeks, and then come back again utterly penniless. The suggestion I make is that pensions should be paid fortnightly or even weekly; it would be a very great assistance to the guardians, and I think help the men too, to keep them steady and sober. One or two of the witnesses to-day have mentioned about the committees sitting for the districts which they represent; I think that is a very bad plan indeed. It has worked very badly in Leicester, and the committee either ought to sit for some district that they have no connection with at all, or else they ought to rotate as they do at Nottingham. We have tried several times to persuade the board to allow the committees to rotate, but they never would hear of it.
47006. (Dr. Downes.) Have you any experience of former periods of distress in Leicester?—Yes, we have had one or two.
47007. Have you known Leicester for many years?—Yes, twice before, I think, we have had a fair number of persons on the labour test.
47008. How have they compared with the more recent period?—The last one before this last winter we had about seventy men on the test instead of between 300 and 400 at the present time.
47009. Was trade better then or worse?—I should think, I cannot say positively, that it was worse then.
47010. (Mr. Gardiner.) What year was that?—That would be about six or seven years ago.
47011. What bad time was there before that 1900 bad time?—It was the first year I was on the board, that would be fifteen years ago, I think.
47012. In 1892?—Yes, I believe it was.
47013. Was that following the big strike?—I think it was.

The Rev. WILLIAM EDWARD CHADWICK, called; and Examined.

47014. (Chairman.) You are Vicar of St. Giles, Northampton?—I am.

47015. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence-in-chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I have only been in Northampton three and a half years, but as vicar of an old parish church I have had considerable advantages in forming impressions and obtaining evidence on the various subjects upon which you ask for information. Previous to coming here I worked for fifteen years in a large and by no means rich parish on the outskirts of Manchester, and previous to that in large parishes in Bradford (in Yorkshire), and in Coventry, where I have had varied experiences with which I can compare my experiences in Northampton.

CHARITIES AND VOLUNTARY EFFORT.

2. I should regard Northampton as relatively rich in charities. Of the educational charities I know little. I confine myself to speaking of those of whose operation I have personal experience:—

(a) St. Thomas' Hospital (so-called), whereby from 130 to 140 widows or spinsters of above sixty years of age, who have not been in receipt of parish relief for 12 months previous to their appointment, or are not possessed of property exceeding £200, receive 5s. each weekly, and twelve receive lodging, coal, gas, rates, taxes, and some service in the almshouse, and 6s. each per week.

There are some twenty trustees of this charity who co-opt new trustees when vacancies occur. The trustees in turn nominate the recipients. In the future all the trustees and the indoor recipients must be members of the Church of England.

Observation.—This charity cannot be said to be given in relief of rates, but one result of its existence should be to reduce the number of those for whom the Poor Law might have to provide.

(b) St. John's Hospital (so-called).—The funds of this charity now mainly provide and maintain a convalescent home at Weston Favell—on high ground some two miles from the town.

Observation.—The results of this charity I regard as beneficial. As chaplain of the general hospital I have known many poor people, after hospital treatment, sent to the convalescent home. Their complete recovery is thereby accelerated, and they are more quickly able to return to work.

(c) St. Giles' Feoffees.—The feoffees are nominally fifteen in number, but there need be no re-election until there are eight vacancies, when the surviving trustees co-opt to supply the full number. The income of the feoffees is charged with annual payments of £15 to the vicar of St. Giles'; £4 3s. 4d. to the clerk of St. Giles'; and a grant of £15 to the Sunday schools of St. Giles', St. Edmund's and St. Michael's. The balance of the annual income is divided among the feoffees for distribution among the poor in the ancient parish of St. Giles' (now containing c. 35,000 people) in money and bread. The amount falling to each feoffee varies from about £5 to £15 according to the rents (less repairs, etc.) from the estate and according to the number of the feoffees.

Observation.—Actually most of the feoffees hand over their money to various district visitors who distribute the money in sums of from about 1s. to 5s., and in bread tickets to (generally) deserving poor people in their districts. It is often given in cases of sickness, or as Christmas gifts. I should say that now it is never given politically. It may do good in cases of temporary sickness. It rarely can do much harm.

(d) Stratford Charities, by which in the parishes of St. Giles', St. Sepulchre's, and St. Peter's, premiums of apprenticeship are paid for boys (nominated by the vicar and churchwardens) to learn a trade. The income on the average pays for one or two boys in each parish. The result of this charity I regard as beneficial.

(e) Arnold's Charity.—The only action of this charity which comes under my personal observation is that a sum of rather more than £5 a year is given in my parish, and the local trustee, after consultation with me, gives aid, generally in sums of not less than 20s. in cases of exceptional distress to deserving persons needing temporary assistance to prevent their having to apply to the guardians for relief. The result of this charity I regard as beneficial.

(f) Camp's Charity, by which twenty poor women, belonging to a class considerably above that which usually appeals to the Poor Law, receive a quarterly allowance of £5. This prevents their having to apply to the guardians. I regard the result of this charity also as beneficial.

3. The question of the respective effect on the recipients of charity and Poor Law out-relief is somewhat difficult to answer in respect to Northampton, where out-relief is so freely, indeed almost generally, given. Among the lower classes it is rapidly coming to be regarded as a "right" (where needed). "I've paid rates long enough. I don't see why I should not benefit from them," expresses

The Rev. W. E. Chadwick.
25 Mar. 1907.

Effect of charity and relief on the recipient; growth of idea of right to relief; increasing tendency to apply for relief, etc.

The Rev. W. a common point of view. Then in Northampton charity E. Chadwick. (not always regularly or in large sums) is very generally given, and very frequently to persons already in receipt of out-relief. There is still a class among the very poor who would accept charity in temporary distress (e.g., caused by sickness) who would hesitate to apply for out-relief; but I should say that the number of these is rapidly diminishing. The great change I have noticed is the rapid growth of readiness to seek for out-relief. The feeling that there is any disgrace in being on the parish is dying out. The feeling is growing that out-relief is a "right" which should be claimed.

Criticism of Poor Law administration at Northampton.

4. Among the guardians there is not one who can be regarded as an "expert" in the administration of the Poor Law. On the board the "public-house" interest is far too numerously represented (i.e., by seven or eight members). The relieving officers (though an additional one has recently been appointed) have far too many cases for either frequent or thorough investigation. There is far too little effort to make children—even those who are well able—support their aged parents, and still less effort to enforce orders of repayment. (Five of the borough magistrates are also members of the Town Council.) Among the very poor one rarely comes across a case where the feeling of family responsibility is strong.

Lack of charity organisation and of co-operation between guardians and charity, and evils thereof.

5. In Northampton there is little or no co-operation between charity and the Poor Law. The two constantly overlap and very generally help the same cases. There is very little "organisation of charity," or of knowledge by one agency of what another is doing. The knowledge (and practice) of how to give charity wisely is the possession of a very few people who are "crying in the wilderness." The amount of charity given in the aggregate is large; the amount of poor relief is of course very large. The combined result, I consider, is a widespread destruction of self-effort, of enterprise, and of determination to seek and find some means of self-support.

FRIENDLY CO-OPERATIVE AND OTHER SELF-HELP SOCIETIES.

Progress of friendly societies at Northampton.

6. From careful study of various annual reports and from recent conversation with those holding office in the various friendly societies having branches in the town, I gather that there is less inclination on the part of younger men to join the regular friendly societies such as the "Oddfellows," the "Foresters," and the "Free Gardeners." The only societies which seem to be making progress locally are the "National Deposit Friendly Society," and the "Northampton Artisans' and Labourers' Friend Society." I should say that the National Deposit Society appealed to a somewhat superior class to that to which, speaking generally, the other friendly societies appeal. The Artisans' and Labourers' Friend Society is purely local, and has a wide range of usefulness. It provides allotments, a deposit bank, enables its members to procure cheap coal on the co-operative system, and also advances money on satisfactory security in freehold houses or land. I should say that this society did much good, is well managed, and financially secure.

Increase of slate and dividend clubs.

7. While the older friendly societies are not relatively making progress, I should say that "slate clubs" and "sick and dividend societies," which "divide up" annually (and are almost invariably connected with public-houses), are increasing somewhat rapidly in popularity. I attribute this partly to a growing disinclination to wait for long-deferred benefit, and a preference for quick, if very temporary, advantages.

Attitude of socialism to thrift.

8. In Northampton there is a strong socialistic feeling, and I have been told more than once that Socialists as a body "do not believe in thrift," they do not regard it as a duty to be advocated. How widespread this teaching is I cannot judge.

The co-operative movement in Northampton.

9. The co-operative movement in Northampton is not strong; in a population of 90,000 there are but 2,215 members. Though the society has been in existence in the town for thirty-five years it has never been the influence which it is, say, in the West Riding of Yorkshire (where I have worked in the cause) or in Lancashire.

Question of possibility of friendly societies providing old age pensions.

10. I believe that the older friendly societies—the Oddfellows, Foresters, and Free Gardeners—believe that it is not possible for them to provide for old age pensions for their members. This is the opinion of all the officers with whom I have discussed the question. They state that the contribution which would be required from the members in order to do this would be greater than the members were able to pay. Certainly I should say it would be greater than the members were willing to pay.

11. On the other hand the National Deposit Friendly Society believes that it is possible for their society to provide old age pensions; but it must be remembered that the principle of self-help and self-effort is much more strongly demanded by this society, and, as I have said above, it seems to appeal to a somewhat superior clientèle.

12. From conversations which I have had with various officers and leading men in various friendly societies I can state that there is among them an absolute unity of opinion that: (a) Free medical State relief; (b) freely given Poor Law out-relief would act adversely as far as their societies were concerned, and would very materially reduce the number both of existing and prospective members.

The probable effect of a State system of old age pensions is more difficult to gauge, because the friendly society is generally regarded, as far as benefits are concerned, as a sick and burial society. It would probably affect the "National Deposit" more than the other friendly societies. Probably the more thrifty, "the better-off" and the more far-seeing men would continue membership, but the number of members would decline. The following answer was given to me by a friendly society officer of great experience: "I am of opinion that the State should leave the friendly societies to do their own work, and should deal with old age pensions as a national question apart altogether from friendly societies."

13. The Effect on Friendly Societies of Voluntary Hospitals.—The hospital system in Northampton is somewhat peculiar. Admission for both "in" and "out" patients is procured by "letters" which are purchased by subscribers and by them given to the poor. These "letters" the friendly societies purchase for their members, but the hospital compels them to pay a higher price for them than the ordinary subscriber pays. For a time the friendly societies rebelled against this rule, but they have found that it is necessary for them to abide by the terms demanded by the hospital. As a matter of fact the friendly societies now purchase just as many "letters" as they need.

14. In Northampton advantage is generally taken of the Act, which enables the guardians to take no notice of the amount of pension which a member of a friendly society is receiving. Generally this amount is small, from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. a week, and from this has to be deducted the monthly subscription, say about 2s. 2d. My impression is that the result of the Act is good, as it does not "fine" men for thrift.

GENERAL REMARKS.

15. I wish to add the following general observations:—It must be remembered that present conditions in Northampton are somewhat exceptional. There is practically only one trade—the shoe trade. The output of manufactured goods is now probably larger than ever, but the number of workers employed tends to become fewer. The trade is being concentrated into a few large factories, which are able to employ the most recent and rapid machinery.

16. I should say there is an unusual number of men above forty years of age out of work, consequently a large number of families are badly off because the fathers are earning little or nothing. Boys and youths and girls are largely employed—sometimes as a cheaper form of labour.

17. The rates are very high, and this is said to prevent new industries being established. The establishment of such is the greatest need of the present.

18. I do not think there is much migration of labour (or emigration), both of which demand a measure of self-effort.

47016. (Chairman.) You have been three and a half years in Northampton, but you have had a long previous experience as a vicar elsewhere?—That is so.

47017. You find the feeling in Northampton as regards out-relief is that it is something to which the ratepayer is entitled?—That is so, the feeling is growing that he has a right to what he regards as the result of compulsory insurance, as it were.

47018. You still find, however, that there is a class of persons who, whilst they will accept charity temporarily, will hesitate to apply for out-relief?—Yes, but I think that class is decreasing in number.

47019. You are not a member of the board of guardians?—No.

47020. With regard to the personnel of the guardians you would say that there is not much expert opinion amongst them?—Very little indeed.

47021. In your judgment there are not sufficient relieving officers to adequately perform their work?—I do not think there are, because there are 558 cases per officer.

47022. There is not much co-operation between charities and the Poor Law in Northampton?—Very little.

47023. I assume that the tendency of the out-relief administration, as there are not sufficient officers to thoroughly investigate the cases, and as the guardians have not great experience in these matters, is to give a little all round?—It is not given in very small sums; I could give you a list.

47024. I suppose we shall get witnesses who can speak more on that point. What is your idea of adequate out-relief, a week, say?—It all depends what other sources can be drawn upon; but in Northampton (I can speak personally for my own parish), I do not know of a single case in which there is any repayment to the guardians from children. If the guardians give out-relief there is no real effort to make the grown-up sons and daughters who might be able to pay, pay something back.

47025. The enforcing of the family liability is very rare?—Very rare indeed. I think there have been in two years six cases brought into court, and all have been discharged except one.

47026. In your judgment the co-operative societies are not making much progress?—Not in Northampton.

47027. And the older friendly societies are much in the same situation?—Yes, if anything, there is less than 1 per cent. of increase per year in the three largest societies.

47028. You attribute that, amongst other causes, to the increased popularity of the slate clubs, and the desire to divide?—Yes, the sick and dividend clubs, and the loan and dividend clubs are growing very rapidly in number in connection with public houses.

47029. There is a certain diversity of opinion amongst the societies as to the possibility of providing out of their funds old-age pensions; the Oddfellows and Foresters and such bodies do not believe it to be possible, on the other hand the National Deposit Friendly Society thinks it is feasible?—Yes, but to a large extent that depends upon the member's deposit remaining of such an amount that out of that can be drawn at least a considerable portion of what he would receive.

47030. There is a belief that free medical relief and free outdoor relief is detrimental to the growth of the societies?—Yes.

47031. Is there much free medical relief in Northampton?—Yes, it is comparatively easy to obtain it.

47032. There are a number of institutions?—There are a great many provident dispensaries; nearly every doctor who works among the poor has a provident dispensary.

47033. (Mrs. Webb.) Do you consider that free medical relief?—No, I was speaking of Poor Law medical relief.

47034. (Chairman.) As regards old-age pensions, you have discussed the matter with the members of various societies, and I understand that they are not altogether averse to the idea of a national old-age pension?—No, they are in favour of it; I think there is among working men a very general feeling growing in favour of a national system of old-age pensions.

47035. Do the friendly societies think it would not interfere with or diminish their numbers?—It might to some extent, but they regard it as practically inevitable in the future.

47036. It has been stated to us by some witnesses that if a scheme of general pensions was instituted, the friendly societies would be glad to be relieved of the permanent sick pay they have to pay to some of their older members?—They find it very difficult to make that payment, and what is called quarter pay is now being reduced; instead of being able to give them 3s., 2s. 6d. is as much as they can give them.

47037. Should you say there has been any change of The Rev. W. opinion about old-age pensions recently?—I think the E. Chadwick. feeling in favour of them is growing.

25 Mar. 1907.

47038. Should you say that that was a feeling based on full consideration of the question, or is it merely a desire to participate in a form of relief of a national character?—So much depends upon the individual whose opinion is given.

Growing feeling in favour of old-age pensions.

47039. Was the feeling in favour of indiscriminate old-age pensions, or was character at all to be made a test, or was there any condition to be attached to the pensions?—The men I have spoken to on the subject lately are in favour of what they term the universal system; I do not think I can go further than that.

Question of conditional or unconditional old-age pension

47040. In Northampton the prevalent system of admission into the voluntary hospitals is by letters?—Yes.

Northampton system of admission to voluntary hospitals and attitude of friendly societies thereto.

47041. And the friendly societies buy these for their members?—Yes.

47042. It is asserted that the hospitals make them pay a higher price?—That is so.

47043. Is there any feeling on that subject?—The friendly societies are very sore upon the subject indeed.

47044. Cannot a patient on a letter from his doctor get in-door treatment without a hospital letter?—No, not in Northampton. Of course in the case of an accident in the street there would be treatment, but not in an ordinary case of illness.

47045. If a case is serious and no letter can be obtained, I assume the individual has to go to the infirmary?—Yes, what is very often done is a patient is taken into the hospital and means are found afterwards of getting a letter.

47046. There has been a great change in Northampton in recent years in the shoe trade, which has resulted in a concentration of work in certain factories, but your experience is that now there is an unusual number of persons, heads of families, out of employment?—I should like to correct a statement in my evidence; there is a larger proportion of men under forty years of age out of employment than I thought there was. I have made very careful investigation into that. I can give you the exact figures if you wish.

Ages of unemployed at Northampton.

47047. Perhaps you will do so?—From November 15th, 1905, to March 18th, 1907, the registration statistics of the Distress Committee show that under twenty years of age there have been ten applications; between twenty and forty there have been 557 applications; and between forty and sixty there have been 612 applications.

47048. You find instances where the fathers under the changed system can earn little, but their children are employed?—Yes, there is a great tendency now to employ cheap labour, boys and girls are doing work that youths did, and youths are doing the work that men did.

Increasing tendency to employ juvenile labour.

47049. This, I assume, is a recent growth?—Comparatively.

47050. You have only been there three and a half years?—Yes.

47051. Have you any general suggestion to make as regards any improvements in the administration or in the policy of the Poor Law?—I think in Northampton it would be an invaluable thing to have persons on the Poor Law Board who would not be subject to political or local influences.

Political influence in Poor Law administration and remedies therefor.

47052. The elections, I suppose, are mainly run on political lines?—Practically entirely.

47053. In your judgment, I suppose, there is a considerable proportion of the guardians who in consequence are subject to local influence?—Certainly.

47054. Is much public interest taken in the election of Poor Law guardians?—A little more than there was, but comparatively a small amount.

Public interest in Poor Law elections.

47055. You would like to see stronger expert opinion?—I should like to see a stipendiary guardian.

Proposed stipendiary administration of relief.

47056. Who would administer according to fixed principles?—Yes.

47057. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to paragraph 11, the National Deposit Friendly Society from its name is a

The Rev. W. E. Chadwick. national society, I suppose, and not a local society?—Not a local society.

25 Mar. 1907. 47058. Has it its local branches, or is it a centralised National Society?—It has local branches, it has a branch in the Northampton district just as the older societies have.

The National Deposit Friendly Society; its operations and position. 47059. Is it centralised like the Hearts of Oak, or localised like the Oddfellows?—It has a central office with local branches.

47060. Is the central authority responsible for the liabilities, do you know?—I believe it is, but I cannot be sure.

47061. From the name deposit, it is of the nature rather of a savings bank?—You have to pay in in two ways, you pay in your subscriptions and you deposit. Supposing, for instance, that you want 2s. a day when you are ill, you must pay 2s. a month and you must pay into your deposit fund so much as well.

47062. So that there are accumulated funds?—Yes.

47063. And it caters for a higher class, rather?—It caters for the more saving men, who naturally rise a little bit.

47064. And who therefore could take in hand provision for the future, in the sense of a pension, better than the ordinary societies?—It makes a man help towards his own pension in a greater proportion than the older societies do.

47065. There is a substantial accumulation for the future?—Yes, I believe so.

Northampton "ticket" system of admission to voluntary hospitals and attitude of friendly societies thereto. 47066. With regard to what you call the system of letters in Paragraph 13, that is, of course, a common system; in a certain way that appears to be more closely organised in Northampton than elsewhere; I understand that they sell letters?—They sell letters to the friendly societies.

47067. And to other people?—Yes, you can buy a letter.

47068. They are not letters merely given to subscribers?—Yes, but the number of letters varies with the subscription?

47069. So that each letter has a monetary value?—Yes.

47070. Can people buy letters when they want them?—Yes.

47071. Without being regular subscribers?—Yes.

47072. So that, in fact, each letter really has a price?—Yes, you might say it has a price; I think it is half a guinea for each out-patient letter; it is nominally half a guinea to the purchaser, but it costs more to the friendly societies.

47073. The price asked from the friendly societies was higher than the price that would have been asked from any casual purchaser?—Higher than is asked from a casual purchaser, a private purchaser.

47074. Was that because they would be more likely to make use of them?—Because it was found that about 70 per cent. of the letters issued to private subscribers were used, whereas all the letters issued to friendly societies are used.

47075. They make great use of the letters?—Yes.

47076. Letters do not convey an obligation to receive a patient, I suppose, it is only if there is room?—Yes, if there is room.

47077. And is there usually room, or is there usually a waiting list?—There is not a large waiting list; at the present time there is just a little room. I am the chaplain of the hospital and have never known a long waiting list; the hospital has recently been enlarged.

47078. Is there any limitation of the number of letters that can be sold or bought?—Not that I know of.

47079. I suppose the price by no means covers the cost of the sick treatment?—An in-patient letter costs a private subscriber £1 10s. 6d., the average cost of an in-patient is about £4 14s. 3d.; I believe those are the figures as nearly as they can be given.

47080. It is, roughly speaking, about a third?—About a third.

47081. And the rest is charity?—The rest comes from endowment or subscriptions.

47082. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to the Industrial state of trade in Northampton, has the tendency been, condition in the boot trade for instance, to get more of the skilled in North-work done by machinery of one sort and another and less by the skilled workmen themselves?—Yes. effect of machinery.

47083. That would account, I suppose, for the larger number of people thrown out of work; skilled men remain in work, I suppose?—It is rather the quick man who remains in work. unemployment, etc.

47084. Would that account for the youth being substituted for the man; are the youths sometimes quicker at the kind of work that now is principally wanted?—Yes, a youth can often manage a machine, at a lower rate of wage, equally quickly. Reason for increasing employment of juvenile labour.

47085. Do you think that the enforcement of family liability being so slight is in any way accounted for by the fact that there is a feeling that the people are earning less, married sons and so on who have got homes of their own, and therefore it is more difficult to enforce payment for the out-relief of parents?—I do not think that would account for the whole of the feeling. Failure of guardians' liability of children's parents.

47086. To any extent do you think?—Not to any great extent.

47087. Then with regard to the old-age pensions that are advocated by those to whom you spoke, does anyone advocate contributory old-age pensions, pensions towards which the individual himself does something during his lifetime?—I have not heard it discussed from that point of view among the men. Question of contributory or non-contributory old-age pensions.

47088. I think we are finding that practically that idea is dead with regard to most of the working people of the present day; they wish for a system towards which they do not in any way contribute themselves?—Not directly.

47089. Are your relieving officers skilled men in their work: are they chosen in any way for that reason?—I think they are very good average men at their work. Qualification of Northampton relieving officers.

47090. You say one has been recently appointed to your knowledge there, an additional one. Do you happen to know whether he had done any Poor Law work before?—I do not happen, personally, to know this man, because he does not work in my own parish.

47091. You say you have a good number of publicans on your board of guardians?—Yes. Class of persons on boards of guardians.

47092. Can you tell us something about what the position of other guardians is principally; are there many connected with the building trade?—No, I should think they are mainly small tradesmen.

47093. In the boot trade?—Not principally.

47094. Have you many people who are students of Poor Law matters who enter the guardians on that account?—No.

47095. You have not got a sprinkling of those?—No, certainly not.

47096. (Mr. Nunn.) I think you said there was an increase in the number of benefit societies in Northampton especially in connection with those at public houses?—Yes, a rapid increase, I should say. Increase of slate club.

47097. I suppose they are slate clubs, are they?—They are of all kinds; they are what are termed sick and dividend clubs and loan and dividend clubs; they both divide up periodically.

47098. They are both slate clubs?—Yes.

47099. Has there been any increase, do you know, in the membership of the affiliated societies, the Hearts of Oak and the National Deposit Friendly Society at the same time?—Do you refer to the increase of membership of the older friendly societies. Position of larger friendly societies of Northampton.

47100. Yes?—No, that is proportionately decreasing. The older friendly societies in Northampton are not increasing 1 per cent. per annum at present.

47101. The increase is at the expense of the older friendly societies?—Yes, to a great extent.

47102. Are the clergy promoting benefit clubs of any kind at all?—I think they are slowly realising the danger of these dividing-up societies. Attitude of clergy towards dividing-up clubs.

47103. Have they any of their own connected with their own parishes?—Clothing and coal clubs.

47104. But not sick benefit societies?—I do not know of any.

47105. With regard to the hospital letters you were speaking of, does that 10s.6d. represent the average total cost of each in-patient and each out-patient, or is it supplemented by voluntary subscriptions?—It is supplemented by a large endowment.

47106. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the clothing and coal clubs which you referred to just now, they are somewhat on the same principle economically as the dividing-up clubs, are they not?—Yes, they divide up at Christmas.

47107. They are practically on the same economic principle?—Yes, on the same economic principle.

47108. With regard to the boys and girls who are employed in industries, have you ever considered the desirability of having a half-time from fourteen to eighteen with a view to getting half-time for technical education and physical training and domestic training; that is to say making all boys and girls from fourteen to eighteen go on the half-time system, allowing an employer to have them for thirty hours a week, the remainder to be occupied by technical training and physical training, including their leisure. Has that occurred to you as a possible way?—I think it would be an admirable system if it could be arranged, but I believe the average manufacturer would rather that it was done at an earlier age than fourteen.

47109. I know, but assuming we wish to keep the present age up high for leaving school, in your opinion would it tend to the national welfare if there was a half-time system from fourteen to eighteen for technical training for the boys and domestic economy for the girls?—Yes.

47110. You think that would be a good thing?—I do, if it could be arranged.

47111. That would practically check the employment of boy labour as against men, it would halve the boy labour of the country?—Yes.

47112. I rather wanted to get from you whether you considered the state of irresponsibility with regard to control and leisure of the girls and boys between fourteen and eighteen, as independent wage earners, was an evil, they being without any kind of education or control?—Certainly.

47113. You think it would be desirable to prevent that?—Certainly, if it could be done.

47114. (Professor Smart.) In Paragraph 4 you speak of the public house interest having eight or nine members; out of how many, may I ask?—I am speaking from memory, but I think there are thirty-eight.

47115. What particular interest have the publicans in becoming guardians; is it with regard to the assessments?—Not entirely.

47116. Can you not give us some suggestion?—I should think it is partly the same interest that has shown itself in the rapid increase in sick and dividend and loan dividend societies.

47117. What is the particular connection of sick and dividend societies with the public houses: you say they are invariably connected with public houses; why is that?—Very largely so because they are an advertisement for the public houses and a means of attracting customers to the public houses.

47118. (Mrs. Webb.) When they divide up they spend the money at the public house, do they not?

47119. (Miss Hill.) Do they not let them have the room free for the sake of what is bought; I have always understood they could get a room at a public house free?—There is what is called a wet rent.

47120. (Professor Smart.) And that means?—I do not suppose rent is paid in money.

47121. I think we can guess the rest. In that hospital arrangement of yours, does the subscription come first or the case come first? Do people subscribe so much and then get the right of sending so many patients, or do the patients come first and then the subscription is proportionate?—This is the usual mode of procedure; if a patient is ill and wants to go into the hospital, or say that the dispensary doctor or their ordinary doctor advises removal to the hospital, they go at once and seek for a letter to obtain admission. The Rev. W. E. Chadwick.

47122. Will they not get admission except by means of payment?—No. 25 Mar. 1907

47123. It is one ticket to each half-guinea, is it?—I can give you the scale if you would care to have it.

47124. But you have not the system they have in some places, where it is virtually an unlimited number of cases to a single subscription?—No, each letter has a monetary value.

47125. With regard to the shoe trade, you say there is practically only one trade in Northampton; does that include the subsidiary trades, such as leather?—No, I can give you statistics. Out of 915 skilled hands who have applied for help to the Distress Committee, 727 have been connected with the shoe trade, and that does not include currying and tanning, which might be considered subsidiary. Industrial conditions in Northampton; proportion of unemployed belonging to shoe trade 47126. I understand that Northampton has extended very greatly, while the shoe industry has not grown to any great extent; that looks as if other trades were growing up in the place?—There has been no rapid increase of population in the last three years, I consider.

47127. Or of trade?—Or of trade.

47128. Then a person thrown out of the shoe trade is virtually without employment of any kind?—Practically so. Lack of variety of trades at Northampton and effect on employment. Increase of juvenile employment at Northampton.

47129. I should like you to elaborate what you say about the boys and girls being largely employed as a cheap form of labour. Boys, of course, cannot work the new machines?—There are some machines that they can watch.

47130. Those have always been watched by boys, have they not; you do not mean to say boys are displacing youths while youths are displacing men?—That is practically what I mean.

47131. What about girls; girls work entirely on the sewing machines?—No, girls are to some extent now employed in what is termed the shoe room.

47132. Do you refer to the making of boots and shoes?—It is the room where the boxing of them is done, the packing, and so on. In the olden days that used to be regarded as a perquisite of men getting on in life, now, instead of giving the men 18s. a week in the shoe room, they employ boys and girls for it, or at least girls largely do that work. Substitution of juvenile for adult labour.

47133. There is no displacement with regard to the sewing machines?—No.

47134. (Miss Hill.) In Paragraph 2 of your statement you speak about the St. Thomas' Hospital funds being employed in regular pensions for widows?—Yes. Charitable pensions for widows.

47135. You think that very advantageous and that it meets a want?—I should say it distinctly met a want.

47136. Is there any movement on the part of the non-endowed charities to throw their relief into the form of regular allowances to the old and infirm?—I am not sure whether I understand what you mean by non-endowed. Absence of voluntary charity pensions at Northampton.

47137. Are the voluntary charities administered at all in the form of pensions, those which are not endowed in Northampton; is there any movement for organising a pension for the deserving aged poor?—Not that I know of.

47138. The voluntary charities from the churches and chapels and so on are given more in casual charity?—Yes, and generally given in cases of sickness too.

47139. So that there are no pensions except those from the endowed charities?—Not that I am aware of.

47140. You spoke about the members of friendly societies with whom you had conversed being in favour of a universal old-age pension?—Yes. Attitude of friendly societies towards unconditional old-age pensions.

47141. Do they put any limitations to that, would they have them given to criminals and habitual drunkards and so on, do you know?—That I could not answer.

47142. Universal would include those, would it not; if it is to be a universal pension there would be no enquiry as to character?—I do not know that they would limit it in any way.

47143. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Could you give us any typical cases of out-relief that you come across in your

The Rev. W. E. Chadwick. district showing whether it was adequate or not?—I can tell you of a case, for instance, where there are an old man, an old woman and an old man who is a lodger. I think that the three of them are getting 12s. a week and there is a son who is supposed to supply 2s. a week, so there is 14s. a week coming in there of which 12s. is from the Poor Law.

25 Mar. 1907.
Inadequate out-relief at Northampton and scale of relief.

47144. Would the 12s. all be from the Poor Law? Entirely from the Poor Law.

47145. What would their rent be?—About 4s. a week there.

47146. Is that the usual rate of relief of old people, about 4s.?—The usual rate of relief for an old woman would be from 4s. to 5s. 6d., for a married couple from 7s. 6d. to 8s.

47147. What sort of relief would they give to widows with children?—It depends on the number of the children. May I give you a typical case?

47148. If you please?—I know of one case where there is a widow with five children and she receives 10s. a week.

47149. Would that again be a 4s. rent?—No, about 3s. there.

47150. That would be 7s. for six people to live on?—Yes, but I think in that case the friends can do something.

47151. Should you say from your experience that the relief that is given in your parish generally goes wisely?—Generally, but not always.

47152. Would you be prepared to give us an instance where it has gone unwisely?—Such matters are so difficult to prove.

47153. It would not be against any individual person, would it, and you could simply give us a general idea of how the relief was being given?—I know of one house where I suspect that there is a certain amount of drinking, the man is receiving quarter-pay from two clubs and there is about 6s. 6d. coming in from out-relief.

47154. Would the public house which that man frequents belong to a guardian?—Not in that case.

47155. Is the out-relief ever given, do you think, to supplement wages?—I should think it had this effect, that it enabled the people to take somewhat smaller sums.

47156. Do you know of cases where people are earning very low wages and receiving out-relief?—Not for regular work, but I know of people who are receiving small sums; for instance, there is the case of a woman and her daughter where the mother is receiving out-relief and the daughter earns very little.

47157. What work would the daughter do?—In this case office cleaning.

47158. Can you tell us what co-operation there is between the Charity Organisation Society and the guardians?—There is co-operation between the relieving officers and the agent of the Charity Organisation Society.

47159. What form would that take?—Mutual information with regard to the cases.

47160. Does the Charity Organisation Society ever refer cases to the guardians with suggestions?—I think if they found they could not deal with the case they would do so.

47161. Do the guardians ever refer cases?—Yes they have done so.

47162. Are any of the guardians represented on the society, is there mutual representation?—I only know of one guardian who is on the committee, and the clerk to the guardians is on the committee.

47163. Could you develop your idea of a stipendiary guardian to administer relief, would he be only one, or would he be one of many?—I should say he would be the one whose decision ought to be final.

47164. Would a stipendiary chairman meet the case or would he be more autocratic than that?—I think he ought to be more autocratic than that; there ought to be some one entirely outside the range of local influence.

47165. Would you apply that only to out-relief or would you apply it also to the management of institutions?—Especially to out-relief.

47166. Possibly leaving institutions in the hands of the local people?—I think it would be good to have an expert there.

47167. (Mr. Lock.) Would it be amiss to say that the endowed charities of Northampton are much used in supplementation of out-door relief?—I think they are used in lieu of it.

47168. Not in supplementation of it?—No, many of the charities are in this position, that the receipt of relief disqualifies persons from being beneficiaries under them.

47169. You may say that you have two grades of out-door relief, endowed charity outdoor relief, and Poor Law relief?—Those who fail to obtain the charity become the recipients of outdoor relief.

47170. They go to the Poor Law?—Yes.

47171. Would I be right in thinking that if the money were available for what I might call distinct remedial help, it would go much further, and prevent much distress and pauperism, so that it could be used more for temporary purposes, according to the nature of the particular cases, and according to a definite plan, as the nature of the case might suggest?—I think the money would go further.

47172. In regard to charities like that, is there a very strong feeling that the charities should be left just as they are and not, as it were, remodelled for modern needs and uses?—That is a difficult question to answer.

47173. To put it in another way, have you reason to believe that the desire is strong to keep things as they are in the matter of charity, without any alteration in mere details even?—I think that some of those who are trustees of the charities are alive to the fact that the schemes might be re-arranged possibly for modern needs.

47174. With regard to the old-age pension proposal that you refer to as universal, can you differentiate it really from outdoor relief to which everybody is entitled at a certain age?—No.

47175. You say: "I should say there is an unusual number of men above forty years of age out of work, consequently a large number of families are badly off, because the fathers are earning little or nothing." Statements like that have been made to us; have you any suggestion about it, because it would almost seem as if their at a very early age a new form of pauperism, or partial pauperism, were coming into existence. What happens to these men now, how do they live?—I should think they are largely supported by their families.

47176. Practically one might say that the man, after forty, is living on his wife and children?—A good many of them are.

47177. And that permanently?—Yes. I do not think there are quite so many as there were eighteen months ago, because trade is a little better.

47178. But even granted that trade is better, is there any considerable number who accept this as a kind of social state?—In the last return we had, on the unemployed list there were nearly 300 men over forty years of age in Northampton, seeking employment.

47179. Supposing you went back to the time before the bad times came, did you find men of forty then, too old for their work if one may so say, depending on their families?—Nothing like to the extent they are now.

47180. Do you look forward to this evil disappearing with an improvement in trade?—No.

47181. You think it is permanent?—I think it is permanent till some other remedy is found.

47182. What is your remedy?—It is more than one; I think it was a great mistake in Northampton to refuse the opportunity of forming a labour colony. I think if these men learned agriculture something could be done in that way.

47183. You think they might shift their trade better if they knew how to manage land?—Yes, and I think emigration is becoming much more common; it is increasing rapidly in Northampton now.

47184. They are going out of England?—They are going out to Canada.

Question of unwise out-relief at Northampton.

Effect of out-relief on wages.

Co-operation between Charity Organisation Society and Poor Law.

Proposed stipendiary administration of relief.

Increase in unemployment of middle-aged men and method of maintenance.

Increase in emigration from Northampton.

47185. That would be one of your remedies?—Yes, certainly.

47186. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) For a man of over forty?—Families are in some instances going.

47187. (Chairman.) Is the inability of men over forty to get work in Northampton due to the changes in the boot trade, or has the Workmen's Compensation Act at all affected the age?—I think that the Workmen's Compensation Act has to some extent affected it, but I think it is very much more owing to this: The trade union has a minimum wage, and it is very difficult for a man over forty to earn what the masters consider is that wage, so he is discharged in favour of a man who can earn the trade union wage.

47188. Under the present conditions of the boot trade, The Rev. W. E. Chadwick. I suppose rapidity of work is the one essential?—It is a chief essential.

25 Mar. 1907

47189. (Mr. Loch.) Does it mean that the passing of the Workmen's Compensation Act is acting in favour of the strong rather than the weak, that is to say it strengthens the position of the men in middle life, with the off-chance of this want of work later on in life?—A man is in work till he is forty; soon after he is forty he becomes naturally somewhat slow, then he is put on one side; of course the trade union will give permission occasionally to a man over forty to take less than the minimum wage, but they do not like doing so.

Dr. JOHN DODD, called; and Examined.

47190. (Chairman.) You are the consulting physician to the Poor Law Infirmary at Leicester?—I am.

47191. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

My experience and qualifications are as under:—

(a) Twenty-one years' experience in Ireland and considerable knowledge of the working classes there, and some knowledge of the Poor Law system

(b) Experience of the "working" classes in Huddersfield, the Potteries, North Lincolnshire and North Essex.

(c) About twenty years' experience of the "working" and other classes in Leicester, including daily visiting in their homes and knowledge of their ideas and family life.

(d) About five years' experience on the Leicester Board of Guardians during which time I have advocated most of the ideas given in these sheets. A few have been passed with good results.

(e) Have done some Poor Law district work in Leicester for other medical men.

(f) Have taken an interest in "commonsense socialism," social movements and Poor Law work for years.

(g) Sixteen months' experience as visiting medical officer to North Evington (Leicester) Poor Law Infirmary.

The opinions expressed are based upon:—

(a) My personal experience.

(b) Reading.

(c) Knowledge of character.

To get a true perspective of the increasing expenditure for the last twenty years, the expenditure on indoor relief, outdoor relief and lunatics should be plotted on squared paper, when the influence of the boot strike, extension of the borough boundary and the socialistic movement of the last four to five years will be clearly shown.

Sanitary Authority.

1. This is confined to notifiable diseases and phthisis.

2. The chief infectious diseases treated in the Municipal Infectious Diseases Hospital are, scarlet fever, typhoid fever and diphtheria. I believe parish cases are received equally with others. As regards phthisis, those cases only are taken that are likely to benefit. Parish cases paid for.

3. Chronic consumptive cases sent to North Evington Poor Law Infirmary. They are practically all incurable.

4. Sanitary Committee gives disinfectants gratis for infectious cases, and in former years when diarrhoea was prevalent, diarrhoea mixture.

5. Recently they have appointed a medical man to examine school board children; also a milk depot has been established (pasteurized milk).

6. I am strongly of opinion that the Sanitary Committee should establish a "consumptive dispensary," with the object of carrying out preventive measures on the Edinburgh lines.

The Poor Law.

7. So far as the Poor Law is concerned there is:—

Dr. J. Dodd.

25 Mar. 1907.

(a) The usual provision of Poor Law medical officers. They have, I believe, several times applied to the Board for advance of salary and have been refused. In my experience the Board is more ready to consider the claims of other officers than the medical officers. The medical officers (district) are, I believe, allowed 10s. 6d. for confinements when order is given by relieving officers.

(b) Leaflets giving advice as to the prevention of consumption have been distributed from the committee rooms, also leaflets on infant rearing.

(c) Recently the Poor Law infirmary has been provided (512 beds). This has been a boon to many of the curable poor, by placing them under better conditions, etc. On the other hand, those who have charge of, or responsibility for, troublesome and "dirty" people, find it a convenient means of getting them off their hands.

8. The opening of the Poor Law infirmary must have lessened the work of the district medical officers, as patients are now more freely sent than when the infirmary was attached to the workhouse.

Voluntary Effort.

9. We have:—

(a) General Infirmary, about 200 beds. In practice nearly anyone can get a recommendation.

(b) Provident Dispensary, somewhere about 50,000 members.

(c) People's Dispensary, somewhere about 6,000 members.

In my opinion these three are huge pauperizing agencies, as there is no effective check against imposition by people who are in a position to pay more.

The dispensaries (the medical staff receive 2s. and 1s. 10d. respectively per member, per annum) "pauperize" the better-off working classes, etc., and the infirmary "pauperizes" those who could, and should, be treated by the dispensaries.

As a matter of fact, many in receipt of Poor Law outdoor relief are members of dispensaries and private clubs. These are generally the "respectable" poor who are badly off through no fault of their own. The "improvident" poor will not keep up their payments, and find their way as out-patients to Infirmary or district parish doctor. The payments to doctors from the dispensaries are too low, considering the number of patients, for good work to be done; accordingly a large number of these dispensary patients find their way to the out-patient department of the General Infirmary. In my opinion the out-patient department of general infirmaries should exist only for the treatment of accidents (first time dressing) and for "special" treatment. A common belief among the "working" classes is, that as they contribute weekly to the Infirmary, they have a right to free treatment there. I have, however, not found this insisted on by the "respectable" or those that one can respect:—

(d) Friendly societies. In these many well off members insist on their right to get medical attendance for 3s. and 4s. a year.

Medical associations.

Private medical clubs.

The management of provident dispensaries, and excessive medical relief dispensed thereby.

Lack of filial responsibility.

Overlapping between agencies for medical assistance.

Proposed decrease of voluntary hospital out-patients' departments.

Proposed limitation of provident dispensaries to persons of limited means.

Proposed future scheme of medical assistance for the poor.

Evils of excessive cheapening of medical service.

Proposal to transfer medical relief to sanitary authority.

Question of sufficiency of quality of medical assistance to the poor.

Need of permanency of tenure for medical officers of health.

Evils of existing scheme of medical assistance to the poor.

(e) Medical associations. In this case one or two medical men are employed by salary. They have to do exactly as their masters, the committee, tell them and doctor all the members, no matter how well off they may be.

(f) Private Clubs. There are no doubt several thousands of members in private clubs. This is more in the nature of a free contract, as there is nobody to interfere or dictate, but owing to the existence of the dispensaries and friendly societies (as regards medical attendance) many of these club patients are well able to pay; if they are objected to, well, they will join the dispensary.

10. In the cases of a, b, c, d, e, a lay committee manages everything (there is generally a small medical element, except in d and e, but it is non-effective).

11. In the case of the provident dispensary, it is managed by men who direct the operations—men who know nothing of the lives of the working classes, and who are apparently more concerned with, and plume themselves on, the large numbers "relieved," than anything else.

12. Meanwhile, the doctors treat too many patients, suffer in pocket, and many of the patients are pauperized by getting their treatment at too low a rate.

Examples.—I have myself treated a young man at 1d. per week who admitted to me that week after week he spent 3s. a week and over at the theatre. Similarly a young club patient has admitted that he spent 3s. a week on cigarettes.

13. There is a rage for cheapness in this town, medical and otherwise, and speaking generally, a very considerable disinclination on the part of children to keep or assist their parents. This acts in obvious ways.

14. There is plenty of overlapping, and no co-ordination.

15. There ought practically to be no General Infirmary "out-patient" department in this town, except for special cases, and these ought to come through general practitioners. The bulk of the cases treated there could just as well be treated by outside practitioners.

16. No person ought to be allowed to join a dispensary, etc., for medical treatment unless he can prove that he is entitled to do so by reason of scanty means or other sufficient causes.

17. We should thus have :—

(a) The district Poor Law medical officer and the Poor Law hospitals for the very poor or those on the verge.

(b) Dispensaries restricted to those where the income is, or united incomes are, small.

(c) Hospital, fed by recommendation of dispensary doctors and general practitioners, both as regards in-patients and out-patients.

18. I am convinced that the extreme cheapening of medical service in the town is as bad for the working classes as for the medical men, and the ease with which it can be obtained tends directly to pauperize.

At present it is all over-lapping and no co-operation or co-ordination. As arranged above, there would be some order and system.

19. I am inclined to think that medical assistance of the poor might be better controlled through the Sanitary Committee of the town council. In my opinion, the guardians of this town have a great deal more to do than they can usefully accomplish. Their work therefore ought to be, if anything is done, lightened.

20. I do not think the amount or quality of medical assistance to the poor insufficient, except in so far as Poor Law work, dispensary work, and club work is badly remunerated, and therefore the work is more or less badly done.

21. In this connection I think it is most important that medical officers of health should have security of tenure, otherwise their mouths must in many cases be closed and their hands tied.

22. I think I have shown above that all classes have ample opportunity for treatment, but, owing to the "lay" element governing these institutions the tendency is for the treatment to be "cheap and nasty" rather than "good and well paid." In the case of the general infirmary the out-patient department is choked by people who wait from two to six hours, the staff is insufficient now, but amply sufficient if the bulk who might be treated elsewhere were refused.

23. In my opinion the "quality" of the medical assistance to the poor and working classes is insufficient only by reason of underpaying, which means that a medical man has too many patients if he is to make a decent living.

24. In these opinions and statements I confine myself to Leicester alone.

25. The following might be classed as peculiarities and experiments in this union :—

(a) During the last three years or so a very large number of men on the "labour test," which is not a test, by reason of the fact that a definite amount of work is not required to be done.

(b) Spade culture of land, by out-of-works (Gill-roads). This is judged to be the most suitable form of employment.

(c) The preparation of the land round North Evington Infirmary has given employment to a large number—levelling, spade-cropping, etc.

(d) Extensive use of wood-chopping in separate rented building and canvassing for orders.

(e) Disinclination to allow inmates of workhouse to do work which ought to be done, from a Trade Union point of view, by workmen from outside. Stoppage of oakum picking, stone breaking, etc.

(f) An inclination to revert to scattered homes instead of cottage homes—one or two provided.

(g) Receiving homes for children, away from workhouse.

(h) A greater tendency to board out children—mainly Roman Catholics.

26. I am of opinion that the moral condition of recipients of relief should mainly determine their treatment.

Holding this view, I think prudent "respectable" and provident paupers should either have an old-age pension or what is equivalent, adequate relief; if too infirm they should be accommodated in the infirmary or separately in the house. It is a real purgatory for these people to associate with the foul-mouthed, etc., people who find their way to the "house."

27. The test of the "house" is a very necessary one, for the improvident and those who have fallen by their own fault, and their condition should not be made too comfortable. I am a believer in the old dictum that this class should be at least "worse off than the worst-paid class of workers who support themselves." The tendency is now in the other direction. This applies to the house and not the Poor Law infirmary. Even there, I think, a distinction should be made as far as possible between the provident and improvident.

28. The class of persons applying for relief in this town are mainly hosiery and shoe hands.

29. So far as my observation goes the provident poor look upon Poor Law relief as the last to be resorted to, but owing to the fact that there is here a growing disinclination on the part of children to support their parents, either by reason of marriage, low wages, or their own increased wants and pleasures, and disinclination to make sacrifices, a very considerable number of respectable old people are thrown on the rates. This occurs also in the case of disease, such as apoplexy, where the patient is frequently "dirty" and difficult to manage.

30. A good many others have been thrown out of work because of the "minimum wage" regulation of the unions, and I think the sense of "morality" has been dulled in a good many cases by the tendency of quick workers to slow down to the pace of slow workers. This applies specially to the boot trade.

31. The tendency of late years, owing to the struggles between trade unions and masters, has resulted in the undue employment of youths (boys and girls), and married women—accordingly the natural result follows—the youth getting good wages spends more or less recklessly and in the case of the married women the children, meals, and house, must suffer, whilst the slow workers and men over forty are thrown out of work, to get a precarious employment, be supported by the work of their wives, or children, or go on the labour test, etc.

32. In this town, speaking generally, the physique and constitution of the workers is not satisfactory partly owing to the above, deficient ventilation, badly-prepared food, and early and improvident marriages. This again provides a class for the Poor Law.

33. Lastly the victims of drink (directly or indirectly), a large class, must be mentioned.

34. Contributory causes of Pauperism are:—

(a) The selfishness of children, their increased expenditure on dress and pleasures, and their disinclination to support their parents. In this town practically all the girls of the family go out to work, thus the mother has to do all the housework. A large proportion of girls are not willing to assist after their work in the factories. Then often follows a break down and being useless—the Poor Law is applied to.

(b) Drink is the cause of much pauperism, directly or indirectly. Probably there is no town in the kingdom where so large a proportion of women are to be found in the public-houses daily and nightly.

Other causes which have operated largely here are:—

(c) Strike in the boot trade ten to fifteen years ago; this forced the introduction of machinery and less employment for middle-aged and old people.

(d) The enforcement of the "minimum wage" has had in my opinion the same effect.

(e) The extension of the borough boundaries a few years ago; a great many of the debt-owing and improvident class had migrated to the poor suburbs, and on the extension they come on the town poor-rate in greater ratio than the rateable value increased.

(f) The introduction of the cry "more humane treatment for the poor," and the putting into force the "adequate relief" circular without sufficient discrimination.

(g) A lax administration; resulting from fixed ideas such as "these people are what their surroundings made them" and an absence of regard for the lessons of the past.

(h) Guardians giving relief to paupers of their own districts. This, I think, is bad in various ways.

(i) No sufficient adherence to the rules laid down for relief, and no sufficient regard to the opinions and recommendations of the relieving officers. This tends to make relieving officers slack in their work.

(j) Fear of guardians lest they should lose their seats by going against what they supposed were widely diffused new ideas.

(k) Bad booking system:—the present books are bad for guardians; they forget, etc., and the books do not give what is most useful to them. The case-paper system is infinitely superior. The whole history ought to be there for reference; new facts noted as they occur and action taken accordingly. In addition a declaration ought to be made and signed by the applicant, who should be prosecuted or otherwise adequately dealt with if the statement is false.

(l) A superintendent relieving officer and "cross visitor" are necessary, in all large towns to regulate and co-ordinate the work of the relieving officers, to present facts to the guardians and to follow out and detect doubtful cases, etc.

(m) The efforts of the best officers may be frustrated, by a committee which is guided by sentiment and neglects to profit by a knowledge of human nature, and the lessons of the past.

(n) Manufacturers driven away from town by combined causes of trade union methods, and high rates.

(o) Extensive mania among youths and men for betting, gambling, football, and to a lesser degree cricket.

35. The class of persons seeking election as guardians contain retired tradesmen and publicans, small manufacturers and tradesmen, Labour members, boot operatives, trade union officials, professed Socialists, etc.

36. I think there is a great want of information among guardians as to:—

1. Past Poor Law history.
2. Contemporary practice and.
3. Proper and logical methods of investigation.

37. A large number of our old guardians are resigning and it will be difficult to replace them by men of standing, breadth of view, or information, no matter from what class derived.

38. It is unfortunately looked on now as "degrading oneself" to go on the Board of Guardians by a large class of responsible people and the tendency is for those seeking public work to strive for the Town Council.

This in my opinion is unfortunate as a guardian really requires more qualifications than a town councillor, on the average.

39. With regard to the administration of relief, I will merely say that I think the rules are not sufficiently adhered to and the committees take too much out of the hands of the relieving officers with the result that the latter get discouraged. Relieving officers are what guardians make them.

40. Of late years in consequence of the spread of the Socialist movement and the associated speeches, etc., I have no doubt many more have applied in the expectation of more liberal and "more humane treatment."

41. Reforms suggested by my experience are:—

(a) A superintendent relieving officer and "cross visitor."

(b) Case papers instead of the usual books for all the departments, particularly out-relief, and including able-bodied in house, labour test men, etc.

(c) The principal business of the Finance Committee seems to be passing accounts. I think the Finance Committee should be so constituted as to, if possible, act as a check on the different committees, somewhat in the manner practised by the Finance Committee of the Leicester Town Council. Each committee generally contains men who make a hobby of the work of their committee; this means spending money, and the board as a whole rarely refuses their requests.

(d) I do not see how men who become guardians with a "fixed idea" can be controlled, except by surcharges, or lessening of their power and increasing the freedom of relieving officers, under superintendents.

(e) Each applicant should sign a declaration paper as to means, etc., and be prosecuted or otherwise adequately dealt with, if the statements are found to be false. This to be revised periodically.

(f) The present tramp wards are utterly useless. They should be worked on the German and Danish etc., systems by the police, with the object of assisting genuine cases, and sending loafers, etc., to labour colonies or prison.

(g) Old-age pensions for the deserving.

(h) The tone and general breadth of views of guardians should be raised in some way. When these are deficient, a good speaker, or a good intriguer and clever wire puller may assume undue importance and power. A small body voting unitedly has the same effect. I am afraid the present system of election of guardians in large towns will never give good results and that "party," etc., will be the object to be served instead of the good of the public. Men who are very desirable will not go to the expense and trouble of a contested election, and then spend a large amount of time doing the work of a board held in little esteem.
